United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 90-$1.80)—"Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) (3d wk). Sturdy $17,000. Last week, $19,500.

Woods (Essannes) (1,200; 90-$1.80) — "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV) (2d wk). Loud $19,000. Last week, $18,000.

World (Teitel) (608; 90-$1.25)—"Coming Out Party" (Cont) (2d wk). Sharp $4,200. Last week $5,000.

Det. Perking; 'Point' Sharp $11,000, 'Affair' $7,000; 'Grimm' Giant 16G

Detroit, Oct. 16.

Good week is in prospect for the firstruns here. "Pressure Point" is okay at the Palms. "Girl with Golden Eyes" looks great at Trans-Lux Krim. "Marco Polo" shapes so-so at Grand Circus. "Very Private Affair" is rated fair at United Artists.

"Brothers Grimm" continues the town leader with another great take in 11th week at the Music Hall. "Tarzan Goes to India" stays okay in second trip at the Adams.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox Theatre of Detroit Corp.) (5,041; $1.25-$1.49)— "Spit On Grave" (Indie) and "Ninth Bullet" (Indie) (2d wk). Fair $15,000. Last week, $18,000.

Despite Holdovers, Detroit Perky; 'Fool' Fine $7,000, 'Grimm' 12G

Denver, Oct. 16.

While there still are several holdovers and some oldies in the current stanza, most downtown houses have a change of fare currently which is stimulating trade. "I Thank a Fool" looks nice at the Centre while "Chapman Report" looms lively at Paramount. "No Man Is An Island" shapes sluggish at Orpheum. "World of Comedy" is good in second at Crest.

"Brothers Grimm" is rated big in 10th at the Cooper while "West Side Story" looks good in 24th session at the Denham.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (900; $1.25)—"Three Coins in Fountain" (20th) and "Love Is Splendored Thing" (20th) (reissues) (2d wk). Fast $2,500. Last week, $4,500.

NIX MIDWAY BID

N.Y. Federal Judge Edmund L. Palmieri last week turned down the bid of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres to acquire the Midway Drive-in at Jenkins Township, Pa. Opposing the acquisition were the U.S. government, the Comerford Theatres and two indie exhibs.

Palmieri said AB-PT had not shown that its acquisition of the theatre would not unduly restrain competition in the area.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Attorney Arnold Grant, who became chairman of the 20th-Fox executive committee following Darryl F. Zanuck's successful bid for the presidency this summer, is described by Forbes Magazine (Oct. 1) as the "power behind the throne" and the man who "handily engineered Zanuck's takeover."

The article reviews Zanuck's actions on assuming the presidency (shutdown of the studio, cancellation of three pix, firing of approximately 300 employees) and quotes Grant as saying: "By the end of the year, we expect to have made a permanent $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 improvement in our overhead." Zanuck is also quoted as saying that if the company could just break even on production, the company would earn $2 a share on its other operations.

Forbes concludes: "Grant, who is nothing, if not sure of himself, has few doubts about the new management's ultimate success—and even fewer about who is really in charge. Says he: 'If we make it, then everyone can say, 'The Great Zanuck has done it again,' and I won't have to work so hard.'"

As several sharp-eyed and long-memoried readers have noted, that was an encore review in the Sept. 19 VARIETY for "Mr. Arkadin," the Continental-made Orson Welles meller under a new tittle which played abroad via Warner Bros. in the '55-'56 season as "Confidential File." Original review, unaccountably missing from VARIETY's files, was by Paris rep Gene Moskowitz (Mosk) from the Cannes Film Fest and appeared in this paper May 16, '56. Both critiques, for the record, were in substantial accord—that is, as the encore observed, a pic at once fascinating and dismaying. First U. S. engagement opened last week at the New Yorker Theatre, N.Y.

Columbia Broadcasting System is named defendant in a $500,000 damage suit filed in Superior Court by film producer James R. Beardsley, in which he charged that his motion picture, "Underground, U.S.A.," has been plagiarized in a tv subject, "My Dark Days," broadcast last March. Sued also are Marion and Paul Miller and Ronald Reagan, who starred in episode. Beardsley claimed he was exclusive owner of his film under a deal with the Millers for use of the wife's experiences as an undercover agent for the FBI. Tv subject, he contended, was substantially similar to his motion picture.

Tore Sjoberg, Swedish producer who was in New York recently, related he's being sued in Munich by Leni Riefenstahl. She was commissioned by Adolph Hitler to produce the Nazi propaganda film, "Triumph of the Will." Sjoberg used some of the footage from this in his productions of "Mein Kampf" and "Secrets of the Nazi Criminals." Miss Riefenstahl insists this is unfair and is asking damages of $60,000.

Universal spellbinder Phil Gerard sent out last week a promo kit on Ross Hunter's production of "If a Man Answers," the bulk of which is such that it cost $1.08 to mail locally. Goes to key accounts, details at great length the campaign, contests, biographies, teasers, lobby gimmicks, posters, tie-ins and things like that there. It's a bundle-full of ideas on how to sell a picture.

'Don't Shoot To Please Unions'

will make in the next year at least 12 pictures either all Hollywood or Hollywood-based, (2) this is because the properties lend themselves to "local" lensing and (3) a producer who makes an English-locale picture in other than England is just as out of his mind as the impresario who should go abroad to do, say, "Sunset Boulevard."

Frankovich maintains his office in London, oversees all Col production abroad and, as third in command of Col (after president Abe Schneider and exec v.p. Leo Jaffe) includes as his cares all production, Hollywood included—latter headed by Sol A. Schwartz as Coast production v.p.

Hollywood Upsurge?

Frankovich takes note of the upswing in Hollywood production, as witness more schedules out west on the part of MCA-Universal and Paramount, plus his own Col, and Warners but he insists this is not a "resurgence" as such. He explains that "Hollywood is again hitting the top of the circle."

There was a time, he says, a few years ago, when the major producers, including Columbia, were going abroad because the scripts were such that they just about demanded overseas lensing. The overall situation now is that Hollywood can best accommodate the type of pictures approved by the major company execs. This is the way the pendulum swings:

Frankovich provides a stinger, thus: "For anyone to say he is not making a picture abroad for purposes of goodwill with the American unions is not giving the facts."

Frankovich observes "more balance" in the production schedules generally, but he warns it could go against Hollywood in the future. Time was when Yankee picture-making was all Hollywood, then shifted to an overbalance of foreign. Col was one of the companies which, quite prominently, segued to foreign. The segue was done because of obligations to stockholders who were entitled to general economic considerations plus the need to achieve locale accuracy. The stories being done now, he adds, lend themselves to American lensing and consequently are being done in America.

Future Projects

"If a picture should be made abroad, then it should be made abroad," declares Frankovich, adding a vice versa.

As for the vice versa, this international exec offers argument. Col has not addictions to overseas lensing, considering that: global gadabout Sam Spiegel has "The Chase" to be done in Hollywood; another world-traveler, Stanley Kramer, will make "Andersonville" in San Pedro and as a Hollywood-based entity; Carl Foreman, Jerry Bressler, Robert Rossen, Martin Jurow, Blake Edwards, and so on, all have Hollywood-made labels set for the immediate future. All for Col.

Footnotes Frankovich: "When you go away to make a picture that should be made in Hollywood, that's runaway. But it's economically unfair and unsound to work in Hollywood with a picture that should be made abroad.

Frankovich was in New York after meetings at the studio with U. S. production boss Schwartz and said he had a feeling of triumph with the "names" he could drop so far as producer alignments are concerned. There were Preminger, Foreman, Kramer, and others throughout the sked. He said he's rarely seen such a lineup on the Col slate.

As for the foreign end, there will be 12 to 14 new productions on the Col calendar for the next 12 months and these will be in addition to pictures made abroad for local territorial markets.

Frankovich left New York last Saturday (13) for his British outpost, then Paris, then others points. He visits the States at the rate of about six times a year now that he's become 1st v.p.

Stag Reels Bring Grief

Minneapolis, Oct. 16.

Judge Edward Devitt in Federal district court here suspended sentence and imposed a year's probation on Gerald M. Sloan, 26, of Des Moines, who pleaded guilty to transporting stag films from Iowa into Minnesota.

Roy Miller and Evelyn Sharp, also of Des Moines, who previously had admitted involvement, received prison sentences—he for a year and a day and she for one month. She also was placed on two years' probation.

Arthur Hiller

of 1945 and Disney required U.S. military equipment of 1945 vintage for the picture—equipment he could only get there. Negotiations were initiated with the U.S. Army for such equipment, but the current Army is equipped with 1960 equipment, and only the Austrians have an Army with U.S. 1945 equipment, he said.

"There has been a genuine increase in production of pictures located in other countries. This is not due just to lower costs of filming abroad, although this is obviously a factor. If costs were exactly the same, there would still be more pictures made abroad than was made in the Hollywood of five-10 years ago," Hiller opined.

In Vienna, Hollywood "is still the mecca and center of the movie industry," despite the fact fewer pix are being produced here, he commented. "They showed much interest in American stars; in many respects, the Viennese were like small-town people in the states in this respect," he added.

Physical facilities in Vienna were very good "but old." There are two studios owned by one company there. While the Disney picture was filmed in one studio, the other was busy with Austrian pix and German pix and telefilms.

Hiller said Austrian technicians are not as good as those in Hollywood, were not even aware of what a camera crane is, and "I had to be a teacher." Production overall was slower than in Hollywood, but there was not a great difference, he added.

While liking U.S. pix, Austrians prefer their home-made product. Austrian pix are wholly financed by German distributors. They don't make a profit on production; the distribs make it on distribution, and the producer receives a fee, a system "quite different from ours," the director said. However, theatrical film houses are folding in Austria, paradoxically, because that nation is prosperous. "Now they have money, so they buy cars, they go riding, they go to the legit theatre, but not to movies," he remarked.

Dassin Gold-Dust

point here was that if the blacklist were not hypocritical, he should still be out of work, whereas in actual fact, his career has never been busier, especially since the phenomenal success of "Never on Sunday." Latter is probably one of the most successful films ever made in terms of percentage of profit against investment.

Though Dassin feels that the political climate in the States has certainly brightened since the so-called "McCarthy era" of the early 1950s, he describes himself as still hesitant to work here. He has two scripts which he would like to shoot in the States, but he is not sure that "pressures" would not be brought to bear against them, even though via "Sunday" and his upcoming "Phaedra," a large portion of the U.S. industry already has profited and continues to profit from his made-overseas films. That's all part of the aforementioned hypocrisy.

Upcoming on his schedule are three features: a film adaptation of Eric Ambler's "The Light of The Day," to be made for producer Martin Ransohoff and on which Dassin would just be a director-employee; and "The Last of The Just" and "Pericles," on which he will function in his more usual capacity as producer-director-scenarist. All of these will be made overseas.

As a postscript to the discussion of the blacklist, and the dark days of the early '50s, Dassin reported that not long ago a legit producer in New York approached him about directing a play which the producer thought might particularly interest Dassin. When he received the script, he found it was the old one which he had tried to produce in 1952. He was ironically amused that now someone was anxious to do it. However, when he read it through again, he found it to be "quite terrible," and himself more than a little lucky he hadn't been able to raise the financing originally.

'Flame in Streets,' Mixed-Race Romance, Faces Media Cautions

Los Angeles, Oct. 16.

Local newspaper and radio film ad sources created a major censorship skirmish on Friday (12) over ads on Atlantic Pictures' release of the J. Arthur Rank production, "Flame in the Streets," which opened Friday at the Egyptian Theatre.

Ad campaigns on the picture have been cancelled entirely by the L.A. Times and radio station KLAC over copy that points out the romantic relationship between a Negro and a white girl, subject of the picture. Meanwhile, however, both the Herald-Examiner and the Citizen-News have run initial ads, then clamped down with request for copy change.

Citizen-News Wednesday ran most explosive ad, later killed, which showed Negro and white girl kissing, with copy reading "drawn together by an overwhelming love" and "they crossed the greatest boundary to reach each other's arms." Ad ran, as well, in all of the paper's Wednesday shopper's editions.

Herald, on the other hand, flatly refused this ad, replaced it with a similar ad showing wash drawing cut of two people embracing, but race was not discernible. Additionally, however, ad carried three small cuts; (1), two women, with quote below reading, "Don't talk to me about principles, I won't have a Negro for a son-in-law"; (2), John Mills and Brenda de Banzie, with quote, "The thought of my daughter with a Negro makes me sick"; (3), Negro (Johnny Sekka) and Mills, with quote, "Give me one good reason why I shouldn't marry your daughter that doesn't have the word black in it." Ad ran on Sunday, Oct. 6, was repeated in Friday's edition, then was killed and replaced for later editions by similar, but single column, ad using same three small cuts and quotes but also quoting some N. Y. reviews. Larger ad also ran first edition of Friday's Citizen-News, then was killed and replaced with the one column ad.

Times, however, refused any of the projected ads on basis "we can't use Negro or black in copy."

Einfeld, Conn Hit Road

Twentieth-Fox ad-pub veep Charles Einfeld and domestic sales chief Robert L. Conn left New York yesterday (Tues.) for a series of meetings with exhibs around the country on 20th's upcoming yearend release, "The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah."

First stop on the itinerary is San Francisco, where they'll be accompanied by western division manager Tom McCleaster. Following the Frisco meetings, McCleaster will visit all other branches in his division and outline the "Sodom" campaign to exhibs in those cities.

The same pattern will follow in New Orleans, Oct. 21, where southern division manager William B. Williams will also be present, and in Chicago, where McCleaster will rejoin Einfeld and Conn Oct. 23. The group returns for meetings in New York with eastern division manager Abe Dickstein Oct. 28.

Woes of Theatres Not Grounds For Ducking $1.15 Min.

Albany, Oct. 16.

Although the case for relief, from the new Oct. 15 minimum wage rate of $1.15 hourly, for part-time employees in motion picture theatres, is a "persuasive one," Industrial Commissioner Martin Catherwood has ruled that under the present law "neither the Industrial Commissioner nor a Minimum Wage Board is empowered to grant relief in the form of wages below statutory minimum to any industry on the basis of economic hardship."

The Minimuc Wage Committee of the New York State Motion Picture Theatres Assn, had pleaded for an exemption affecting ushers under 22 and doormen and others 60 or over. Trade body could appeal, within 90 days from the date of the Industrial Commissioner's ruling, to the three-man State Board of Standards and Appeals. It had not done so. Might be waiting for effective date (15), of the minimum wage order.

Allyn, White Sox, Into Tollvision

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

John W. Allyn, co-owner of the Chicago White Sox, was elected president of Home Theatres Inc., formed to present the International Telemeter home toll system in the southwest, at a two-day meeting of the organizers here.

Other officers: Lloyd B. Sands, exec of Hunt Oil Co., v.p.; R. A. Lile, representing Winthrop Rockefeller, secretary, and A. B. Cobb, Little Rock investment banker, treasurer. Appointed to the board was Stanley Durwood of Durwood Theatres, Kansas City.

Group reportedly intends to launch actual franchise operations in two cities simultaneously, one of them being Dallas and the other unspecified.

BRITISH RELAY'S YEAR

Reports Good Year-Bidding For Toll Franchise

Lonodon, Oct. 16.

British Relay Wireless, which is one of the wire-tv systems bidding for a tollvision franchise, has had a record trading year but depreciation charges upped to cover expansion of services, has knocked profits.

Trading profits for the year ended April 30, 1962 hiked by $1,167,600 to a peak $11,017,434. But the aforementioned charges increased in excess of $1,500,000 has brought the group profit to $1,657,214 as against $2,118,575 for the previous year. Dividend, however, stays at 17%.

Films-to-Tele In Supreme Review

Washington, Oct. 16.

The U.S. Supreme Court got the lowdown on motion picture productions today (Tues.) in the Government's case against six film distributors accused of illegally making contracts in "blockbookings" to television stations. The six distributors are accused of signing tv stations to contracts amounting to $4,679,053.

Attorney Louis Nizer represented three of the defendants—Loew's, Inc., Associated Artists and United Artists. Myles J. Lane was lawyer for Screen Gems Inc.

National Telefilm, and C & C Super Corp, were also defendants.

The Government slapped complaints against the firms in 1961 accusing them of offering both good and bad films in a package contract to the stations. If the stations asked to be selective in the choice of films, or if they refused any one of those offered, the entire package was withdrawn, the U.S. said.

The N.Y. Federal Court agreed that "package-only" offers were a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. However, it drew a fine line in adding that the distributors can withhold the films, pending negotiations with a competing station to buy them.

The Government didn't agree with this ruling and made the Supreme Court appeal.

Loew's is accused by the Government of making two contracts in 1957 amounting to $329,795. One station wanted only 500 selected films.

The Government said Loew's refused to allow the choice and the station had to take all. One of the stations involved was KWTV, Oklahoma City. A similarly refused choice of films was reportedly made by Associated Artists in four contracts amounting to $2,546,030, the Government said.

IATSE & AMPP Hired Hand Study; MCA Prod. Cheer

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Two committees will be set up by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Assn. of Motion Picture Producers to study general unemployment problems of the film crafts, as a result of a meeting between Richard E. Walsh, IATSE International prexy, and Charles S. Boren, exec veepee of AMPP, with biz agents of union locals and studio labor relations heads.

First committee will make a survey of health and welfare fund benefits for the unemployed, and second, a similar scanning of the pension plan.

While here, the IA chief also inspected plans for the $10,000,000 expansion program MCA-Universal is instituting at studio, which brought about following observation:

"This multi-million-dollar step," said Walsh, who reps more than 20,000 union members in film industry, "is the first time in several decades that any Hollywwood film studio has made this kind of an 'investment in the future' by new construction.

"It has the admiration of all of us, representing as we do the finest and most skilled corps of film workers in the world.

"We view this as a ringing demonstration of faith in American labor and an assurance that Hollywood will continue to keep its place as the film capital of the world."

Walsh said that the accelerated activity at Universal-Revue gave him "enthusiasm and confidence for the future of Hollywood picture-making and has great importance in motion picture labor."

ROBERT E. McELFRESH AS 20TH'S COMPTROLLER

Robert E. McElfresh, formerly assistant to the general manager of the Ford Motor Co., has been named comptroller of 20th-Fox. Though the official 20th announcement makes no mention of it, McElfresh succeeds M. L. Breggin, who has resigned. It's understood Breggin is staying on with company in the accounting department.

A 1942 graduate from Harvard, McElfresh became assistant to the general manager of Forest Lawn in 1946. In 1949 he joined Ford and since that time has served the company in a variety of domestic and overseas posts.

Regents: Ours the Function, Not Court

Brind Brief Indicates Next Week's Clash On 'Connection' — 'Obscenity' Vs. 'Vulgarity'

Albany, Oct. 16.

The State of New York's Board of Regents will contend during the week of Oct. 22 at appeal hearings that the Appellate Division, Third Dept., has in the instance of 'The Connection" simply substituted its, the court's, opinion, for the Regents. Latter, operating via the Education Dept. has authority to license, or refuse to license, feature films.

"The Connection" meantime awaits adjudication in the hope of resuming exhibition, begun without a license, at the new D. W. Griffith Theatre near Times Square, Manhattan. The New York-made film based on Jack Gelber's play about dope addicts has been fighting a long litigation with the State. It has pitted Charles Brind for the State and Ephraim London, for Irwin Shapiro's Films Round World, in another of their several and increasingly bitter clashes over censorship.

Though "The Connection" was recently reviewed in the New York City dailies and generally found "dull," its employment 11 times on the soundtrack of the curt word for human excrement has made it a disputatious item. The word is not "obscene," only "vulgar," per the ruling.

Counsel Brind is arguing in his appeal from Attorney London's earlier appeal that there would be no point in the Regents reviewing films "if the courts were to take over the prerogative." Further quote from Brind's brief:

"We recognize that the Regents can not be blatantly arbitrary, but, on the other hand, as we have pointed out before, if reasonable men can come to a conclusion to which they adhere, their decision is entitled to stand."

The Regents are responsible "across the board" for the cross-section audiences of motion pictures. "Motion pictures are not restricted to children or to adults. Each one includes the morons and the juvenile delinquents, teen-agers and young men, alone or in company with each other, are present in the audience, and the use of this language to such audiences is, in the opinion of the Regents, obscene."

"Everything that is obscene perhaps could be designated as vulgar, but the use and effect of such expressions as (here the brief cites three others, not apparently heretofore officially mentioned), are, as far as the Regents are concerned, clearly obscene."

The filed pleading adds: "The expression is used otherwise, as an expletive. No one of these expressions can be characterized as a reference to 'heroin'."

"If the Regents are entrusted with the responsibility, as heads of the education system, to urge school teachers and educators to inculcate moral and spiritual values for the school children, and that those in the system set forth an example for the community, they can not endorse this sort of thing, on the theory that it is merely vulgar," declared the brief.

Issue on 'Long John's'

"Long John" (Nebel) show on New York radio station WOR last Friday (12), midnight to 6 a.m., focused anew on the matter of classification of pictures. Advocating such ratings was N.Y. State Assemblyman Luigi Marano; against were Felix Bilgrey, attorney for the Film Importers and Distributors Assn., and Jack Gelber, author of the as-yet-unlicensed film, "The Connection." Whether the latter indie production is to receive a license for N.Y. exhibition is now in a state of litigation.

Marano, who repeatedly introduces legislation for classification, again insisted that children should be protected from obscenities. Rebutted Bilgrey: "We don't need a state father." It is at home that youngsters should acquire knowledge as to what's wrong and what's right, added Bilgrey.

Marano asked the rhetorical question anent obscene written material. Oscenity is in the minds of the readers, responded Bilgrey.

Gelber's "Connection" is in a state of legalistic disarray because of repeated use of a four-lettered word which in the patois of the addicts is an expression for junk, or narcotics.

The word was not heard on the radio show because, said Bilgrey later, "it would not have been in good taste."

Hartford Reaches 1,000th Toll Home; Varies Talent

Hartford, Oct. 16.

The total subscribers for WHCT-TV, nation's first wireless paysee station, now stands at 1,000 plus. Last week the 1,000th patron enrolled. Original schedule called for that figure to be reached by the first of September.

This week a rental charge of 75c per week each to the original subscribers went into effect. Station has been airing since June 28. New subscribers at present do not pay the weekly rental fee until they have been enrolled for three months.

Station is currently moving into a more variegated program spectrum and away from movies. Recent offerings have been Bolshoi Ballet, Kingston Trio and Patterson-Liston fight.

In a fullpage ad in the Hartford Courant on Sunday (7), WHCT-TV outlined a three months course to follow. Pencilled in for the quarter year period are a two hour comedy "A Party" with Betty Comden and Adolph Green. Hildegarde is slated as well as a dance group, "Bayanihan Philippine" troupe, as are all of the National Hockey League games from Madison Square Garden and Boston Garden.

Also slated are home basketball games of World Champion Boston Celtics and New York Knickerbockers. Yale-Cornell football game is slated for the paysees on October 20 for Yale Bowl.

On Oct. 16, subscribers will be offered the Dick Tiger-Gene Fullmer International Middleweight Championship fight from Candlestick Park, San Francisco.

In its ad, WHCT stresses that the subscription tv is not intended to replace regular tv viewing but rather to supplement it. States the ad, "Subscription tv is not intended to replace your regular tv viewing but to increase your tv enjoyment."

American Legion's Film Slants

Raps Runaway Producers, 'Cleopatra' for Using Italians, 'Longest Day' for Using GIs

Las Vegas, Oct. 16.

During business sessions of last week's convention here the American Legion delegates roared on cue as follows:

(1) Displeasure with runaway production, asking Federal laws to prevent American film producers shooting in foreign countries, though just how that could be done was skipped over. The Legion did not advocate the U.S. Treasury substituting for Eady Fund subsidy or other financial benefits U.S. producers get in some overseas countries.

(2) "Cleopatra," made in Italy, was slammed for having deprived thousands of Americans of jobs.

(3) Taking up the chorus of certain Congressmen, as the result of which the Pentagon is now "tough" on cooperation with U.S. producers, the Legion criticized 20th-Fox for using European-based U.S. troops in the "Longest Day."

(4) A resolution to forbid the overseas showing of "Advise and Consent" as "detrimental to our way of life" was recommended for rejection by the Legion's Foreign Relations Subcommittee, on grounds that the U.S. Information Agency, to which the resolution was directed, does not have direct jurisdiction over overseas film distribution.

AUDIE MURPHY, WITNESS

Houston, Tex., Oct. 16.

Audie Murphy, the film player, was a witness Wednesday (10) in a $70,000 damage suit filed by Rudy Duran, a local actor. Latter is suing Owen F. Jensen Jr., vice-president of the Layne Texas Co., driver of a car that struck Duran here on Jan. 2, 1960.

Duran claims he lost $45,000 in film contracts, $23,000 in physical damages and $2,000 for medical expenses because of the accident. Murphy testified Duran had been signed as a stand-in for Guy Mitchell in the film "Whispering Smith," in which Murphy costarred.

According to Murphy this could have been a big break for Duran in films but he had to cancel.

Little Messages to Film Producers

BETWEEN MAIL-CHUTE AND ROTARY PRESS THERE CAN BE NO REAL CONTEST

The producer of a motion picture, and/or his distributor, covets the respect and esteem of the film trade at large—circuit officials, theatre managers, bookers, publicists, field men, and the whole kaboodle of people who directly and indirectly influence the fate of any release. To this "first line of sell," producers and distributors direct their statements concerning the promise of a feature, prior to release, and the fullfilment of that promise, after release.

Nowadays it is more important than in block-booking days that every film be individually handled with the maximum vigor and intelligence. The contrast between smart selling and dull, do-nothing passivity was never so painfully visible as in today's market.

The case for trade paper advertising rests upon the realities of communications "impact." No greater folly of false security arises than the confusion and profusion of mimeographed handouts, by mail or by small boy, as the equivalent of an advertising policy. Mimeograph can never substitute for trade display copy though there are those who have fallen into a curious habit of kidding themselves that they have "told the trade" when all they have done is ordered their girl to cut a stencil and "get it out quick."

Don't get lost in great desk-piles of mimeograph. Your importance communications acquire true importance in display space.

The Quare Fellow

convictions totter still more when he hears precisely what caused her husband to murder his brother. Mostly, though, he is influenced by a veteran warder (Walter Macken) who believes that capital punishment is often a worse crime than the original offence.

"The Quare Fellow" (Irish prison slang for a guy due to be topped) is mostly a study of men's conscience and convictions. Such thin storyline as there is hinges on whether the murderer will be reprieved. He is not, despite the admission of last minute evidence by the wife that the reason for the murder was because she was discovered in bed with her brother-in-law. Further complication is that the wife (Sylvia Syms) is easing the strain of the waiting days with drink and the solace of McGcohan's bed. This, incidentally, was not a factor in the play and adds a touch of unnecessary artificiality to the screenplay. Viewpoint of Arthur Driefuss, who directed and wrote the screenplay, is that it helps the young warder to realize that there is guilt and fault in everybody.

The film, a mixture of grim humor and cynical starkness, brings out the clamminess and misery of prison life, and is helped by the grey lensing of Peter Hennessy. McGoohan, a powerful young actor, has a tricky task in that much of his job is done in the background. But he brings awareness and understanding to the part and has some quiet, excellent scenes with both Miss Syms and Macken. The femme star, a mixture of charm and sluttishness, has one of her best opportunities and takes it well. Too often she, like many other young British actress, has been condemned to colorless roles. Macken is authoritative as the warder with a conscience.

Other noteworthy thesping in lesser roles comes from Dermot Kelly as a warder who believes in keeping prisoners to heel, Pauline Delaney, Robert Bernal, Hilton Edwards, Frank O'Donovan, Aubrey Morris and Arthur O'Sullivan as the sadistic, cynical hangman. There is one scene, however, on the eve of the execution in which the hangman gets involved in a saloon brawl which strikes a ludicrously false note. It is doubtful, even in feckless Dublin, whether a hangman would take the tools of his trade around on a saloon jag and lose them. Rich.

Der Zigeunerbaron
(The Gypsy Baron)
(GERMAN—SONGS—COLOR)

Berlin, Oct. 9.

Constantin release of Berolina (Kurt Ulrich) production. Stars Carlos Thompson, Heidi Bruehl, Willi Millowitsch; features Daniele Gaubert, Peer Schmidt, Ida Ehre. Directed by Kurt Wilhelm. Screenplay, Heinz Oskar Wuttig, from operetta by Johann Strauss; camera, Willi Sohm; music, Johann Strauss; editor, Martin Duebber. At Marmorhaus, Berlin. Running time, 104 MINS.

Sandor von Barinkay	Carlos Thompson
Arsena	Heidi Bruehl
Kalman Zsupan	Willi Millowitsch
Saffi	Daniele Gaubert
Erno	Peer Schmidt
Czipra	Ida Ehre
Pali	Pierre Parcel

In 1954, Berlin's Kurt Ulrich produced Johann Strauss' operetta, "The Gypsy Baron" for the screen. The result fell considerably short of the well remembered (1935) UFA production which saw Adolf Wohlbrueck (Anton Walbrook) playing the "Gypsy Baron." This 1962 production doesn't even reach the mediocre quality of Ulrich's 1954 venture. He probably picked "Baron" because this operetta work is in public domain.

The latest "Gypsy Baron" probably represents Germany's filmmaking at its current weakest. Omitting the music, there's practically nothing positive about this production. The acting and direction are wishy-washy, the jokes corny, and the "action" and dance sequences are of provincial calibre. This pic is only something for the less fussy patrons.

Argentine-born Carlos Thompson plays Sandor von Barinkay, the Gipsy Baron, and makes himself overly irresistible. His role's singing voice is by Fritz Wunderlich of the Munich State Opera. At times Wunderlich's voice is heard before even Thompson opens his mouth.

Heidi Bruehl makes a cute Arsena, daughter of the wealthy Zsupan, a pig dealer, but hardly more than that. Her acting abilities seem limited. Willi Millowitsch (Zsupan) tries hard to be funny but with no special results. About the only one who measures up to expectations is French actress Daniele Gaubert in the role of Saffi, the gypsy girl.

The biggest advantage about this celluloid version of "Gipsy Baron" is still the ever-appealing music. Exteriors, incidentally, were filmed in Yugoslavia as substitute for Hungary where the story actually occurs. Hans.

Gay Purr-ee
(COLOR)

Full-length cartoon musical. Solid values in art, music, voice and production areas, plus top offscreen "cast" names, offset story inadequacies. Good "family" attraction, but will need trade and consumer sell.

Hollywood, Oct. 11.

Warner Bros. release of UPA production. Voices of Judy Garland, Robert Goulet, Red Buttons, Hermione Gingold, Paul Frees, Morey Amsterdam, Mel Blanc, Julie Bennett, Joan Gardner. Directed by Abe Levitow. Written by Dorothy & Chuck Jones; camera (Technicolor), Roy Hutcheroft, Dan Miller, Jack Stevens, Duane Keegan; editors, Sam Horta, Earl Bennett; art director, Victor Haboush; music, Harold Arlen; lyrics, E. Y. Harburg; production designers, Robert Singer, Richard Ung, "Corny" Cole, Ray Aragon, Edward Levitt, Ernest Nordli; color stylists, Don Peters, Gloria Wood, Robert Inman, Phil Norman, Richard Kelsey; animators, Ben Washam, Phil Duncan, Hal Ambro, Ray Patterson, Grant Simmons, Irv Spence, Don Lusk, Hank Smith, Harvey Toombs, Volus Jones, Ken Harris, Art Davis, Fred Madison. Reviewed at Academy Awards Theatre, Oct. 11, '62. Running time, 85 MINS.

The artwork in "Gay Purr-ee" ranks with the finest ever manufactured in the specialized realm of the animated cartoon. This superior facet of the UPA production will be a welcome bonus for adults attracted to the film by the star-studded cast of "speaking" and "singing" voices or the urgings of their children. Essentially a "family" entertainment, the Warner Bros. release is hampered by an uninspired storyline, but its otherwise slick and meticulous production values overshadow the weaknesses with ample artistry to register favorably at the boxoffice within cartoon invitations. Furthermore, the current absence of new full-length animated Disney competition affords a choice opportunity for the UPA-Warners item to fill a programming hole. However, aggressive trade and consumer selling is necessary.

"Purr-ee" adds up to a kind of feline afterthought to Disney's "101 Dalmations," though it does not figure to score quite as strongly at the kitty. Emphasis in the UPA effort is more on music, however, with frequent breaks in story continuity for warbling accompanied by stunning splashes of color. Harold Arlen and Yip Harburg have penned eight numbers, one of which, a dramatic blues titled "Paris Is a Lonely Town" and sung explosively by Judy Garland, has the earmarks of a hit. The other refrains are appropriate in context, but lack the haunting quality for outside success.

The Dorothy and Chuck Jones story describes the plight of "Mewsette" (Miss Garland), a country bred Gallicat who purr-ambulates to Paris, is kit-napped by some dastardly cat-nippers, then rescued at the brink of catty-cornered catastrophe by her forsaken lover, "Jaune Tom" (Robert Goulet) and his faithful sidekick, "Robespierre" (Red Buttons).

Voice work is A-1, with exceptional efforts by Buttons and Paul Frees (as the villain). Hermione Gingold has a key role, and there is accomplished vocal support from Morey Amsterdam, Mel Blanc, Julie Bennett and Joan Gardner. Miss Garland's singing is characterized by her patented verve, oomph and feeling, and Goulet sings clearly and robustly.

Outstanding contributions to the production, helmed by Abe Levitow for exec producer Henry G. Saperstein, are those of art director Victor Haboush and the large, talented staffs of color stylists, animators and production designers (names listed above in credits). Decision to depict provincial French exteriors in a Van Gogh motif was inspired, and a passage in which impressions of the works of 11 great artsts are represented onscreen with feline principals is a memorable one.

Credit also is due such contributors as music arranger-conductor Mort Lindsay, vocal arranger Joseph J. Lilley, and the camera and editorial staffs, also listed above. John Hitesman's main titles adroitly link story characters with image of the voice behind the scenes. Tube.

(In English)

Made by an American director in Italy using English, with French producers and French, British and Italo actors, this is a sleek, mannered look at an affair between a cold, almost psychotic, call girl and a writer who is a fraught with overtones of masochism. It has the theme and treatment for good Yank playoff chances and could have some arty theatre mileage. But it needs the hardsell.

A blustering, self satisfied British writer, who has a bestseller and smash pic under his belt, has also amassed an Italian fiancee and lives in Venice and Rome. His film producer suspects him and being in love with his fiancee, is having him investigated.

He has to come up with another story, and goes off to a posh secluded house on an isle near Venice. A broken rudder had let a boat in with an enigmatic, hard-looking French girl and an older man. They had broken into the house and she was calmly in the bathtub when the writer comes in. He wants to throw them out until he ogles the femme.

He throws out the older man who had paid off the girl in paintings for a night of love. The writer tries to get next to her but she knocks him cold with an ashtray. Thus starts an obsession. She teases and tantalizes before she finally gives in but warns him not to fall in love. He does, and she begins to shun him. He drops his fiancee and spends all on her till she finally throws him out.

He marries but is haunted by the other. On his honeymoon, when his wife is away for a day, he brings the girl back to his love nest, but she refuses him. When his wife comes back and finds her, he becomes a sort of exile guide always hounding her steps.

He even tries to kill her but can't do it. She flagellates him roundly with a riding crop. It ends with her going off on a trip from which she may not return, and he is destined to become a derelict. All this is played at too high a pitch by director Joseph Losey.

Picture is reminiscent of pre-war Yank femme fatale films. But it seems somewhat oldhat today. Of course, the prostie is becoming a popular film figure these days, and this also looks at the difficulty of loving. But there is not enough character to give acceptance to the over-indulgence in re Jeanne Moreau as the cold-hearted harlot.

Miss Moreau, a French star, speaks good English but is hampered by the over-decorated, overstylized vamp she is called on to play. Stanley Baker acquits himself acceptably as the climbing ex-coal miner, and others are adequate.

This has a solid production dress from producers Robert and Raymond Hakim, and expert technical aspects. At times, director Losey does get deeper into the hopelessness of tangled loves. But he has not given it the out-and-out melodramatics to make it a rousing entry.

Picture could be a good exploitation item on circuits, with a possible art tag.

Incidentally, this production was yanked from the recent Venice Film Fest because of squabbles between the producers and director, and between the fest officials and producers who wanted a different showing date. Its arty aspects might have benefited from the festival airing. Mosk.

MPAA for Continued Existence Of COMPO, on Matched-Dollar Basis

Council of Motion Picture Organizations, founded in 1950, will continue in business so long as the Motion Picture Assn. of America has its way. MPAA, via its member film companies, last week at a New York meeting voted to sustain the COMPO organization with continuing dues contributions so long as they're matched dollar-for dollar by exhibitors.

It boils down to this: The film outfits will support COMPO up to the half-way mark and insists that theatremen, as through Allied States, Theatre Owners of America and regional exhib outfits provide the other half.

A meeting in November will determine the extent of exhib support but chances are that the theatremen will repeat past performance—that is, they'll provide their share.

COMPO, headed by Charles E. McCarthy, would thus continue in existence as the so-called all-industry organization. It's through the name of COMPO that the industry oft-times battles its way through disagreeable legislation, including taxation and censorship, and otherwise expresses itself as a united front.

Bruised Burglar

Dallas, Oct. 16.

Cecil Ray Brice, a former truckdriver who had been out of work with back injuries for over two months, has confessed to staging four drive-in theatre robberies in Dallas, one in Irving and one in Fort Worth.

Brice robbed the Lone Star twice within a week. He was arrested in Fort Worth when employees of a hotel noticed a gun tucked in his belt. Mrs. Ruth Fleming, cashier of the Lone Star, identified Brice in the police lineup.

50 Years for Buermele; Variety Tent Celebrates

Detroit, Oct. 16.

Carl "Cully" Buermele was honored at a testimonial Variety Club of Detroit luncheon on his 50 years in show biz. He's prez and manager of General Theatre Service here.

He began running errands and doing odd jobs for Toledo's nickleodeon emporium when he was 12, becoming manager and projectionist for the establishment, People's Theatre, when 16. He moved to Detroit to work as booker and salesman for the old Mutual Pictures Co., which became Robertson-Cole, then Kunsky-Trendle, then Publix and today is United Detroit Theatres.

Buermele helped form Mid-State Theatres, the nucleus of Cooperative Theatres of Michigan. He was president and general manager until 1942 when he formed General Theatre Service.

Critic Dwight Macdonald, A Jack the Film Ripper, Being Tapped for 'Today'

Dwight Macdonald, the Esquire mag film critic, has been approached by NBC-TV and as a result probably will appear as celluloid burner on that network's "Today" show.

Producer (and novelist) Al Morgan expressly sought a critic who was not afraid "to tear into 'em every once in awhile." Evidently, this was to serve as counterpoint to the various types of fluff and puff that any tv interview stanza must face more than occasionally.

Macdonald will be joining Dick Watts, the Post legit critic; Aline Saarinen, who will handle architecture and art criticism (as she has done on CBS-TV's rival "Calendar"), and Cleveland Amory, commentator on "the social graces."

Possibly, after the first of next year, "Today" will use Walter Kerr, the N.Y. Herald-Tribune legit critic, on some of the Broadway postmortems. The various critics will not appear daily on the cross-the-board morning show, and, in the case of legit at least, the appearances might not be any more often than once a week or even once every 10 days or two weeks. It's possible that Watts and anyone else who might share the chore of legit critic with him will be to wrap up several openings.

Most German Film Studios Exist On Television Production Now

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Oct. 16.

A West German film-maker who manages to set up the money and enthusiasm to make a film here is probably going to have to go "on location" or rent studio space in some other country for his production facilities. Just about all the major studios in West Germany are now under full or major contract, or have been sold outright, to the country's rich, progressive television stations.

With West Germany's First Television Network, channels one and two, turning more and more to films and canned productions, and with Television Network Two and Three set to go, tv producers have gobbled up just about all the studio facilities to be had.

For the cinema film-makers, it seems to be one more blow to their dwindling boxoffice returns. But for the studio owners, worried about the plight of the cinema in this country and concerned about how it would affect their own expansive facilities and trained personnel, the trend is a wonderful one.

Facts and Figures

Here are some of the latest statistics for studios in West Germany:

The Second Television Network, headquartered at nearby Mainz, and supposed to start beaming its own programs next April 1, has taken over 65% of the former UFA facilities at Berlin-Tempelhof, while 25% have gone to Sender Free Berlin, and only 10% remain in the hands of the Universum Film Corp.

The new corporation set up to take over the studios, laboratories and facilities, will also take over the personnel, so that there will be no production lag, in switching from films to movies for tv.

South German TV at Stuttgart and West German TV of Cologne now control 51% of the Geiselgasteig studios outside Munich, while only 49% are retained for Bavarian Film Studios to make cinema productions. In addition, some of the facilities have been rented by Southwest German TV of Baden-Baden.

Other Munich production facilities, the Riva Studios, have recently been sold to Bavarian Television for about $4,500,000. Considered among the most modern produc-

Rome, Oct. 16.

The Italian film industry plans to join the British and French in boycotting the film and tv "Supermarket" which will be held in Copenhagen in the latter part of this month. British and French organization, according to local reports, have already confirmed their abstention from the Danish event, while the Italo decision is expected to be announced during this weeks Paris meetings of the joint Italo-France-German Film Committee.

No official reason is given here for the boycott, but it's known that certain Italo film toppers have expressed surprise at fact that to date, the organizers of the Copenhagen mart had not contacted the official industry organizations in Italy, France, or Britain about industry participation or even to explain intentions of event. Hence their misgivings about the new initiative, which has now led to their decision.

Pointed out here that there may be another, unofficial, reason behind the local blowout. A film market for tv and theatrical films very similar to the Copehangen plan already existes with full recognition from the varios international industry organizations. This is Milan's MIFED, those 6th semi-annual meeting is now in full swing on the Milan Fairgrounds. Similarity of dates (Copenhagen announcement also gave October and April same as MIFED) likewise raised local eyebrows.

Copenhagen "Supermart," according to local reports, is organized by the City of Copenhagen in tandem with the Danish Tourist Office.

Benefit Week Slated For Mexican Prod. Workers

Mexico City, Oct. 9.

A week of prizewinning Mexican films has been set for the Real Cinema from November 15-22. Films will also be shown in various nabe houses. The event has been organized by the Association of Mexican Film Reporters for the benefit of industry production workers.

As part of the promotion, Mexican stars and starlets will make personal appearances in the theatres. Apart from curtain speeches actors will also put on skits, do song and dance routines, comedy, etc.

The film newspapermen will also award the "Silver Sarape" trophy to veteran actors of the past 30 years. Trophy is worth approximately $800.

Special festivals and benefits coincide with the 17th anniversary celebration of the Union of Film Production Workers, going into its 18th year October 17. A special ceremony commemorating this event is set for the anniversary date at the Churubusco Studios.

Norwegian Feature Sets B.O. Records

Oslo, Oct. 16.

"Operation Spring," the first Norwegian film of this season, has broken all boxoffice records in almost every city in Norway. The record up till now was held by "Gone With The Wind" (MG) shown at above average prices. In Oslo, "Operation Spring" has, in eight weeks, grossed $130,000 in two theatres.

Scales in Oslo for features vary from 50c to 75c but super productions, almost always shown in the Cinerama Colosseum, have scales of $1 to $2. Louis de Rochemont's "Windjammer" still holds the record in Oslo, the only city having cinema equipment for 70m and Cinerama.

"Operation Spring" is one of the few local pix made in color, a comedy treating the problem of middle aged men called back for the second time in the armed forces. Pic is the first for the young Egil Monn-Iversen. Monn-Iversen controls disc companies, an impresario biz, juke boxes, and the 50 year-old vaude theatre "Chat Noir," in which he also conducts the band.

As usual, Monn-Iversen launched some new talent in his first film effort. Knut Andersen directed. Knut Bohwim produced, and Mattis Mathiesen was the director of photography, while Monn-Iversen himself wrote the score and conducted the orchestra. Actors was picked from the "Chat Noir" stable, including "The Monn-Keys" a local song-quartett featuring Solvi Wang, the wife of Monn-Iversen.

The film has been sold in Denmark and Sweden, and is set to open shortly. Monn-Iversen is next going to do "Joacim" in Greece, with a new director, Pal Lokkeberg, and plans to make a film of Henrik Ibsen's "The Wild Duck." Grandson of Ibsen, Tancred Ibsen, Norwegian film veteran, is writing the screenplay and will also direct.

Kenneth Rive to N.Y.

London, Oct. 16.

Kenneth Rive, managing director of Gala Film Distributors, is back from N. Y. for meetings with Columbia brass regarding the company's lineup for 1963, which Gala will handle exclusively in the United Kingdom.

The Gala-Columbia affiliation started with "Mein Kampf" and during the past year the British company has handled "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," "Latin Lovers," "Senelita," etc., and is due to launch shortly Roger Vadim's "Love on a Pillow," "Salvatore Giuliano" and the British-made "Reach for Glory."

Gala has also taken over distribution of Brigitte Bardot's "The Truth" and "La Dolce Vita."

SPAIN LIKES 'EXODUS'

Madrid, Oct. 9.

"Exodus" in 70m is now filling the Todd-A.O. screen at the Cine Paz to chalk up an unusually high distrib net for the first three weeks of showcasing. According to UA rep in Spain, Joseph Goltz, the Otto Preminger production has been averaging the peseta equivalent of approximately $6,500 per week for the UA release franchise banner, C. B. Films. Second week topped the opening stanza and the third frame shows no signs of diminishing return.

All three rounds were higher than the respective "Alamo" take last year and indicate that "Exodus" might reach or top the terrific 39-week "Alamo" premier run in the same house.

Copenhagen Sets Film-TV Market

Paris, Oct. 16.

A French screenwriter and director, Roger Miridia, has organized what he calls "The International TV and Film Exchange" which is to take place in Copenhagen semi annually from now on. The first 10 day session unspools Oct. 22 and the next one will be in April '63. It will focus mainly on the buying and selling of pix in all categories.

Miridia says it will unfold like a vast supermarket where any country in the world can send films of all kinds, vidpix, features, shorts, commercial pix, etc. He is living in Copenhagen and says he chose it as the center because of its accessibility and the town's experience in staging international conventions. It is being underwritten by the City of Copenhagen and the Danish Bureau of Tourism.

He emphasizes that special customs arrangements will facilitate film handling and cut expenses. He also points out that the price hiking aspects of regular prize-giving film fests will be eliminated.

The exchange will offer screening halls, a closed circuit tv setup and be able to screen all film sizes and processes. Besides the business side, there will be equipment of the past and present displays, plus a U.S. tv satellite and a Czech exhibition.

Subtitling will also be handled by the Exchange with a new process that allows titles to be added quickly, without marring the original film. Translators, freight agents and banking services will also be handy.

There will also be a special section for video and film writers to meet prospective buyers. Any number and type of pix can be entered by any country. It remains to be seen if this market will compete with, or coordinate with, the similar MIFED setup in Italy.

Milan, Oct. 16.

More than 500 films from 150 production firms repping 28 countries are currently unspooling at the 6th Milan Film, TV Film, and Documentary Market (MIFED). Mart is held twice each year, in spring and fall.

Various "outside" gatherings are as usual taking place on MIFED premises, during the two-week session. Already under way is a meeting of the Franco - Italian committee which is charged with drawing up the new coproduction and film exchange pacts between the two European industries.

Italy's group is headed by Nicola DePirro for the government, Eitel Monaco for the industry, Goffredo Lombardo for the producers.

MIFED sideline events also include a three-day program dedicated to Bulgarian films and a gathering of film critics.

International Sound Track

Paris

Local film buffs overjoyed at hearing that the original nine hour version of the late Erich Von Stroheim's 1924 Yank pic "Greed" (MG) was found in Utah. In its two hour June Mathis version film was one of the films designated as the greatest of all time at the Brussels Film Fest in 1958 and has always been SRO at its showings at the local Film Museum, the Cinematheque Francaise. Regulars hope that Henri Langlois, who runs the Cinematheque, will somehow lay his hands on this filmic windfall. Didn't he have five hours of outtakes of Sergei Eisenstein's unfinished "Que Viva Mexico?" Von Stroheim died here three years ago.

Paul Czinner's filming of the Salzburg Fest version of Richard Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier" got five showings at the ballet and concert house, Theatre Des Champs Elysees this week at a $1 minimum similar to special handling at Carnegie Hall, N.Y. . . . Critic Jean Douchet making his first pic, a short, "Le Mannequin De Belleville," about arty photog and his "American" model who turns out to be from a French working district.

Fernandel's next, "Le Voyage a Biarritz," will have some exteriors shot in Britain. Gilles Grangier directs . . . George Cukor was through checking actors for possible parts in his "Olympia" which he begins in '63 with Ava Gardner special showing of Otto Preminger's "Advise and Consent" (Col) for top French politicos here had many exclaiming that it was very timely vis-a-vis politics here.

Jacques Demy, who made "Lola," says he is only interested in dreams and not reality and wants pix to transport him out of everyday life. That is what he tries to do in his present opus . . . Francois Truffaut now doing Ray Bradbury's "Fahrenheit 431," comments that he has always wanted to make a film in which characters would read books out loud.

Rome

Two million dollars is the (unconfirmed) record asking price for Federico Fellini's "Fellini 8½" (Cineriz), just completed shooting here, and both Embassy and Columbia are talking shop; question of prior rights (Astor once held an option) and territories must still be ironed out before any pact jells, however . . . Columbia has meanwhile picked up "Salvatore Giuliano" for various areas, including U.S., Britain, Holland, Scandinavia, as well as securing a few non-pacted countries for "Divorce, Italian Style". . . both "Giuliano" and "Divorzio" are Lux-Vides-Galatea Productions packaged by Franco Cristaldi.

"Eclipse," Michaelangelo Antonioni's latest, which opens this month in New York, just copped Italian "Charlie Chaplin" award over a number of other Italo contenders . . . BBC-TV in Rome lensing program on Italo film industry, shot footage of "The Leopard," interviewed Titanus topper Goffredo Lombardo, and covered klieg opening of Robert Aldrich's "Sodom & Gomorrah". . . John Derek lost $50,000 court case over his premature departure from Italo-Spanish pic, "The Colossus of Rhodes". . . court ruled injunction filed in June 1960 by producers Cineproduzioni Associate as valid, voted against thesp.

Titanus' "Il Disordine" (The Disorder) accepted by San Francisco Fest . . . Oceania Productions of Rome has announced upcoming start of "Lolita" . . . Federico Fellini admits he's had an interesting offer from the Mirisch organization to direct a pic for them, but sez that money or no money, it'll have to be his picture, and thus will probably be made in Italy . . . Roberto Rossellini says he'll quit filmmaking, take up writing, after he winds his next two for Alfredo Bini's Arco Film: "Rogopag" and "Sagapo" . . . Orson Welles, incidentally, signed for "Rogopag" episode to be directed by Pier Paolo Pasolini, and called "La Ricotta" . . . starts here Oct. 15 . . . Gina Lollobrigida starts "Mare Matto" soon in Leghorn, with J. P. Belmondo also in Renato Castellani pic for Vides and Cineriz.

Rossano Brazzi will team with Galatea and BBH to produce "Dark Purpose," Shirley Jones starrer to be directed by George Marshall for U-I release in the U.S. . . . pic moves end of year . . . Brazzi also talking a RAI-TV show with the Italian radio-video network.

Berlin

Metro's "Mutiny on the Bounty" will have its simultaneous German preem Dec. 21 in nine cities (Berlin, Hamburg, Frankfurt, Munich, Cologne, Hanover, Dortmund, Duesseldorf and Nuremberg) . . . According to local trade reports, the Italo-French "Boccaccio '70" was most screened pic in West-German key cities last month, followed by Austria's "Julia, You're Wonderful," Universal's "Cape Fear," Rank's "El Cid," United Artists' "Phaedra," same company's "Magnificent Three," Italy's "Italian Divorce," Metro's "Sweet Bird of Youth," the Orson Welles classic "Citizen Kane" and Rank's "Nikki" . . . Lineup of new U.S. pix in town include "All Fall Down" (MG), "Sacramento" (MG) and "Road to Hong Kong" and there are several reissues such as "Stage Fright" (WB), "Mogambo" (MG), among others . . . The Israeli documentary, "Description of a Fight," has been recommended for local youth by cultural authorities here . . . Films in the making here include Alfred Weidenmann's "I Too Am Only a Woman" (Rialto-Gloria), which stars Maria Schell and Paul Christian-Hubschmid, and "The Telephone Rang at Night" (Divina-Gloria) directed by Gezavon Cziffra . . . Kurt Ulrich's remake of "Three Penny Opera" will see Curt Juergens (Mack the Knife), Hildegard Knef (Jenny), Walter Giller (Filch) and Gert Froebe (Peachum) in the leads.

Buenos Aires

Sandrini productions, apart from commitments with Atlas and D'An Fran, is to produce its own material and finance distribution of foreign pictures and those of independent Argentine producers. As a first venture it will distribute the hindu film "Devta" produced in black, white and color by Bengali director N. Pattana.

An Argentine film week was held recently in Paraguay, the pictures exhibited were "The Sisters" (Sono), "The Man of the Rose Colored Corner" (Sono) "Three Times Ana" (Sono) "Amorina" (Sono) "Culpable" (Del Carril) and several others.

There was some disgruntlement in Paraguay when most of the stars scheduled to attend did not appear. This was eventually put right when Luis Sandrini flew up with his wife, Malvina Pastorino and a couple of others joined in.

The Screen Institute was pleased with the Argentine film week held in Biarritz recently, at which the seven pictures submitted were sold for European distribution. Another week is to be held in Italy, followed by one in Madrid. Dr. Goti Aguilar feels the results justify the considerable expenditure involved.

Sergio Kogan has joined forces with Columbia on a production-distribution deal. Kogan has produced several films in Mexico and will now transfer his operations to this country, with Columbia distributing in Spanish-speaking markets. There will be no Screen Institute financing of this project.

A 14-member committee, representing Argentine screen activities, is now counselling the Screen Institute, on the invitation of Dr. Goti Aguilar, giving them a free hand to elect members. This attitude met with instant success and the industry is currently well pleased with this latest Institute chief. The producers are represented by Eduardo Bedoya, Luis Mentasti and Nestor Gaffet, with Hector Olivera as an alternate; the Producers' Association is represented by Antonio Motti, Redendo Castro and Antonio Garcia Smith as alternate; Newsreel producers have Roberto Talice, with Juan Rodriguez Pendas as alternate.

Berlin, Oct. 16.

The 12th annual Berlin Cultural Festival which wound up here last week with Fritz Kortner's magnificent staging of Shakespeare's "As You Like It" at the Schiller Theatre and Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida," a "scenic cantata" conducted by Eugen Jochum and staged by Gustav Rudolf Sellner, at the Deutsche Oper. Earlier in the week, there was the local preem of Friedrich Duerrenmatt's eagerly awaited play, "The Physicists," at the Schlosspark Theatre.

Of the classical plays performed here as part of the festival, "As You Like It" walked off with the honors. There had been some criticism as to whether it was necessary to present this Shakespeare comedy which, after all, had already been staged three times in postwar Berlin, but all criticism was stilled in light of the excellent staging.

Duerrenmatt's "Physicists" was seriously staged by Hans Lietzau although it's actually a comedy. The majority of the local crix appreciated the serious form pointing out that its topic is much too serious and no laughing matter. Duerrenmatt, who attended the local preem, was given a standing ovation.

Of the new plays, Paddy Chayefsky's "The Tenth Man," at Berliner Theatre, was a special hit with both press and public. Norman Krasna's "A Sunday In New York," presented at the Komedie, emerged as comedy theatre at its best. Remainder of theatrical presentations included a number of mediocre items.

Reflecting upon the festival, the best productions in general were on the musical side. The two guest concerts of the Viennese Philharmonic, under Herbert von Karajan and Georg Solti, may be regarded as festival's musical highlights. Hans Werner Henze's new opera, "Elegy For Young Lovers," and Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida" contributed to the prestige of their composers and Deutsche Oper Berlin. Both were top-flight productions.

The ballet ensembles offered both plus and negative values. The performances of the Royal Ballet of London were definitely on the plus side, while local productions were of rather meager calibre. A solid success, commercially and (at least) partly artistically speaking, was registered by the National Ensemble of the Republic of Guinea, an African ballet consisting of 45 dancers, singers and musicians. Group guested at the Titania Palast and received many ovations for its vitality and artistry. A considerable part of the male audience seemed to enjoy its female nudity.

Th Berlin Cultural Festival inevitably has a political flavor in a city like Berlin. Local organizers stressed the need for the festival especially since the erection of the Communist wall. Berlin has to intensify any possible contact with the Western world, and it wants to show that it is a stronghold of art and culture—a stronghold that wants and must be maintained for the West. Dr. Gehart von Westerman headed the festival as he has for many years, while Professor Josef Rufer took care of the press department as usual. The organization was splendid.

'Sodom & Gomorrah' Sets Fast Italo B.O. Pace

Rome, Oct. 16.

Robert Aldrich's "Sodom & Gomorrah" is off to a promising start in Italian keys, and Titanus Films, pic's producers, are looking for record-breaking figures on the basis of early returns.

Totals for first four days in 16 Italo keys (excluding Milan) are $136,000. Initial four days in Rome's Barberini was well over $16,000, with Turin topping all on a comparative basis.

Pic opens soon in Milan and other situations not included in first mass bookings.

Paris, Oct. 16.

An International Tourism Fest is being prepared for Paris in '63 after which it will alternate in the capitals of the 62 Western oriented countries that have been approached and, technically, accepted this project.

Set up via the cooperation of governmental and private Tourism Bureaus in the various countries, it would naturally be made up of exhibits emphasizing the appeal of each nation. First one would roll in Dec. '63 for two weeks at the

Mexico City, Oct. 16.

The Mexican motion picture crisis has again brought to the fore the problem of readjustment in distribution staffs here. Distribs refuse to comment on matter, but it is learned from a reliable source that cutbacks in personnel will again be asked.

Maximino Molina, head of the Union of Film Industry Workers, admitted that "problems" in production have affected national distributors. He named the Mexican Film Distributorship, an indie output, as hard hit. Union has authorized lay off of four workers, with these receiving $1,000 dollars each in severance pay.

Molina said he could make no statement about foreign distributorships since he has not been approached officially. However, he glumly admitted that "there is a grave danger of reduced employment in distrib offices here."

Rumors of consolidation are again circulating. However this cannot be confirmed for representatives brush of leading questions, avoid making any statements about their plans.

Cimex and Peliculas Nacionales, the two official distributorships, seem to be holding their own, with Peliculas Mexicanas still the weakest member of the trio.

Asks Indonesia Probe

Tokyo, Oct. 9.

The Japan Motion Picture Producers Assn. has asked the Foreign Office and JETRO to survey the film market in Indonesia as a result of reports of a deteriorated foreign currency situation in that country.

Indonesia has been regarded as a promising market for Nipponese product. In 1961 Japan exported 105 features and 13 shorts to Indonesia—a total increase of 50 over 1960—for earnings of $153,247.

'10th Man' a Hit At Berlin Fest

Berlin, Oct. 16.

Paddy Chayefsky, Eric Burger and the Berlin public have won a battle in Berlin: Chayefsky's three-act drama, "The 10th Man," brilliantly translated into German by Eric Burger (a Berlin-born New Yorker), proved a huge success in the divided city. Of all the new plays performed here as part of the Berlin Festival, the Chayefsky creation emerged as the most original, interesting, amusing and — possibly — most applauded.

There were some who felt that this Jewish miracle play wouldn't "appeal" to German audiences, but just the opposite occurred. The critics were positive, even superlative in the local press. Herbert Pfeiffer, wrote in Berliner Morgenpost, the biggest daily here, that the play proved how much self-irony Jewish mind is capable of. As to the Berlin presentation, Pfeiffer spoke of a precious performance. It captured the Berlin audience at once, he wrote.

The success of the play is such that "Man," originally scheduled to Nov. 4, will remain until Dec. 20 at Berliner Theatre.

Paddy Chayefsky, who came to Berlin for the opening, can be fully satisfied with the Berlin production. Under the imaginative direction by Rolf Haedrich, all the players turn in top-notch performances. Although this is chiefly a group achievement, there are some standout performances: Martin Berliner (Schlissel), Emil Feldmar (Alper), Zeev Berlinsky, of Israel (Hirschmann), Georg-Peter Pilz (Zitorsky, Max Strassberg (Bleyer), Michael Degen (Arthur Brooks) and Christa Witch (Evelyn Foreman), a new young promising actress.

Mexican Legion Hits 'La Notte,' TV Too

Mexico City, Oct. 9.

The Mexican Legion of Decency has given a C-1 classification to Italian-made "The Night" ("La Notte"), starring Jean Moreau and Marcello Mastroiani.

The Legion's bulletin, distributed during Sunday church masses and at other religious centers, said vote against the film was a measure of "Christian discipline." Picture was also labeled as "inadvisable for all those who consider themselves good Christians." In screening here film drew crowds, despite the adverse Legion rating.

The Legion is also broadening its activities to include television, apart from motion pictures and legit. Recently they gave adverse ratings to Mexican soapers and plays, including "Only in the Night," and "The Heiress." Unconfirmed, but obtained from a reliable source, is a report that the Legion plans a "decisive attack" against U. S. tv shows featuring violence, gunplay, illicit love, and other questionable themes.

'Porgy & Bess' Opens in West End, Rousing 25G; 'Dr. No' Mighty 20G; 'Runner,' 'Advise & Consent' Hold

London, Oct. 9.

Patience is rewarded. Samuel Goldwyn waited several years to open "Porgy & Bess" at the Dominion, and the opening week, after a charity preem, grossed a handsome $25,000, though the total was helped by several performances in which the house was guaranteed by local charities. Another smash newcomer to the West End is "Dr. No" at the London Pavilion, which despite the fact that it's concurrently in a saturation release, is heading for a mighty $20,000 in its opening sesh. 'The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner" is finishing its second Warner frame with a steady $11,000 after a hefty $13,400 in its opening week.

"Advise & Consent" is holding firm at the Odeon, Leicester Square, with prospects of a brisk $11,000 in its fourth stanza, while at the Astoria "West Side Story" continues in socko fashion, with a wham $16,400 in its 32d week. "Lolita" is also doing very nicely at the Columbia, with a stout $12,600 for its fifth week, while "Billy Budd' looks to hit a solid $13,000 in its third Leicester Square session.

The show, sponsored annually by the Magic Circle, will also feature Jerry Darnelle, from Luxembourg, "The Man in White;" two femme performers, Evelyn Rose from Holland and Joan Rhodes from London; Lester Sharp & Iris, and Ray Allen, a ventriloquist. The production will be emceed by Michael Bailey.

A half-hour excerpt of the fest will be aired next Tuesday (16) on BBC-TV.

UNICEF Benefit Scandalized By German Press

Frankfurt, Oct. 23.

A scandal has been breaking in West German newspapers about the giant benefits the last couple of years to raise funds for UNICEF here. Marlene Dietrich, who asked for a last-minute payment of 23,000 marks (about $5,750) for singing a new German-language number at the benefit, has been made the butt of much of the unfriendly controversy.

Last year Swiss promoter Siegfried Lang put on a benefit at Dortmund with top international stars appearing, with the profits allegedly going to UNICEF. And when all the stars had been paid "minimum salaries" plus travel and hotel expenses, only a slim 169 marks (about $42) remained for UNICEF. (Current remarks by Mr. Lang say that this figure was too low—the benefit, which brought in thousands of dollars in tickets, finally paid off $600 to UNICEF.)

Nevertheless, this year's "Music of the World" gala at Duesseldorf was headlined by Marlene Dietrich, along with 16 renowned stars including Yma Sumac, Lisa

First Week Filming Of Vatican 'Council' Feature Cost $80,000

Rome, Oct. 16.

Some $80,000 was spent last week to film the opening day ceremonies at the Vatican Ecumenical Council. Material will go into an open-budgeted Eastmancolor feature documentary, being filmed with official Vatican consensus by the Luce Institute of Rome, which lensed a feature on the recent Eternal City Olympic Games.

On opening day alone 30,000 feet of film were exposed by three set cameras and 25 portable "Arriflex" units set up around the Basilica of St. Peters. Of this amount, only 450-600 feet will go into the final feature. Five assistant directors are working under director Antonio Petrucci, together with 25 assistants, 22 cameramen, 25 grips, 25 elecrticians, and 50 other men handling odd jobs.

Lighting equipment used to illuminate the huge Council area in St. Peters includes 150 10,000 watt reflectors, 100 5,000 watt reflectors for a total of 2,000 kilowatt. Also employed in what is claimed to be the biggest single lighting effort of its kind in film history are 15 arc lights powered by 6 autonomous units, plus 600 photoflood installations set up around the area. Some 45,000 feet of cable were employed.

Apart from lighting difficulties (St. Peter's is some 499 feet high) principal hazards will be in working conditions imposed: absolute silence and unobtrusiveness.

8 Nation Coproduction

Tokyo, Oct. 9.

An Asian eight-country coproduction, will go before the cameras in December. Targeted for completion next April, it's scheduled for showing at the 10th Asian Film Fest in Taipei in May.

Most German Film Studios Exist On Television Production Now

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Oct. 16.

A West German film-maker who manages to set up the money and enthusiasm to make a film here is probably going to have to go "on location" or rent studio space in some other country for his production facilities. Just about all the major studios in West Germany are now under full or major contract, or have been sold outright, to the country's rich, progressive television stations.

With West Germany's First Television Network, channels one and two, turning more and more to films and canned productions; and with Television Network Two and Three set to go, tv producers have gobbled up just about all the studio facilities to be had.

For the cinema film-makers, it seems to be one more blow to their dwindling boxoffice returns. But for the studio owners, worried about the plight of the cinema in this country and concerned about how it would affect their own expansive facilities and trained personnel, the trend is a wonderful one.

Facts and Figures

Here are some of the latest statistics for studios in West Germany:

The Second Television Network, headquartered at nearby Mainz, and supposed to start beaming its own programs next April 1, has taken over 65% of the former UFA facilities at Berlin-Tempelhof, while 25% have gone to Sender Free Berlin, and only 10% remain in the hands of the Universum Film Corp.

The new corporation set up to take over the studios, laboratories and facilities, will also take over the personnel, so that there will be no production lag, in switching from films to movies for tv.

South German TV at Stuttgart and West German TV of Cologne now control 51% of the Geiselgasteig studios outside Munich, while only 49% are retained for Bavarian Film Studios to make cinema productions. In addition, some of the facilities have been rented by Southwest German TV of Baden-Baden.

Other Munich production facilities, the Riva Studios, have recently been sold to Bavarian Television for about $4,500,000. Considered among the most modern produc-

Rome, Oct. 16.

The Italian film industry plans to join the British and French in boycotting the film and tv "Supermarket" which will be held in Copenhagen in the latter part of this month. British and French organization, according to local reports, have already confirmed their abstention from the Danish event, while the Italo decision is expected to be announced during this weeks Paris meetings of the joint Italo-France-German Film Committee.

No official reason is given here for the boycott, but it's known that certain Italo film toppers have expressed surprise at fact that to date, the organizers of the Copenhagen mart had not contacted the official industry organizations in Italy, France, or Britain about industry participation or even to explain intentions of event. Hence their misgivings about the new initiative, which has now led to their decision.

Pointed out here that there may be another, unofficial, reason behind the local bowout. A film market for tv and theatrical films very similar to the Copehangen plan already existes with full recognition from the varios international industry organizations. This is Milan's MIFED, those 6th semi-annual meeting is now in full swing on the Milan Fairgrounds. Similarity of dates (Copenhagen announcement also gave October and April same as MIFED) likewise raised local eyebrows.

Copenhagen "Supermart," according to local reports, is organized by the City of Copenhagen in tandem with the Danish Tourist Office.

Benefit Week Slated For Mexican Prod. Workers

Mexico City, Oct. 9.

A week of prizewinning Mexican films has been set for the Real Cinema from November 15-22. Films will also be shown in various nabe houses. The event has been organized by the Association of Mexican Film Reporters for the benefit of industry production workers.

As part of the promotion, Mexican stars and starlets will make personal appearances in the theatres. Apart from curtain speeches actors will also put on skits, do song and dance routines, comedy, etc.

The film newspapermen will also award the "Silver Sarape" trophy to veteran actors of the past 30 years. Trophy is worth approximately $800.

Special festivals and benefits coincide with the 17th anniversary celebration of the Union of Film Production Workers, going into its 18th year October 17. A special ceremony commemorating this event is set for the anniversary date at the Churubusco Studios.

Oslo, Oct. 16.

"Operation Spring," the first Norwegian film of this season, has broken all boxoffice records in almost every city in Norway. The record up till now was held by "Gone With The Wind" (MG) shown at above average prices. In Oslo, "Operation Spring" has, in eight weeks, grossed $130,000 in two theatres.

Scales in Oslo for features vary from 50c to 75c but super productions, almost always shown in the Cinerama Colosseum, have scales of $1 to $2. Louis de Rochemont's "Windjammer" still holds the record in Oslo, the only city having cinema equipment for 70m and Cinerama.

"Operation Spring" is one of the few local pix made in color, a comedy treating the problem of middle aged men called back for the second time in the armed forces. Pic is the first for the young Egil Monn-Iversen. Monn-Iversen controls disc companies, an impresario biz, juke boxes, and the 50 year-old vaude theatre "Chat Noir," in which he also conducts the band.

As usual, Monn-Iversen launched some new talent in his first film effort. Knut Andersen directed, Knut Bolwim produced, and Mattis Mathiesen was the director of photography, while Monn-Iversen himself wrote the score and conducted the orchestra. Actors was picked from the "Chat Noir" stable, including "The Monn-Keys" a local song-quartett featuring Solvi Wang, the wife of Monn-Iversen.

The film has been sold in Denmark and Sweden, and is set to open shortly. Monn-Iversen is next going to do "Joacim" in Greece, with a new director, Pal Lokkeberg, and plans to make a film of Henrik Ibsen's "The Wild Duck." Grandson of Ibsen, Tancred Ibsen, Norwegian film veteran, is writing the screenplay and will also direct.

Kenneth Rive to N.Y.

London, Oct. 16.

Kenneth Rive, managing director of Gala Film Distributors, is back from N. Y. for meetings with Columbia brass regarding the company's lineup for 1963, which Gala will handle exclusively in the United Kingdom.

The Gala-Columbia affiliation started with "Mein Kampf" and during the past year the British company has handled "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," "Latin Lovers," "Senelita," etc., and is due to launch shortly Roger Vadim's "Love on a Pillow," "Salvatore Giuliano" and the British-made "Reach for Glory."

Gala has also taken over distribution of Brigitte Bardot's "The Truth" and "La Dolce Vita."

SPAIN LIKES 'EXODUS'

Madrid, Oct. 9.

"Exodus" in 70m is now filling the Todd-A.O. screen at the Cine Paz to chalk up an unusually high distrib net for the first three weeks of showcasing. According to UA rep in Spain, Joseph Goltz, the Otto Preminger production has been averaging the peseta equivalent of approximately $6,500 per week for the UA release franchise banner, C. B. Films. Second week topped the opening stanza and the third frame shows no signs of diminishing return.

All three rounds were higher than the respective "Alamo" take last year and indicate that "Exodus" might reach or top the terrific 39-week "Alamo" premier run in the same house.

Copenhagen Sets Film-TV Market

Paris, Oct. 16.

A French screenwriter and director, Roger Miridia, has organized what he calls "The International TV and Film Exchange" which is to take place in Copenhagen semi annually from now on. The first 10 day session unspools Oct. 22 and the next one will be in April '63. It will focus mainly on the buying and selling of pix in all categories.

Miridia says it will unfold like a vast supermarket where any country in the world can send films of all kinds, vidpix, features, shorts, commercial pix, etc. He is living in Copenhagen and says he chose it as the center because of its accessibility and the town's experience in staging international conventions. It is being underwritten by the City of Copenhagen and the Danish Bureau of Tourism.

He emphasizes that special customs arrangements will facilitate film handling and cut expenses. He also points out that the price hiking aspects of regular prize-giving film fests will be eliminated.

The exchange will offer screening halls, a closed circuit tv setup and be able to screen all film sizes and processes. Besides the business side, there will be equipment of the past and present displays, plus a U.S. tv satellite and a Czech exhibition.

Subtitling will also be handled by the Exchange with a new process that allows titles to be added quickly, without marring the original film. Translators, freight agents and banking services will also be handy.

There will also be a special section for video and film writers to meet prospective buyers. Any number and type of pix can be entered by any country. It remains to be seen if this market will compete with, or coordinate with, the similar MIFED setup in Italy.

Milan, Oct. 16.

More than 500 films from 150 production firms repping 28 countries are currently unspooling at the 6th Milan Film, TV Film, and Documentary Market (MIFED). Mart is held twice each year, in spring and fall.

Various "outside" gatherings are as usual taking place on MIFED premises during the two-week session. Already under way is a meeting of the Franco-Italian committee which is charged with drawing up the new coproduction and film exchange pacts between the two European industries.

Italy's group is headed by Nicola DePirro for the government, Eitel Monaco for the industry, Goffredo Lombardo for the producers.

MIFED sideline events also include a three-day program dedicated to Bulgarian films and a gathering of film critics.

International Sound Track

Paris

Local film buffs overjoyed at hearing that the original nine hour version of the late Erich Von Stroheim's 1924 Yank pic "Greed" (MG) was found in Utah. In its two hour June Mathis version film was one of the films designated as the greatest of all time at the Brussels Film Fest in 1958 and has always been SRO at its showings at the local Film Museum, the Cinematheque Francaise. Berlin

Metro's "Mutiny on the Bounty" will have its simultaneous German preem Dec. 21 in nine cities (Berlin, Hamburg, Frankfurt, Munich, Cologne, Hanover, Dortmund, Duesseldorf and Nuremberg) . . . According to local trade reports, the Italo-French "Boccaccio '70" was most screened pic in West-German key cities last month, followed by Austria's "Julia, You're Wonderful," Universal's "Cape Fear," Rank's "El Cid," United Artists' "Phaedra," same company's "Magnificent Three," Italy's "Italian Divorce," Metro's "Sweet Bird of Youth," the Orson Welles classic "Citizen Kane" and Rank's "Nikki" . . . Lineup of new U.S. pix in town include "All Fall Down" (MG), "Sacramento" (MG) and "Road to Hong Kong" and there are several reissues such as "Stage Fright" (WB), "Mogambo" (MG), among others . . . The Israeli documentary, "Description of a Fight," has been recommended for local youth by cultural authorities here . . . Films in the making here include Alfred Weidenmann's "I Too Am Only a Woman" (Rialto-Gloria), which stars Maria Schell and Paul Christian-Hubschmid, and "The Telephone Rang at Night" (Divina-Gloria) directed by Gezavon Cziffra . . . Kurt Ulrich's remake of "Three Penny Opera" will see Curt Juergens (Mack the Knife), Hildegard Knef (Jenny), Walter Giller (Filch) and Gert Froebe (Peachum) in the leads.

Buenos Aires

Sandrini productions, apart from commitments with Atlas and D'An Fran, is to produce its own material and finance distribution of foreign pictures and those of independent Argentine producers. As a first venture it will distribute the hindu film "Devta" produced in black, white and color by Bengali director N. Pattana.

An Argentine film week was held recently in Paraguay, the pictures exhibited were "The Sisters" (Sono), "The Man of the Rose Colored Corner" (Sono) "Three Times Ana" (Sono) "Amorina" (Sono) "Culpable" (Del Carril) and several others.

There was some disgruntlement in Paraguay when most of the stars scheduled to attend did not appear. This was eventually put right when Luis Sandrini flew up with his wife, Malvina Pastorino and a couple of others joined in.

The Screen Institute was pleased with the Argentine film week held in Biarritz recently, at which the seven pictures submitted were sold for European distribution. Another week is to be held in Italy, followed by one in Madrid. Dr. Goti Aguilar feels the results justify the considerable expenditure involved.

Sergio Kogan has joined forces with Columbia on a production-distribution deal. Kogan has produced several films in Mexico and will now transfer his operations to this country, with Columbia distributing in Spanish-speaking markets. There will be no Screen Institute financing of this project.

A 14-member committee, representing Argentine screen activities, is now counselling the Screen Institute, on the invitation of Dr. Goti Aguilar, giving them a free hand to elect members. This attitude met with instant success and the industry is currently well pleased with this latest Institute chief. The producers are represented by Eduardo Bedoya, Luis Mentasti and Nestor Gaffet, with Hector Olivera as an alternate; the Producers' Association is represented by Antonio Motti, Redendo Castro and Antonio Garcia Smith as alternate; Newsreel producers have Roberto Talice, with Juan Rodriguez Pendas as alternate.

Berlin, Oct. 16.

The 12th annual Berlin Cultural Festival which wound up here last week with Fritz Kortner's magnificent staging of Shakespeare's "As You Like It" at the Schiller Theatre and Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida," a "scenic cantata" conducted by Eugen Jochum and staged by Gustav Rudolf Sellner, at the Deutsche Oper. Earlier in the week, there was the local preem of Friedrich Duerrenmatt's eagerly awaited play, "The Physicists," at the Schlosspark Theatre.

Of the classical plays performed here as part of the festival, "As You Like It" walked off with the honors. There had been some criticism as to whether it was necessary to present this Shakespeare comedy which, after all, had already been staged three times in postwar Berlin, but all criticism was stilled in light of the excellent staging.

Duerrenmatt's "Physicists" was seriously staged by Hans Lietzau although it's actually a comedy. The majority of the local crix appreciated the serious form pointing out that its topic is much too serious and no laughing matter. Duerrenmatt, who attended the local preem, was given a standing ovation.

Of the new plays, Paddy Chayefsky's "The Tenth Man," at Berliner Theatre, was a special hit with both press and public. Norman Krasna's "A Sunday In New York," presented at the Komedie, emerged as comedy theatre at its best. Remainder of theatrical presentations included a number of mediocre items.

Reflecting upon the festival, the best productions in general were on the musical side. The two guest concerts of the Viennese Philharmonic, under Herbert von Karajan and Georg Solti, may be regarded as festival's musical highlights. Hans Werner Henze's new opera, "Elegy For Young Lovers," and Manuel de Falla's "Atlantida" contributed to the prestige of their composers and Deutsche Oper Berlin. Both were top-flight productions.

The ballet ensembles offered both plus and negative values. The performances of the Royal Ballet of London were definitely on the plus side, while local productions were of rather meager calibre. A solid success, commercially and (at least) partly artistically speaking, was registered by the National Ensemble of the Republic of Guinea, an African ballet consisting of 45 dancers, singers and musicians. Group guested at the Titania Palast and received many ovations for its vitality and artistry. A considerable part of the male audience seemed to enjoy its female nudity.

Th Berlin Cultural Festival inevitably has a political flavor in a city like Berlin. Local organizers stressed the need for the festival especially since the erection of the Communist wall. Berlin has to intensify any possible contact with the Western world, and it wants to show that it is a stronghold of art and culture—a stronghold that wants and must be maintained for the West. Dr. Gehart von Westerman headed the festival as he has for many years, while Professor Josef Rufer took care of the press department as usual. The organization was splendid.

'Sodom & Gomorrah' Sets Fast Italo B.O. Pace

Rome, Oct. 16.

Robert Aldrich's "Sodom & Gomorrah" is off to a promising start in Italian keys, and Titanus Films, pic's producers, are looking for record-breaking figures on the basis of early returns.

Totals for first four days in 16 Italo keys (excluding Milan) are $136,000. Initial four days in Rome's Barberini was well over $16,000, with Turin topping all on a comparative basis.

Pic opens soon in Milan and other situations not included in first mass bookings.

Paris, Oct. 16.

An International Tourism Fest is being prepared for Paris in '63 after which it will alternate in the capitals of the 62 Western oriented countries that have been approached and, technically, accepted this project.

Set up via the cooperation of governmental and private Tourism Bureaus in the various countries, it would naturally be made up of exhibits emphasizing the appeal of each nation. First one would roll in Dec. '63 for two weeks at the

Mexico City, Oct. 16.

The Mexican motion picture crisis has again brought to the fore the problem of readjustment in distribution staffs here. Distribs refuse to comment on matter, but it is learned from a reliable source that cutbacks in personnel will again be asked.

Maximino Molina, head of the Union of Film Industry Workers, admitted that "problems" in production have affected national distributors. He named the Mexican Film Distributorship, an indie output, as hard hit. Union has authorized lay off of four workers, with these receiving $1,000 dollars each in severance pay.

Molina said he could make no statement about foreign distributorships since he has not been approached officially. However, he glumly admitted that "there is a grave danger of reduced employment in distrib offices here."

Rumors of consolidation are again circulating. However this cannot be confirmed for representatives brush of leading questions, avoid making any statements about their plans.

Cimex and Peliculas Nacionales, the two official distributorships, seem to be holding their own, with Peliculas Mexicanas still the weakest member of the trio.

Asks Indonesia Probe

Tokyo, Oct. 9.

The Japan Motion Picture Producers Assn. has asked the Foreign Office and JETRO to survey the film market in Indonesia as a result of reports of a deteriorated foreign currency situation in that country.

Indonesia has been regarded as a promising market for Nipponese product. In 1961 Japan exported 105 features and 13 shorts to Indonesia—a total increase of 50 over 1960—for earnings of $153,247.

'10th Man' a Hit At Berlin Fest

Berlin, Oct. 16.

Paddy Chayefsky, Eric Burger and the Berlin public have won a battle in Berlin: Chayefsky's three-act drama, "The 10th Man," brilliantly translated into German by Eric Burger (a Berlin-born New Yorker), proved a huge success in the divided city. Of all the new plays performed here as part of the Berlin Festival, the Chayefsky creation emerged as the most original, interesting, amusing and — possibly — most applauded.

There were some who felt that this Jewish miracle play wouldn't "appeal" to German audiences, but just the opposite occurred. The critics were positive, even superlative in the local press. Herbert Pfeiffer, wrote in Berliner Morgenpost, the biggest daily here, that the play proved how much self-irony Jewish mind is capable of. As to the Berlin presentation, Pfeiffer spoke of a precious performance. It captured the Berlin audience at once, he wrote.

The success of the play is such that "Man," originally scheduled to Nov. 4, will remain until Dec. 20 at Berliner Theatre.

Paddy Chayefsky, who came to Berlin for the opening, can be fully satisfied with the Berlin production. Under the imaginative direction by Rolf Haedrich, all the players turn in top-notch performances. Although this is chiefly a group achievement, there are some standout performances: Martin Berliner (Schlissel), Emil Feldmar (Alper), Zeev Berlinsky, of Israel (Hirschmann), Georg-Peter Pilz (Zitorsky, Max Strassberg (Bleyer), Michael Degen (Arthur Brooks) and Christa Witch (Evelyn Foreman), a new young promising actress.

Mexican Legion Hits 'La Notte,' TV Too

Mexico City, Oct. 9.

The Mexican Legion of Decency has given a C-1 classification to Italian-made "The Night" ("La Notte"), starring Jean Moreau and Marcello Mastroiani.

The Legion's bulletin, distributed during Sunday church masses and at other religious centers, said vote against the film was a measure of "Christian discipline." Picture was also labeled as "inadvisable for all those who consider themselves good Christians." In screening here film drew crowds, despite the adverse Legion rating.

The Legion is also broadening its activities to include television, apart from motion pictures and legit. Recently they gave adverse ratings to Mexican soapers and plays, including "Only in the Night," and "The Heiress." Unconfirmed, but obtained from a reliable source, is a report that the Legion plans a "decisive attack" against U. S. tv shows featuring violence, gunplay, illicit love, and other questionable themes.

'Porgy & Bess' Opens in West End, Rousing 25G; 'Dr. No' Mighty 20G; 'Runner,' 'Advise & Consent' Hold

London, Oct. 9.

Patience is rewarded. Samuel Goldwyn waited several years to open "Porgy & Bess" at the Dominion, and the opening week, after a charity preem, grossed a handsome $25,000, though the total was helped by several performances in which the house was guaranteed by local charities. Another smash newcomer to the West End is "Dr. No" at the London Pavilion, which despite the fact that it's concurrently in a saturation release, is heading for a mighty $20,000 in its opening sesh. 'The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner" is finishing its second Warner frame with a steady $11,000 after a hefty $13,400 in its opening week.

"Advise & Consent" is holding firm at the Odeon, Leicester Square, with prospects of a brisk $11,000 in its fourth stanza, while at the Astoria "West Side Story" continues in socko fashion, with a wham $16,400 in its 32d week. "Lolita" is also doing very nicely at the Columbia, with a stout $12,600 for its fifth week, while "Billy Budd' looks to hit a solid $13,000 in its third Leicester Square session.

Estimates for Last eek

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 75-$1.25)—"If a Man Answers" (Rank) (1st wk). Moderate $7,300.

Casino (Indie) (1,155; $1.20-$2.10) —"South Seas Adventure' (Robin) (reissue) (7th wk). Sturdy $11,600. "How the West Was Won" (MG) starts regular run Nov. 2 after charity launching previous day.

Coliseum (MG) (1,795; $1.05-$2.80)—"Dunkirk" (MG) (4th wk). Fair $5,300. "Password is Courage" (MG) bows Oct. 10.

Columbia (Col) (740; $1.05-$2.50) —"Lolita" (MG) (5th wk). Fine $12,600. Over $13,400 previous week.

Dominion (CMA) (1,712; $1.05-$2.20)—"Porgy & Bess' (BLC) (1st wk). Great $25,000, including several charity previews.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,375; 50-$1.75) — "Billy Budd" (Rank) (3d wk). Hefty $13,000 or near. Fancy $15,600 previous round. "The Longest Day" (20th) preems Oct. 11.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 70-$1.75)—"Dr. No" (UA) (1st wk). Heading for smash $20,000 or close, despite concurrent saturation release through London and provinces.

Metropole (CMA) (1,394; 70-$1.75)—"El Cid" (Rank) (43d wk). Steady $6,900.

Odeon, Haymarket (CMA) (600; $1.05-$2.80) — "Barabbas' (BLC) (18th wk). Neat $3,100.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 70-$1.75)—"Advise & Consent" (BLC) (4th wk). Sturdy $11,000. Around $14,000 previous week.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,200; 70-$1.75) — "Grip of Fear" (BLC) (2d wk). Okay $10,000. Almost $12,600 previous week.

Plaza (Par) (1,889; $1.05-$2.20)—"The Dock Brief' (MG) (3d wk). Steady $7,200. Around $8,800 previous week. "The Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) (reissue) opens Oct. 11.

Rialto (20th) (529; 70-$1.20) — "The Quare Fellow' (BLC-Bryanston) (1st wk). Pleasing $5,600.

Ritz (MG) (430; 70-$1.05) — "World of Comedy" (BLC) (16th wk). Fancy $3,600. "A Very Private Affair" (MG) follows Oct. 11.

Studio One (Indie) (556; 50-$1.20) —"Greyfriars Bobby" (Disney) (5th wk). "101 Dalmations" (Disney) (5th wk). Solid $3,900.

Warner (WB) (1,785; 70-$1.75)—"Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner". (BLC-Bryanston) (2d wk). Likely $11,000 or near. Hefty $13,400 opening frame.

Magic Circle Festival Into Scala, London

London, Oct. 9.

The Magic Circle festival will be held at the Scala Theatre for a week, starting next Monday (15), when the headliner will be Kalanag. He is bringing his entire unit from the Continent for the occasion.

The show, sponsored annually by the Magic Circle, will also feature Jerry Darnelle, from Luxembourg, "The Man in White;" two femme performers, Evelyn Rose from Holland and Joan Rhodes from London; Lester Sharp & Iris, and Ray Allen, a ventriloquist. The production will be emceed by Michael Bailey.

A half-hour excerpt of the fest will be aired next Tuesday (16) on BBC-TV.

UNICEF Benefit Scandalized By German Press

Frankfurt, Oct. 23.

A scandal has been breaking in West German newspapers about the giant benefits the last couple of years to raise funds for UNICEF here. Marlene Dietrich, who asked for a last-minute payment of 23,000 marks (about $5,750) for singing a new German-language number at the benefit, has been made the butt of much of the unfriendly controversy.

Last year Swiss promoter Siegfried Lang put on a benefit at Dortmund with top international stars appearing, with the profits allegedly going to UNICEF. And when all the stars had been paid "minimum salaries" plus travel and hotel expenses, only a slim 169 marks (about $42) remained for UNICEF. (Current remarks by Mr. Lang say that this figure was too low—the benefit, which brought in thousands of dollars in tickets, finally paid off $600 to UNICEF.)

Nevertheless, this year's "Music of the World" gala at Duesseldorf was headlined by Marlene Dietrich, along with 16 renowned stars including Yma Sumac, Lisa

First Week Filming Of Vatican 'Council' Feature Cost $80,000

Rome, Oct. 16.

Some $80,000 was spent last week to film the opening day ceremonies at the Vatican Ecumenical Council. Material will go into an open-budgeted Eastmancolor feature documentary, being filmed with official Vatican consensus by the Luce Institute of Rome, which lensed a feature on the recent Eternal City Olympic Games.

On opening day alone 30,000 feet of film were exposed by three set cameras and 25 portable "Arriflex" units set up around the Basilica of St. Peters. Of this amount, only 450-600 feet will go into the final feature. Five assistant directors are working under director Antonio Petrucci, together with 25 assistants, 22 cameramen, 25 grips, 25 electricians, and 50 other men handling odd jobs.

Lighting equipment used to illuminate the huge Council area in St. Peters includes 150 10,000 watt reflectors, 100 5,000 watt reflectors for a total of 2,000 kilowatt. Also employed in what is claimed to be the biggest single lighting effort of its kind in film history are 15 arc lights powered by 6 autonomous units, plus 600 photoflood installations set up around the area. Some 45,000 feet of cable were employed.

Apart from lighting difficulties (St. Peter's is some 400 feet high) principal hazards will be in working conditions imposed: absolute silence and unobtrusiveness.

8 Nation Coproduction

Tokyo, Oct. 9.

An Asian eight-country coproduction, will go before the cameras in December. Targeted for completion next April, it's scheduled for showing at the 10th Asian Film Fest in Taipei in May.

Political Uncertainty, Army Revolt Combine to Hit Argentine Grosses

Buenos Aires, Oct. 16.

Throughout the year military events have so interfered with the flow of film releases and public response, it's difficult to judge public reaction with any certainty, beyond the fact that attendance has tapered off drastically.

Some houses had to cancel performances over the "revolt" weekend, though on the Sunday all operated normally and probably did better business due to citizens' reluctance to leave town in case the armies moved again. Now that all seems quiet again distributors have released some important pictures, and more are scheduled. Metro is releasing "Boys Night Out" at the Metro and Columbia "The Best of Enemies" at the Ambassador, UA recased "Birdman of Alcatraz" last week at the Ocean, Capitol, Gaumont and Sarmiento.

The spectaculars are holding up, with some changes due shortly. "West Side Story" is now in a 23d week at the Broadway, but will give way to "Barabbas" (Col). Cinerama's "Adventure in the South Seas" has held 16 weeks at the Casino. Otherwise European material is predominant, except for "Lolita," now in a second week at the Metropolitan. Ingmar Bergman's "Through a Glass Darkly" has also held two weeks at the Ambassador and Libertador, while "Divorce Italian style" has held an unprecedented five weeks at the Gran Rex, delaying release of "The Miracle Worker" by UA.

Other recent successes were "Sweet Bird of Youth," which has now held six weeks at the move-over Astor, having opened day and date at the Metro. Astor and Premier, continued some weeks at the Metro exclusively, then the Astor alone.

Difa's "Jules et Jim," this year's Mar del Plata winner, released on Aug. 29 at the Metropolitan he'd for five weeks, having started in saturation day and date also at the Pueyrredon Roca and Argos.

Of the local product, Daniel Tinayre's "The Sisters" has so far held five weeks at the Suipacha and a Jose Marrone comedy "The Financial Wizard," has been in four weeks. Neither "Setenta Veces Siete," nor "Homenaje a la Hora de la Siesta" (Gala) had much success with the domestic market, nor did the Pedro Escudero-directed Spanish version of "No Exit" at the Ambassador.

A recent success was the Soviet film "A Summer to Remember" which held 11 weeks at the Suipacha. A French satire "Candide" has also done four weeks at the Paramount, as did "Youth of a Queen" with Romy Schneider which went four weeks at the Ideal. Brigitte Bardo in "Only for Love" held only two weeks at the Monumental.

Audiences want light comedy entertainment, or so it seems, to relieve the gloom of local events.

Mex Firstruns Perk, U.S. Has 14, 10 Foreign

Mexico City, Oct. 16.

Disney productions are always good grossers in Mexico and the latest effort, "Nikki" grossed almost $19,000 in its first week at the Las Americas theatre.

"Geisha Girl" (Par) at the Chapultepec, in its second week, took $13,000. "The Notorious Landlady" (Col) in the third week at the Latino, $12,500.

"Spartacus" (U) in 18th week, a strong $12,400, while same company's "Terror" had only a fair reception at the Variedades Theatre.

Despite crisis talk which continues in motion picture circles here, a total of 29 films were screened at first runs in September with 14 from America and 10 from Europe. Only four Mexican pictures were released, most outstanding being "Cielo Rojo" (Red Sky), a Clesa production directed by Gilberto Gazcon and exhibited at the Alameda.

Italy's "La Notte" and France's "Taxi for Tobruk" were among the better foreign efforts doing good business.

PRECEDENTAL BRITISH 100G BUY ON A FILM

London, Oct. 16.

For the first time ever, London ticket brokers have made a deal for a motion picture comparable to guarantees given in legit. Peter Cadbury, chairman and managing director of Keith Prowse, last week announced a guarantee of $100,000 for the initial eight weeks' run of "Lawrence of Arabia" at the Odeon, Leicester Square. The deal was made on behalf of the Combined Theatre Libraries with Columbia Pictures.

"Lawrence" is due to open with a Royal premiere, attended by the Queen, at the Odeon, Leicester Square, on Dec. 10.

German Studios

tion centers in all of Europe, the Riva facilities have already been put under rental contracts by the Mainz television center.

Right across the German border in Austria, too, the city of Salzburg has no more film production studios at all. The production center in Salzburg-Parsch has been taken over by the Vienna Film Group, since the Oefa Films, which pacted it a year ago have now gone into liquidation. And the Vienna owners are now planning to rent it to television—with main interest and money coming from the German tv stations.

North German TV of Hamburg now owns 80% of the studios at Hamburg-Wandsbek, for their own use and for rental rights.

Fifty-percent of the studios in Wiesbaden are now owned by Hessischer Rundfunk, the Frankfurt tv center.

Among the smaller studios still in business, at Bendestorf and Pichelsberg, the contracts keeping them open are coming from the television stations

At Goettingen, the studio went bankrupt a couple of years ago, but there are some rumors that a television station may buy it.

Of the 55 West German studios—with a total area of about 29,000 cubic meters of production facilities—only the seven studios belonging to CCC Film Productions (headed by Arthur Brauner) in Berlin-Spandau are still considered "film studios." But even Brauner is turning some of the facilities over to the tv stations for rental use.

Past Greatness

The facilities were established in the heyday of the West German film production, during the late 1950's, and are capable of turning out 160 to 180 feature films yearly. But with the downward trend of the West German cinema business, only 115 West German films were produced in 1958, and 1959 the number was down to 106; in 1961 it dropped to 75. And dim predictions are that it will be impossible to come up with the money for more than 30 to 50 West German home-grown films this year.

Meanwhile, television is bursting at the seams here. At the Wandbek studios, for instance, work is going on for nine films, plus 39 television films and about 400 other television shorts or features; in Geiselgasteig, the contracts indicate seven full-length feature films for the cinemas, plus 60 television shows and 130 shorts for television; and at the small Heidi Studios at Bendestorf, there are no contracts for feature films, but eight television films and countless shorts for tv are on the schedule.

Some of the film producers are deeply concerned about the television's take-over of the facilities. But at least one, Hans Juergen Pohland, producer of the experimental animal film "The Bread of Earlier Years," sees the bright side. The atmosphere of the studios is too sterile anyhow, and rent is too high, Pohland remarked recently. The best upcoming films will be made on location, where there is more inspiration.

'Judgment' Judged Best

Rome, Oct. 16.

"Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA) this week won the Catholic Film Office (OCIC) Grand Prix over eight other contestants. Award was voted and presented at Assisi, by an International jury, which chose it over selections of individual OCIC juries in various countries.

Other contenders were: "The Miracle Worker" and "Bridge to the Sun" (U.S.); "The Trial of Joan of Arc," and "Leon Morin, Priest," (France); "The Naked Island" (Japan); "Pro Munda Vita" (Germany); "Sasom i en Spiegel" (Sweden); "Some People" and "Term of Trial" (Great Britain).

SIRITZKYS SET NEW CINEMA FOR ORLY

Paris, Oct. 16.

U. S. planes may be showing pix in the air, but local exhibs Sam and Jo Siritzky believe a good place for a pic theatre is right at the airport, namely, Orly in Paris. So in a few weeks a 250-seater, called the Publicis-Orly, opens there. It will be completely electronic and operated by one man.

The Siritzkys are aiming at the Orly employees as well as transit passengers. During the day the house will be a sort of newsreel and documentary programmer, but at night will have two shows of the firstrun film at its Paris namesake, the Publicis.

A board outside will show vacant seats and little lights will lead patrons to them. Entrance fee will be paid via a turnstile setup. Shows will have short breaks, and after the one-man reloads the projectors it will start again.

Though most pix will be French, there will be a number of foreign ones too. It also will be used for special preems with press and pic people flown in from around the world, shown the pic, and then bundled off home again.

Subtitles will be used to accommodate the many nationalities going through every day. First preem and house opener may be Orson Welles' "The Trial," a French-Italo-German pic he made here, and in Yugoslavia based on the Franz Fafka novel. It is in English but will have French, German and Italo versions.

UNICEF Show

della Casa, Margot Fonteyn and Charles Trenet.

Miss Dietrich was to sing "Sag Mir Wo die Blumen Sind" (Tell Me Where the Flowers Are). But at the last minute she was told that West Germany's Second Television Network had also bought the right from Mr. Lang (at a sum not disclosed) to film the entire show and present it via Eurovision in 17 European countries some time next year.

Because of strict commitments with her record firm, Electrola, regarding the tv performance rights of this song, Miss Dietrich called in several lawyers who agreed with Mr. Lang's representative on the payment of the 23,000 marks since she was actually performing on television. The money she was to receive was to come from the payments of the Second TV Network for the filming rights.

However, the West German newspapers, evidently not aware of the details, claimed that Miss Dietrich was refusing to help the UNICEF cause until she was paid. At week's end, though, some of the papers ran corrected versions of the matter.

Meanwhile, there were other hitches in the fundraising affair. Of the 4,000 seats at $5 to $25, only about two-thirds were sold. And many of the sports fans, who had attended the spectacular to see Giuseppe di Stefano found that the man so announced was not the renowned football player with the Real Madrid team—but instead an opera singer from the Milan Scala.

Lang stated that he was paying travel expenses and some fees for the stars participating, but that he would turn about 80% of the boxoffice take over to UNICEF.

At the week's end it was announced that UNICEF would receive 55,688 marks ($13,922) from the event.

John Davis' Tribute to Rank

New Chairman Honors Founder at Stockholders Meet, Discloses Personal Gift to Company of $2,800,000

London, Oct. 16.

As John Davis assumed the chairmanship of the Rank Organisation, vacated by Lord Rank at the annual shareholders' meeting last Thursday (11), he paid a warm tribute to the man whose name is associated with the biggest-ever British film empire. The new chairman, who had been associated with Lord Rank since 1939, recalled that it was an interest in religious film which first induced him (Rank) to come into the industry.

From this first simple contact Rank became aware that "the great American film production industry" was dominating world screens in 1935, while the comparatively tiny British industry was struggling to compete with a limited market, and often inferior technical equipment.

Arthur Rank, Davis reminded stockholders, devoted his enthusiasm, talents and wealth to rectify that situation. While he was encouraging picture makers, he set about setting up a world-wide sales organization to market the films which were being made.

Act of Faith

Davis referred to "one particular act of faith" which he felt epitomized his (Rank's) selfless effort. Some 13 years ago, when the fortunes of the group were at a low ebb, Lord and Lady Rank made an unconditional, voluntary gift to the company of sums owing to them, amounting to about one million pounds ($2,800,000). Davis believed that this was a unique event in the history of British industry.

Some years later, added Davis, when the group was again prosperous, Rank gave his controlling shareholding interest to a charitable trust to insure that the work which he had started would be continued after his death, and that the well-being and control of the company should not pass into hands who might not have the same ideals as he had applied to the business. Today, if that holding had been retained personally, it would be worth many millions of pounds.

Although obviously emotionally affected by the tribute and the presentation, Lord Rank raised a chuckle from stockholders when he recalled that his father had advised him against going into the motion picture business. "Whatever reputation you have," his father warned him, "would be lost if you go into films."

NAGATA PLEASED ON RETURN TO HOMELAND

Tokyo, Oct. 16.

Back from a global swing of almost three weeks during which he headed the Japanese delegation at the Venice fest and had an audience with the Pope, Daiei prez Masaichi Nagata disclosed that Dine De Laurentiis acquired rights for most of Europe except England for "Life of Buddha" which accord was reached in the U. S. for United Artists to distribute the picture in the Western Hemisphere.

Lensed here last year, "Buddha" was the most expensive Nipponese picture ever at $1,500,000 and the first in 70m. It became the biggest all-time domestic earner. Nagata predicted that it will earn $2,000,000 overseas.

At the same time, Nagata said that Daiei's blockbuster of 1962, "The Great Wall," which cost almost $2,000,000, received many queries during his trip. Also in 70m, the picture bows here Nov. 1.

Rond Point De La Defense building here, which is considered one of the biggest exhibition halls extant.

Show biz would be an integral part of the festival. A 1,500-seat theatre would house visiting legit, dance and concert entries and there would be a film house for travel films or regular features. A World Bar would have drinks of all kinds from every country.

But the main thing would be a series of exhibits in which each country would try to recreate a typical aspect of itself via streets, stores, products, entertainment, food, huge cycloramas for native scenes, etc. This would be tagged "Around the World in 80 Minutes."

Other side shows of costumes, music, special tv shows etc., would be incorporated. Each would pay its own expenses. It is mainly in the talking stage at the moment, but seems well advanced. It might take the tourism onus off the other fests and let them speak only for their own art form. Tourism is becoming a show biz facet and will be ably represented in this affair when, and if, it comes off.

PLOT SICKENS FOR HALF HOURS

Gleason's Weekly Civil War

Television family of Jackie Gleason on his CBS-TV Saturday night show is going through some stresses and strains. It looks like the distaff side of the Gleason family will be altered before the season's out.

Patricia Wilson aired her troubles in the press, claiming she has not been used on the show the way she expected. Miss Wilson, tapped to play the role of Art Carney's wife in the "Honeymooners" sketches, said she had given up some lucrative engagements for the Gleason hour, in a N.Y. Daily News interview. Gleason, questioned whether Miss Wilson will stay with the show, replied that the only reason she had not been utilized was that the right material had not been found for her. He added that in light of her statement to the press, he felt that she "can't be trusted."

Toute-de-Suite Sue

Then, there's the Sue Ann Langdon situation. Insiders, in the face of Gleason's statement that Miss Langdon is staying with the show, are of the opinion that she won't last many other Saturday night outings. They contend that it's not only a matter of artistic temperament, but more fundamental differences.

Cara Williams, in the meantime, has been lined up as a possible femme comedienne star for the show. Miss Williams, former star of "Pete and Gladys," arrived in N.Y. Gleason said whether Miss Williams is added to the show depends on whether proper material for her is secured.

Gleason, commenting on reports of a blowup with Miss Langdon, said it just wasn't so. There is no parting of the ways. He said that Miss Langdon, who has a 13-week contract, will continue with the Saturday night show. Gleason pointed out that he had recorded a "Honeymooners" sketch with Miss Langdon for telecasting Saturday (20). The reported blowup concerned Miss Langdon's refusal to lip-sync a vocal number. Gleason said Miss Langdon felt she needed more time. He acknowledged that there had been some words on the set, playing down their importance.

"Pal, we have Civil War every week," he cracked.

FCC's Rosel Hyde Baits Minowphiles In Slamming Govt. Control of Video

Washington, Oct. 16.

Commissioner Rosel H. Hyde of the Federal Communications Commission, in a speech relating his absolute opposition to the Minowphiles on programming, inserted the brief Shakespearean line, "The time is out of joint." He might well have carried the remainder of the famous Hamlet quotation, as it is no easy matter for a single commissioner to "set it right."

Hyde made it clear that he is opposed to Big Brother Government dictating programming tastes from Washington, as in the "vast wasteland" concept.

Hyde, in his Saturday (13) speech to the Utah Broadcasters Assn. convention at Ogden, with the text released here, put it this way:

"Representatives of the several branches of the Government, which in a large measure is dependent for maintenance of its integrity upon free speech, would nevertheless exercise overall surveillance upon your programs.

"Many of what we think of as the intellectually elite demand intervention in the name of better programs to improve the public (sic). In the minds of many, a program which succeeds under the test of popularity in the market of public opinion is therefore automatically suspect.

"Free enterprise industry, as represented in the broadcast business shows a disturbing interest in seeking economic protection through limitations on competition. The time is out of joint; something

Facts About a Myth

CBS-TV's "The 20th Century" is preparing a documentary on "The Western Hero," a report on the development of oaters from the days of the late Hoot Gibson, to adult westerns and to the western hero as depicted on today's tv screens.

Stanley Kramer, who produced "High Noon," will be a guest on the cowboy documentary, slating for airing December 23.

Mormon Church Buys WRUL In $1,750,000 Deal

WRUL Radio, the Worldwide Broadcasting division of Metromedia Inc., has been sold to International Educational Broadcasting Corp. for approximately $1,750,000. James B. Conkling, former head of Warner Bros. Records and previously prexy of Columbia Records, is president of IEBC, of which the Mormon Church is the principal stockholder. The deal is subject to the approval of the FCC.

Rolf Brent, prexy of WRUL while under the Metromedia banner, will continue in that capacity under the new ownership. WRUL is the only advertiser-supported commercial shortwave station in the U.S., beaming programs through five transmitters to 100 countries throughout the world.

John W. Kluge, Metromedia president and board chairman, and Mark Evans, Metromedia's c.p. over public affairs, have agreed to act as advisers to the new owners if the latter so requests. The Washington law firm of Wilkinson, Cragun & Barker represented IEBC.

Request Video To Lay Off Beck

Prosecutor for the N.Y. Federal Court where former Teamsters boss Dave Beck is being tried on a charge of accepting bribery, has asked the news media not to mention Beck's criminal record for tax evasion, in current news reports. It's not unique, but it is still unusual when such a request is made.

Purpose? Prosecution in the latest Beck trial (he was convicted of other charges and was released from prison only temporarily to face this new trial) fear that mention of his record might prejudice a juror. This would enable the defense to ask for a mistrial.

Apparently, most of the paper's and broadcast outlets asked to comply in N.Y. have gone along.

Mike Connors Stars In Screen Gems Pilot

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Mike Connors has the starring role in "Turning Point," pilot being turned out by producers-writers Russell Rouse and Clarence Greene at Screen Gems.

Charles Bickford co-stars as a high school principal in the series in which Connors plays a teacher. Rouse directs pilot which rolls this week.

60-MIN. DRAMAS REIGN SUPREME

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

With rating jitters gripping the new season, with the first national Nielsens due next week, decisions on programming already are in the works. Most dramatic of these decisions is the virtual demise next season of the 30-minute series story form.

Programming execs looking over the field of network projects next season, those projects seriously being considered for piloting, note the virtual absence of the half-hour story form. It's a situation which has been developing year after year as the hour vidfilm form gained dominance.

The half-hour form hardly was utilized this season out for dramatic vehicles. Among the few which made it were the new Loretta Young show, Lloyd Bridges show, and "G.E. True," (Jack Webb), all on CBS-TV. "McHale's Navy," (Ernest Borgnine), on ABC-TV runs more in the comedy vein than a dramatic vehicle, as does the new Loretta Young show. Situation comedies compose a separate category, as opposed to the story form, and there are plenty half-hour situation comedies around, and their tribe next season are expected to be as plentiful.

When the multitude of oaters, private eyes, mellers and what have you, all done in the half-hour form, in years past is considered, the decline and the predicted demise of the 30-minute story form is dramatic, indeed. Two of those which made it this season out—the new Lloyd Bridges show, "Adam Shepherd," and Jack Webb's "G.E. True"—came in as projected hour vehicles. It was at the insistence of the sponsors, Kaiser in the case of Lloyd Bridges and General Electric in the case of "True" which turned them into 30 minute story vehicles.

It's not only the popularity of the hour story form on the rating charts which has swung the three networks in that direction. It surely isn't the strength of all the series (the turkeys in the 60-minute form stand out bigger than the 30-minute variety). Network television is expensive, participation buys on ABC-TV, NBC-TV, and to a lesser extent CBS-TV are heavy, as sponsors spread costs over a multiplicity of shows in order to gain reach and circulation.

The few big sponsors left buying programs either solely or as alternate sponsors for the most part prefer the situation comedies. For the story form, NBC-TV took a thrust in the longer direction in its 90-minute "Virginian" venture, a costly project, nervously perched against ABC-TV's "Wagon Train." More than the "Virginian" will be needed for expanding the story form for a series with running characters. Anthologies such as "Playhouse 90" of years past are in a class by themselves.

This season out it's the 60-minute story form. Next season out, it looks fini to the 30-minute story form. The 60-minute form reigns supreme.

NAB Warns Station Owners to Dig Political Influence at Grass Roots Or Dance to Minow's Music in D.C.

By MIKE MOSETTIG

Washington, Oct. 16.

Station owners were told yesterday (Mon.) that their real political influence lies in the grass roots, not in the National Assn. of Broadcasters Washington office.

In a bit of advice, which if followed could have a deep impact on political and broadcasting fronts, NAB chief lobbyist Paul B. Comstock told the Atlanta Fall Conference: "I am convinced that broadcasters have a great but uncommitted potential in our program of Governmental affairs and that this potential lies in the relationship of individual members of NAB with their own Congressmen and Senators."

In his speech, Comstock was repeating a truism long known to political scientists and politicians but perhaps long lost to the industry which has titled its windmills with the like of FCC chief Newton Minow and Senator Thomas Dodd.

Hinting vaguely at a tv or radio station's influence in a small political bailiwick as compared to the general disregard for industry Potomac puffery, Comstock said this influence was the only way to stop Governmental action which industry considers detrimental to its interest.

Comstock didn't spell out a station's owner's potential influence in a Congressional district or even a state.

But he really didn't need to. Besides "treating all candidates with fairness" (I.E. Section 315), Comstock told owners to "take part in public affairs as responsible citizens."

Among the ways to take part in public affairs, not mentioned by Comstock, is through contributions to party organizations and candidates who rest more comfortably in the industry's bed.

And although he didn't point to it, Comstock may have had in mind the considerable politicking done by certain publishers.

It would be obvious that station owners could take a page from the books of Jock Whitney, Eugene Pulliam, Philip Graham, Henry Luce, et al.

Another NAB lobbyist Hollis Seavy pointed to actions in the political hopper which should spur broadcasters to travel the political path.

Among these are probable Federal Communications Commission push for more authority over networks and the final report of the Senate Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee headed by Sen. Dodd which will have anything but kind words for the industry.

Seavy said other possible Congressional activity may concern lessening regulations over community antenna tv wire systems and suspension of Sec. 315 in Presidential and Vice-Presidential campaigns.

CBS' Morning Glory

For the first time in five years, CBS-TV in the daytime copped nine out of the 10-top-rated shows. It happened in the Nielsen Second September Report, covering the second and third week in September, on the eve of the new season, but after the kids are back in school. Whatever happens in the new season, the posting of nine out of 10 daytime Nielsen winners will be a hard record to beat for any network. Here is how the top 10 read:

As World Turns (CBS)	12.1
Password (CBS)	9.0
Guiding Light (CBS)	8.8
Search Tomorrow (CBS)	8.5
House Party (CBS)	8.1
Love Life (CBS)	7.4

NAB to Polish Local Techniques Via Video Clinic

Washington, Oct. 16.

National Assn. of Broadcasters prexy Leroy Collins has revealed NAB plans for an industrywide clinic on local programming in Washington next February.

In a speech at the Association's fall conference in Atlanta, Ga., Collins said purpose of the clinics will be to acquaint all broadcasters with "new and extraordinary creative program skills" developed by some.

"I think the need is apparent for much greater emphasis upon individual station programming competence," Collins declared. "So much help has come from the networks—so much faith has been placed in the so-called tried and true standardized program forms—many broadcasters are finding themselves short of capability to meet growing specialized local program needs."

Describing NAB's function as threefold, Collins said it is concerned with broadcasting internally, with its relationship to government and with its relationship to the public.

In the first instance, he called for more subscribers to the Code, an industry recruiting program among college students and dwelt on the local programming clinics.

In the second, he said Governmental relations were controversial by nature, but the best way for broadcasting to ward off Federal controls is to clean its own house. He also mentioned a December conference with the Federal Communications Commission to tighten engineering standards in the face of a market glut by broadcasters.

In the third, Collins concluded, broadcasters can only shape their public image by the quality of their product.

Sackheim to Operate As Indie Prod. for SG

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Screen Gems exec producer William Sackheim has signed a deal whereby he will operate as an indie producer, under the SG aegis.

Sackheim is exec producer on Screen Gems' "Empire" series, and will continue to function as such for the remainder of this season, then will get his indie into action.

Tom McDermott New 4 Star Prexy

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Thomas McDermott, chief executive officer for past three years, was, as expected, elected prexy of Four Star at the annual stockholders meeting today (Tues.). Dick Powell, prexy since the firm's founding five years ago, has become board chairman, which he called "an office which more accurately the function in which I have served since McDermott joined Four Star over three years ago." McDermott has been chief executive officer with title of ex. veepee.

George Elber, first veepee, moves up to exec veepee.

Pilkington Raps Teachvee & Feevee; Prefers Accidental Tune-in Uplift

Ottawa, Oct. 16.

Educational television and toll-tv were blasted in Ottawa Saturday (13) by Sir Harry Pilkington, chairman of a committee on broadcasting in England whose report rocked British air circles, particularly the commercial broadcasters. He spoke to the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Communications.

Sir Harry termed tollvision "the most superficially attractive and the most fundamentally undesirable" of the proposals put to his committee. He said for the broadcasting authorities in England BBC and ITA) to okay pay-tv would be "a most damaging and irresponsible step." The only way tollvision could succeed, he felt, was if it could be "superimposed on everything else—if it could find new sources of material that otherwise would not be broadcast, and if it can be certain not to interfere with the existing services either by taking away the profitable parts of comprehensive services or by reducing the number of services that can be accommodated."

He slapped at education video when he said, "The worst way of using tv to broaden the knowledge of all people is to have a special program that people have to search out and use only if they are positively aiming to be educated." He believed it would be better "if all of us should find ourselves listening by accident to something a little bit beyond our experience that opens up fresh vistas in life."

Shows, he said, should not be "divided by height of brow, but everything available to everybody. Describing television as a public service intended for the viewers and the listeners to provide entertainment, information and education. "It is not an advertising service intended to promote the sale of goods—that is incidental." Also incidental were employment of people and the collecting of profits for the Treasury "instead of letting them stay in the pockets of the successful and adventurous concessionaires."

Sir Harry said television programming should be arranged so that "over the course of an evening, and certainly over the course of seven evenings, almost everyone can find something so distinctive that he feels it is especially to his taste." That could not be done, he

Dial G for Goof

It wasn't the new dialing system that caused the interruption of Walter Cronkite's news show Thursday (11) night. Viewers saw Cronkite lift the phone in the midst of his news delivery. Cronkite later explained that the "phone call tonight was a wrong number."

Cronkite, when questioned after the show, explained that he has two phones on his on-camera desk, one phone for hot news flashes and the other for remote locations. All during the show, he had heard the hot news flash phone ring. He said he finally picked it up, only to hear director Freddy Stollmack say, "Whoops, sorry." It seems Stollmack, director for that night, had been ringing Cronkite's phone instead of ringing the Washinton wire.

D.C. Solons Brush ETV Coin Grant

Washington, Oct. 16.

The new program of Federal assistance to the states for educational television facilities will have to wait until next year to get off the ground.

A bill appropriating the initial $3,000,000 to the Health, Education & Welfare Department for the five-year $32,000,000 matching program got trampled underfoot in the final Congressional rush Saturday (13).

The bill became an obstacle to final adjournment because of other features in it and was sacrificed to the lawmakers' weary impatience to evacuate Capitol Hill.

N.H. PAVES WAY FOR BRINKLEY LIBEL SUIT

Concord, N.H., Oct. 16.

State of New Hampshire has decided to sue NBC and David Brinkley over statements made by the commentator on his opening program of this season, based on allegations of highway dishonesty in many states of the union. Gov. Wesley Powell and his executive council voted to start separate libel proceedings in Federal Court.

Brinkley was quoted here as having said on his hourlong program that the FBI had "found crime in highway programs" in seven states, one of them being N.H. According to state officials, J. Edgar Hoover of the FBI said there had been no investigation into highway scandals in N.H. "since the inception of the Interstate Highway Program in 1956."

NBC's Alex King (Paar) Cut But Nobody's Talking

Shades of that "water closet." Everybody around NBC-TV, to say the least, is touchy about stepping on Jack Paar's toes, particularly when it comes to censorship. None at NBC will make any comment anent three cuts made in Alexander King's appearance on last Friday's (12) Paar primetimer.

However, some of King's dialog was removed, it is reliably reported. It was done at the behest of NBC's standards and practices personnel. Paar has been cut before, but the only cut when he had his latenight strip on NBC-TV) that caused real controversy and had the host walking out on NBC for several weeks was one deletion of a "w.c." play-on-words. What vexed Paar then was that he was'nt informed of the cut before it was made. Evidently he was told of the present King cuts before they were made.

According to King, who like everybody in Paar's production shop and everybody at NBC would not comment on the latest report, he was cut once—some time back when he made a remark about how bad women's shoes were. It so happens his deleted remark came immediately before a women's shoe commercial.

Godfrey Isn't Certain About Ciggie Ad Lib: 'They Are Killing Me'

Pittsburgh, Oct. 16.

Arthur Godfrey's ad lib on the air that Chesterfield cigarettes were "killing" him highlighted the court proceedings this week where a carpenter is suing the ciggie firm for $1,250,000 because he alleges he got lung cancer from smoking Chesterfields.

Godfrey was not present but a deposition introduced into the trial said the tv star had said, "Doggone, I've got to quit these things. They are killing me."

Godfrey, who later underwent surgery for lung cancer himself, testified by deposition that his first association with the tobacco company was in 1934. At that time, the deposition stated, he substituted as an announcer in the Philadelphia Orchestra program for six weeks. He said he again became associated with Liggett & Myers in 1947 when he started advertising Chesterfields.

Other information introduced stated that when he was asked whether or not he had made the statement on Dec. 17, 1952 that Chesterfields were "killing" him, he said, "I don't recall having done it, but I wouldn't be surprised."

Godfrey was also quoted as saying that he was told the firm's new ads would claim Chesterfields would not harm nose, throat and accessory organs—because this would be an "effective" sales argument.

The plaintiff has testified that he understood "accessory organs" to mean his lungs.

BBC Sound Program Exec on First Visit to Manhattan

Clare Lawson-Dick, who is in charge of Sound (radio) program planning for the British Broadcasting Corp. in London, is currently paying her first visit to New York City.

She was honored last Friday (12) at a party hosted by Davidson Taylor, now with Columbia University's performing arts unit, but previously program veep at, first, CBS, and, later, NBC.

TelePrompter Taking $2,400,000 Loan to Buy Conley Electronics Corp.

TelePrompter Corp. stockholders met in special session last week to okay taking a $2,400,000 loan in order to buy Conley Electronics Corp. of Evanston, Ill. Money is being lent by the Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust.

Deal called for mortaging some of TelePrompTer's 14 community antenna tv systems to secure the bank loan and the $778,000 principal amount of debentures to be used as part of the purchase figure. Actually, the price of Conley, according to the buyer, is about $1,000,000. But a substantial portion of the six-year, 6% bank loan will be to repay an extensive shortterm loan which carries a higher interest rate. Rest of the coin will be used for working capital and to "ease the strain on the corporation's cash flow," according to Irving B. Kahn, company topper.

GODFREY GOES LATIN FOR 1ST CBS SPECIAL

Arthur Godfrey's second special will have a Latino motif. Godfrey, according to present plans, will tour South America for his second hourlong special of the season.

Opener of the three Godfrey specials slated on CBS-TV this season will be telecast Nov. 10. Initialer will be a guided tour of the film capital, titled "Arthur Godfrey in Hollywood." Menly & James Laboratories, one of the three sponsors on the first Godfrey special, already has picked up its option for the second Godfrey hourlong outing. Other sponsors of the first show are Armstrong Cork and Quaker State Oil Refining.

Bud Otto Takes Over Harmon's 'McKeever' Job

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Bud Otto has been named associate producer on Four Star's "McKeever and the Colonel" series, replacing Bill Harmon.

Four Star production chief Tom McDermott granted Harmon his request for a release from his pact, so that he could take a job as managing editor of a tv station in Australia. Harmon leaves Four Star Oct. 20, to go to Sydney to take over N.L.T. Productions, which will become the third Sidney channel.

WBBR Joins ABC

WBBR, St. Louis, has joined the ABC Radio network this week.

A 500-watter, WBBR is owned by Stanlin Inc., of which Larry Picus is president.

TV's Family Ties

Television is getting to be a family affair before the cameras, as well as before the home screens. Here's a rundown on what's been happening before the cameras, a rundown apparently incomplete.

Daughter and son of Lloyd Bridges set to appear on upcoming of CBS-TV's "Lloyd Bridges Show." Frank Sinatra Jr. slated a Jack Benny outing, an upcoming episode of "Have Son of Richard Boone due on Gun Will Travel." James Mitchum, son of Robert, was on "HGWT" episode recently. Patrick Wayne, son of John, was on a recent episode of "Alcoa Premiere." Kelly Harmon, daughter of sportscaster Tommy Harmon, due on "Loretta Young" episode, CBS-TV, Nov. 5.

An Academic Question

In effect, some members of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences would like to tell David Susskind something to this effect: "Whaddya mean, you quit? You can't quit, you're fired."

Seems there is some question—which illustrates that in the battle of Susskind vs. the Academy bad feelings exist on both sides—as to whether Susskind quit before he was fired or fired before he quit. Technically, he quit first. Of that there is no doubt.

But, said Academy members, the org's board of trustees had decided, two weeks before Susskind's public threat to resign, to ask him to quit the board, allegedly because of his failure to attend meetings. Seems the job of asking Susskind to resign was delegated to Betty Furness. Somehow, say confreres, she didn't get around to writing the letter for at least two weeks, but, to them, it "was fairly apparent" that producer Susskind learned from one of the over two dozen trustees that he was going to get the heave officially soon. That lead him to cop a plea they say.

Susskind had threatened to quit before, but never so publicly. When Miss Furness got around to letter writing, hers and the Susskind epistle, evidently nailing down what he had said publicly shortly before, crossed in the mails.

NAB Tells Southern Broadcasters: 'Self-Regulate or Be Regulated'

Washington, Oct. 16.

National Assn. of Broadcasters marched from Atlanta to the sea rallying southern support for radio and tv codes. The message delivered by Code Authority director Robert D. Swezey and William Carlisle NAB v.p. for station services, was "regulate yourselves or be regulated from outside."

Both tried to knock down ideas that codes are in themselves potential censors and that the Government might adopt code provisions as their own.

Swezey in speeches to the Atlanta (Ga.) Fall Conference, released here, warned, "there is great danger of increased Government regulations only if the industry demonstrates that without Government intervention it is incapable of enforcing its own standards."

But at the same time he nixed proposal of Federal Communications Commissioner Robert E. Lee that code limitations on commercials be absorbed into FCC rules.

Swezey was trying to play down his personal role averring, "I much prefer to have the strength of the Code Authority in its services and procedures than in their personal edicts of its director." He called his first year in office a "step by step" effort for improvement, not a "crash program."

Carlisle made practically the same pitch to the Alabama Broadcasters Assn. meeting in Tuscaloosa. But he added a special pungent point against "schlock operators" who program 20 to 30 spots an hour. Carlisle said the schlocks "poison the well for the rest."

Carlisle said broadcasting must have its own solutions and not leave vacuums into which the government might trod.

Freedman on O'seas Shuttle for NBC Shows

Lewis Freedman, producer of nine dramas for NBC-TV's "DuPont Show of the Week," has a busy travelling schedule. He's got to shuttle between London, where Associated Rediffusion is coproducing with NBC a tv version of "Shannon's Way," and N.Y. where he's continuing work on strictly domestic production problems for the hourlong showcase.

He leaves by air for London tomorrow (Thurs.) to help pick a director and cast for "Way," based on A. J. Cronin's novel. He returns to N.Y. Tuesday (23), and is off again for London on Nov. 16 to attend rehearsals beginning Nov. 17.

NAB Defending Mpls. TV 'Goofs'

Washington, Oct. 16.

National Assn. of Broadcasters has gone to the defense of four Minneapolis-St. Paul television stations, asking the Federal Communications Commission to let the Association intervene because of the "significance of the matter to the entire industry."

FCC on Sept. 5 notified the four, KSTP-TV, WTCN-TV, WCCO-TV and KMSP-TV, they were liable for $500 fines each for running afoul of sponsor identification requirements (Sec. 317). Involved were one minute spots supporting a proposed Minneapolis ordinance.

The NAB letter to FCC by NAB general counsel Douglas A. Anello claimed it was an "inadvertent" goof by the stations, adding: "The over-riding issue is not whether a violation of Sec. 317 occurred, but whether it constituted a 'willful or repeated violation so as to bring within the scope of the forfeiture provisions of the (Communications) Act."

DU PONT, LANVIN BUY ABC-TV NIGHT MINUTES

Du Pont, for Lucite Paints, has bought a heavy schedule on ABC-TV from March through August of next year on four shows, "The Untouchables," "Naked City," "77 Sunset Strip" and "Ozzie & Harriet." Biz was placed through N. W. Ayer.

Lanvin-Parfumes has come onto the web for a pre-Christmas campaign on "The Untouchables," "Going My Way," "McHale's Navy" "ABC's Evening Report" and "Wide World of Sports." North Advertising handled the deal.

Selmur Preps 2 Pilots

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Selmur Productions is readying "September Jone," a half-hour comedy pilot, for the 1963-64 tv season. Bob Fisher and Arthur Alsberg are producers-writers of the property.

Also on Selmur's future agenda is "Land of the Wild," hourlong dramatic show being produced by Larry Lansburgh, and scripted by Frank Nugent.

Levitt Replaces Solow As CBS Daytime Head In Hollywood Brush

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

With CBS-TV's daytime schedule in Hollywood whittled from seven shows to a loner ("House Party"), Herbert Solow has departed the web after daytime program director for the past 15 months. His successor is Paul Levitt, who is casting director for pilots.

In the past several months, the boom has been lowered on "The Verdict Is Yours" after five years; "Brighter Day" after nine-year run; "Video Village," "Surprise Package," "Clear Horizon" and "Double Exposure."

Levitt, former co-owner and producer of Players Ring, joined CBS-TV last October.

Fresh From Ciggie War, TV Taking on Detroit

Network television, having worked over one giant bankrollers in CBS-TV's special on teen cig smokers, is now set to take on another.

Howard K. Smith's "News and Comment" show on ABC-TV this Sunday (21) will deal critically with the automotive industry. On hand to discuss various phases of the car business will be automotive execs, stylists and traffic safety experts.

TV NEWS WAR IN BERLIN TUNNEL

Stanton's Intellectual Manifesto

Colby, Me., Oct. 16.

CBS prexy Frank Stanton, in a speech delivered at Colby College here called for "an intellectual explosion, a new age of questioning, of probing, of discovery." Stanton, in his speech addressed himself to the topic of "The Heritage of Mind in a Civilization of Machines."

Prior to referring to the role of tv, he spoke of the comment of the great American naturalist Henry David Thoreau, when informed that a series of telegraph wires and relays would soon link Maine and Texas. Whereupon Thoreau observed, "But Main and Texas, it may be, have nothing important to communicate."

Said Stanton: "Today despite the wide impact and obvious contributions of the 1960 Presidential Debates on television there are those who worry about the consequences of the actions and appearances of the candidates. These doubts seem to involve television itself. But isn't it the human factor that is the cause for the concern—rather than the communications medium? Isn't it man that is being worried about here, rather than science?

"The same thing can be said of the first major television interview with Nikita Khrushchev broadcast in the U.S. in 1957. Some — and among them men in high places—considered this communications triumph a desecration of the American living room. Some people just don't want communication or information.

"Too, today, we have the miracle of Telstar. We can transmit pictures, sound and action instantaneously across continents and oceans. Yet Telstar is utterly worthless unless it is used to link minds in some significant way, rather than existing only as a scientific marvel," Stanton stated.

NAB Sees 250 UHFers Competing With 500 VHF Outlets by 1970

Washington, Oct. 16.

Nearly 250 UHF stations will be competing with 500 VHF outlets by 1970, National Assn. of Broadcasters said yesterday (Mon.)

James H. Hulbert, NAB manager for broadcast management, predicted that all tv sets will be able to receive UHF by 1972 if not earlier.

Hulbert predicted in a speech at the NAB fall conference in Atlanta that the first three or four years will be rough for UHF. Looking ahead, Hulbert averred "in the long run the impact of UHF may be as substantial as the impact that television has had on radio. Ultimately, it may change the entire face of our industry."

Hulbert pointed out that high costs will throw some UHFers on the rocks, but eventually the U's "will begin to bite into presently operating stations from a competitive point of view."

A busy boy on the Atlanta rubber chicken circuit, Hulbert in another speech told Broadcasters to get their employees interested in local civic and community affairs to keep them from job hopping. He said that holding on to good employees is "one of the greatest problems in radio today."

Community activities would give employees roots in their cities as well as boost the station's pub service image, Hulbert added.

The NAB official said radio "seems to be caught in a cycle of trying to hire new employees at the front door as fast as they are walking out the back door." Low pay scales aren't the main factor, Hulbert added.

He suggested careful interviewing practices, diverse routines and such niceties as hot coffee and hot plates.

Cancer Society Hitting Cig Cos. With Juve Film

Minneapolis, Oct. 16.

It wasn't calculated to make tobacco companies happy when newsman Peter Rively, disclosed on WCCO-TV 10 p.m. newscast last week that the Minnesota chapter of the American Cancer Society had produced a 15-minute film to be screened in schools throughout the nation for the purpose of revealing to 11 and 12-year olds cigarette's alleged harmfulness.

The Rively account over the CBS-affiliated station went into details as to how the film impresses upon its youthful viewers that cigarette smoking is dangerous because it's a cause of lung cancer, heart disease and other ailments and how medical profession and Cancer Society research shows such to be the case.

The film strip is being made available to state health departments throughout the U.S. and nine already have requested it, according to James Adams, the Society's head here. He says that the Maine health department already has asked for and received 12,000 of the film strips and the New York state health department has inquired relative to obtaining 22,000.

The idea of making the film was that of the local American Cancer Society chapter which produced and is distributing it. For a financial starter the chapter received a $2,000 grant from the Minnesota Health Department. More grants to help defray the cost involved now are being received from the state health departments, Adams says.

Paul West Joins SG

Paul West, producer of "The Donna Reed Show," has signed a longterm pact with Screen Gems as producer-creator-writer.

Deal calls for him to continue as producer of the Reed series, at least for the rest of this season, on loanout from SG to Todon, Inc., producers of the comedy show.

ABC's 'Discovery' 90% Sold Out

"Discovery '62," the new ABC-TV weekday children's series which bowed earlier this month, has now reached a 90% sellout status with the signing of Wm. Wrigley Jr. Co. as bankroller. Wrigley sponsorship on behalf of Spearmint Gum was placed through Erwin Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan agency.

Other sponsors participating on the show include General Foods, J. Nelson Prewitt, Chunky Chocolate Corp., Mattel Inc.; Binney & Smith Inc.; Transogram Co.; Sawyer's Inc.; Kenner Products Mfg.; General Mills and James O. Welch Co.

NBC GETS SHOW CBS ALMOST HAD

By ART WOODSTONE

Dig deeply into a Berlin tunnel and you find many things, in addition to conventional dirt: CBS-TV, as well as NBC-TV, had a tunnel, the U.S. State Department had qualms and some tunnel diggers still do. It was also possible to learn that nearly everybody in Europe has an unusual view of television news programs—that they look upon tv news appearances as a source of income.

Maybe most important in the wake of the noise—pro and con—about NBC News paying for the right to film work on a tunnel between East and West Berlin is that paying money to persons on tv news programs is evidently common practice abroad. It is especially common among some of the least common personages in Europe.

Aneuran Bevan and Hugh Gaitskill, both British and both high Labor Party officials, are known to have asked for money when they had been invited to appear as interviewees on American tv news programs. But they are merely representative of all England, which quite clearly looks upon such a practice as logical and reputable.

Evidently Europeans tend to view news media differently than Americans. They believe—since newspapers, particularly in England, pay for exclusive story material—there is no reason why rich American networks should not also pay. Even if the man they ask to appear on a news program is famous and even if everything he says makes news, the feeling seems to be that he was invited to appear and that appearance, being in the form of work, requires reimbursement. BBC reportedly pays many invited news guests.

After disclosure of its tunnel pictures, which will apear at the end of October in the form of a 90-minute program on NBC-TV, NBC News readily admitted that it had paid people previously to appear on programs.

But CBS News this week took a different view. A reliable source there admitted openly that Daniel Schorr, a CBS Newsman in Berlin, had negotiated with a man for the right to film the tunnel work. Schorr wanted to pay them money, but CBS News prexy Dick Salant, in N.Y., vetoed the payment idea. CBS used to pay news interviewees but, company says, stopped the practice "four or five months ago." (Network has explained the only payment to be made from now on will be to people supplying "memoirs.")

The tunnel crew whom CBS News hoped to follow on film apparently agreed to let the network in, even without money changing hands. Soon, however, CBS backed out anyway, because last August, according to the network, the U.S. Department of State called upon CBS officials and asked them to withdraw from the Berlin project.

The Feds reportedly based their request on two points: one, that human lives were at stake—, and, two, "the international situation." Probably the latter point received the greater stress because last August, around the time of the Walls first anniversary, State deemed the situation explosive.

State also approached NBC, but reportedly never asked NBC News to stop shooting film in a second tunnel. Evidently there was some confusion because State allegedly talked to NBC about the CBS tunnel but never once raised the subject, at least not specifically, about a tunnel NBC was digging.

NBC Didn't Back Off

In any event, NBC did not back off, and it did pay money for film rights to three boys, two Italian and one German, who some time earlier initiated the tunnel. It happened that 17 other students in West Berlin ultimately got involved in the digging. This week they protested aloud that they would try and stop NBC-TV from

Minute Buyers Seek High Ground In Nielsen's Top 25 for Next Qtr.; ABC's 'Combat' Click Pulls Sales

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Now that the returns are in on most of the season's new shows both critically and Nielsen-wise, the shortterm minute buyers have taken flight and looking for safe landing on high ground. The word has gone out to ad agencies to keep close tabs on certain shows that have crossed the magical 20/30 payoff line (past 20 in average audience and into the 30's in audience share).

ABC-TV's hour war show, "Combat," has drawn first sponsor blood on the strength of its initial Nielsen and critical praise. Biggest bloc of business to be moved is American Tobacco's alternate half hour from "Cheyenne" to "Combat" at year's end. Another client which liked what it saw of "Combat" is Schick (razor) and ordered participations. ABC-TV's own-produced "Combat," with Robert Blees as producer and sometime writer, picked off 38.5 share of audience in the Nielsen when not in competition with the Dodger-Giant playoff, which cost the hour show 10 points.

The minute buyers, who represent more than 60% of the time bought on the networks, are looking around for open spots on shows that are listed in Nielsens top 25. This together with reports from Coast inspectors on upcoming shows has moved the agencies to suggest to sponsors that they move their minute buys to shows with promise of higher ratings. Nothing else counts with the bankrollers where the final reckoning is what it costs to reach a thousand viewers based on audience share and cost of time and talent.

Most agency men foresee a wholesale turnover of shows after the holidays, with the new entries hardest hit. It has been estimated that each of the networks will have up to 35% open time when seasonal sponsors pull out after first of the year. The fourth Nielsen, due in early December, will be the moment of truth for most shows, especially the hours, which are peppered with minute buys. By then the sponsors will have a "feeling" about their shows now that they get weekly reports from Nielsen in the 30 major markets.

Ersatz Tunnel

CBS-TV, which turned down an offer to finance a real tunnel under the Commies' Berlin Wall, will nonetheless carry a show on the subject, although of an ersatz variety. "Armstrong Circle Theatre" will devote its Nov. 7 show to a fictionalized report on the East Berlin escape routes under the Wall.

Producer Robert Costello left for Berlin this week to case the city for a factual basis to the tv story.

TV Set Sales Up, Radio in Falloff From June Peak

Washington, Oct. 16.

Television distributor sales edged upward in August but radio sales slumped for the second month, Electronic Industries Assn. reported tv distributor sales moved ahead to 518,451, compared to 449,528 in July.

Radio distrib sales in August slid to 848,881 against 921,089 in July. Radio sales hit a peak of 1,040,598 in June.

So far in 1962 3,392,017 tv's have been sold. Last year's eight month figure was 3,366,805. Radio sales for the first eight months in 1962 are up to 6,570,544 a jump over the 1961 mark of 6,023,224.

Total tv production jumped to 500,693 in August from 336,409 in July, the year's lowest figure. This boost was reflected in an increase in UHF production from 28,359 in July to 44,862 in August. Total tv production to date is 4,132,603 compared to 3,699,188 in 1961. UHF production rose to 348,667 for the first eight months of this year. Last year's eight month figure was 205,011.

Total radio production in August rose slightly from 1,134,250 in July to 1,253,753 in August. The biggest jump was in FM production with 98,609 in August compared to 68,037 in July. Car radio production was up to 427,747 in August. July's figure was 403,946.

Total car radio sales to date jumped to 4,103,170 against last year's eight month total of 3,153,293.

FM radio production for the first eight months of this year is 626,154. Last year's figure at eight months was 473,799.

CBS-TV Pacts Nelson For '63 Drama Special

Ralph Nelson has been signed to produce and direct an hour original drama special on CBS-TV, planned for telecasting in early '63.

Hubbell Robinson, senior v.p. of programming at CBS-TV, said the Nelson special will be one of four original drama specials planned by the network for this season. Two will be 90-minute in length, for which Fred Coe has been signed as producer-director, and two will be 60 minutes in length.

Nelson's credits include "Requiem for a Heavyweight," both the vidversion and pic, "Playhouse 90" outings and "Studio One."

AFTRA'S L.A. Meet

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

AFTRA will hold 1963 Convention in L. A. at Ambassador Hotel, July 10-14.

It marks third time union convened here, previous ones being in 1946 and 1953.

Borax in 800G CBS A.M. Spread

U.S. Borax, in a $800,000 pledge of allegiance to CBS-TV's morning minute plan, bought 253 minutes starting in 1963. The Borax minutes will be spread over "Calendar," "I Love Lucy," "The McCoys," and "Pete and Gladys."

Also Simoniz bought a total of 162 minutes in the morning minute plan, starting Dec. 31.

In the non-daytime sales area, Chanel perfumes signed for a number of participations, starting November 29 and going through Dec. 15. Chanel's participations will be placed in "CBS Reports," "Eyewitness," "Password," "Jackie Gleason" and the Army-Navy football game.

COOK-SCHAFFNER SET 2 SPECIALS FOR CBS

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Fielder Cook and Franklin Schaffner will film two one-hour dramatic specials for CBS under their Directors Co. banner, under deal signed with CBS program chief Hubbell Robinson. Each of the partners will produce and direct one show.

Directors Co. also has a seven-segment deal for NBC's "DuPont Show of the Month."

British Equity, Can. Council Join To Curb TV Programs' Int'l Sales

London, Oct. 16.

Ever since the Canadian Council of Authors & Artists backed up British Equity to near strike point in the latter's dispute with the commercial web here, the two talent unions have forged a close alliance which could spell serious repercussions for the tv producer with an eye on the international market. The tone of union feeling toward ever-increasing international program sales was set at a three-ray meeting between British and Canadian union delegates held last week in London.

At the powwow, delegates not only reaffirmed their belief in certain basic principles regarding international sales but, more important, set the first wheels in motion towards achieving a stringent set of safeguards.

Initially, both sides have agreed to monitor their respective video screens, providing one another with detailed information on the use and re-use of material from the other's stable.

It was agreed to mount joint pressure for programs ("of high quality") to be exchanged on a reciprocal basis without reducing employment possibilities in either country. In this connection the unions are to maintain constant consultation on their national negotiations and agreements so as to avoid the danger of undercutting each other.

It was decided to press for national quotas and increased royalties for artists which "reflect the increase in audience . . outside the country of origin."

Vibrations of these initial moves to tap expansion of global tv are being felt in America as well as Canada and Europe. Meetings between British Equity and the Yank unions are high on the international agenda, as they are the world's major exporters and importers of tv film. Also on the list are confabs with the International Federation of Actors which made its stance clear on the overseas program sales issue in Brussels last November.

Now, it seems, what was agreed there in principle — that international exchange, sales, et al., on the grounds of "cheapness" and not "quality" is against the interest of both viewers and performers—is being translated into practical terms by Britain and Canada.

FAULK MAKES RADIO COMEBACK VIA WINS

John Henry; Faulk is coming back to radio on WINS, N. Y. Starting Nov. 12, Faulk, the recent winner of a $3,500,000 libel suit award against Aware Inc., will host "Program PM," report on all aspects of New York. Deal with WINS was set through Faulk's agent, Harold D. Cohen.

Faulk's last radio series, a six-year stint for CBS, ended on Sept. 13, 1957. At that point, Faulk's career was cut off because an Aware pamphlet erroneously linked him to Communist front organizations. Faulk, defended by attorney Louis Nizer, won his libel action last June and ever since has had show biz doors opening to him.

Name Duncan Mounsey Rand Veep, Gen. Mgr.

Duncan Mounsey has become veep and general manager of Rand Broadcasting, outfit owning the 50kw WINQ in Tampa, Fla. He brought with him Martin Ross, who was with Mounsey as his assistant at Schine Broadcasting's WPTR, in Albany, N.Y.

Mounsey came into tv as a studio operation manager and was one of the NBC-TV production people on the old Steve Allen "Tonight" stanza. In show biz for 22 years, Mounsey was an actor and he was also stage manager for Max Reinhardt and stage manager at Radio City Music Hall.

Ross, who will be his assistant manager at the Tampa station, came from NBC's "Monitor" and has been a press agent and a tv casting director.

Sara Lee Dickering For Belafonte Special

Chicago, Oct. 16.

Kitchens of Sara Lee is dickering for a Harry Belafonte special on CBS-TV next January, but it hinges on the network's firm commitment of a time period and the emergence of a co-sponsor.

Packaged foods firm, through Hill, Rogers, Mason & Scott, is co-sponsoring the Bob Hope spec on NBC-TV Nov. 29 and wants a total of three specials for the season.

CBS O&O's Rich Coffee Flavor

CBS-TV o&o's in N.Y. and Los Angeles have struck it lucky this season out in the pubaffairs programming area, each copping a major bankroller for such telecasts.

First it was WCBS-TV, N.Y., to announce that Chock-Full-O'Nuts had bought a major portion of the station's pubaffairs programming. Then along came sister station KNXT, in Los Angeles, with Regular Maxwell House Coffee agreeing to a deal to pick up KNXT's pub-affairs.

In both cases it was coffee accounts. Maxwell, unlike Chock-Full-O'Nuts, is a national advertiser. Maxwell deal was acclaimed as the first sale to a national advertiser of a major local public affairs schedule.

'B'way Goes Latin' Sales

Independent Television Corp.'s "Broadway Goes Latin" has inked four more markets. New station deals include WAST, Albany, N.Y.; KTVT, Ft. Worth; WBRE, Wilkes-Barre; and WFGA, Jacksonville.

Other recent sales include WLOF, Orlando; KROD, El Paso; WLOS, Asheville; WBOC, Salisbury; WTVT, Tampa; and WTVJ, Miami.

Sell 'Bachelor Father' Into Six Markets

Shortly after making known its availability, MCA TV clicked off sales on "Bachelor Father," latest off-network half-hour entry for the house.

Inking for the series, composed of 157 half-hours are WNBC-TV, New York; KRCA, Los Angeles; WANE-TV, Ft. Wayne; WMAL-TV, Washington; WBRE-TV, Wilkes-Barre; and WNBQ, Chicago.

Colgate Keeps Chi Guessing

Chicago, Oct. 16.

The four commercial television stations here and at least five radio outlets are sweating out the verdict from Colgate-Palmolive on the pitch each has made for the special budget the sponsor has earmarked for Chicago. Presumably, Colgate wants to make an extra splurge here to improve its share of the market and wants to carefully determine the best use of the coin.

Pitches were made on an invitational basis, with the stations sending spokesmen to New York to address the client directly. No agency was involved.

OF's 'Biography' Gets 5 More Bank Sponsors

Official Films' half-hour "Biography" series has picked up five more bank sponsors, bringing the total financial bankrollers to 18 out of 147 markets sold. First Pennsylvania Banking & Trust will underwrite the series on WROV-TV, Philadelphia, via N. W. Ayer agency. Others new to the bank roster are American National Bank, Mobile; Liberty National, Oklahoma City; Michigan National, Lancing; and Walker Bank & Trust, Salt Lake City.

Most recent station buy is WBZ-TV, Boston, second Westinghouse station to take the show (the other is Cleveland). New markets include KONO, San Antonio; WSAZ, Huntington; WDEF, Chattanooga; KFYR, Bismark; KSLA, Shreveport; KGNS, Laredo; KFBC, Cheyenne; KELO, Sioux Falls; and WKOW, Madison.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

It wasn't Joe E. Lewis' sensitivities but Milton Blackstone's concern for his charge, Eddie Fisher, that created a reshuffling of Hy Gardner's debut new Sunday-at-7 p.m. show over WOR-TV, New York. Blackstone, in handling the "new image" for the singer, felt that Fisher's performance on a tv show, albeit vidtaped, on Yom Kippur eve last Sunday (7) was out of key. While Gardner observed, "Suppose Eddie was in a feature film, as he has been, and it was spotbooked on some video program the same night, he couldn't control it," nonetheless he deferred to Blackstone.

In the same manner he also deferred to old friend and fellow columnist Ed Sullivan when the latter's son-in-law and producer, Bob Precht, expressed mild concern over Paul Anka doing an interview show for Gardner's Gotham outlet an hour before Sullivan's own CBS national (and Canadian) network, on which he (Anka) got beaucoup loot.

Because the Anka-Jayne Mansfield-Joe E. Lewis tape was so integrated that the thought arose that the latter, too, objected to the Yom Kippur exposure. This was academic with the nitery comedian because (1) it was a local show and (2) it had been taped the Friday preceding. (It is true, however, that Lewis never performs at the Copacabana, N.Y., where he is usually incumbent during the Jewish High Holiday, and George DeWitt subbed for him last week).

Incidentally, because of the topicality of Pierre Salinger's past Sunday's interview, Gardner again has deferred the Eddie Fisher interview until next Sunday. Meantime a minor complication involves Dime Savings Bank of Brooklyn, which had committed itself for 100% underwriting of the "new" Hy Gardner Show. It is now qualifying itself and going in only for spot commercials, with the rest of the sponsorship taken up by the N.Y. Telephone Co., Wrigley and others. Dime SB wanted the option to withdraw, if occasion warranted, when some of Gardner's show biz guests might not be to the liking of the bank's echelon. This refers to some of the celebrities whom Gardner might book and which DSB might feel inconsistent with its own "image."

A score of foreign countries represented at the special European Broadcasting Union session in New York later this month will be guests of the Administration in Washington, D.C., Oct. 24. Day-long visit to the capital will include a luncheon hosted by Ed Murrow, USIA director, and meetings with other top government officials. EBU will meet in New York from Oct. 22 to 27 to discuss programming, technical and legal matters. It will be the first EBU session outside Europe for the org, which is made up of all European nations outside the Iron Curtain.

Storer Broadcasting prexy George B. Storer Jr., Milwaukee mayor Henry Maier and ABC-TV network viceprez Tom Moore each dedicated a leg of the new WITI-TV tower, a 1,078-foot structure that is believed to be the tallest self-supporting tower in America. In a ceremony held in Milwaukee last week, Moore dedicated the first leg to entertainment, Mayor Maier the second to community affairs and Storer the third to newsand editorials, those being the three broadcast facets to which WITI principally addresses itself.

Radio: Yes, No and Maybe

Westinghouse Seminar on Programming Covers Full Critical Spectrum

Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.'s seminar on radio programming in New York last week generated the full critical spectrum, ranging from raves to thorough-going raps of the medium. Participants in the get-together included broadcasters, critics, rep firm execs, advertisers and agencies.

Following are some quotes from talks made at various panels:

Maybelle Joyce, of the Christian Science Monitor: "The press attitude is that radio is a stepchild, but radio is very much alive in every room, car and pocket. Readers are asking for radio logs and highlights in the newspapers. Radio is a separate entity from television and should be treated as such."

Terry Turner, Chicago News: "The whole system is wrong, with emphasis not on product but profit. It's insane to have 18 disk jockeys in a row. The broadcaster can afford to take a loss and program better."

Carle Schuele, president of Broadcast Time Sales: "Leave radio as it is. Business is sound without documentaries. Adjust to the market and sell products."

Clark Sutton, director of advertising, First Federal Savings & Loan Co., Pittsburgh: "I don't believe that documentaries can sell package products, but for institutional advertising such as ours, it really did the job. Nighttime radio can be successful, but a nighttime program must be adequately promoted."

William Schwarz, WNBC program manager: "It is becoming more and more difficult to program to cover the entire area your station's signal covers, therefore each station should define its own community of listeners, not necessarily geographical, but social, ethnic, etc. This specialized programming must be total in terms of news, music, specials, and even commercials. The only fact that matters to advertisers is 'does it sell the product?' not 'how many people are listening?.'"

William Kaland, WMC, national program manager: "We agree on three facts: (1) programming is a science—we have to know our audience and what they want; (2) numbers are facts but we mustn't forget the qualitative approach; (3) programming people are verbal. We definitely proved the latter today."

Elliott M. Sanger, WQXR, N.Y. exec v.p. and general manager: "Radio is not a has-been—it is a strong, vital force in communications. We at WQXR have had the same formula for 26 years but with this difference: Without departing from our basic ideas, we have constantly changed our method of presentation and added new program ideas within the general concept of what our audience wants."

Donald H. McGannon, WBC prexy, said at a luncheon meeting that "radio is the basic means of communication for more than half the world. Radio reaches everywhere; it has evolved but it's still a first class medium, so let us practical in outlook, for the younger set thinks differently than we do about it. But let's be courageous also and live up in other areas to the best of radio, its news coverage."

Minneapolis, Oct. 16.

Something new and higher in the way of eminence for disk jockeying here is unfolding. It finds no less a person than the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra's assistant conductor, Frederick Fennell, in a disk jockey role on Time-Life's local radio station WTCN, an ABC affiliate.

He'll be WTCN's 9 o'clock disk jockey week-nights. And the station is employing him in that capacity in the hope he can provide stiff competition for Victor Borge. Borge has a taped classical music program on rival station, WLOL-FM, at 9 o'clock week-nights and it's garnering a high rating.

Before joining the famed 60-year old Minneapolis Symphony orchestra this season, Fennel was an Eastman School of Music professor and organizer and conductor of the Eastman Symphonic Wind Ensemble at Rochester, N. Y. For many years he conducted a Sunday 90-minute Rochester radio music program. He's still connected with the latter via its host coming here every few months to tape programs with him.

FCC Donating UHFer to N.Y.C.

Washington, Oct. 16.

Federal Comunications Commission has notified New York Mayor Robert Wagner it will officially transfer its UHF test antenna on the Empire State Building to the city Nov. 1.

In a letter to Wagner the commission said "it is pleased" to turn over the antenna and facilities for use by New York's city run noncommercial UHF station WNYC.

FCC has been using the antenna experimentally over Channel 31, and plans to conclude its testing by Nov. 1. It had previously promised New York such aid in setting up its own station.

The Empire State antenna has been declared Government surplus to pave the way for its transfer to New York, FCC told Wagner.

FCC will make its first report on UHF tv reception in New York at the Nov. 12-14 Electronics Industries Assn. meet in Toronto.

LINK WHK RENEWAL TO ORLANDO CASE

Washington, Oct. 16.

The Federal Communications Commission granted a license renewal to WHK, Cleveland, but conditioned it upon the final outcome of what FCC does about the troublesome Orlando, Fla., television channel 9 case. The Orlando case is one of those investigated by the Oren Harris Subcommittee, with allegations of ex parte contacts.

WHK is operated by MetroMedia (parent of Metropolitan Broadcasting). Some principals of MetroMedia are also stockholders of Mid-Florida TV Corp., one of the Orlando applicants.

Chairman Newton Minow dissented on the WHK renewal, saying the Orlando matter should be settled first.

Austin Heywood Joins KTLA as Ad-Pub Chief

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Austin Heywood was named ad-promo-publicity manager of Paramount Television and KTLA, replacing Robert Nashick who resigned to join San Francisco's KPIX-TV in a similar capacity.

Heywood formerly was pub director for Davis, Johnson, Mogul & Colombatto ad agency, which has among its clients KCOP. Mike Casey continues as publicity chief at KTLA, with Heywood heading overall operations.

KEYC-TV GETS 1 YEAR TO PROVE 'GOOD FAITH'

Washington, Oct. 16.

The Federal Communications Commission has granted KEYC-TV, Channel 13, Mankato, Minn., a short-term license of one year, alleging questionable faith in local programming and staffing. A station request to shut down its Mankato facilities so it could become a satellite of KGLO-TV in Mason City, Iowa was rejected earlier by the commission.

The subsequent KEYC offer to retain local programming ratio but with a reduced staff won only short-term approval by the FCC which said it is giving the station only long enough to prove the good faith and feasibility of its proposal.

H'WOOD'S SYNDIE BLACKOUT

USIA Eases 'Image' Barrier in Export Of TV Shows to Iron Curtain Nations

Television Program Export Assn. has won a point with the Informational Media Guarantee Division of the U.S. Information Agency, a point which may have wide ramifications in trade with eastern bloc nations.

Case involved NBC Films' "Danger Is My Business," which USAI's Informational Media Guarantee okayed as qualifying for convertibility guarantee. The okay was granted after receiving protests from TPEA's John G. McCarthy. TPEA prexy complained that the division's new criteria, which grants convertibility guarantees to material only if it sows the U.S. in a positive, favorable light, prohibits the inclusion of most U.S. entertainment shows.

Soviet bloc nations, McCarthy argued, would fear to buy tv programming solely on the grounds of showing the U.S. in a positive, favorable light. In fact, such programs might not be bought at all. Why not allow them to buy U.S. entertainment shows, McCarthy contended, referring to the convertibility needs of U.S. exporters. If IMG does nothing, McCarthy argued, U.S. entertainment shows won't win berths in Poland and Yugoslavia, and the programming vacuum may be filled by anti-American shows coming from the Soviet camp.

IMG, in response to McCarthy's plea, refused to abrogate its present policy. It did concede, however, that in some instances, it may have applied its new criteria "too stringently. IMG also promised to reconsider "previously made negative decisions," with "Danger Is My Business' becoming the first reversal announced.

Here is the text of IMG's observations, issued by TPEA, reprinted in full because of its importance.

Said IMG: "The general problem of the eligibility of programs produced by the American television industry is extremely difficult and the cause of much concern to us. Although our modified eligibility policy was designed to assure that the expenditure of public funds through the IGM program will result in some contribution to the achievement of our national purpose, it was not our desire to convert IMG into a propaganda instrument. Nor was it our desire to make Ameri-

Hub Educ'l Channel Gets $1,711,976 to Rebuild Fire-Destroyed Studios

Boston, Oct. 16.

Hub's educational channel, WGBH-TV, which was conked out in a disastrous fire, has come back with $1,711,976, almost $12,000 more than they set out to find 12 months ago when their Cambridge studios and most of their equipment was destroyed.

Ralph Lowell, prexy of Channel 2, said work on new studios will start shortly. Of the total contributed more than $1,000,000 came directly from the community in amounts ranging from a few pennies to several thousands of dollars. Donations have come from business, from foundations and, most significant, from upwards of 50,000 individuals. Important gifts to the station came from the Ford Foundation, which matched $500,000 of local contributions, and from the Twentieth Century Fund, created by Edward A. Filene of Boston, which gave $125,000.

After the fire, Hub's three commercial stations, WBZ-TV, WNAC-TV, WHDH-TV, and the Catholic TV Center came to the rescue so effectively that Channel 2 missed only one broadcast day, and its WGBH-TV station didn't lose an hour of broadcast time. It went on the air the first p.m. of the fire from the tiny studios in Symphony Hall.

WOR's High Pulse

RKO General WOR topped the New York Pulse ratings for the 15th straight month in the hours from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Latest (August) figures give WOR an average quarter-hour rating of 3.6 between 6 a.m. and 8 p.m. Station took the ratings lead early in the summer of 1961.

TV Excise Tax May Be Slashed As UHF Boost

Washington, Oct. 16.

The 10% Federal excise tax on radio and television sets may be sliced in half if compromise legislation proposed for the 1963 Congress is adopted.

Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R.-Mass) introduced the bill authorizing the 5% slash.

Congress recently directed radio and television manufacturers to equip their sets to receive all UHF and VHF channels. However the FCC will not require the added equipment until 1965.

"The new requirements will make possible future scheduling of more programs, including educational television," Conte said. "But an important side effect of such a measure is to increase the cost of these sets by another $25 to $60. "This reduction is necessary to insure against any unfavorable effect on the consumer and prevent any serious threat to the industry."

Conte said he believed the reduced tax would bring the cost of television and radio sets within the range of many other electrical equipment.

WINS BOWS 24-HOUR NEWS ON OUR POWER

WINS, Westinghouse Broadcasting's New York AMer, began around-the-clock news coverage this week as the news feeds from Mutual Broadcasting were dropped (web now affiliates with WHN, the Storer station in New York).

Initial emphasis will be on regular news segments on the hour and half hour during the day and on the half hour in other periods.

Station will be using special reports from Westinghouse stations around the country and the group's special Washington and overseas operations. News director Jerry Landay will be heading a staff of 16 by Nov. 1, building from five when WBC took over the station earlier this year. Latest staff additions are newscaster-writer Charles King, formerly with WQXR and WNEW, and news writer James McGiffert, formerly AP and CBS News.

TAC Sells Pic P'kge

TAC, the Television Affiliates Corp., subsid of Trans-Lux that gathers and distributes local station telementaries, has made three new sales in the east.

Buying the library of 82 films from local stations last week were Fuel Oil Dealers of Central Florida, from WESH-TV, Orlando; Peoples Bank, from WLYH-TV, Lebanon, Pa.; and Liberty Life Insurance, from WSPA-TV, Greenville, S. C. Bankrollers will select shows from the library for airing on the local stations.

Liberty Insurance buy was made through the New York ad agency of Sudler & Hennessey. TAC shows are sponsored on various Coast stations by Turf-Co lawn sprinklers and in Los Angeles by Great Western Savings. Kimbzrough-Phillips bankrolls in Nashville.

TOP PRODUCERS BYPASS MARKET

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Leading Hollywood telefilmeries are completely bypassing the syndication field for 1963, and the only new telefilm product planned for next year consists of five travel and/or documentary series and six hour-long spex. Latter are being turned out by specialists in those areas, companies such as Bill Burrud Productions, David L. Wolper and Jack Douglas.

However, the vidpix giants, such as Revue Studios, Screen Gems and Desilu, are shunning the syndie field, for a variety of reasons. Some because they feel indie stations around the country simply won't support first-run telepix, others that there aren't enough time periods available, and some because of the great number of rerun series, many off-network, now being dumped into syndication.

So first-run telepix for syndication, once a thriving biz in Hollywood, with 25 plus series turned out each year, is now down to a minescule number, with no prospects of improvement in the forseeable future.

At Revue Studios, once a steady supplier of syndie stuff, a top exec said the company has no plans for first-run syndicated production at this time, and has no blueprint for future syndie vidpix "so long as station buyers won't support them."

Screen Gems coast boss Bill Dozier also has no plans for syndie production next year, and he commented "in the present shrunken condition of the market, we don't want to compete for the few time periods available."

Desilu production chief Jerry Thorpe, joining the chorus of never-on syndie, remarked "there seems to be such a plethora of rerun of material that buyers can buy at very low prices. This is not a profit-making proposition, and the only way to go into it would be at such a low level of quality—to meet the economics—we would be ashamed to have our name on it."

Similarly, MGM-TV, Four Star and 20th-Fox, in outlining plans for next year, have omitted any syndication production. As far as is known none of the vidpix bigleaguers plan any.

It's a different story in the travelog-documentary field, where lower budgets, for one thing, allow a different view.

Producer David Wolper has just received a renewal for 26 more "Biography" telefilms, syndicated by Official films. In addition, his "The Story Of" is syndicated by UA-TV, and he is planning six hour-long first-run specials for syndication for next year.

Producer Bill Burrud, whose second batch of 39 "True Adventure" travelog films are in syndication, is planning 39 half-hours of "Pacific Revisited," lensed in color, for syndie next year. Syndication has proved successful for his operation, and some indie stations are "disenchanted" with some off-net reruns, Burrud remarked. "Pacific," now being lensed at around $18,000 per seg, will go into syndication "unless somebody wants it for a network," he said. His "True" segs are filmed with budgets of $12,500 per seg.

Travelog-documentary producer Jack Douglas is planning two half-hour documentary series, both in color, for syndication next year, as well as another semester of his "Across the Seven Seas" series.

Washington, Oct. 16.

In a finalized rule-making action, television channel 2 was shifted from Henderson to Las Vegas, Nev., by the FCC. In a simultaneous action, FCC allowed Southern Nevada Radio and Television Co., which had the channel 2 grant for Henderson, to locate the station in Las Vegas instead.

Commissioner Robert T. Bartley dissented.

Syndies Punch Holes in Web Armor Via Rising Local Prime Time Pre-Emptions

Syndicators, who this season have been able to punch some holes in the network's prime time armor, are now predicting there will be even more chinks in the months to come. Field reports from syndie sales staffs are noting more and more local station prime-preemptions for feature pix, off-web hours and original syndication half hours.

Len Firestone, head of the new Four Star Distribution syndication wing of Four Star Productions, says the main reason for the loosening up is the state of network sales in participating sponsorships. He cites a "Hitchcock" hour (CBS), preeming with two out of eight minutes sold, or the undersold status of Four Stars' own "Saints & Sinners" on NBC—"Look at tv any night, and you can find network promos where there should be commercials." Estimates run as high as 40% unsold for two of the three webs.

With the network slack, stations have been taking an hour, or an hour and a half, or, in a couple of cases at least, a night off form the web feed to slot syndicated product with the return of a 100% of the rate card compared to the 30% from the web. National sponsors, says Firestone, are anxious to get the available minutes (spot biz was never better) which can only be scheduled between network shows, not during.

Four Stars' main product is the off-web hour, and Firestone sees a number of things working for these packages in and out of prime time. More stations are experimenting with the hours to fill the late night slot in place of feature pix. One station is now playing hours three nights a week, features three and reslating a pre-empted web show on the seventh night. WFIL in Philadelphia has hour dramas four nights a week.

Reasons behind strength of the hours, says Firestone, are in the fact that the feature stockpile is dwindling fast; the number of hour packages now available — 19 as compared to four last year; and the cost factor, which gives a double-run leasing of the hours an advantage over features.

Fremantle's '6 by Borge'

Six hourlong specials being produced by Victor Borge's new production company, VBS Associates, will be distributed in overseas markets by Fremantle International.

The specials, four of which are already in the can, are "The Best of Borge," "The Jim Moran Show," "The Story of James Dean," "Jazz Music," "Genius at Work" and an original musical comedy titled "Money Is Not Everything."

WBC Rolling Juve Specials For Syndication

The Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp. is producing a series of 13 one-hour specials for youngsters which will get prime-time monthly showing by the group's tv stations and be available for syndication elsewhere.

Excerpts from the first four shows were press-previewed this week by WBC execs and producer Michael Santangelo. WBC prexy Don McGannon told the press that the series, which he said was blueprinted before FCC chairman Newton Minow's declaration on kidvid, was slanted at the 11 to 13-year-old age group.

Quartet of shows excerpted for the press preview, were, 'Magic, Magic, Magic," hosted by magician Milbourne Christopher and guesting Julie Harris and Zero Mostel; "First Concert," with the Cleveland Symphony conducted by Robert Shaw; "Black Nativity," Gospel song-play produced last year in New York by Santangelo and now touring the world; and "Baird's Eye View," a history of puppetry with Bil Baird.

Series director is James Elson. WBC stations beginning this month will be playing the shows in a 7:30 p.m. slot with repeats slated for an earlier time.

PHOENIX 250-WATTER BRINGS 500G IN SALE

KRIZ, Phoenix 250-watt radio station, was bought by a new Arizona outfit headed by Frank Flynn for $500,000, according to Hamilton-Landis, the brokerage making the deal. Outlet was sold by Radio Denver Inc., corporation owned by the family of former U.S. Senator Burton K. Wheeler, which also owns and operates KTLN, Denver.

Flynn was recently general manager and part owner of KYOS, Merced, Calif. His new company, owning KRIZ, is Shamrock Broadcasters and his partners in the deal are Charles Cahill and Paul O'Brien, both of Cheyenne, Wyo. "A number of Merced (Calif.) businessmen" are also listed as shareholders. Sale is awaiting FCC approval.

Same brokerage house reports another high-priced sale. This time Frank Junell of Lubbock, Tex., is alleged to have paid $160,000 for another 250-watter—KEYE in Perryton, Tex.

K.C.'s 9th FMer

Kansas City, Oct. 16.

Advent of KMBC-FM here last week brought to nine the number of FMers here. It's the third broadcasting media operated here by Metropolitan Broadcasting.

Chris J. Stolfa recently was brought over by Metropolitan as station manager from KCMO-FM, where he had been for several years. New station has a 24-hour policy, with about 19 hours multiplexing daily.

FCC Fines FMer 1G For Failing to File Its Transfer of Ownership

Washington, Oct. 16.

Federal Communications Commission has fined the operator of a Madison, Wisc., FM station $1,000 for failing to file a transfer of ownership notice. Paul A. Stewart, operator of WRVB-FM, has 30 days to show cause why he should not be fined.

The FCC action came on a 4-2 vote. New member E. William Henry did not participate. Commissioners Rosel Hyde and Robert Bartley dissented, with Bartley declaring in a written statement he thought a show cause order toward license revocation would be "better procedure."

Stewart's transgression was discovered, said the commission in a letter notifying him of the fine, when he asked permission to build a higher antenna. FCC discovered at that time Stewart had never sought an okay to transfer his license from Paul Stewart to Paul Stewart Enterprises, Inc.

'Bus Stop' Syndication Blocked by Hassle

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

20th-Fox TV is holding off syndication of 26 segments of "Bus Stop" until a settlement has been reached with Roy Huggins, executive producer, and William Inge, author of the original.

Inge was paid $1,000 a week for use of the title, but refused to allow his name in the credits. He considered the televersion beneath his literary dignity.

How's Your Technique?

Nicholas Samstag, former promotion director of Time mag and now head of his own firm, called advertising "basically seduction" on CBS-TV's "Calendar" Monday (15).

Samstag, one of the participants on the show themed on the merits and faults of advertising, said, after comparing advertising to seduction, "And I think seduction should always be watched very carefully. And if you're a good seducer I think that's always successful 'cause even the girl is happy. If you're a bad seducer then you get into all sorts of trouble."

Other participants on the show were Pat Weaver, chairman of the board of McCann-Erickson, and David Ogilvy, chairman of the board of Ogilvy, Benson & Mather. Ogilvy and Weaver both decried the overcommercialization of American tv.

'Have Gun-Will Travel' Wraps Up Final Show; Not Due Back in '63

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

CBS-TV's "Have Gun—Will Travel" is the first of the vidfilm series now on the networks to wrap up production for the season.

The 32nd and final seg of the Richard Boone starrer was finished at Paramount, and producer Don Ingalls is now completing work on the series. This will probably be the last season for "Have Gun," since Boone has said he won't continue with the show beyond this year, and the web—at present—has no plans for continuing the skein.

"Have Gun" was finished early because the sked was arranged for an early start last spring, when Boone said he wanted to be sprung early so he could do a Broadway play. Now, however, Boone isn't planning to do any play, network sources said.

ATV'S 'SAINT' BEATS BBC'S SUN. NIGHT SHOWS

London, Oct. 16.

"The Saint," Associated Television's new vidpic series, has stood up to BBC-TV's new Sunday night program challenge in the London area by beating on the rating chart the latter's "Black and White Minstrel Show" and "Perry Mason," which it opposes in its peak time spot.

On Sunday (7) the ATV program scored a 38 rating in its second outing, against 33 for the "Minstrel Show," but in the Midlands area, where "The Saint" is aired on a weekday, the BBC program licked its opposing "Sunset Strip" by a 41 to 35 rating.

In both regions in which it is playing—London and the Midlands—"The Saint" has hit the top 10 listings, but cannot expect to make the national top 20 chart until it is released on a network basis.

FCC-NAB D.C. Feed Nourishes Editorials

Washington, Oct. 16.

On air editorials got a bigger push here at a luncheon meet of three commissioners of the Federal Communications Commission and three members of the National Assn. of Broadcasters' committee on editorializing.

Chairman Newton N. Minow and Commissioners Robert T. Bartley and Frederick W. Ford, representing FCC, went over with the committee NAB's voluntary guidelines on editorializing. FCC is encouraging editorials, with Sec. 315's "fairness doctrine" protection, to advance further electronic journalism.

Representing the NAB committee at the luncheon were Daniel W. Kops, WAVZ, New Haven, Conn., and WTRY, Troy, N.Y.; Frank J. Abbott Jr., WWGP, Sanford, N.C., and Fred Houwink, WMAL-AM-FM-TV, Washington.

San Antonio—Frank Bell, Larry Vance and Mike Scott are all coming to KONO here as on-the-air workers. Bell comes from KEWB, San Francisco, and Vance from KXOL, Ft. Worth.

Fuller-Smith-Ross Research Pitch Pays Off With Doubled TV Billings —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

The 666 Bldg. on Fifth Ave., that hothouse of tv billings (Ted Bates, Benton & Bowles, Revlon), has had another blooming year.

Bates, B&B et. al. can't get much greener. Fuller & Smith & Ross is the verdant shop this time. Once an industrial-oriented agency, F&S&R's calculated pitch to package accounts has seen a doubling of tv billings this year, a jump from $8,000,000 to $16,000,000.

Last week's American Chicle biz ($1,700,000 from Kenyon & Eckhardt) topped a list of a half dozen new clients for the year with virtually all the money in tv. Biggest account in the new roster is Lestoil, $4,000,000, which F&S&R takes over next month. Once a 100% spot tv account, Lestoil last year went all-out NBC-TV. At F&S&R, the billings will be split between network and spot again, with the latter going to markets where the product needs the extra push of 20 to 30 blurbs a week.

Otherwise, the agency has grabbed off Lehn & Fink ($1,400,000 from Bates across the hall); some Armour biz in the Chicago office, $450,000; Hires soft drinks, $1,500,000; and the Cotton Council and Renault cars.

Much of the new biz has been due to the efforts of senior veepee and manager of the New York office Bill Holden, an exec with long experience in the packaged goods line. Art Duram, senior veepee, radio & tv, says the shop's Focus Panel and TV Audit also have been contributing factors.

Focus Panel is an on-the-scene survey of housewives, utilizing the agency's closed circuit setup. The femmes watch commiercials etc. while Big Brother client watches them. Latter is able to have his questions relayed on the spot.

TV Audit breaks down audiences well beyond the surface count of ratings. Duram views with amazment the new clients who have joined up that know little beyond the cost-per-thousand viewers and share of audience their investment brings. The Audit takes into consideration such factors as popularity potential, growth potential, customer target penetration, balancing reach and frequency, CPM efficiency, commercial impact potential and so on. As a quick example of the practicality behind the jargon, Duram cites show A and show B which have virtually the same share of audience and TvQ score, but A has nearly twice as many femmes who use hair rinses regularly (at F&S&R the color has been green lately).

ARF's Buy the Numbers

Advertising Research Foundation, the nonprofit research org of advertiser and media members which a few years back shook up the industry with a study and recommendation that one tv rating service should be plenty, has just issued a booklet, "The Intelligent Man's Guide to Broadcast Ratings," by Martin Mayer.

This one will shake no one except maybe a local station man here and there. It was underwritten by the three networks — whose execs were consulted along the way—and is sanctioned by ARF's Consultation Section of the Technical Committee and the board of directors.

Basically, the booklet sets down in lay terms the findings of the Madow-Hyman-Jessen report done for Oren Harris' House Committee on Interstate & Foreign Commerce, beginning in 1960.

Mayer, whose "Madison Ave: USA" opus which gave advertising sort of an in-depth okay, clears up the complex findings of the researchers for government by comparing the rating systems with a long-running crap game. One of the conclusions in the sampling theory is that "good local ratings will cost almost as much for each metropolitan area as good national ratings cost for the country as a whole. And, obviously, broadcasters and advertisers are far more willing to pony up a stiff price when they buy nationwide information. So national ratings are far more accurate than local ratings."

In conclusion, Mayer calls for more money for research into ratings, an Office of Research Methodology that could get answers to some vital questions—can the accuracy and yield of the diary be improved? Of the meter? Are there any as yet untried but economically feasible means of gathering viewing and listening information? What improvements in sample selection might offer the most additional precision for a given added cost? What rule-of-thumb adjustments and allowances make most sense in day-to-day interpretation of the figures, particularly where different services disagree?

Mayer says Madow, Hyman & Jessen "have reported to the Congress that there is nothing scandalous about television ratings, but the mere absence of scandal is not a reason for self-congratulation. The time has come for the industry to express its dissatisfaction concretely by providing money for research."

Pitchmen's Fest

Included in the Museum of Modern Art's January bow to electronics, "Television USA: 13 Seasons," a series of kinies and film produced for tv, will be the medium's outstanding commercials from 1948 to 1961.

Museum has contacted 200 agencies and production firms for submissions. Aim is to show a comprehensive evaluation of blurb development over the years.

With the Station Reps

In the wake of Ed Shurick's resignation as head of Blair TV, the entire reppery organization is now undergoing some fundamental changes. Most of the exec changes, including the appointment of Dave Lundy as topper of a recombined operation, have been made but the structural changes in the corporation are still underway.

Very suddenly last week, Shurick was out. Lundy, who was exec veepee of Blair Television Associates, moved up. Technically, he is president of Blair Television, which seemingly combines the old Blair TV and the Old Blair TV Associates. Actually, whether Blair TV, which handled the larger stations in the reppery's coil, the BTA, organized about five years ago to handle secondary market stations, will actually be joined remains to be seen.

Frank Martin has become exec veep under Lundy. Not announced but anticipated is a vice presidency for Art McCoy, who will apparently be head of the absorbed BTA functions.

Seems the structural changes will not become explicit until overall chieftain John Blair has given the matter time to shakedown.

Blair has taken the old John Blair Co. title, designation for the radio station setup, and made it the holding name for all divisions. In its stead, the radio stations will be repped by Blair Radio, a division separate from the new Blair Television.

Briefs: WRFM-FM, New York, hits a new high in advertising with loot from Cadillac Motors, 20th Fox and United Airlines. Station's g.m. Edith Dick predicts a high also in audience this year for the quality music outlet . . . Edward Tripplett, formerly with NBC, has joined the Broadcast Time Sales New York sales staff . . . Harry Averill to Radio Advertising Bureau in exec capacity. He was with Bartell stations . . . Franklin Wheeler upped to manager of Katz's San Francisco office, succeeding Stanley J Reulman, who died Sept. 28.

WEST END
With Della Reese, Johnny Carson, George Kirby, Barrie Chase, Oranim Zabar Trio, Peter Knight Orc, singers
Producer: Nick Zanoff
Director: Mark Stuart
Writers: Frank Pepplatt, Ruben Ship
60 Mins., Wed., 9:45 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

Often in the past, Granada TV has attempted to raise the sights of light entertainment with curious results. In trying for sophistication, it has frequently ended with brittle platitudes. "West End," however, on this showing, looked likely to achieve the right svelte and suave effect. Producer Nick Zanoff, whose credits include the "Perry Como Show," insured a slick format, helped by roomy designs from Gary Smith and Michael Grimes, who made striking use of the huge studio area.

Despite the sprightly linking by Johnny Carson, who acted as host, the show allowed the performers to reappear, instead of doing their stint, taking their bows, and making space for the next item. Thus Della Reese launched with an effervescent "Lonesome Road," and later proferred a lilting "You're Nobody" and a bouncy "Long Way from St. Louis." Although billed as a gospel-singer, she didn't include any fervent numbers with a religious flavor. This was probably a mistake, but otherwise her assured phrasing and note-bending delivery impressed.

Negro mimic, George Kirby, scored with a convincing set of impersonations. His chief item was a party hosted by Cary Grant, at which Kirby faithfully copied the mannerisms of Ella Fitzgerald, Nat "King" Cole, Ray Charles, et al. He was joined by Della Reese in a clutch of duets, with Kirby getting under the skin of Bing, Satchmo, and Pearl Bailey. It was a fine display of vocal gymnastics, the only cloud being that he needed to brush up on the brilliancy of his mouth-trumpet.

Barrie Chase terped fluently in one of those chi-chi and intense routines designed to set the romantic mood, the theme being "Moon River." More impactful was her black-tighted modernist outing later in the program which was more rhythmic and thus less vague in intention.

The Oranim Zabar Trio also clicked with a couple of zesty and folksy numbers, one derived from Belafonte. The gal who leads the troup, Geula Gill, was a good visual reward in herself, and she had a lusty voice to boot. She was excitingly backed by drummer and accordionist, and the segment sparkled.

The emcee chore was handled deftly by Johnny Carson, who had an agreeable quota of gags which might have included a few new ones to advantage. But he was generally a fine choice for these proceedings, which were aided by his offhand and throwaway approach. He brought plaudits with his offbeat interviews, including one with a guy on a trampoline, whilst they were both upping-and-downing.

As the sole British name associated with the show, Peter Knight waved the flag with smooth backing from his orchestra, and terpers occasionally twirled to Joan Weston's orders.

The show was thus an exhilarating sendoff to a datemaking series. Patriots, however, might object that one or two British acts might have International status, too.

THE SAINT
(The Talented Husband)
With Roger Moore, Derek Farr, Shirley Eaton, Patricia Roc, George Roderick, Donald Churchill, Norman Mitchell, John Kelland, Howard Douglas, Clemence Bettany
Director: Michael Truman
Producers: Robert S. Baker, Monty Berman
Writer: John Sanders
57 Mins., Sun., 7:28 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Leslie Charteris's fictional clue-hunter has a ready-made following, and the tv series has been made with his cooperation. It came up with a highly entertaining opener, with an ingenious plot and a flow of speedy incident. Maybe Roger Moore is miles wide of the original "Saint" conception, but this would only worry the accuracy-sticklers; in all other respects, he conveyed the reckless charm proficiently. In this segment, he had little to do, but this will be remedied later. And it was a mistake to leave viewers guessing about his exact purpose in life. Admittedly, this is pretty nebulous, but some explanation wouldn't have been amiss.

Plot involved the intention of John Clarron (Derek Farr) to murder his rich wife, Madge (Patricia Roc), for her money. He was an unsuccessful stage producer, two of whose wives had met sudden death previously. The Saint was joined by a nubile insurance-assessor, Adrienne (Shirley Eaton), to prevent a third corpse.

Clarron had hired an Irish housekeeper without references, when he'd injured his wife by dropping a stone vase on her from a great height, claiming an accident. His diabolical plan was to go to London for the day, establishing an alibi, and feed the ailing wife rat-poison instead of stew. The housekeeper bought the poison, and then seemed to disappear.

But Clarron had been impersonating her all the time, in wig, false nose, and long skirt. He intended to blame the invented housekeeper for the crime by rigging a robbery.

When he returned to survey his handiwork, Madge pretended to be dead, and the Saint caught him in the act. It was an attention-getting situation, and the polished direction by Michael Truman gave it the right atmosphere of slick conviction.

Apart from the charm of Roger Moore, which looked like it might become insidious, there was first-rate support from Derek Farr, who carried off the female impersonation confusingly (despite being dubbed with a feminine voice), the comely, tight-slacked Shirley Eaton, and a welcome comeback for movie actress Patricia Roc. The tale had a British setting, but not stiff-jointedly so, and the production values were lustrous and well-upholstered.

THRESHOLD
With Henry Fairlie, Norman St. John Stevas, Dr. Gray Walter Producer: Michael Westmore
25 Mins., Sun., 5:40 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

An important and intriguing idea lies at the back of this series of six. It is to discuss the moral and social implications of new scientific developments. The initialler was concerned with the uses in surgery of mechanical substitutes for human organs; human genetics and computors are amongst the subjects promised for later segments.

Journalist Henry Fairlie, replacing Arthur Garratt for this one, introduced the subject, and a specialist described a fabricated heart-and-lung machine and commented upon a filmed hole-in-the-heart operation. Were there devices dangerous? Physiologist Dr. Gray Walter opioned that they might be, if not strictly controlled; changes of human personality might be effected and these could be used by sinister forces. Scribe Norman St. John Stevas spoke from the Catholic point of view, stressing that the personality, or the soul, was God-given and should not be tampered with.

There was a slight feeling that the moral objections were being forced to justify the program, for the common-sense view was that using a mechanical kidney could hardly rouse religious strife. But the opener served its speculative purpose well. Fairlie fairly held the reins of argument, and Michael Westmore produced in workmanlike fashion.

A good suspense story punched some new life into "77 Sunset Strip," which preemed Friday (12) night, opening its fifth season on ABC-TV.

Teleplay by Robert C. Dennis appeared above-average for this Warner Bros. series, the return of which had been in doubt when the web was scheduling its '62-'63 season. If future stories are as good as "The Reluctant Spy," skein might be a winner in its slot. Opposition in the 9:30 to 10:30 slot is "Fair Exchange" on CBS-TV and "Don't Call Me Charlie!" and the first half of "Jack Paar" on NBC-TV.

Opener was confined to the adventures of Efrem Zimbalist Jr., top private eye of the series, with regular supporting players—Roger Smith, Edward Byrnes and others—hardly coming into the act. Teleplay had Zimbalist tapped by a femme friend (Lucy Norton) to sleuth the mysterious death of her husband in Vienna.

In the well-trimmed thriller, replete with good type acting, it was discovered that the ill-fated friend had been killed by Soviet agents for doing some voluntary espionage as an American spy. The Dennis teleplay hardly could stand reconstruction. Enough that it held interest, built suspense, and was enacted with flourish and style.

Chana Eden portrayed the "other woman." Simon Scott played the newspaperman with relish. Supporting players—Oscar Beregi, Christopher Dark, Jay Novello, Walter Reed, and others—provided an able assist. Paul Landres direction was taut.

"Where We Stand," a CBS News special located in the regular "CBS Reports" slot, was a stimulating stanza devoted to the examination of some key international problems facing the American people. In the double spotlight were Berlin and Cuba, currently the crucial cold war battlegrounds between the Soviets and the West. Exploring the issues were a group of CBS correspondents from Moscow, London, Paris, Latin America, Washington and Berlin who were brought together into a global roundtable by an ingenious linkage of audio lines and videotape. Eric Sevaried moderated the discussion from the New York studios.

This was an hour of straight talk without a single film clip, map, chart or other device rung in as a visual prop. The clarity and vigor of the adlibbed comments by the correspondents and Sevaried's adroit direction of the discussion along a central line completely vindicated the all-talk format. This show, incidentally, was also used as the basis for a CBS Radio show later the same night.

A striking feature of the discussion was the unanimity among the correspondents about the necessity for the U. S. to pursue a cautious policy towards Cuba. It was an expert's opinion that ran directly counter to the advocates of an all-out campaign against Castro. Other remarks illuminated the Soviet stresses and strains which are influencing the hot-and-cold Russian tactics with regard to Berlin.

At the windup Sevaried skillfully tied together the main threads of the correspondents' interchange of ideas. It added up to an important contribution to the education of the public about the realities of world politics.

This briney Bilco—which could use a Phil Silvers—is bucking some steep waves in "Hazel" and "Nurses."

Initialer Thursday (11) flinted a few comic sparks, especially through the antics of Tim Conway (off the new Steve Allen show), and if the competition sags, the show may come through in the Nielsen sweepstakes.

Show, however, needs a sharper sense of the ludicious in the scripting than was displayed by Gene Coon's opening yarn. Ernest Borgnine as the Commander of the PT 73 crew, will have to look to his men for the necessary slapstick to keep afloat.

Besides Conway and Joe Flynn (both billed as costars), McHale's regular crew, with what would seem to be considerable comic potential, includes Carl Ballantine, Gary Vinson, Billy Sands, Edson Stroll, Gavin MacLeod, John Wright and Yoshio Yoda (the latter as a rather free-wheeling prisoner of war).

This is hup, two, three on the military front for ABC, what with the two WW II dramatic hours, "Combat" and "The Gallant Men," and that is a brave plunge as far as prime video gets.

COLGATE-PARTICIPATING
CBS-TV (film)

A tricky and swift pace, gained mostly through editing, and lively scoring should be enough to grease this comedy entry through its fourth season on CBS-TV in a new time slot (a move from Monday to Wednesday nights.)

Show caught Wednesday (10) moved along so fast that an inane and improbable plot was gone and no doubt forgotten by many before a viewer really had a chance to think about the deficiencies.

Ray Hemphill as Dobie's Dixie drooling cousin was the focal point in the theft of Dobie's girl friend and the conning of Mr. Gillis into a benefit show just so he could perform like an Elvis. Dwayne Hickman (Dobie) had his usual bright way, but was credulous beyond credulity. Frank Faylen (father) and Dobie's beatnik buddy played by Bob Denver were okay in support.

Dinah Shore showed up Sunday (14) night for the first of her once-monthly NBC-TV performances, and she made it clear she was glad to be back to Sabbath television as it "seems nobody was watching us (Fridays) but the peacock . . and he was turned around backwards." She also made it clear that she was not about to change her gown, even once, in the course of her first 60 minutes for Green Stamps. Then she reprised what evidently was the show she gave in nightclubs this past summer, but the one-woman performance was not the click on tv that it reportedly was in Miami's Eden Roc or Las Vegas' Riviera.

Nervous (her voice gave her away in the opening moments and self-conscious about turning from big production numbers to the virtually unrelieved solo performance, her act lacked intimacy.

The program lagged badly due to the eratic choice of music. One such number was "Without Love" which the star noted was one of Cole Porter's more obscure tunes adding, however, that she couldn't understand why since it was so beautiful. It was hardly beautiful,

Trio

Education, jazz and nostalgia were the component parts of the "Trio" outing on WNDT (N. Y.'s educational tv station) last Wednesday (10). Pegged on what it calls "Three Essays For Today," the series is interesting in concept and offbeat in execution. The sampling caught for appraisal showed that even though the parts can be better than the whole, it ended as a rewarding half-hour for the selective viewer.

Dr. Bergen Evans took over first with an essay entitled "Instant Teaching." It sparkled with occasional wit, but got terribly bogged down in an antic sketch representation which was hammed up by John Carradine and Ronald Holgate, a pair of lammisters from Broadway's "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum."

Whitney Balliett, New Yorker mag jazz critic, and drummer Jo Jones took over the second part of the troika. Balliett was in the coffee-house recitation groove as he developed his "Sound of Drums" theme but Jones saved the segment by sticking to his sticks.

Arthur Kober reminisced about his childhood in the closing portion. Although he didn't seem completely at ease in his reading of "I Remember Trauma," it had lots of charm. Kober ought to take lessons from Groucho Marx on how to work with a cigar-crutch. His manipulating of the heater was somewhat distracting.

Calendar

Lack of glamor in tv stars, the demise of Hollywood's Golden Age, and the present importance of tv to Hollywood were the topics tossed around on CBS-TV's "Calendar" Wed. (10). Participants were Dore Schary, former Metro production chief, columnist Sheilah Graham, and Douglas Fairbanks Jr., along with CBS-TV's Walter Cronkite and Mary Fickett.

Said Schary, speaking of the changes in the motion picture industry: "We've had our ears beaten off by television. Television has taken over the tremendous interest of the American public. There's no doubt about it . . . In order to get them (the public) to see a motion picture the current belief is that you have to spend anywhere from $5,000,000 to $30,000,000 to make a big, rousing epic that will be all things to all men in an effort to fight off the encroachment of television."

There was a divergence of opinion on whether tv has any glamorous stars compared to yesteryear's motion picture industry, or the few remaining stars in pix today.

Columnist, Miss Graham, thought otherwise. Said she: "I think that Hollywood should be retitled Television City. There are 91 television series being made now, this week, as against, about 18 films in Hollywood. There are another 18 films being made abroad. They don't have time to build up the television stars. You can hardly talk to them. On the set, you know, they're in and out. It's taken the place of the old "B" pictures, and nobody built up the "B" stars before. They're just not glamorous. They don't have time to do daring, wicked things . . . And also the sponsor wouldn't like it. So they have to lead very circumspect lives."

Douglas Fairbanks Jr. was asked at one point to compare his father's days of stardom, apropos of glamorous living, to that of his own days when he was busy acting in Hollywood.

Fairbanks replied: "Well, in his day there was a concentration of a few very outstanding stars who owned their own companies, their own setups and the silent films gave an added remoteness and glamor which was impossible when talkies came in. But as I was about to say, this question (of stars) has cropped up several times in the history of the motion picture business and I remember a time before when they said 'What's happened to the star system?' that had gone out. Then one particular company, MGM, made it a policy to make the stars come back again. This question of what's happened to stars and glamor has come and gone like a cycle, like gangster pictures and westerns."

The lady was sitting enjoying her lunch at a Los Angeles outdoor restaurant when smoke began to billow from a nearby office building. "Fire! Call Channel 5!" she sputtered through a mouthful of chicken salad. ! But there was no need. KTLA's Telecopter and Telemobile already were on their way to the scene. Within minutes, regular programming on Channel 5 had been swept aside for live coverage of the blaze from the air and the ground. ! The lady hadn't told the Channel 5 News crew anything it didn't already know. But what was meaningful about her reaction was that she, like so many Southern Californians, no longer think of news or their city's welfare without automatically thinking of Channel 5. ! There's no wonder: Twenty-four minutes after the start of the Bel-Air fire, worst in the history of Southern California, KTLA's Telecopter-Telemobile remote broadcast phenomenon was at the scene with live coverage that lasted seventeen hours. ! It was the same with the Beachwood Canyon flood. The Hollywood Hills fire. The first Vandenburg Missile firing. The Democratic Convention. The death of two Los Angeles newspapers. The visit of Nikita Khrushchev to Los Angeles. The Santa Fe Railroad disaster. The Pacoima air collision. The Kathy Fiscus tragedy. Ad infinitum. ! That's why in Los Angeles, Police and Fire Departments, in warning people to stay away from disaster areas, tell them to go home and watch it on Channel 5. ! That's why the Mayor of Los Angeles wrote to Station Vice-President and General Manager, Stretch Adler following the Hollywood Hills fire: "I stationed myself before the television and used your report as my official contact as to what was happening. ! That's why when the Southern California Radio and Television News Association handed out ten awards for excellence in Television News Coverage the night of October 4, six went to KTLA, more than had been won by a television station in a single year in the history of the Association. ! Whether you're seeking news, or sponsoring it, experience shows it pays to turn to KTLA, Paramount Television Productions, Inc. Represented Nationally by Peters, Griffin, Woodward, Inc.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week four different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

News War In Berlin Tunnel

airing its 90-minute tunnel documentary. Eberhard Weyrauch, one of the many engineering students involved, was quoted as saying that the West German Embassy in D.C. tried to talk NBC out of airing the stanza, which NBC will show Oct. 31.

Weyrauch also said that he did not know the three organizers had received money and that the program had been produced without the approval of the other 17.

NBC News has maintained that none but one of these 17 diggers would appear on the documentary and that the one, along with the three original men, had given his express approval. Also, of the 59 escapees, who came out through the tunnel in September, NBC would only show the faces of those who gave express permission. The final point NBC made is that the tunnel was flooded nearly a month ago and is completely unusable to anyone. Hence, pictures shown on tv would not "in the least" hurt the safety of anyone involved in the tunnel or the chances of any future escapees.

Dozens of tunnels have been dug under the Wall. One of the tunnel diggers, Time magazine has recorded, is called "Fat Boy," a former butcher and one of Berlin's more disreputable characters who charged escapees using routes he had prepared. CBS correspondent Schorr, the network admits, did his original negotiating with "Fat Boy," possibly then being unaware of the man's reputation.

The three young men, who started the 450-foot escape tunnel through which the 59 East Berliners escaped, reportedly received under $8,000, made in several payments by NBC. This gave NBC exclusive rights to the film story, which began in June and ended in September. What the three (including identified students Domenico Sesta and Luigi Spina) did with the money, NBC says it does not know, and, more particularly, does not want to know.

NBC pointed out the boys were already constructing their tunnel under one of Berlin's busiest border streets when the web got wind of the project. When NBC sought permission to do some filming, the network was soon asked for money, it explained. NBC executives carefully stated last week that they did not volunteer the money and that before they gave it high authority within the network sweated over the problem before payment was greenlighted.

PORT'S KGWA A BEACON THROUGH BIG BLOW

Portland, Oct. 16.

Governor Mark Hatfield lauded KGW for its outstanding role during last Friday's (12) emergency when this city was hit by smashing winds, which caused havoc and hardships. Another commendation for KGW's service during and after the emergency came from Portland's police traffic chief, Capt. John Pittinger.

KGW-TV's 600 foot steel tower, built to withstand winds in excess of 100 miles per hour, was toppled. In the midst of the havoc, KGW Radio remained on the air, with the exception of one minute lost during the changeover to emergency equipment. Only three stations remained on the air in any form of operation using gasoline powered generators at both studio and the transmitter.

Following the storm, KGW continued to provide emergency information to listeners.

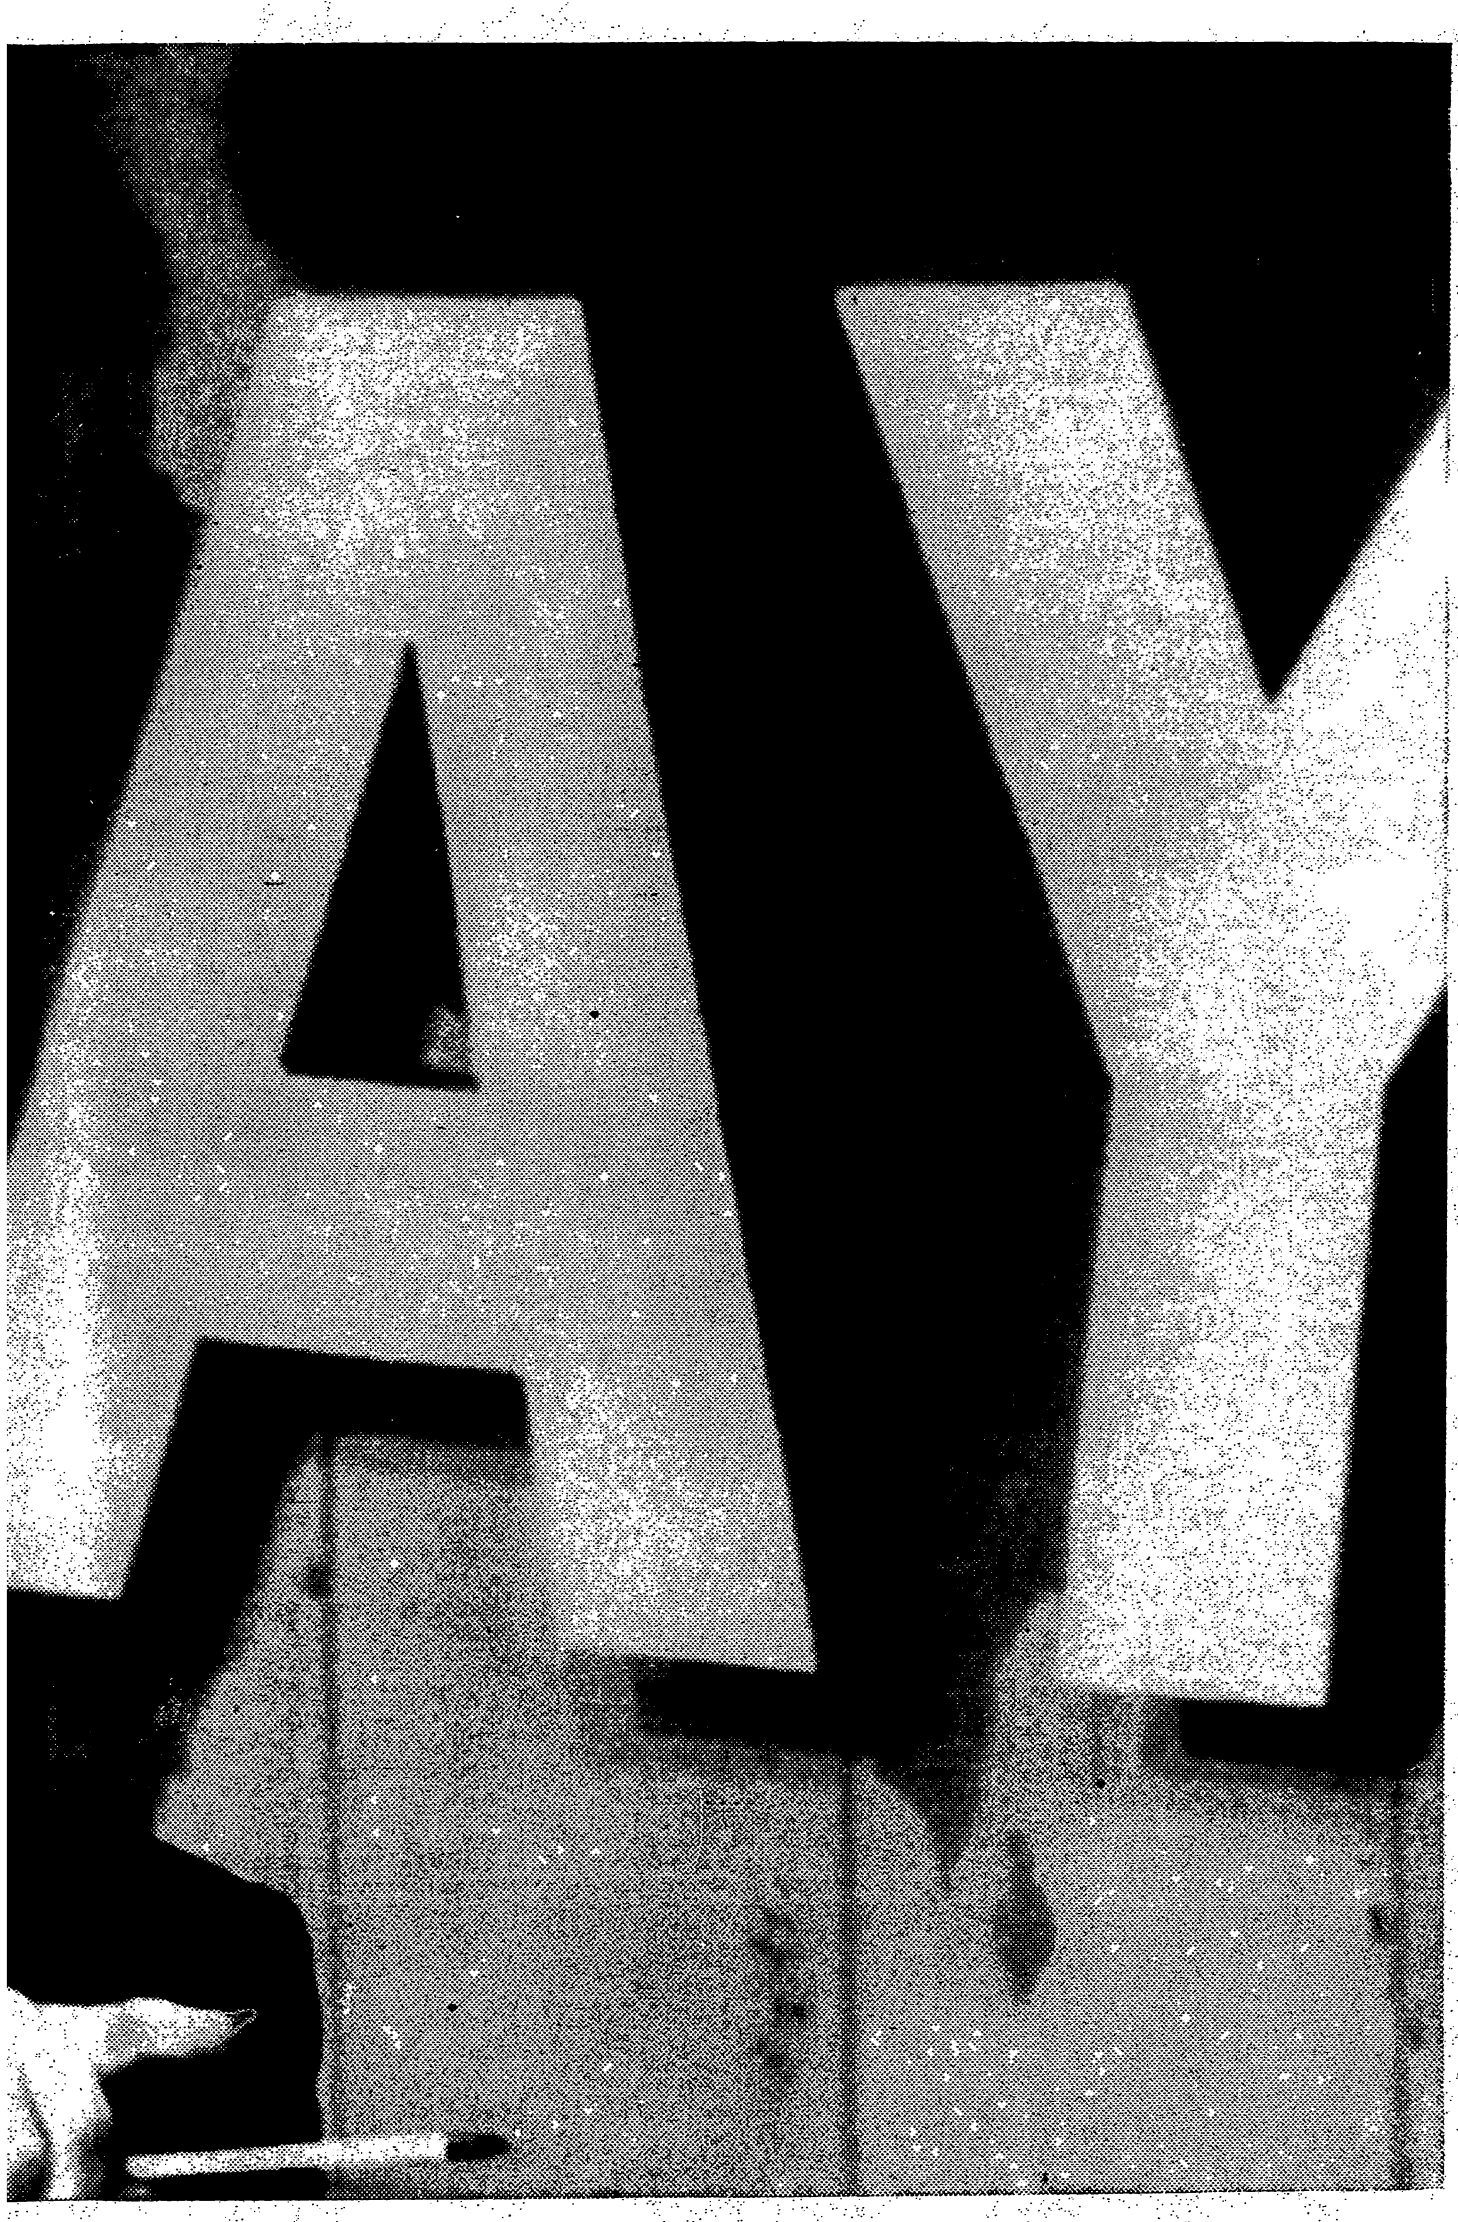
Daily Mail and Sketch Hike Coverage Sharply; Express Still Holds Out

London, Oct. 16.

What is seen as a culminating move in a protracted trend came this week when two national newspapers decided to up their coverage of television news-views. Some circles of the trade consider the moves illustrative of the fact that British newsmen have realised that it is probably better to join tv than fight it.

Papers in question are the Daily Mail, which hikes its coverage from a short daily review column to a tv-page status with two columnists-reviewers and a legman responsible for turning in the copy, and the Daily Sketch which now runs a whole tv page under the aegis of Robert Tee, a w.k. vid journalist.

Daily Herald has also introduced a program column by Jack Piler and is keeping at least one reporter on the networks beat. Daily Mirror, with its formidable team of three jounralist earmarked solely for tv coverage, runs a daily tv page.



Even the austere Times and Telegraph run weekly features on broadcasting while keeping full-time video correspondents for purely news-gathering purposes.

Both sheets present also reviews of what they consider the most important shows of the week. The Guardian is more doubtful of the news value of the visual medium on a day to day basis than its competitors and thusly runs reviews only as a general rule.

Only truly anti-tv paper—and, it should be explained, its wrath is almost solely directed at commercial television — is the Daily Express, one of the few newspapers without some interest in a tv company. But even the latter in the past month has introduced a cric column which heretofore it has shunned.

The cycle, therefore, is now complete with every major national paper carrying regular video features. The medium, it seems, can no longer be ignored.

LUNCHEON AT THE TEN EYCK
With Geoff Davis, others
Producer: Charles L. Murn
30 Mins.; Mon.-Fri., 12:15 p.m.
SARATOGA VICHY
WOKO, Albany

Their luncheon program, the first of its kind in this area originates in the new Golliwog Lounge of the Sheraton-Ten Eyck Hotel with Geoff Davis, WOKO personality and probably the most articulate broadcaster in the Capital District, as host-questioner. Chiefly promotion and public service, Davis has associated himself with a wide range of causes and organizations since he retired from the Yankees' Sports Network, it brings to the mike a mixture of local "names" conventioners and drop-ins.

Occasionally, Davis gets some "bite" into interviews. He did so with Walter Hawver, tv-radio critic of Albany's Knickerbocker News, and to a lesser extent, with former Troy Mayor John J. Purcell. Hawver, outspoken in person as in print, but not as incisive in the former, disapproved of an Albany station's decision to cutback on evening news coverage; raised the possibility that NBC's large investment in "The Virginians" might prove unprofitable; predicted a trend toward longer news shows, in New York and Hollywood, would not reach their vicinity "for a year."

Well-informed on many subjects and alert in discussing them, Davis registered strongly in chats with school teachers about education in the nuclear age on one recent stanza.

Davis works under difficult conditions in roving the intimate lounge. At times, his resonant voice becomes a bit muffled or slides slightly off center. He might shave wordage, skilled though he be in its usage. Commercials are surely handled. Jaco.

Phyllis Diller, Ernie Heckscher Orch (11), $2.50 cover.

Phyllis Diller has come a long way since her break-in days at the Purple Onion in this town and not the least measure of her success is the fact that she is now on the top of Nob Hill, a quarter of a mile straight up from the Purple Onion Cellar.

She is packing the joint and wowing the audience every show with her rapid fire, stand-up, one-liner patter. Gal comics are a rarity anyway and to find one like Miss Diller who can and does grab a house's attention and hold it for a straight 55 minutes out there all by herself is something to see.

She sets up a comic image with her coal scuttle hats, long cigarette holder and fancy gloves and she milks it for all it's worth. Her humor is sharp comment on domestic bliss and the casual social situations between man and wife in the swimming pool, two-car garage suburban set.

It's a solid show and especially good for the current convention crop inundating Frisco this fall.

Ernie Heckscher's orchestra plays for dancing. His only other chore is a straight intro for Miss Diller and a straight closing "thank you" at the end. The rest of the time she's on her own and that's good enough for socko audience response with the laffs coming like waves. This should be one of the room's most successful bookings.

rather it was one of those listless tunes of 20 or 30 years ago, and only proved that even Porter had to miss once in awhile.

The first half-hour was off the pace, yet it was a poor production number that sparked the remainder of the show. The background group called The Even Half Dozen Singers did a novelty routine behind Miss Shore in which one man scratched a balloon, another tinkled keys, a third flicked matches against their cover, one more flaked a comb, another pulled noisily on some masking tape while the remaining man in this outlandish rhythm section played a martini glass. Precious as all this was, it helped lower the barrier between Miss Shore and her audience, both live and at home.

The final numbers including "Song of Love," "I Get Along Without You Very Well" and "Motherless Child" had a good touch to them.

Confronted with a fairly immobile star, who's used to normally working in panoramic production numbers, director Dean Whitmore had to substitute camera motion, some of which was quite good, especially those semi-dark shots over the heads of the studio audience. Art.

HY GARDNER SHOW
With Pierre Salinger, Marilyn Gardner
Producer: Gardner
Director: Ralph Giffen
60 Mins., Sun., 7 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WOR-TV (tape)

Hy Gardner, after a false start, actually got off Sunday (14) on WOR-TV with a prestigious one-man package, presidential secretary Pierre Salinger. Gardner, the thrice-weekly columnist for the N.Y. Herald Tribune, has been conducting this interview session for several seasons and is still to make up his mind whether he wants to entertain or inform. In his present state, he is trying to do both, which seems a good idea, for frequently, the subject matter of an expert, articulately stated, can be not only entertaining, but engrossing.

For this occasion, Gardner and Salinger were seated on rockers, which apparently made the atmosphere more relaxing. Initially, Gardner started off with frothy subject matter, and toward the end whipped into more important matters which enabled Salinger to provide a partial picture of his job. Salinger theorized that in this free democracy where public opinion isn't controlled, and where the President is freely criticized, the chief executive should also be able to lash out at his critics. There were some other valuable highlights in the interview such as the arrangements that have to be made for presidential trips and the cancellation of the White House subscription to Gardner's newspaper, the N.Y. Herald Tribune. Salinger emphasized the right to read what you want. Gardner gifted him with a year's subscription to the Trib.

Gardner never really probed his subject in depth, but was more content to skim the surface. He frequently intruded his own personality into the interview, never being one to shyly retire in the background and let the entire spotlight fall on the subject. Thus Gardner seemed to be after entertainment rather than edification and on a Sunday night, after the air had been heavy with serious matters, this was the dessert.

Per usual Mrs. Gardner, Marilyn, did the commercials tastefully. Jose.

EXPLORING
With Dr. Albert R. Hibbs
Producer: Craig Fisher
Director: Lynwood King
Writer: Edward W. Walsh
60 Mins.; Sat., 12:30 p.m.
NBC-TV from N.Y.

NBC-TV, as its response to FCC chief Newton Minow's call for better children's programming, is contributing an outstanding hour-long show in this direction. Produced with intelligence, taste and attentiveness to the needs of its audience, this series indicates the potential of commercial tv as an instrument for stimulating young viewers. Parents also can recommend this show to their children without fearing that they will be subjected to any high-pressure salesmanship. On the preem (13), at least only public service announcement were used.

The first show sustained a high level of interest. It ranged from the reading of a story from the Greek classics, accompanied by excellent illustrations, through a study of the cello, the origins of counting, and various types of shelter to an analysis of meteorites. In each case, imaginative illustrative material helped to drive home the instructive point.

As host, Dr. Albert E. Hibbs impressed as an appealing personality, capable of speaking forthrightly to children with a lucid, unpatronizing style. The show, however, appears to be aiming at a somewhat over-extended age group, covering youngsters from five to 11. The older children may have understood the chemical analysis of the meteorite, but it was a complete mystery to the younger ones. This, however, is one of the unavoidable hazards in slanting a tv show at a broad children's audience. Herm.

DIALOGUE
(Aces 'N' Spads)
With Brian O'Doherty, Arch Whitehouse, Douglas Campbell, George Vaughan Producer: Carl Peterson
Director: Dan Peters
30 Mins., Sun. (14), 4 p.m.
WNBC-TV, N. Y. (tape)

Formerly an every-fourth-Monday entry, this appealing pubaffairs stanza from NBC's New York flagship occupies a regular Sunday berth for this season, again with sometime art critic and jack-of-all-interests Brian O'Doherty as conferencier.

Series, as before, is geared as a topical grab-bag, with Sunday's (14) initialer an offbeater offering some aeronautic nostalgia, circa World War I. On hand were three combat air aces—Arch Whitehouse, Douglas Campbell and George Vaughan. Also, some interesting film footage affording glimpses of several varieties of vintage combat planes, shots of guns and bombs being mounted, and sequences of probably the two most celebrated aces of that war, Eddie Rickenbacker and Baron von Richtofen. (The Spad of the "Aces 'N' Spads" in the stanza's title referred to a famous fighter plane of the time.)

Much of the talk dealt with early combat strategy aloft, the limitations of gunners' maneuverability, etc. Of at least equal interest, responses of the guests tended to deflate some popular misconceptions about early air combat and the great names it produced. Gainsaid to a man was the romantic notion of courtesy and sportsmanship — there having been much less of it in those days than most fictive accounts suggest. As one of the guests put it, "In my case, I shot at everything—because they shot at me."

Also spiked was the idea that the early air aces were invariably great pilots. In most cases, it was stated, the top names achieved their status more because of outstanding marksmanship than because of exceptional flying ability.

An engaging session, withal, and one that reaffirmed O'Doherty's willingness as host to listen. Series appears to be a bright contender locally for Sabbath matinee attention. Pit.

PERSPECTIVE ON GREATNESS
With Ed Begley, narrator
Producer - Director - Writer: Jay Raeben
60 Mins.: Tues., 9:30
PARTICIPATING
WOR-TV, N. Y. (film)

WOR-TV's "Perspective on Greatness" series teed off last Tuesday (9) with a one-hour biography of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower. Ed Begley narrated the show from a script by Jay Raeben, who also directed the assembly of various film clips from "Ike's" career and produced the outing.

It was an interesting panorama of events and people in the news from the European campaign of World War II, through two terms of Presidential office and into the present. Several crises and triumphs in Ike's multi-faceted life were depicted and the films used to display this career were well-chosen.

Raeben's script seemed often to be over-sentimental and too generous in spots, particularly his handling of the U-2 spy plane incident in which the writer skipped the early denial of the spy charges and went directly into Eisenhower's "we don't want another Pearl Harbor" statement. He was constantly pictured as a valiant hero and even an eloquent man at times. Scenes covered military campaigns such as D Day, European liberation and Korea. Both political conventions of 1952 and 1956 were glimpsed as were the campaigns involving Adlai Stevenson and meetings with world leaders at the Summit and Camp David.

Richard Nixon was praised for his v.p. work during Ike's illness, scenes of which were also shown. His world tour during his second term and other shots were also featured in this often-dramatic and always kind portrait. A line near the end of the show stated that it's "too soon, as history runs, to measure Ike's success as a President." This show made him seem one of the best.

It was nonetheless an arresting portrait of a man who has served the U. S in the most demanding jobs and at the most demanding times in American history. It was smoothly and strongly produced and Begley's narration was sure and effective. "Prospectives on Greatness" dwell on the title's aspect of a particular career and maybe rightly so in an age when public heros are in the vast minority. Kali.

REMEMBER THAT SONG
With Bob Carroll, Patty Clark, Imperial Four, Main East Township Majorettes, Hal Kartun Orch
Producer: Jim McGinn
Director: Phil Lombardo
30 Mins., Tues., 6:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WBBM-TV, Chicago (tape)

A noble attempt at a local prime time entertainment show has gone amiss despite the considerable talents of Bob Carroll and Patty Clark and the generally fine production values. "Remember That Song" is endowed with everything but a concept.

Apparently someone at WBBM-TV feared for prospects of a free-and-easy songfest in the 6:30 p.m. family period and spoiled the broth by adding the ingredients of a game show. What has resulted is neither a good game show nor a satisfactory musicale but rather a schizophrenic thing that undulates from classiness to crassness, from low-pressure intimacy to a pushy c'mon-let's-shear-it-out there prompting of the studio audience. It just doesn't add up to a program with a real identity.

The vocal and video skills of Carroll and Miss Clark make the hapless format all the more regrettable. Both good-looking, accomplished warblers with comfortable camera presence, they seem a promising pairing for the kind of personality chemistry that succeeds in television. But neither is able to project a personality that rings true because of the script. The demands are particularly weighty on Carroll who trebles as host, songster and quizmaster.

It's clear that the show has to go one way or the other, and in view of the appointments—Ken Ponte's terrific penthouse set, for instance, whose luxurious effect is negated by a studio audience huddled together uncomfortably on metal folding chairs — it would seem most advisable to drop the quiz hokum and let it become a straight song session. That should make for palatable programming in the dinner hour and would seem an appropriate teeoff for the CBS Tuesday night lineup that has Skelton, Benny and Garry Moore on tap an hour later. Les.

SCIENCE AGE
With Edgar Grisewood, others Producer: Ralph Rourke
Director: Jay Miller
30 Mins., Sun. 12:30
PARTICIPATING
WNBC-TV, N.Y.

Educational and informational shows are a regular part of the Sunday tv habit and a new one called "Science Age" bowed last Sunday (14) on WNBC-TV. Difference here is that this one is aimed at the younger generation and seems geared to not only the education of the viewers but also the stimulation of their interest in science.

The half-hour is produced in association with N. Y. U. and is hosted by Edgar Grisewood, a professor at that institution. The opening seg was built around the workings and uses of those mammoth computers. Grisewood addressed himself to high school students and had as his guest various secondary school pupils, among them a young man from junior high who had designed and built his own computer.

Also on hand were other NYU profs who covered various different aspects of math and science as applied to the machines. There was some sloppiness in the presentation of some examples, especially one which involved the use of a gizmo that walks up walls when someone pulls the string. But there wasn't more of this than is usually part of any classroom experiment so it can be chalked up to lack of experience in planning for tv. Some of the profs seemed a bit jittery too.

Several concepts flew a bit fast for the average high schooler, but then the guest studes weren't exactly average. More likely, the home viewers got a bit lost. In addition to blackboard examples, a film clip of NYU's setup was also shown with some students at the controls.

Jay Miller directed the show in well-plotted fashion. "Science Age"

bits as misses, the latter, however, being very wide of the mark. For its comeback, the running time has been halved and just one item included. This destroyed its magazine character, but otherwise satisfied.

Two London drama critics, Kenneth Tynan and Milton Shulman, had doubted whether the American quartet in the revue, "The Premise," really improvized their stuff on the night. They were asked along to the studio, with a live audience, to face the cast and settle the matter.

Bearded Theodore Flicker did most of the thesp talking, and amusingly discussed the germ of the revue's brief sketches. On-the-spot inventions of place, character, and circumstance were deftly illustrated by the team, and Flicker showed him a blackout line, coming on the spur of the moment, was the cue for one of the cast to press a button and cut the lights.

Tynan, who had already recanted his first disbelief, thought that the team worked to a premeditated end, and Shulman contended that the result wasn't as droll as if it had been scripted anyway. Both scribes threw imaginary situations to the team as a final test.

Result was a funny show, with added interest from the challenge. The spontaneous feeling was nicely sustained in Reginald Collin's direction of Lloyd Shirley's production, and Leonard Maguire hosted unobtrusively. Otta.

GHOST SQUAD
With Donald Wolfit, Michael Quinn, Ewen Solon, Joyce Blair, John Welsh, Angela Browne, Martin Miller, Glyn Houston, Neil Hallett, Edward Cast, Bernard Hunter
Producer: Connery Chappell
Director: Don Sharp
Writer: Robert Holmes
60 Mins., Sun., 10:35 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Having made a good showing in the ratings last fall, this series was removed from the schedules in midpassage. It has now returned in the same format as before, with London backgrounds rather than its earlier world-ranging venues. After the first four segments—which were made last year with the previous cast—Donald Wolfit, as the "Ghost Squad" chief, and Angela Browne, as his assistant, were dropped.

This opener concerned the theft of a vital neutron-bomb ingredient from a scientific establishment by by a fake clergyman. It was to be sent behind the Iron Curtain in a pair of ballet-shoes intended for a ballerina in Warsaw. Nick Graig (Michael Quinn), hero of the skein, was put on the scent and tracked the radioactive stuff to Warsaw, saving it in the nick of time.

Robert Holmes' script was actionful, and, as before, the story was swiftly deployed, so that there was no time to ask questions. Michael Quinn was competent rather than exciting as Craig, and the gimmick of making him a man of many disguises was fortunately dropped in this one. Donald Wolfit barked sternly as the boss, but was otherwise irrelevant, and good support came from Ewen Solon and Joyce Blair.

CALL OXBRIDGE 2000
With Godfrey Quigley, Jessie Evans, Geoffrey Frederick, Aileen Britton, Jennifer Kennedy, Philip Anthony, Hilda Braid, George Little, Joy Stewart, Susan Temple, Richard Scott
Producer: Philip Dale
Writer: Diana Morgan
45 Mins., Sun., 3:45 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

This series began by taking a familiar medical regular from the "Emergency—Ward 10" skein, and building its tales around him. The emphasis was on the work of the general practitioner, rather than hospital cut-and-thrust, and thus lacked inherent excitement.

Its return was a pallid affair. All the main thesps had changed, and continuity was disrupted. Chief medicos were Dr. Bennett (Godfrey Quigley), a grouch with a heart of gold, and his young assistant (Geoffrey Frederick), who seemed to put his foot in it. Dr. Hamilton, the youngster, refused to allow Len Martin (Philip Anthony) to return to work, because his lung had not cleared up after pneumonia. But if Martin didn't show up, he was going to be fired by his nasty brother-in-law.

Martin's wife was caught in the act of stealing a certificate from the surgery by old Dr. Bennett, who decided to issue one. He thought the risk worth taking, but Dr. Hamilton was angry at being countermanded. It was sorted out with new mutual understanding.

Diana Morgan, an experienced hand at this sort of thing, turned in an efficient script, with true-to-surgery-life detail. But the plight of Martin seemed so contrived that it hardly caused a trauma. Thus it was just a run-of-the-mill effort, straight out of the stockpile, and Philip Dale's production safely delivered it. Otta.

Foreign TV Followup

Armchair Theatre

Much publicity heralded Robert Muller's "Afternoon of a Nymph," chosen to inaugurate the fall season for ABC-TV's "Armchair Theatre" series. It was the subject of a recently published book about tv playmaking, and writer Muller, novelist and former drama critic, had once run in to legal difficulties over his book, "Cinderella Nightingale," on a similar theme.

Said topic was the show-biz ratrace, and it depicted a day in the life of a starlet. Elaine (Janet Munro), comely daughter of a working-class, uncomprehending mother, had dreams of stardom, rather than of self-expression through acting. Booked to make a commercial whose cynical script butchered "Romeo & Juliet" to sell chocolates, Elaine hustled through a gallery of hangers-on. There was the evil young aristocrat, who decorated his parties with starlets for the use of the guests. There was the agent whose recipe for success was that Elaine should be "seen around." There was the publicity man whose sole use for her was to drape a fashion client's dress around her. And, most important, there was David Simpson (Ian Hendry), directing the commercial and claiming integrity as a means of getting the gals to bed.

Against this background, the plot suggested a crisis for Elaine. Should she settle for her unseen and unglamorous boy friend? Or should she shed her doubts and become a life member of the bed-and-booze club? Her final choice was to do just that.

Trouble with the script was that Muller cleverly and sharply drew the background, with crisp and witty dialog, but he couldn't win much sympathy for Elaine. Her predicament never seemed a real one, mainly because her ambitions seemed so tawdry.

But the framework was exact and constantly beguiling, rising to a fine pitch of heartlessness at a party where all the show-biz fringe-figures were assembled. It was also helped by Philip Saville's superb direction, which fully captured the hectic atmosphere with telling use of a mobile camera. A set of jaundiced cameos was supplied by a fine bunch of thesps, including Peter Butterworth as the flack, Aubrey Morris as a hairdresser, Patrick Holt as the agent and Jeremy Lloyd as the fish-eyed aristo. Janet Munro clicked as the bemused girl, taking a short cut to moral disaster, although she was somewhat hampered by the script's ambiguity. Ian Hendry, too, was effective as the wolf with the intellectual approach, but the character would have benefited from more definition.

"Afternoon of a Nymph" made a notable drama entry, but, in the last resort, it appealed more to the head than the emotions. Otta.

Sunday Night at the Palladium

Another well-balanced bill made a satisfying hour of this "Sunday Night at the Palladium" from Associated TeleVision. The topper was Frank Ifield, whose pipes have a touch of the yodel and whose "I Remember You" has dented the charts on both sides of the Atlantic. He produced an acceptable and varied clutch of ditties, including "Sunshine Square" and "Lovesick Blues," which nicely switched the mood. He also went completely Swiss with a mountainy up-and-downer to guitar accompaniment. His presentation was jerky, but fluency may come in time.

America's piano duettists, Ferrante & Teicher, turned out the lush stuff, bowing in with "West Side Story," sharing a single keyboard for "El Cubanchero," and going out with their royalty-spinning version of the "Exodus" theme. Ferrante did a little amiable linking, and the item pleased.

But for those who are content to listen to their disks, the show's highspot was the American comedian Roger Price, who was provided with some novel and witty gags and helped them out with his "droodles" and an artfully harassed manner. He clicked with an offering that quickly went in to top gear and never throttled down.

The acrobatic Amin Brothers gave a swift and exhilarating send-off to the show, and Norman Vaughan emceed with his usual confidence, which the material occasionally made misplaced. The other trimmings were as usual, with Jack Parnell striking a richer-than-usual sound from his orchestra and the resident terpers whirling with elan. "Beat the Clock" as well. Otta.

Claman Exits CBS

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Producer Julius Claman has requested and received release from his contract with CBS-TV, and returned to his home in N.Y.

Claman wanted out for personal reasons, to be with his family in the east, a web exec said. The producer's final assignment here had been developing "The Giant Step," a Garson Kanin-created series, for the 1963-64 season.

YOUTH FORUM
With Dorothy Gordon, others; Willy Brandt guest
Producer: Miss Gordon
30 Mins., Sun., noon
WNBC-TV, N.Y. (tape)

Prompted by highschool or college youngsters, who don't know the meaning of fear or political timidity, high officials tend to reveal more of themselves and of the truth than they might in the hands of diffident political reporters. This was true in the days of Ted Granik's "Youth Wants To Know" and it is as true as ever in the case of Dorothy Gordon's "Youth Forum," which began its new WNBC-TV season on Sunday (14).

"Forum" is arranged so that college students can frame questions within the context of their own convictions. And on Sunday, when West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt was guest, four collegians (MIT, Brandeis, Harvard and Boston U. were represented) forced him into a lively debate on solutions to the Berlin crisis. He did not say anything that seemed new or novel, but he was pursued so vigorously, yet politely, by the student panel that he had to make good answers and he did.

The hostess has a knack for choosing smart, informed kids to do the job, but she occasionally intrudes her anxious personality where it doesn't belong; she is too prominently there when she might better serve herself and her program by playing it more sotto voce.

The taped opening show was prepared in Boston by the educational station WGBH-TV. There was some faulty technical work along the line as the tape was jumpy. Art.

BEHIND LOCKED DOORS
("Dateline Chicago")
With Charles McCuen, narrator; others
Exec Producer: Frank Jordan
Producer-Writer: Bob Lissit
Director: Tony Verdi
30 Mins., Mon. 9:30 p.m.
HOME FEDERAL
WNBQ, Chicago (film)

Documentaries, which are a mania in Chicago television these days, usually introduce or examine a problem area, but WNBQ offered one last Monday (15) that was strictly on the light and puffy side and quite digestible. While it was in no way consequential, the film report made for a reasonably diverting feature story on the phenomenon of key clubs in Chicago, the city which mothered the trend.

The survey was a bit superficial, but it sufficed for a story that doesn't really merit deeper treatment. It hinged on the irony of people paying money for the privilege of spending more, and Bob Lissit's script, which played it pretty straight, might have been better with more tongue-in-cheek.

If the picture story accomplished nothing else, it must at least have satisfied the curiosity of those homebodies who perhaps have wondered what goes on behind the locked doors of the poshy "members only" joints. Taking the film at its word, not much goes on besides an expensive delirium, and many a non-belonger must have been comforted in the realization that he ain't missing much.

The cameras poked into the Gaslight Club, the Chinese Key Club, the original Key Club (which predated the trend by some 30 years), the suburban Black Sheep Club now a-building, a number of members-only eateries and, climatically, the Playboy Club, most successful of them all. Script pointed out that while the waitresses and dancers might titillate, the key clubs aren't wicked, sinful or immoral but that they satisfy a certain adolescent tendency in adults.

Charles McCuen did well by the narration and provided a few droll moments in the footage as the object of a twist dancer's affections (his wife sitting safely beside).

Charles' 'Vol. II,' Mathis' 'Rapture,' Darin's 'Look,' 'Swagmen' Top LPs

RAY CHARLES: "MODERN SOUNDS IN COUNTRY AND WESTERN MUSIC, VOL. II" (ABC-Paramount). A sure click followup to his first "Modern Sounds In Country and Western Music." this Ray Charles platter follows the same formula with the same arrangers and similar material as the prototype. Difference here is that one side is all Gerlad Wilson arrangements with the Charles band and the Raelets and the other side is all Marty Paich arrangements with strings and the Jack Halloran Singers. On the first LP they were assembled up on both sides. While gives Charles a more driving sound on such as "You Are My Sunshine," "Don't Tell Me Your Troubles" and "Oh Lonesome Me," Paich puts his winning touch to what seems like a sure shot in "Your Cheating Heart" and others like "Take The Chains From My Heart," "Making Believe," "Hang Your Head In Shame" and others.

JOHNNY MATHIS: "RAPTURE" (Columbia). Johnny Mathis plays up his soft and smooth vocal styling in this wrapup of romantic songs. With Don Costa on hand for the arranging and conducting chores, the blending of music and voice is lush and pretty. The tasty programmer should find plenty here to fill their spinning time. Among the goodies are "My Darling, My Darling," "Stella By Starlight," "Here I'll Stay" and "Stars Fell On Alabama." A color portrait of the singer on the jacket cover and a wallet-size duplicate should help lure the young femme fans.

BOBBY DARIN: "OH! LOOK AT ME NOW" (Capitol). This is Bobby Darin's first album for Capitol since the shift from his Atco home and it should ring up a good sales score. Capitol doesn't yet have a Sinatra substitute in its hopper but until one comes along, if ever, Darin may suffice. He has a strong swinging vocal beat on the uptempo numbers and a pleasing mellow sound on the softer ballad items. Billy May has arranged the backings in big band style but it never takes the spotlight away from Darin. He's solid enough here to hold it on his own. The title song, "The Party's Over," "I'm Beginning To See The Light," "All By Myself" and "A Nightingale Sang In Berkely Square" could get the pullout play.

THE SWAGMEN: "MEET THE SWAGMEN" (Parkway). Although there are a flock of folk groups continually scoring in the disk market, there apparently is always room for one more. So, make room for The Swagmen. Here is a bright young male quartet in a debut disking that is sure to win over the folk-faddists. Their style is clean and precise, and they give their repertoire a vocal vitality that's effective and winning. "I Was Born In East Virginia," "Mountain Gal," "Old King Cole" and "Jessie James," are some of the rounds that will help make them popular.

"TEN GREAT BANDS" (RCA Victor). The diskery has once again gone into its seemingly bottomless well of old masters for this lavish project. It's a five-record boxed set containing 10 bands and 60 performances. Although the sides don't always represent the best of the orchsters' works, they do have a nostalgic appeal that will attract collectors especially at the "limited offer" rate of $12.95. (After the first of the year, the tab goes up to $19.95. The bands taken for this new spinning round belong to Louis Armstrong, Count Basie, Larry Clinton, Tommy Dorsey, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman, Lionel Hampton, Hal Kemp, Glenn Miller and Artie Shaw.

STANLEY HOLLOWAY-ALMA COGAN: "OLIVER" (Capitol). Although this British-made version of Lionel Bart's "Oliver" lacks the vital "original Broadway cast album" lure, it has properties strong enough to win a good sales run on its own. Biggest attraction perhaps is Stanley Holloway, who's quite well known to the disk audience via his showcase in the "My Fair Lady" package. His readings of the Fagin songs are quite special and completely winning. Alma Cogan also gets off a good shot with the show's big ballad, "As Long As He Needs Me." Denis Waterman is a little too high-pitched in the title role but his "Where Is Love" comes off okay despite it. Tony Osborne's orch gives the package a musical dash that's highly attractive.

JIMMY DEAN: "PORTRAIT OF JIMMY DEAN" (Columbia). This is another of Columbia's "portrait" packages that have done so well for Johnny Mathis and for George Maharis on Col's Epic subsid. The "suitable for framing" photo of Dean is an attractive lure but there's good stuff in the grooves to support it. Previous hits like "PT 109" and "Steel Men" are included but so is his current single release ("Little Black Book" and "Please Pass The Biscuits") as well as several other likable items.

PETE FOUNTAIN: "LET THE GOOD TIMES ROLL" (Coral). Pete Fountain rolls out some hot, swinging stuff here that should sustain his strong sales pace in the album market. His sharp clarinet lead dominates the proceedings but the overall sound, coming from a group of topnotch sidemen, is quite exciting. The standards in the songbag are neatly delineated and "Let The Good Times Roll" is good enough to emerge as a single click.

KEELY SMITH: "WHAT KIND OF FOOL AM I" (Dot). Keely Smith turns to a set of ballads in her latest LP effort. She impresses solidly, putting considerable warmth and feeling into her work and coming up with a fine platter. She leads off with a specialty arrangement of the multi-recorded "What Kind Of Fool Am I" under an interpretation called "What Kind Of Fool Is He." This registers well and could make a splash for her as a single. Other tunes are from the standard ballad bag and all are treated with the same solid quality. Among them are "Fly Me To the Moon," "But Not For Me," "Don't Blame Me," "If I Should Love You" and "But Beautiful."

SHIRLEY BOOTH: "DOROTHY PARKER STORIES" (Caedmon). Some of Dorothy Parker's most popular works are given an effective "spoken word workover" by Shirley Booth. Miss Booth's recitations give voice to the writer's sharp and bitter-sweet attitude making it a listening delight. "A Telephone Call," "The Lady With The Lamp" and "The Waltz" are fine examples of the Parker-Booth tandem.

BING CROSBY: "HOLIDAY IN EUROPE" (Decca). In an indie master deal with Project Records, Bing Crosby comes under the Decca banner once again. The package peg is a global song roundup which has Crosby working his way through such entries as "Under Paris Skies," "Morgen," "Never On Sunday" and "Domenica." It's flavorsome and pleasing.

CHARLES AZNAVOUR: "THE TIME IS NOW" (Mercury). One of France's top singer - cleffers, Charles Aznavour should start to build a faithful following in the U.S. market via this package. Although his forte is francais, his songbag, for the most part, is in English here but the cliche "they lose something in translation" doesn't seem to fit. The story-songs like "The Boss Is Dead" and "You've Got To Learn" have lots of dramatic impact.

"ALL NIGHT LONG" (Epic). This is a sountrack album with a solid jazz orientation. The music written for "All Night Long," a British film, is the collaborative handiwork of Dave Brubeck, Johnny Dankworth, Phil Green and Johnny Scott. Most of it has an exciting flair that rides eagerly across the grooves. Along with some top British tootlers like Dankworth, Scott and Tubby Hayes, a Yankee contingent headed by Brubeck and Charlie Mingus, the music comes vividly alive.

THE RAFTSMEN: "DOWN IN THE VALLEY" (RCA Victor). This folk-song item was sliced in RCA Victor's Montreal shop. In it, The Raftsmen sing softly through a dozen easy-going tunes. They tee off with "Red River Valley," close with title tune and chant between with velvet tones, a collection of commercial-tinged but restful songs, some Latino. Backing is handled by the threesome on guitar, banjo, drums. Raftsmen are Marvin Burke, Martin Overland, Louis Leroux.

JULIE LONDON: "LOVE ON THE ROCKS" (Liberty). Long a fave purveyor of the torchy ballad, Julie London adds another fine array in this genre with this set. The typical foggy London style is here in lush force, creating a soft mood with her expressive treatments. She gives such songs as "Guess Who I Saw Today," "How Did He Look," "What's New," "End Of a Love Affair" and "Cottage For Sale" her clicko touch for sure effect. It's one of Miss London's best sessions.

BARBARA DANE: "WHEN I WAS YOUNG GIRL" (Horizon). This is a fine folk album by Barbara Dane who has a rich, earthy voice that projects a strong feeling for her material. She mixes up the tempo of her selections, and, punctuated by a right sense of dramatics, renders her material in spirited, yet controlled style. Among her tunes are "Nine Hundred Miles," "Ramblin'," "Girl of Constant Sorrow," "Greensleeves," "Turkey Reveille" and others.

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

PAUL ANKA . . . . . ESO BESO
(RCA Victor) . . . . . Give Me Back My Heart

Paul Anka's "Eso Beso (That Kiss)" (Flanka) is a sharply styled Latin ballad with a nifty lyric which this performer belts with potent commercial impact. "Give Me Back My Heart" (Spanka†) is a good, uptempo slice with a community-sing flavor to give it chances.*

B.B. KING . . . . . MOTHER'S LOVE
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Tomorrow Night

B. B. King's "Mother's Love" (Prentice) is an allout sentimental paean to the "mom complex" in an excellent performance by this singer. Could do for mothers what "I Believe" did for religion. "Tomorrow Night" (Bourne*) gets the type of workover which will catch the teenagers' ears.*

BEN E. KING . . . . . I'M STANDING BY (Atco) . . . . . Walking In The Footsteps Of A Fool

Ben E. King's "I'm Standing By" (Kags†) is a big rocking ballad delivered in standout style by this fine blues singer. "Walking In The Foodsteps Of A Fool" (Aldon†) is another strong entry for the juke set.

BURL IVES . . . . . MARY ANN REGRETS
(Decca) . . . . . How Do You Fall Out of Love

Burl Ives' "Mary Ann Regrets" (Pamper†) is a charming folk-styled number delivered with this veteran's trademarked style with strong choral support. "How Do You Fall Out of Love" (Ark-La-Tex†) is a conventional ballad more suitable for juve pipes.

GLEN CAMPBELL . . . . . LONG BLACK LIMOUSINE
(Capitol) . . . . . Here I Am

Glen Campbell's "Long Black Limousine" (American†) is one of those macabre death tales which periodically crop up as smashes. This is a standout sample of the genre and could mop up in the ghoul market. "Here I Am" (American†) is another good side by this impressive country singer.

TOMMY EDWARDS . . . . . TONIGHT I WONT BE THERE
(MGM) . . . . . Please Don't Tell Me

Tommy Edwards' "Tonight I Won't Be There" (Paxton) shapes up as an attractive ballad with a teen-slanted lyric angle which should put this singer back into bestseller contention. "Please Don't Tell Me" (Selma†) is a good slow-tempoed ballad.*

GARY (U.S.) BONDS . . . . . I DIG THIS STATION
(LeGrand) . . . . . Mixed Up Faculty

Gary (U.S.) Bonds' "I Dig This Station" (Masters†) is one of those frantic-sounding rockers which the teenagers who like 'em noisy go for. "Mixed Up Faculty" (Masters†) is more of the same.

CHARLIE RICH . . . . . FINALLY FOUND OUT
(Philips) . . . . . Sittin' and Thinkin'

Charlie Rich's "Finally Found Out" (Hi Lo†) is a powerful rocking slice featuring this sassy performer on a solid number in this idiom. "Sittin' and Thinkin'" (Knox†) is a routine entry.

ELLA FITZGERALD . . . . . DESAFINADO
(Verve) . . . . . Stardust

Ella Fitzgerald's "Desafinado" (Hollis†) joins the bossa nova cycle with a slick version of this number which has been hitting as an instrumental. "Stardust" (Mill's) is still another bossa nova entry with a tricky rhythmic variation on this classic.*

PETULA CLARK . . . . . THE ROAD
(Laurie) . . . . . Jumble Sale

Petula Clark's "The Road" (Just†) is a striking, uptempo inspirational song which this songstress belts all the way home in stirring style. "Jumble Sale" (Essex) is a more routine slice.*

PHIL HARRIS . . . . . RUN RED RUN
(Reprise) . . . . . Old Man Time

Phil Harris' "Run Red Run" (Tiger†) is a clever piece of rhythm material tailored for this veteran performer who bows on the Reprise label with a well-produced side. "Old Man Time" (Miller) is another fine side with a nostalgic quality of yesteryear's music biz.*

BILLY VAUGHN . . . . . SOMEONE
(Dot) . . . . . Blue Flame

Billy Vaughn's "Someone" (Roosevelt†) is a large-scaled instrumental with a lush melodic motif which this orch dishes up very sweetly. "Blue Flame" (Charlingo) changes pace with some jazz themes arranged a la Ellington.

ROBERT MERSEY . . . . . KOOKABURRA
(Columbia) . . . . . Rain On The Roof

Robert Mersey's "Kookaburra" (Gil†) impresses as an exotic-sounding instrumental with enough way-out sounds to draw attention. "Rain On The Roof" (Famous) is a nifty slice of the oldie which is due to get a new round of spins via this orchestral workover.*

MICHAEL ALLEN . . . . . A BOY WITH A DREAM
(Mercury) . . . . . She Don't Need You Like I Do

Michael Allen's "A Boy With A Dream" (Vanadore†) registers as a fresh-sounding ballad with a folk flavor in the contemporary groove. Could be very big. "She Don't Need You Like I Do" (Raleigh†) is another highly appealing side rating across-the-board attention.

THE BEAU-MARKS . . . . . THE TENDER YEARS
(Rust) . . . . . I'll Never Be The Same

The Beau-Marks' "The Tender Years" (BMI Canada†) has already worked its way along the Canadian circuit for good payoff and its big ballad mood, backed by soft rocking touches, give it strong chances for a U. S. takeover, too. "I'll Never Be The Same" BMI Canada†) dishes out some nice ballad sounds that rate occasional play. Herm.

DISKERIES HIT YULE GROOVE

Chicago, Oct. 16.

James C. Petrillo last week escaped unscathed from the first organized attack on his power as prexy of Local 10 of the American Federation of Musicians in 30 years. At an annual meeting, a rump group calling itself the Chicago Musicians for Union Democracy, sought to cut Petrillo's salary from $500 to $350 a week and to make certain changes in the bylaws. The resolutions were reportedly defeated by a ratio of 5 to 1 at a meeting attended by 1,000 members.

The CMUD arose out of a group that successfully squelched a proposal at last year's meeting to give Petrillo a $25,000 a year lifetime pension. They were active in insisting that a committee of players sit in on the just-concluded negotiations between Local 10 and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. The talks became so bitter that the orchestra season was barely saved from cancellation. The dissidents number about 250.

The resolutions introduced by the CMUD (and subsequently defeated) included a proposal to place the coming November elections under jurisdiction of the Loyola U. school of industrial relations and to provide voting machines for balloting. They also asked for raises for members of the union board and for representatives to the national convention of the union.

A member said that Petrillo replied to the barrage of proposals with an impassioned speech in which he said that "for the good of the union we should leave things as they are." Local 10 is the wealthiest union local in the country, with more than $4,000,000 in its treasury.

Disks Cash in on Wider O'seas Market, Expanding Youth Interest: Dave Kapp

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

"Major markets for recordings are developing abroad," according to Kapp Records prexy Dave Kapp, who also pointed out that "songs are getting better and youth interest has expanded to give the business a much bigger field."

Kapp, here for session on Roger Williams' 31st album for the label, revealed his company is now going heavily into the youth field instead of concentrating on the consistent releases in the pop class area for which it had earlier been known.

Kapp has signed newcomers Paul Evans, Babs Tino and The Swans, essentially due to success company had recently with the newly-inked Jack Jones and the Chad Mitchell Trio.

Exec said the reason for going into the youth market, aside from its obvious commercial value, is "because songwriters are now writing better songs to fit an age field that is expanding." Earlier, he asserted, "juve field top was in 16 to 18-year bracket.

"Today," Kapp emphasized, "it has gone into 10, 12, 14-year-olds. Songs now being written are for areas that hit all of these groups and good writers like Burt Bacharach and Bob Hillard are now able to write for the youth field and still maintain their usual top quality styles."

European sales are a big factor, particularly in England, according to Kapp. He revealed Jane Morgan's "The Day the Rains Came," considered a big hit here, sold 400,000 copies in England alone and added that "it was larger there than here." In France, however, he noted, "it is unusual for American singers to sell although instrumentals are strong." He called Japan a top market for jazz, and asserted that "revenue from abroad today runs equal to U.S. business."

Williams' new album comprises mostly folk and country tunes. It used 42 musicians and was in the $12,000 production cost bracket.

Aubrey Mayhew Exits As Parker Label Exec

Aubrey Mayhew is exiting his post as v.p. and music director of Parker Records, which he founded with Doris Parker, widow of Charlie Parker. Mayhew has no immediate plans and there is no indication as to his successor.

Mayhew has been with the company three years and headed all phases of production, sales and recording. Before leaving the company, he announced six new LPs for the fall program. The line is distributed internationally by MGM Records.

AGMA to Hear Singer's Appeal At Special Meet

The American Guild of Musical Artists will hold a special national convention at the Governor Clinton Hotel, N.Y., Dec. 1-2 to hear the appeal of Antonietta Stella who was suspended from AGMA for a year after a hearing on a charge by the Metropolitan Opera Company that she had broken her contract with the company.

Mme. Stella's case developed during the 1960 season when the singer was excused by the Met from a commitment to it after she claimed to be in ill health and presented a doctor's certificate to that effect. Two weeks later, however, she sang an opera in La Scala and the Metopera management felt they had not been dealt with honestly. The AGMA ruling came in 1962 after a complaint was lodged by the Opera. The singer has been appealing ever since.

AGMA's constitution provides that any member who has been disciplined by action of its board of governors has the right to appeal the action at the next AGMA convention. The union's convention structure has been amended several times in the course of its history. One such amendment provides that conventions can be called by the board or upon petition of a reasonable number of members. Under this amendment, the board has called this convention to study Mme. Stella's appeal.

The convention will also review the union's activities since the last conclave and take up other matters. Among the latter will be the celebration of AGMA's 25th anni, which will be observed at a Dec. 2 cocktail party.

The board of governors has appointed a special convention committee chaired by Betty Stone.

KROLL 4 TOURS O'SEAS; 24 CONCERTS, 28 DAYS

Kroll Quartet is currently on tour in Europe via Thea Dispeker management. Chamber group will play 24 concerts in 28 days.

Itinerary: Berlin Festwochen, German Radio, Bremen, Cologne, Frankfurt, Hamburg, Essen, Geneva, Munich, Stuttgart, Freiberg, Oslo, Bergen, London, plus recording sessions for the British Broadcasting Co.

'Lord Buckley' Disk Bows Elektra's New Crestview

Jac Holzman has added a subsid label to his Elektra Records. It's called Crestview and will be marketed at a price slightly lower than the parent's scale.

First release under the new imprint will be "The Best of Lord Buckley," the comedian who died last year. The tapes were acquired from Jim Dickson of Vaya Records. The platter will contain some of Buckley's top bits, all done in the comic's hip-talking style.

MAJORS STUFFING SANTA'S STOCKING

By EDDIE KALISH

Don't look now, but it's Christmas time again. Disk company thinking varies on just how to approach the new selling season, what with an album having become less and less a gift item due to loss of prestige that discounting has brought and other disk market factors which have made the production of seasonal LPs less attractive in recent years.

Nonetheless, some of the majors are pouring on the product while most of the smaller outfits prefer to sit tight and offer special programs on what they have or other non-holiday new releases.

One thing's sure. The growing legion of country & western music fans will have a white Christmas indeed, at least if RCA Victor and Decca have their say. Victor has three new Xmas c&w platters and Decca has two. Victor's entries include "Christmas with Eddie Arnold," "A Nashville Christmas Party," which includes performances by a host of such sagebrushers as Chet Atkins, Arnold, Hank Locklin, Floyd Kramer and others, and "Jimmy Blackwood & the Blackwood Bros. Combine with Howie Lister and the Statesmen to Wish You a Musical Merry Christmas."

Decca's country Xmas entries comprise "A Country Christmas," a collection of holiday tunes done country style by Ernest Tubb, Kitty Welles, Webb Pierce and Red Foley, and a set called "Christmas Day With Kitty Welles." Other new Decca LPs include performances by Fred Waring, Lawrence Welk, the Texas Boys' Choir and the New York Pro Musica.

The label, which has always stressed the Yuletide season, has catalog material for release by Bing Crosby ("Merry Christmas" is probably the all-time holiday sales winner), Werner Muller, Burl Ives, Leroy Anderson, Victor Young, Guy Lombardo and some spoken word sets featuring Ronald Colman, Charles Laughton, Loretta Young and Gregory Peck.

New from Victor will be a Red Seal waxing by Marion Anderson and a set by Dick Leibert on the Radio City Musical Organ. On Camden there are Xmas LPs by the Living Voices and Leo Addeo conducting. Victor also has some holiday four-track stereo tape releases and catalog material by Mario Lanza, Robert Shaw Chorale, Arthur Fiedler & the Boston Pops, Perry Como, Elvis Presley, Harry Belafonte and the Three Suns, among 10 sets on Victor and six on Camden.

Columbia has eight new Christmas releases this year, including six popular and jazz disks and two Masterworks LPs. Mahalia Jackson has her first Xmas release in the group as does Doris Day. Ray Conniff & the Ray Conniff Singers are also represented as is Anita Bryant. "Jingle Bell Jazz" is an interesting inclusion for Col. featuring seasonal tunes dressed up for jazz by such as Dave Brubeck,

U.S. Corruption of Bossa Nova May Kill Original Beat, Brazilian Pub Fears

The danger signals are up in bossa nova-land. The enemy is the Brill Bldg., citadel of Gotham music biz.

The new beat, which has been sweeping through the jazz and pop fields, may be run into the ground before it has a chance to develop if the Brill Bldg. and or Tin Pan Alley get a chance to take a firmer hold. That's the opinion being voiced by many tradesters who look upon the issue as a battle between Brazil and the Brill Bldg. —or authentic bossa nova vs. distorted bossa nova.

The main concern of such industryites as Enrique Lebendiger, Brazilian publisher in New York looking after his bossa nova copyrights, is that the gringos are hopping on the bandwagon of "the new musical wave" with imitations and corruptions of the bossa nova beat that will kill the original. Trite pop songs are being written in the old samba style and being peddled as bossa nova, he pointed out, and those songs can only hurt the authentic material.

Also downgrading bossa nova is an offshoot like "Soul Bossa Nova" and talk of entries like "Country Bossa Nova" and "The Bossa Nova Twist." What bothers Lebendiger is the Yankee lack of respect for the Brazilian product. "When the Twist came to Brazil," he said, "we didn't try to fashion it along our lines and come up with something called a 'Brazilian Twist.' It was an American beat and we kept it that way."

Sees Great Future

Lebendiger predicts a great future for bossa nova in the U.S. if it doesn't get over-commercialized and distorted. He has a wealth of material ready for exposure here and in Europe. His trip to New York was preceded by a visit to Europe, where he says the bossa nova is beginning to catch on, especially in France and Italy.

Right now, he's working with Duke Niles, head of Paris Music, on the buildup of his "Recado" tune. The instrumental version is already out on the Colpix label with a Zoot Sims workover, and Johnny Mercer is preparing a lyric to the melody which Niles expects to be showing around the disk circuit later this week.

According to Lebendiger, there are two kinds of bossa nova now coming out of Brazil: the poetic style and the quick-rhythm style. Writers in the poetic groove are Antonio C. Jobim, Billy Blanco, Vinicius De Moraes, Denis Bren and Tito Madi. Cleffers in the quick-rhythm school are Djalma Ferreira, Luiz Antonio, Miguel Gustavo and Walter Santos.

Most of these writers, he says, have been influenced by the American jazz and rock 'n' roll rhythms that have trickled down to Brazil in the past decade. "The music is returning home, now," he notes, "but in a different form."

Julie Chester Exits Music Biz to Join Shurr Agency

Julie Chester, longtime music man, has segued into the agency business. He joined the Louis Shurr outfit Monday (15).

Chester will work with Lester Shurr in the uncorking and booking of new talent. In the music field, Chester had been general manager of Bobby Mellin's publishing firms for years. He later joined Eddie Fisher in the operation of Ramrod Records and went on to the premium biz arranging Brylcream and Silverkrin for Connie Francis and Steve Lawrence & Eydie Gorme.

ASCAP Drive Vs. TV Arrears Wins U.S. Court's Help

The American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers obtained court backing last week in its efforts to get overdue payments from tv stations. The Society can ask the court to cancel a tv station's license if it is 60 days behind in payments and doesn't pay up after a month's formal notice from ASCAP.

The license pull was suggested by Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan after ASCAP had complained that 91 tv stations were in arrears at a meeting with the All-Industry TV Stations Music License Commitee. The tv committee will now advise stations about the ASCAP charges and the court-approved procedure. The delinquent stations will get more like a 60-day breathing spell than 30 because the court specified that ASCAP should not send its notices until after Nov. 10.

On another front in the hassle between the tv staions and ASCAP on a new rate schedule, Judge Ryan denied a motion made in early September by CBS to require the Society to put 20% of its receipts from tv into a reserve fund from which it can rebate the broadcasters if they win a rate reduction.

Judge Ryan held that ASCAP was a financially responsible organization and that he doesn't want to pre-judge the question of a reduction or an increase in rates by seeming to anticipate a reduction.

U.K. SYMPH TOOTERS DELAY STRIKE TO DEC.

London, Oct. 16.

Proposed strike by U.K. symphony orchestras (apart from the BBC's) has been postponed from this month to Dec. 1, in order to give the Arts Council time to confer with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Musicians Union has turned down an offer by the Orchestral Employers Assn. upping the tooters fee by $8.40 per week.

Unless the Chancellor is prepared to subsidize the orchestras to a greater degree than hitherto, M. U. feels that the orchs may even cease to exist.

Carlton Makes General Denial in Parker Suit

Carlton Records has filed a general denial of damage and unfair dealing charges brought against it in N.Y. Supreme Court by Parker Records.

Joe Carlton, Carlton Records prexy, asserts that Parker Records' charges are "false and irresponsible." He contends that "we will prove that any damages arising from our legally terminated relations with the Parker people have been suffered by Carlton and not the plaintiffs."

Funny Thing Happens To Col—Gets 'Forum' Orig Caster; Spanish, That Is

Although the original Broadway cast album of "A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum" is out on the Capitol label, Columbia Records may get a crack at the musical in another language.

Plans are now underway for Col to record the Mexico City production of "Forum" which opened in that city Oct. 11 at the Teatro Insurgentes. The tuner is titled in Spanish "Amor Es Al Reves Roma" meaning "Love Spelled Backwards Is Rome". Enrique Guzman is co-starred with Ortiz de Pinedo and Leda Moreno.

The deal on an original Broadway cast album only binds the producer to that particular production and gives him an open field for disk ties with any foreign productions.

Yule Groove

Miles Davis, the Dukes of Dixieland, Duke Ellington, Chico Hamilton, Lionel Hampton, Paul Horn, Lambert, Hendricks & Ross, Carmen McRae and others.

Masterworks sets feature the Philadelphia Orchestra, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy and with the Temple U. Concert Choir, and Saint Saens' "The Carnival of the Animals," with narration by Leonard Bernstein and with the maestro conducting the N. Y. Philharmonic. Col's Epic subsid has a Rita Ford music box Xmas LP plus three catalog items featuring Lester Lanin, the Royal Male Chorus of Holland and the Netherlands Chamber Chorus.

Capitol is adding four Christmas releases to its seasonal catalog this year. They feature performances by the Roger Wagner Chorale, Webley Edwards, Ruth Welcome and the Bielefelder Kinderchor. The company's main emphasis will be on a special catalog program which will apply to 41 Xmas packages in the Capitol and Angel rosters. It features a 12½% discount, an exchange program and deferred billing.

London Records will offer no new Yule material this year but stress instead its classical offerings by Leontyne Price and a newly-created package called "Messiah Excerpts by Joan Sutherland," not to mention its pop fave LP Christmas carols by Mantovani, now in its seventh year.

Likewise nothing new from MGM, which will push seasonal stuff from Connie Francis, David Rose, Joni James and the Ray Charles Singers, plus some repackaged material featuring Lionel Barrymore, Keenan Wynn, Betty Garrett et al., some of which are kiddie items. United Artists has no Christmas material as such but has a Ferrante & Teicher LP called "Snowbound" in that general groove.

ABC-Paramount will have one Yule set on Chancellor called "Frankie Avalon's Christmas Album." It will also push catalog seasonal stuff from Paul Anka, Les Djinns Singers and Hank Sylvern. 20th-Fox Records has put Harry Simeon's "Sing We Now of Christmas" LP together in a double set with an organ and chimes LP in a special Xmas display and is reissuing Simeon's "Little Drummer Boy" single.

Caedmon has nothing new but is advertising extensively for the first time on a co-op basis with dealers and will be plugging Dylan Thomas' "Child's Christmas in Wales" and Ralph Richardson's "Christmas Carol" along with the rest of its catalog.

Riverside Records, which usually doesn't have any special seasonal material, will have an LP called "The 25th Day of December" by the Staple Singers. On its Wonderland kidisk subsid it will issue Dame Edith Evans in a set of stories and carols. Mercury isn't doing anything special but will feature its catalog items.

Such other labels as Cadence and Atlantic don't have any seasonal items set but will have special programs. Command has nothing special either.

Barbra Streisand to Col, Philips Sings Teresa Brewer; Other Deals

Columbia Records has signed legit and nitery thrush Barbra Streisand. She appears on Broadway in "I Can Get It For You Wholesale" and, natch, is on Col's original cast waxing of the show. She is also featured on the diskery's recreation of "Pins and Needles." Her first solo disk outings will be produced later this month by Mike Berniker, pop producer for Columbia.

Philips: Teresa Brewer

Philips Records continues to build a Yank artist roster with the signing of Teresa Brewer. The pop thrush, whose disks have seen action on best seller lists through the years, will cut both albums and singles for her new label with a release due soon.

Laurie: Petula Clark

Laurie Records has inked Petula Clark, European chirp, for waxing in the U.S. and Canada. Her disks are produced in Paris by Vogue Records and she has had chart toppers in both France and England. Laurie, in addition to releasing the thrush's European-recorded singles, is making arrangements for her to come to the U.S. to wax. She will record both LPs and singles for Laurie, her current 45 being "The Road."

Pilot: Danny Williams

Pilot Records has pacted singer Danny Williams. His first release for the label, which recently signed with Mike Ellito's CIRCA for national distribution, is "Tennessee Rose."

'Charlie Was Scared,' Sez Wein Anent Mingus' Gig Fiasco at Town Hall, N.Y.

Charlie Mingus and United Artists Records are off to a nervous start with their new alliance. The diskery sponsored a concert-recording session last Friday (12) at the Town Hall, N.Y., starring the jazz bassist-composer-arranger. It ended up in a shambles with about 100 patrons from the nearly SRO audience asking for, and getting their money back.

Some 30 musicians were assembled for the date, which was to have featured new Mingus composoitions. UA invested close to $20,000 on the gig that was arranged by the diskery's jazz artist & repertoire director, Alan Douglas, with an assist from promotor George Wein who handled such technical aspects as advertising, tickets and publicity.

Several times during the concert, the bassist told the audience that they could get their money back if not satisfied. Some did. Mingus indicated that he was somehow not aware of the date and said the situation was the fault of "a lot of lies and publicity."

Quoth jazz critic John S. Wilson in the N.Y. Times: "Although advertisements announcing Mr. Mingus would give a concert at Town Hall that was to be recorded had been appearing in local papers for several weeks, Mr. Mingus was so unaware of this that he was not prepared to give a concert and barely prepared to conduct a recording session."

The bassist, however, rapped the advance word on the date, telling the audience that he "would hate to have you think that I asked you to come here for something that was not right." The musician and his big band had nonetheless put in 15 hours of paid rehearsal before the date and went so far as to have copyists sitting on stage transposing his unfinished scorings.

"Mingus is a great talent and maybe this thing was just a little too big for him," Wein said Monday (15). "Maybe he needed more time. The music wasn't written. If he had just gone about his business no one would have been upset. It was announced in the paper as a recording session," commented the promoter who has known Mingus for some years.

He was referring to the long pauses between numbers during which Mingus made most of his comments to the audience about getting their money back and the way the show was handled. "Charlie was scared," Wein felt.

Now It's Disks by Wire A La Florists' Service

Taking its cue from retail florists, a new disk service has been formed to enable customers to send gift platters by wire. The outfit is called TeleRecord, with headquarters on the Coast and D. L. Orsatti as prexy.

Under the TeleRecord plan, a customer can go into a disk store which is a member of the plan and place a gift order to be delivered anywhere in the country. It's all done by wire and is similar to the Florists Telegraph Delivery service. An added wrinkle to the TeleRecord plan is that if the recipient doesn't want the disk received, he may select another at a comparable price.

An ad campaign titled, "say it with music with records by wire," will soon start to introduce the service. The drive will stress a visit to the neighborhood disk store and, natch, giftshopping by wire.

Memphis, Oct. 16

Lawrence Welk racked up the heftiest b.o. of the year at the Auditorium last week by scoring a sock $29,500 for a one-nighter. The North Hall, seating 4,500, was sold out two weeks in advance which forced Auditorium officials headed by skipper Chauncey Barbour to open the South Hall.

Welk and his crew worked to two houses at the same time. Auditorium was scaled to $5.50. WHBQ-TV, which airs the Welk show, collaborated on the promotion.

Glen Gray May Re-Group His Casa Loma Band

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

Glen Gray may re-form his band and play live engagements, particularly in the west, the veteran batoneer acknowledged upon arriving here from his New England home to cut a Capitol album. He last had a live-engagement band in 1950. Thereafter he retired, although Cap lured him into a lacquer return in 1956. Since then he has spasmodically touched shellac.

Original Glen Gray Casa Loma Orch was formed in 1929. Over the years it was one of the biggest money-making bands. Accompanied west by his arranger, Larry Wagner, Gray expects his longtime manager, Cork O'Keefe, to arrive this week. If he re-groups for nitery and ballroom dates, Gray will use the sidemen he'll assemble for his Cap waxings here.

King Records Cited In Labor Negotiations

Washington, Oct. 16.

National Labor Relations Board examiner Henry Sahm has recommended King Records Inc., of Cincinnati, be cited for unfair labor practices in refusing to negotiate a contract with the International Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink & Distillery Workers Local 152B.

Sahm found that the company refused to bargain with the union last spring after it had won independence from the Teamsters and sought to negotiate a new wage agreement.

Sahm's recommendations are subject to NLRB review.

PHILIPS' NEW DISTRIBS

Chicago, Oct. 16.

AFM-L.A. Symph Feud Perils New Season's Opening

Hollywood, Oct. 16.

American Federation of Musicians Local 47 and the Southern California Symphony Assn. are feuding again over a contract covering the L. A. Philharmonic Orchestra Assn. manages. The dispute once more is periling the season's start next Monday (22). Last week it appeared that peace had been reached, but the union balked Saturday (13) when the actual contract was presented.

New snag is over a pension plan. Orchestra members voted 74-5 to reject the proffered pact as Local 47 prexy John Tranchitella argued that the contract contained terms which differed from those orally agreed upon. Symphony Assn. reps could not be reached for comment on the matter.

Symph Assn. ponies up $50,000 per year for pension fund to which orch members contribute 2½% of their salaries. The association, Tranchitella reported, netted $89,000 from a recent Danny Kaye-led charity performance for the pension fund, but lost coin on a similar Van Cliburn-Bruno Walter presentation. Agreed upon earlier was a 5% pay tilt for the tooters, who had a scale minimum of $140.

Meantime, if the dispute is not ironed out by Oct. 27 it may place President Kennedy in a difficult position. For the chief executive is scheduled to help dedicate the site of the $25,000,000 Los Angeles Music Center on that date.

With no contract settlement, the tooters will have a picket line around the site when the President arrives. In event he crosses the line it naturally would be considered an affront to organized labor at a crucial time when the fight between incumbent Democratic Gov. Edmund G. Brown and for Vice President Richard M. Nixon is nearing Election Day.

Tranchitella pointed out that he is reluctant, indeed, to place President Kennedy in an embarrassing position.

Old Musicals Never Die, They Just Wind Up as a Col Disk Re-Creation

Columbia Records will continue digging into the American musical theatre's past for disk-re-creations. That's the word passed along at the ASCAP Seminar on the Musical Theatre last week by Col president Goddard Lieberson.

"Recording old musicals is not always commercially successful," Lieberson said, "but we plan to continue doing them because they then become a permanent record of an important event in our theatre's past history." He also noted that the Col productions of "Porgy and Bess," "Pal Joey" and "On Your Toes," furnished the inspiration for Broadway revivals.

On the current Broadway scene, Lieberson admitted to the group at New York's Judson Hall that competition has forced record companies to invest heavily in musicals. But he maintained that this was a development that he was sorry to see happen. "When I first heard the score for 'My Fair Lady'," he said, "I had such confidence in it that I recommended that CBS make a substantial investment. I also felt that way about 'Bye Bye Birdie.' But this was done because I genuinely believed in the talent of the creators of those shows."

Lieberson also pointed out that the art of recording an original

Jack Spina Now Holds Fabian Managerial Reins

Fabian, a rock singer who recently turned more toward film acting, is now under the managerial wing of Jack Spina, who also handles Pat Boone. Fabian was previously managed by Bob Marcucci and waxed for Marcucci's Chancellor Records.

Spina and Boone have a disk production outfit called Agoomagooc (Boone's Coogamooga firm spelled backwords) and Fabian will probably do future platters for this outfit, most likely for distribution on Dot Records. Dot distributes Boone's platters.

Elsewhere on the Dot scene, Henry Onorati has rejoined the label as director of sales for the eastern region. He was a v.p. of the diskery in 1958 when he left to helm 20th Fox Records from which he resigned last year.

JFK Signs Disk Pirate Measure

Washington, Oct. 16.

President Kennedy has signed into law a bill aimed at stopping record piracy. As passed by Congress, the measure imposes a year in prison or a $1,000 fine or both for anyone counterfeiting disk labels.

The House had set the penalties at 10 years and $10,000 or both, but these were lowered by the Senate Judiciary Committee which felt, according to reliable sources, the punishment didn't fit the crime.

Disk industry is said to be losing $20,000,000 a year to record pirates.

Epic Scents Financial Vitamins in Nutrition LP

As part of its buildup program, Epic Records is now spreading its disking activity into the areas of health & beauty and nutrition. Already blueprinted for release next year are albums by health & beauty expert Debbie Drake and nutritionist Dr. Carlton Fredericks. Their first albums will be cut in New York this month.

Miss Drake's album will be produced by Clifford Snyder, of Col's artists & repertoire department, with musical backgrounds by arranger-conductor Noel Regney. It will be devoted to physical health and will include exercises for men and women. Dr. Fredericks' album will be produced by Col. staffer Ernie Altschuler and will be a deluxe package containing booklets with rules on how to reduce and how to apply good rules of nutrition while shopping for food or while dining out.

Sure Touch: 4 Rehearsals Makes Strong New Symph When Stoki Wills It So

By ELMER WIENER

In four rehearsals, Leopold Stokowski has disciplined a new orchestra, the American Symphony, into an excellent ensemble of really first quality. The octogenarian maestro led his newly-assembled instrumentalists in their Carnegie Hall debut Monday night (15) before an enthusiastic packed house, including many notables, and the result, both artistically and financially, was a genuine triumph.

The new ensemble is talented, well-trained and expert in technique. It is for the most part, youthful, but with a liberal sprinkling of seasoned baldish veterans of top reputation. It is democratic in its makeup, as to sex and color of the players. In this, its first appearance anywhere, it was greeted with ovations and there was an air of electrical excitement in Carnegie as if an orchestra of significance had been born.

Concert opened with a little-known opus of Gabrielli, a 16th century composer, written for winds and brasses. Power, brilliance and resonance were present and the expert sidemen, manipulated by the Stokowski hands, displayed fine subtleties in phrasing and dynamics. Bach's great Toccata and Fugue in D minor, a staple of the Stokowski repertoire since his Philadelphia Orchestra days and made familiar to millions through his performance in Walt Disney's "Fantasia," was performed with true virtuosity and flair. Susan Starr, the young soloist of the evening, played Beethoven's first piano concerto, revealing a strong rhythmic sense, a pleasing tone and a grasp of the classical style. A pupil of Rudolf Serkin at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, she was the runnerup at the 1962 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and appears headed for the big-time ranks. The concert closed with a stirring performance of Shostakovich's sixth symphony, in which the musically-gymnastic feats of the new orchestra made a most impressive showing.

What is the future of the American Symphony Orchestra? Stokowski proved he has a magic pulling power and a wonderful ability to weld a new ensemble into a first-rate orchestra. It is a pity he is not 20 or more years younger, not for artistic reasons, but for the good of the orchestra. Who can combine the Stokowski magic, his hold on the public and the ability to attract financial and boxoffice support? Will the New York public buy a performance by a lesser-known leader, with the same orchestra? The economics of 1962 symphonic organizations are a difficult hurdle, but the new Stokowski band is potentially a great one.

Inside Stuff—Music

In commemoration of the late Emmerich Kalman's 80th anniversary, Oct. 24, several German and Austrian radio networks have prepared shows based on his life and music. Suddeutscher Rundfunk in Stutgart produced a show written and narrated by Kalman's son Charles. It will be broadcast on the day of the anniversary. Charles Kalman's suite, "A Day in a Spa," which premiered in Baden Baden on May 26, is now going into publication by Astoria Verlag, Berlin. The suite is set for recording by Radio Vienna and has been recently recorded for the Saarbrucken network. Kalman is due in the U.S. late in October for conferences with his U.S. publisher, Herbert Marks.

Thea Dispeker, whose principal office is in Manhattan, occupies an unusual niche in the concert economics of the 1960's, handling European career build-up for various U.S. performers, often on behalf of the big longhair managements. She is the former general manager of the Little Orchestra (Thomas Scherman) and now executive secretary of the Leavritt Foundation. Finalists in the annual competition of the latter are assured the most practical prize of all—dates with symphony orchestras—and this is part of Miss Dispeker's job.

Best known and most popular lyrics writer in Budapest now is Karoly Koncz whose material is heard over the Hungarian Radio every week, chiefly to Buday Denes music. Koncz has translated most of the popular American and French songs too—specializing in Cole Porter. "Arrivederci Roma" has become a Budapest hit since his translation. Koncz is also working on a novel called "The Nest-Inhabitants" and on a ballet-text, "The Life of the Bees."

Bourne's request for $200-a-week royalty for the paraphrased use of "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf?," from the old 1933 Walt Disney "Three Little Pigs" filmusical, caused the Richard Barr-Clinton Wilder management, producers of Edward Albee's new play, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," to change the basic melody. It's now based on "The Mulberry Bush," a PD, and thus the 200 bucks were saved.

Orch Francaise & Maazel's Baton Set Philharmonic Acoustics Aglow

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

L'Orchestra National Francaise opened Oct. 1 the second week at Philharmonic Hall with a success that would be remarkable for any symphony and rendered dramatic by the conducting of Lorin Maazel. The music dispensed was a marriage of group brilliance and individual virtuosity. Now 32, of American parentage and Los Angeles and Pittsburgh antecedents, Maazel is, not to quibble, one of the most talented human beings now alive. That is true musically, where it counts, but he is also able, as a side-talent, to narrate phonograph recordings in six different languages.

Back during the days of the World's Fair of 1939, Maazel was exhibited as Li'l Loren, a prodigy of fantastic powers of memorization and pitch. But unlike so many of the music prodigies of yesteryear this one has come to giant stature as an adult artist. It was a thing the viewers felt from the first passages of Mendelsohn's "Italian" symphony, on through Stravinsky's "Petrouschka," and then, after the break, in Debussy ("Adres-Midi") and Ravel.

One of the most exciting concerts of its kind in recent seasons the authority of the conductor—and the response of the French ensemble, in which 16 women play—produced ecstatic press notices. These promise sellout appearances in the dozen-odd concerts around the U.S. arranged by the Hurok office in partnership with the French Government.

So great was the enthusiasm manifested by the audience at Philharmonic that Maazel came as close to smiling as he is ever likely to come in public. He is the opposite to extroverted, a young man of austere personality, yet great power to evoke esprit from an orchestra.

The impact of the French visitors created further discussion concerning the acoustics of the Hall. Undoubtedly the new auditorium is strikingly "alive." Many delicacies in the woods, strings, and even the brasses seem to come through with extraordinary color and variety. It denies nothing to the superlative coordination of the choirs in this orchestra, or the amazing interpretive force and discipline of Maazel to attribute some part of the delight to the acoustics. True it must be added that at one point it was almost as if the hall had gone hi-fi too much to one side—a strange sensation which would over-tax attempted description.

Suffice that Philharmonic Hall is now well launched. Leonard Bernstein, Eric Leinsdorf, Eugene Ormandy, George Szell and the Metropolitan Opera group all wove their emblems into the first week memorial tapestry. There were innovations, novelties, narratives-to-music by Adlai Stevenson. But perhaps sheer muiscal pleasure reached its first stunning peak with the one-nighter of the visiting Parisians.

Bach & Shostakovich

Leonard Bernstein could not have chosen a more contrasting program than his Philharmonic bill-of-fare for the concerts of October 11, 12, 13 and 14. There were two works: the sixth Brandenburg Concerto of Johann Sebastian Bach, who died in Leipzig in 1750, and the seventh symphony of Dmitri Shostakovich, now living in Moscow.

The Brandenburg calls for a very small string group; the Shostakovich is scored for a gargantuan ensemble, including winds, eight horns, six trumpets, six trombones, tuba, five tympani, snare drums, bass drum, triangle, tambourine, cymbals, xylophone, two harps, piano and strings. Bach wrote a simple work for a minor German prince, whereas Shostakovich painted an immense musical canvas, depicting for the entire world the heroism and struggles of the Soviet people, invaded by the Nazis in June, 1941, and composed in a patriotic fervor the same year.

Under Bernstein's leadership, the Shostakovich was interpreted in dramatic and eloquent fashion. The lyrical passages were sweet, the work's great climaxes hall-shaking in their intensity. The sound was overpowering. In the Bach, the tone was lean and bright, some of the tempi seemed slow and the work lacked the vigor, zest and sprightly tone it generally commands.

The new Philharmonic Hall still is a controversial structure, as it doubtless will continue to be. One observant distaffer thought the side front panels of the stage resembled wood sample sections in a picture frame shop. Acoustically, the hall on Sunday (14) was most favorable to the woodwind sections. The strings sounded warm and clear, the brasses declaimed brilliantly. The tonal masses of the war-time "Leningrad" symphony almost shattered one's ears, the capacity house rejoiced in excitement. Wien.

SID HERMAN NEW BIZ MGR. AT FAMOUS-PAR

Sidney Herman has succeeded the late Lou Siberling as business manager of Famous and Paramount Music, publishing arms of Paramount Pictures. Ed Wolpin, longtime general professional manager of the music companies, will continue at that post.

Herman's new assignment will be in addition to his present duties as exec assistant to Arthur Israel, firms' veepee-general manager, on Paramount's music interests. Seymour Shultz, who was formerly at the Paramount Cartoon Studio, has joined the Famous-Paramount combine at their New York offices as assistant business manager.

Nashville, Oct. 16.

The Country Music Assn. has come up with a list of 22 names to be voted upon for a place in the Country Music Hall of Fame. The seletions will be made during the second annual National Country Music Week set for Nov. 4-10. The date coincides with WSM's 11th annual Country Music Festival to be held here Nov. 8-10.

Alphabetically the candidates for the Hall of Fame are: Roy Acuff, Eddy Arnold, Chet Atkins, Gene Autry, Rod Brasfield, A. P. Carter, Vernon Dalhart, Jimmie Davis, Red Foley, J. L. Frank, George D. Hay, Johnny Horton, Uncle Dave Macon, Minnie Pearl, Bill Monroe, Ralph Peer, Tex Ritter, Carson Robinson, Steve Sholes, Hank Snow, Ernest Tubb, and Bob Wills.

Last year's initial selection of honorees was limited to deceased country & western contributors. Winners then were Jimmie Rodgers, Fred Rose and Hank Williams. To secure a spot in the Hall of Fame a contender must receive 75% of the votes cast in the "Committee of 100."

The CMA-founded Country Music Hall of Fame is currently housed in the Tennessee State Museum in Nashville.

Old Musicals

cast album is more than merely taking singers and the pit orchestra out of the theatre and putting them in a recording studio. "We must always bear in mind," Lieberson said, "that we are creating an aural production, one that people listen to in privacy and intimacy of their own homes. Many of the arrangements have to be changed slightly because of this, including augmenting the pit orchestra with strings. We do, however, always strive to create as much of a theatrical atmosphere as possible by using stereo movement and including bits of aural business."

Burrows on Musicals

Librettist-director Abe Burrows held the rostrum at the ASCAP Seminar the week previous and offered, "A musical must be a musical. When I work on a new show, my main thought is, 'How are you going to sing this show?' Most people believe that a musical is a play with music added. Music should be used not as addenda, but to express the basic, underlying emotion of the show. All the great emotional moments should be done musically."

He emphasized that a musical must be a complete collaboration between the book writer and the songwriter. "Intergration," he said, "is nothing more than unity of feeling. Songs don't really advance the plot unless you got someone to sing something like 'I am going downtown now.' In a show like 'The Threepenny Opera,' which is a great musical, there is an integration of spirit. The songs have nothing to do with the story, but they fit."

Burrows rejected the notion that the libretto is all-important in musical comedy today. "It's the music that distinguishes this form of entertainment from the straight play. But it is important for the success of the show that the musical numbers be placed properly. One particularly important spot for a song is the opening of the second act. A strong number after the intermission can really turn a good show into a smash hit."

ROBBINS · FELTMAN · MILLER The Big 3

Hotel Plaza, N.Y.

Georgia Gibbs (with Warner Shilkret), Emil Coleman and Mark Monte orchs; $3-$4 cover.

The Persian Room of the Hotel Plaza is essaying a departure and, for all its divergence, veepee-g.m. Paul Sonnabend has pulled a nifty. Song belters are unusual for the posh Persian which is more given to sleek songsters like Katyna Ranieri, who premed the new season, Robert Goulet and Shirley Bassey (returnees) who follow. Or high stylists of songbirds like Marguerite Piazza, Lisa Kirk, Hildegarde and the like.

But "Her Nibs" Miss Gibbs gave the opening night a dissertation in seasoned song salesmanship which was undeniable as she mixed up her pops and musicomedy excerpts. Paradox is that her "golden records" are of the ilk of "Tweedlee Dee" and "Kiss of Fire" but in actuality her current salon cycle comprises more solid duties such as "Today I Love Everybody," "What Kind of a Fool Am I?", "Never On Sunday" (in Italian), "Porgy and Bess" medley, a novelty treatment of "Ballin' The Jack," "Gonna Build a Mountain" (another like "Fool," out of the current "Stop The World"), an Israeli rhythm number (sounded more Turkish with its cymbals treatment), "Every Street's a Boulevard," an old Berlin standard (as a salute to his upcoming "Mr. President"), then the "golden record" duo, and finaleing with "Rockabye Baby."

Handicapped by a bad back (which she didn't mention, because she doesn't need "sympathy" rapport) Miss Gibbs made capital of a recalcitrant mike—"you worry about your gowns, your arrangements, when you play the Persian Room, but who can anticipate this?"). When on intro of the Israeli number some busboy made with the clattering dishes her alert ad lib, "There must be an Arab in the house!", was such a spontaneous topical natural that she could almost retain it in the "script." The Israeli Ambassador to UN and his wife were at the Frank Gervasi-Eric Sevareid table, and the number was dedicated to him. When maitre d'hotel John Fossatti came to her rescue with that trick mike she ad libbed, "New Act—Georgia & John."

Miss Gibbs knows her way around songs and songwriters and in blending this debut at the Plaza—also the first time in five years at a midtown spot — she made strong professional and b.o. impact.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, Oct. 5.

Billy Daniels, Carole Jason, Clifford Guest, Bill Alexander Orch (7); $2 cover.

That trip to Europe did Billy Daniels a world of good. He opened the Chi Chi Starlite room for the 1962-63 season and it was the old black magic all the way. He has sung in this nitery many times in the last 20 years but never with such range, charm and variety as this time around. He brought out a near-capacity crowd in a resort which is still half asleep from summer heat, and got such applause he had to confess that it made him feel particularly good because he had just become a grandfather.

Though he gives the diners many old faves, he also gives them something as new as today's dew point. That was "What Kind Of Fool Am I?" from Anthony Newley's "Stop The World, I Want To Get Off." He caught the show last March in London, hands it a five-star rave and then sings his favorite number from the musical.

His timing is so perfect that only hours after the Giants beat the Yankees he was singing "When I Come Home To San Francisco." He even tries out a few notes of the Billie Sol Estes theme song, "Into each Life a Little Grain Must Fall."

But his renditions of "Second Time Around," "She's My Kind of Girl" "You're Nobody Till Somebody Loves You," and even old smoothies like "Danny Boy" and "My Yiddish Mama" show a Daniels come to judgment and the judgment is great. He does 90 superb minutes and finishes, of course, on "Black Magic" with his pianist of 16 years, Benny Paine, adding his hot stuff to the finale. It leaves the house with the delightful feeling that here is the swingingest grandpa of all time.

Bill opens with a cute and svelte tap dancer, Carole Jason, who wears a brief green and gold costume and goes behind the screen to change to a short black nightie to sing and dance "Sleepy Time Gal." The change is hardly worth it.

Miss Jason is followed by Clifford Guest, Australian ventriloquist, who does a great act with a crying baby and a loaded and recalcitrant dummy who looks like an Aussie cousin of Charlie McCarthy.

Bill Alexander, back for his 9th season, supports the acts in his usual competent manner. Sael.

Sahara Inn, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 10.

Tony Martin (with Tony Martin Singers), Allen Drake, Frank York Orch; 3.50 cover.

Put together Tony Martin, an able quartet, Frank York's fine house band augmented to 18 pieces, and some of the better arrangements around the nitery circuit and you've got the kind of show that's bound to please the customers. If opening night customer attendance and response in the Club Gigi is an indication, Martin is in for a hot fortnight at the Sahara Inn.

Martin's vocal range was somewhat hampered by the after effects of a cold, but the ringsiders were with him all the way. His showmanship, with its Harry Richman hue, is so smooth as to be timeless, where in other hands it might appear dated. Singer's songalog includes "Once In A Lifetime," "Best Things In Life Are Free," "What Kind of Fool Am I," "Shalom" and a bora-styled version of "Milk and Honey."

Although used mostly for extra dimension, Martin's quartet is a firstrate asset to the act. A member of the Foursome, Elaine Tavano, an attractive redhead, also does a nifty solo on "I've Never Been In Love Before." Pianist-musical director Joe Castro adds a neat jazz touch in a "Honeysuckle Rose" solo.

Curtainraiser Allen Drake is a diligent and generally on-target comic. He scores best with his stories of Las Vegas gambling, an impression of a teenager borrowing his father's car circa 1940 and 1963, and a r&r "Teenager's Lament."

Ella Fitzgerald opens Oct. 25. Mor.

Sugar Hill, S.F.

San Francisco, Oct. 9.

Carmen McRae, Norman Simmons Trio; $1 admission, two-drink minimum.

Now deep in its involvment with jazz, this club is beginning to make a local rep as a place for solid jazz offerings. The current bill has singer Carmen McRae in excellent voice backed by the supple and swinging work of the Norman Simmons Trio. It's a first class show.

Miss McRae now is in superb voice. She has qualities no other contemporary singer has. In the first place she's a dramatic actress and makes each song she does, from "Love for Sale" to "What Kind of Fool Am I" into a short playlet. She is aided by beautiful stage presence, a remarkably evocative face and canny use of her hands and shoulders in gestures.

To her other assets she has added intuitive gifts of phrasing of the first rank, and a musical singing concept that puts her in the top echelon of singers. She handles a crowd with masterful control and is especially good in the show tune, sweet-sad ballad category. She has wit and quality of sardonic humor that could be exploited in a musical comedy.

Miss McRae is now ready for any of the top rooms for vocalists where she could build steadily into a major league boxoffice draw. Her audiences are invariably enthusiastic.

The Norman Simmons Trio (Simmons, piano; Walter Perkins, drums, and Victor Sproles, bass) gives her sock accompaniment. In addition they furnish a fine, lightly swinging and entertaining set before the singer comes on stage. The drummer, Walter Perkins, is a show in himself. Raje.

Sammy Davis Jr., Pat Henry, Dick Stabile Orch (18); $3-$3.50 cover plus $3 minimum.

A score and 13 years ago, Sammy Davis Jr. was brought forth on the stage by his father and uncle, Will Mastin. On the occasion of his 33rd anniversary, young Davis' performance leaves no doubt he is the top talent today on a nightclub floor. The world will little note nor long remember the minor flaws in his opening night at the Cocoanut Grove.

As Davis admits, his show's the same—with only a different side-of-stage entrance. However, since his last appearance Davis has added his hit "What Kind Of Fool Am I," in an opening which was over-frantic, loud, and on a high pitch which had many of the Grovers grabbing for their ears.

He soon segues into his familiar solo, backed only by Mike Silver on drums and into his unimpeachable impersonations: Tennessee Ernie Ford, Elvis Presley, Frank Sinatra, Humphrey Bogart, Lionel Barrymore, Ned Sparks, Jimmy Stewart, John Garfield and Jimmy Cagney, among others. He also does a too-short (his only) dance bit a la Fred Astaire.

Before winding with a closer as high-pitched as his opener, Davis goes through singing imitations of "names" on "Rockabye." Included in the finale is the now famous Davis tab version of "West Side Story" which brought down the house with a standing ovation. In the 75 minutes, the talents of Davis are only scratched in this show as he limits to only the above-mentioned facets.

To commemorate the 33rd anniversary of the 36-year-old entertainer, a plaque bearing thanks from three charity orgs which Davis helped, was presented him by ringsider Vince Edwards.

Milton Berle came to the rescue at the show's outset when a faulty mike silenced both the intro to Dick Stabile's "Music Man" medley and comic Pat Henry. Berle clowned until repairs were made, then brought on Henry with a warm, tension-relieving "Let's give this boy a real California welcome" bit.

Henry quickly opened with "I don't know who he is—but he's a nice guy." Easy to see why Henry has been Davis' stage-sharer for nine months. He's sharp, clean—and pleasantly funny.

Dick Stabile's orch, enlarged by five of Davis' key men, again has taken over the Grove stand usually occupied by Freddy Martin. It remains through the next attraction, Keely Smith, who arrives Oct. 31. Army.

Blinstrub's, Boston

Boston, Oct. 8.

Jack Jones, Bobbi Baker, Freddies (2), Moro Landis Line (10), Michael Gaylord Orch (7); $2.50 minimum.

Jack Jones is cobilled with comedienne Bobbi Baker in a fast moving layout at Blinstrub's big 1,700-seater, which brings back the Moro Landis Line of long stemmed lovelies in two big production numbers. Jones, pleasant and personable, runs through a lively songalog showcasing his his click, "Lollipops & Roses" in slick fashion. He gives out with a big "If Ever I Would Leave You," and segues to "I Love Paris" for nice effect.

Zany Bobbi Baker, in a Paris gown of green and silver straw, yocks it up with clean, fresh, topical and very funny material. The diminutive humorist makes the most of femme foibles, wigs and the the Kennedys, and comes up with some updated, penetrating views on psychiatry in which she regresses to kiddie time complete with thumb in mouth.

Miss Baker then segues to one of the cleverest analyst parodies heard in some time. Her always fresh impressions of femme singers wind up with Pearl Bailey, tired feet and all. Since last seen, she has developed into the ranks of the top femme comediennes.

On night caught Thursday (11), she captivated the audience with her hijinks and had to beg off. Her new material is standout, especially the headshrinking routine, and a natural for tv guesting.

Freddies offer a great trampoline routine with jumps and triple somersault to chair. Both lads turn in myriad of high flights from tranipoline to seesaw for big audience reaction.

Moro Landis Line opens the show with "My Lady Fair" routine based on the MFL musical with high kicking chorus girls. In second production, they do a "Boy Friend" routine. Mike Gaylord cuts the show in slick fashion.

This show exits Sunday (20). Guy.

Ben Blue's, Sta Monica

Santa Monica, Cal., Oct. 10.

Ben Blue & Helen Boice, with Danny Rogers, Lionel Ames, Joy Healey Dancers (6), Norman Hawes Orch (5); $1.50 cover, $2 Saturday; $3 minimum.

After being closed for six months, during which its owner-star filled nitery engagements in Las Vegas, Reno and Frisco, Ben Blue's Santa Monica supper club has reopened with comic still filling the star spot. Opening bill, "Laffs and Gals," describes club's stated policy of entertainment.

Featured spots are shared by Blue and femme comedian Helen Boice, who has played location before. They're good contrast as his panto bits and dancing style are the complete opposite of her hearty, continuous patter. Pleasing and plump, Miss Boice is on excellent ice breaker and would have warmed show better with an earlier spot. Blue makes with patter, two skits and really plays it up in finale number.

Danny Rogers, supporting comic, had to struggele to keep audience with him, but fault is not entirely his as he's third banana in overladen laff show and follows Blue, a difficult position. He's a delightful dancer but only does enough to underscore comedy.

Vocalist Lionel Ames' robust voice isn't helped by club's tendency to over-amplify with an overhead mike. However, he comes on strong in latter half of show with elaborate "Old Black Magic" arrangement that lets him segue into excellent Latino medley.

"Gals" half of bill really lives up to billing. Joy Healey Dancers (Patrice Sanford, Joan Swift, Kelly Robbins, Joyce Moore, Sandy Phelps and Jane Mann) are gorgeous femmes. Miss Sanford is very effective as a straightwoman-stripper with Blue in his "Stagehand" sketch, funniest bit in show. Musical support is well handled (with bit too much volume) by the Norman Hawes orchestra.

Spot has also instituted lounge policy with pianist Eddi Oliver and supporting acts filling in between and after shows. All out-front personnel here are show people, including bartender, waiters, busboys and waitresses. Three waiters and a busboy double in club's "minstrel show" finale. Robe.

Jacqueline Fontaine, Duke Mitchell, Art Graham Trio; no cover, no minimum.

Jacqueline Fontaine and Duke Mitchell, with fine backing by the Art Graham Trio, give out with a lot of gutsy belting in a new show that comes on strong enough to overcome the difficulties performers face in Fairchild's pleasant-for-customers but hard-to-play for-talent Silver Cloud Room.

Singers must work in centre of a long narrow room that doesn't give them proper audience contact at any one point and, when they step out of stage area, improper lighting leaves them almost totally in the dark while working.

Both Miss Fontaine and Mitchell are loud, fast and bright stylists who concentrate on jazz rhythms. They should prove a good bill. Miss Fontaine, in show caught, stuck pretty much to straight delivery and totally ignored impresh work and old style vaude stuff with which she has earlier been identified. Bosomy brunet, with a strong, throaty voice, hit heavily in number of standards, belting best in "See Mama Every Night" and "Good Man Hard to Find" combo.

Mitchell works hard in mixture of ballad and beat. He bounces and jumps about a little too much, but hits exciting spirit when he gets lost in a punchy swinger. Hard sell "Love For Sale" is typical of his lusty style, and Russ Morgan's "Nobody" a solid entry.

Two pair up on oldies like "Just Because" and "Them There Eyes," working well together on big sounds that almost overpower room.

Show is in indefinitely. Dale.

Basin St. East, N. Y.

Louis Prima with Gia Maione, Sam Butera & The Witnesses (7), Jack Kelly Trio; $3.50 music charge.

It's just a little less than five months since Gia Maione stepped into Keely Smith's shoes at the Louis Prima menage but she's already at home and her presence is felt—and to good advantage, too. She doesn't play as important a part in the proceedings as stone-face-Smith, but her youth and innocent buoyancy, tend to render Prima's occasional excursions into blueland quite harmless and inoffensive. If Prima doesn't watch out, she may have him going straight—she's that effective.

Her effect on the group's gyrations is quite subtle but fortunately she hasn't dissipated any of the raucous hooliganism that has made the act so potent, especially in the lounge areas around Las Vegas.

It still runs at a wild pace with all hands following Prima's dynamic delivery. All are in tune and display the sort of teamwork that can only be displayed by performers who know what they're doing and enjoying it at the same time. Prima, of course, is the key to the antics. Vocalizing or trumpeting, he stays in high gear for close to an hour and his aides keep up with him.

He takes a breather every now and then to give Sam Butera a chance at some novelty vocalizing, or to give the spotlight to a drum or trombone instrumental, but never long enough to have his echo fade. He comes on strong and his energy prevades the room.

Perhaps the best portion of the show is near the closer when he and Miss Maione team up for a happy vocal outing. Their "Bill Bailey" is a knockout, and "Oh, Look What You've Done To Me" as well as an offbeat attack on "Night And Day" pull good response. On solo, Miss Maione is sharp and convincing on "I Belive In You," "I Want You To Be My Baby," and "How High The Moon."

Meantime, Keely Smith, working on her own, is building an act for New York at the new Americana Hotel, across town from Basin Street East. She won't be competing with her ex-husband-boss, though, 'cause Prima will already have wound up a successful run if opening night enthusiasm is an indication of things to come.

Jack Kelly takes over the piano with a drum and bass assist before the main attraction comes. His showtunes and standard doodling help pass the time pleasantly. Gros.

Hotel Roosevelt, N.O.

New Orleans, Oct. 12.

Johnnie Ray, The Markals (2), Leon Kelner Orch (11); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

Seymour Weiss is beaming with the current layout for Johnnie Ray and the Markays drew a capacity firstnight crowd and reservations indicate solid biz. What's more, the room had a fairly diverse audience at the initial show.

Ray, who's no stranger here, continues to grow in stature with each visit. This trip he seems to have omitted some of his frenzied histrionics. At show caught Thursday night (11), he occupied floor for 45 minutes of energetic showmanship in which the frenetic and the more relaxed type of numbers are fairly distributed.

Backed by Leon Kelner's orch, Ray uses most of his standards. As the spotlight picks him up he hushes the tableholders with "As Time Goes By," and follows with such familiars as "Somebody Stole My Gal" and "Walking My Baby Back Home."

One of Ray's strongpoints is his concentration on the evergreens. His efforts win applause from the start, and he puts the tunes over with vibrant and intimate manner. His act registers solidly.

Opening the show are the Markays, ballroom specialists, whose terp routines score with the payees. Smoothly professional and exciting, duo shows precision and timing in a variety of routines. Outstanding is their "Love For Sale" number.

Maestro Kelner presides at the 88s and his musical crew gives top drawer backing to the acts and provides varied tempos to keep the dance floor crowded.

Upstairs at the Downstairs, N. Y.

Irving Haber presentation of Ben Bagley production of "No Shoestrings" with Danny Carroll, Jane Connell, Larry Holofcener, Bill McCutcheon, Patty Regan, June Squibb, Dorothea Freitag, Sam Pottle; staged and choreographed by Robert Haddad; costumes, Dick Granger; musical direction and arrangements, Miss Freitag; lyrics and music, Peter Myers, Ronald Cass, John Pritchard, Michael McWhinney, Arthur Siegel, Barry Alan, Richard Chodosh, Treva Silverman, Stephen Lawrence, Stanley Myers, Arthur McRae, Lawrence Grossman, Rod Warren, Richard Waring, Frances Essex; sketches, Louis Botto, Dee Caruso, Bill Levine, Michael McWhinney, Herb Hartig. Additional music by Tchaikowsky and Richard Addinsell. Opened Oct. 11, '60; $5-$6 minimums.

The nitery industry has had some important assignments unwittingly thrust upon it. Long entrusted with the task of keeping variety talent alive, it has in recent years taken on legit musical chores, burlesque tasks, and now it seemingly has become the keeper of the intimate revue.

Broadway has apparently given up intimate revues as a regular item, but Upstairs at the Downstairs and its vice-versa have long been a regular outlet for them. They'll be joined next week by the Plaza 9 Room presided over by the U-D's former producer, Julius Monk. Thus there will be a competitive choice in this field, a situation that hasn't been seen on or near Broadway for some years.

Operator Irving Haber is continuing the set policy of this room with a spicy and highly entertaining show which has been produced for him by Ben Bagley, who some years produced a series of "Shoestring" revues. In recognition of past accomplishments, he has labeled the current opus "No Shoestrings." It continues the tradition in this room by being witty and to some degree chic, fast moving and vivid.

It's a bright and literate money's worth. What's more, this show seems to make an attempt to widen the audiences for intimate revues with a broader base of humor. The laughs don't have to be searched out, a lot of obscure and inside humor has been removed and it's possible even that the westsiders, who have long shunned this entertainment form will see its humor.

This doesn't mean that the revue's literate standards haven't been retained. The writing by a host of lyricists and much of the music is of a high calibre and the performance of a spirited group matches.

The stage has been made larger for this occasion, which allows better movement. This permits a satire on the Romberg-Friml school of operetta to be performed. It's a highly funny takeoff on a tyro troupe in which the hero, McCutcheon, mumbles lines unintelligibly and Miss Connell responds as though they were spoken in purest pear-shapes. The rest of the company gets the yen for burlesque out of them with this skit.

There are moments when all members have a chance to shine and they give fine accounts of themselves. McCutcheon's spoof of Richard Rodgers' bow as a lyricist is gentle fun; Holofcener's lyrical description of the Bolshoi Ballet to the music of "Swan Lake" is another solo highsnot. Danny Carroll made it big with his dissertation on cops in drag. Miss Connell registered with her love affair bit with Werner von Braun.

Of course, a revue which relies greatly on the headlines as its base, sometimes must go into the obvious. Caroline, Jack and Jacqueline jokes are evident. The "American Tragedy" satire seemed much too chi chi and pointless, the instant biography skit lost out and a bit of teamster boss Hoffa was less than delightful. But in the main, there is a lot of charm, wit and sophistication played out by a congenial group. Haber has splurged heavily on this one with costumes and sets adding lustre.

Manhattan nightlife, according to the Upstairs show, should be enriched with two intimate revues where formerly one held sway. It indicates a healthy rise in cerebral content of nocturnal entertainment. Jose.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, Oct. 10.

Denise Darcel, Buddy LaPata Orch (6); no cover, no minimum.

Riverside owner Raymond Spector, who took the helm of this historic Reno hotel from Bill Miller last summer, has apparently decided there's more coin in entertainment than the bingo games he's been operating in the Riviera Room the last couple of months.

As of Oct. 4 he reopened the room with Denise Darcel, her first local outing, and it was an obvious wise choice. Despite fact hotel has not contracted for regular house band, has no line, and is using only one act for the nonce, the room will undoubtedly regain its prior status as one of Reno's major showcases.

Her 50-minute stint also includes likes of "Birth of the Blues," "Never on Sunday," and "Hey Look Me Over." Singer shows personality plus in addition to the vocal talent. She works hard but with complete ease, and projects to the extreme corners.

Her line of chatter is witty and smart, and the delightful accent is genuine. She gets mileage in routine with male tabler brought on stage, and scores impressively in carbon of Maurice Chevalier. Miss Darcel also wins plaudits with special lyrics stuff.

Not content to remain at mike site, she strolls about stage with charming abandon, works beautifully to stagesiders and pours out that infectious personality in generous doses.

Miss Darcel is backed for this session by the Buddy LaPata Orch, with leader directing from the 88s. Curtain parts with brief concert from the musicmen, showcasing LaPata's talents at the keyboard.

Martha Raye due Nov. 1. Long.

Grande Severine, Paris

Paris, Oct. 10.

Mac Mercer, Jimmy Gourlay Orch (4); Russo Orch (6); $2 minimum at bar, $6 dinner minimum.

Maurice Girodias, noted publisher (Olympia 2nd Obelisk Press) of risque books who first put out Henry Miller and Vladimir Nabokov's "Lolita," says his avocation, a colorful grouping of late dining and show rooms called La Grande Severine, loses all the money he makes in his vocation as a bookman.

He carefully unearths neatly partinaed caves to turn into nitery-type dining spots. Here his first floor Russo eatery-fiddle room, and a sort of grill room in a glass enclosed garden, with chef work being done by Yank G. Haynes, is beginning to get late Paris eaters' attention.

A bar upstairs and one downstairs is for non-eaters. Cave has dusky Yank blues belter Mae Mercer whose expert dramatic drive, songalog and incisiveness manage to get the heads of the still predeminantly expense account French clientele out of their plates.

The Russo room sports a good stringed Slavic band, and gets a heavy play on its White Russian cuisine dished out by a 90-year-old Russo chef. Downstairs' dancing with Jimmy Gourlay's springy orch, that can also give listenable jazz music, makes up the rest of the show aspects of this cleverly laid out maze.

Girodias even has a glass wall looking out on a stark and arresting old church, Saint Severin, which he convinced local city councilors to turn into a night-lighted monument. He's within the 100 feet minimum distance that niteries can be from a church. But by creating a sort of modernized medieval cave setup almost makes his place a monument, and authorities waived the few feet.

When caught, rooms were fairly well filled, and place seems to be growing in following if it has still not tapped the show and chi-chi crowds. It may happen, then Girodias may get these unique rooms into the black. It is part of his office building on the Left Bank. Mosk.

Town & Country, Bklyn

Ritz Bros. (3), June Valli, Hal & Barbara Loman, Ned Harvey & Ros Rodriguez Orchs; $6 minimum.

Ben & Doris Maksik, resuming the season in their out-of-the-way nitery, have returned to the name policy they favored a few years ago. But as an added inducement to top talent, the Town & Country has adopted a one-show-nightly policy except on weekends. Together, with the Maksiks' hard preselling, this virtually insures full houses.

With the Ritz Bros., they have a safe bet for SRO biz during the run. The boys have long been a lure for the cafeniks, and practically guarantee a laugh-laden show in this kingsized emporium.

With these factors, the season at the T&C looks good, except that it seems to have deserted all plans for a la carte business, which happens to be the most lucrative of all. This has been done by the simple expedient of upping the parking fee to $1 on a do-it-yourself basis, or $2 if an attendant handles the car. Previously it was $1 for attended service. Presumably the parking boys don't like it either. Nobody tips for a $2 nick.

Opening night Thursday (11) was SRO in honor of the Ritzes. It was more than a turnout for entertainment's sake. One of the lads, Jimmy, had suffered a heart attack, and this was the trio's first work in seven months. They have accommodated themselves to the new condition admirably. The Ritz freres revised their routines so that the work isn't as strenuous. The focal point of the act, Harry, works a little harder perhaps, and the ensemble dancing has been toned down a bit. But the effectiveness of their efforts hasn't diminished in the least on the basis of the standup ovation the crowd gave them at the end.

The lads have revamped their routines so that some of them have a new patina. The Geisha girl number is a hit here, and there have been other minor refurbishings. But any drastic changes would probably invite insurrection from the regulars. The eye rolling, frenzied clowning and indigoisms spice up the act. They achieve a maximum response for their efforts. This is their third trip here and seemingly, their b.o. potency hasn't diminished.

Accompanying the Ritz Bros. is June Valli, a youngish vet who sings and looks well enough to be appreciated in this largeseater. There are times when she seems to lose the inflections that color her offerings, but she bounces back sufficiently to warrant a pair of encores.

The openers: Barbara & Hal Loman, are a lively dance turn. They appear to be dedicated and hardworking youngsters who dance purposefully and with skill. Their group at the opening show had a lot of pace and variety and they come off with a deserved accolade.

The orchestral backing is by Ned Harvey who took a multitude of cues from the Ritzes without a hitch. His dansanction is also effective. Rod Rodriguez' Latin influences are also dug by the assemblage. Jose.

Le Cabaret, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 9.

Louise Thomson, Jack Lander Trio; $1.75 cover.

Sexy and statuesque, blond Louise Thomson proves she is a comedian-singer with a full set of nostalgic and torch pipes, enhanced by her asides and tablehopping with the portable mike. She's on for 30 minutes, twice-nightly at the posh Le Cabaret.

Clad in a golden sheath when caught, Miss Thomson opens with "Arrivederci" and segues quickly into a set of Irish and Scottish songs for a switch in tempo.

She particularly scores with her kidding of the lyrics just when notstalgia was getting the better of the customers. She had no trouble in getting over with her funny comedies. Her arrangements are by Jake Turner.

Miss Thomson goes to Ottawa after her fortnight's Le Cabaret stint ends Oct. 13, and is in the Canadian capital for two weeks until Oct. 27. McStay.

Minsky Name Back in Gotham; Also Helps to Girl-Glamorize B'way

The name of Minsky has been absent from the New York entertainment marts since the late Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia decreed the death of burlesque in the early '40s. However, a show biz form that has been important historically as well as a feed for all theatrical branches, just won't die off.

Burlesque will be recalled time and again, either in memory or on the stage as having been the citadel of a lot of fun, namely girls and comedy. Its modern potential is strongly evidenced by Ann Corio's "This Was Burlesque," a longrunner at the Casino East Theatre.

Overall, it's a good thing too that Harold Minsky has returned to Broadway. It helps recreate a glamorous era of the Stem. Now there are two spots on the Big Street with girls. There are acres and acres of 'em with Jack Silverman's International Theatre Restaurant joining the Latin Quarter as a showcase for the kind of babes that put glamor into such yesteryear spots as the French and International Casinos, Midnight Sun, Diamond Horseshoe and Cotton Club.

As a result, Silverman hasn't had as big an opening night at his spot since he opened the room. The Minsky name and the promise of the Minsky girl in all her undraped glory, lured a lot of trade. Show is likely to do business and help re-establish Broadway as an exciting street.

"Minsky's Follies" is still in a rough state. The display has a lot of motion, but there could be a greater infusion of talent. Later, as the Latin Quarter has discovered, it will have to add names after the initial impact wears off.

There are numerous lively passages. Ron Lewis has designed good choreography. But there's an indication that a reroutining of the layout, to take more advantage of lights and shadows, could bring out the climaxes more forcefully. However, a couple of highspots can be discerned. The first is the lowdown and roughhouse comedy of Benson & Mann in the oldtime courthouse scene.

Irving Benson, long an essentially funny guy, has never been showcased more brilliantly. He scored with the ancient burley skit, and its reception indicated that the team could have essayed another sketch in this show. After all, the oldsters went to the Gaiety, Republic, etc. for comedy. Well — that's what they said, anyway. Everybody also agreed that the babes contributed, too.

There is also a small Filipino dancer that impresses as one of the show's more charming interludes. Jamine Alcoriza, a slightly built lad, works with exquisite grace. Another specialty, Les Baby Twins, a pair of highly blondined imports who warble in French are cute but need more performing strength to make their spot hold up.

The Peiro Bros., a pair of Brazilian jugglers, seemingly aspire to talking comedy, having added lines to their turn. But their apex comes with manipulation of hats, clubs, bricks, and a multitude of other props. They go over handsomely.

Max & Cherie, imports from Britain, are an effective knockabout comedy team. Both take a lot of punishment in their projection of comedy. They bring about laughs and surprises, with the girl swinging her kingsized partner around almost as easily as he twirls her.

Harold Minsky has focussed around the girls. They are undraped within legal limits. The femmes are built well and there are lots of 'em. Some are astoundingly developed, and are eye-openers to both the male and femme sections of the audience. They are all tastefully costumed and move lithely.

For better visibility, the runway has been recreated on Broadway. It's an institution that has survived only in the polite circles of the fashion shows. There is something more vital to display in this instance, and the stage extension provides more intimacy and better visibility in this largeseater.

The production numbers are well designed. Maybin Hewes, a lively singer who moves well, does most of the singing. There are a quartet of boys, an octet of paraders and even more dancers and other production aides.

Harold Minsky has brought home a potential winner. It needs only some redesigning to bring out its top points. Even in its present state, it's a welcome addition to Broadway.

Mike Durso Orch, now working on the side of the house instead of onstage, provides excellent showbacking and dance incentive. Adolphus' crew supplies the Latin relief. Sid Edwards presides at the tape. Jose.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

(FOLLOWUP)

Las Vegas, Oct. 11.

Ella Fitzgerald replaces Brenda Lee as Dick Shawn's costar in the Flamingo Room, and will be in for two weeks. Unlike Shawn's previous teammate here, Miss Fitzgerald has the difficult assignment of following his powerful act, but she does it gracefully, balancing the applause in a solid doubleheader for Morris Lansburgh's showplace.

Miss Fitzgerald, a singer's singer whose voice functions like a perfectly tuned musical instrument, puts something into each song that the composer—and even the arranger—didn't put there. Through such flavoring tricks as scatting, blues shouting, humming, and just plain caressing, she shapes each number into her own personality, retaining her lofty reputation as a vocal stylist without equal.

"It's Crazy," "Georgia On My Mind," "Steam Heat," "Clap Hands Here Comes Charlie," "When My Sugar Walks Down The Street," "Misty," "Mack The Knife," "South American Way," "Just One Of Those Things," and "How High The Moon" are some of the offerings in her well-balanced repertoire.

The Half Brothers (2), a top drawer novelty juggling act, initials the bill. Nat Brandwynne's orch (17) backs, with Don Abbey on piano, Joe Jones on drums, Jimmy Hughart on bass, and Dale Olinger on guitar sitting in for Miss Fitzgerald's session.

Los Angeles, Oct. 9.

"Big" Tiny Little and combo; two-drink minimum.

"Big" Tiny Little, with a four-piece group, comes on with almost a big band sound in a show styled more for swinging jazz than for the ragtime-honkytonk with which he is more closely identified. Versatile musician scores with ease in mixture of these as well as blues, bebop and dixieland. Show should prove popular for this strip nitery.

Little himself amply shows why he is billed "Mr. Piano Personality." His bright, round face, topped by the derby trademark, adds visual bounce, while the concentration on fluttery butterfly piano stylings has a near two-piano sound.

"St. Louis Blues" came off well in set caught, along with "Begin the Beguine." Singer Kami Warner, frequently lost in the big jazz of the group, hits well on "Honeysuckle Rose." Highlight, however, is Jimmy Roosa's tenor on "Honeydripper," a frantic, frenetic, gyrating number that blows up a storm.

Little's individual song styling on Nat Cole's venerable "Scotchin With Soda" is tops. Good group includes Jerry Holton and Ward Erwin. All double on variety of instruments.

Show is in for a month. Dale.

Britain's Royal Variety Performance At Palladium Oct. 29 Gets '196G Cast'

London, Oct. 16.

A cast which would cost $196,000, according to a Moss' Empires spokesman, has been lined up for the Royal Variety Performance Oct 29 at the Palladium. The American contingent consists of Bob Hope and Edie Adams, Rosemary Clooney, Sophie Tucker and Eartha Kitt.

The other artists are the Black & White Minstrel Show, Rudy Cardenas, Johnny Dankworth & his orchestra, Dickie Henderson, Frank Ifield, Cleo Laine, Great Magyar Pusztai Troupe, Cliff Richard, Edmundo Ros & his orchestra, Harry Secombe, The Shadows, Eric Sykes, Andy Stewart, Norman Vaughan, Mike & Bernie Winters, and the Palladium Girls and Boys.

Leslie Macdonnell, who is presenting the show with Bernard Delfont, pointed out that the performance, which will be attended by the Queen and Prince Philip for the first time since 1957, will enable every artist to present a full act.

Some 12 of the 21 acts will be making their first Royal Show appearance. Rosemary Clooney and Cliff Richard will fly to London from the U.S., Harry Secombe will be breaking his Mexican vacation and Eartha Kitt will plane in from Scandinavia.

This will be the 31st Royal Variety Show and it is expected to net a record $112,000 for the Variety Artists Benevolent Fund.

AGVA Tightens Cruise Policies

The American Guild of Variety Artists is expected to take action to head off an anticipated cut in cruise employment. Union last week called in all New York cruise bookers for a survey of a situation in which they discern a loss of work for their members on various lines.

Among the situations discussed was the employment of assistant cruise directors who, once at sea, take the place of union members and put on a show, and also the loss of jobs to foreign acts.

Cruise bookers were asked to give all information known on the new practices that have risen in recent months. It is known that bookers sometime ago warned the union that each successive salary boost makes it more difficult to sell American performers to the vessels. The union was appraised that at least one line of foreign registry hired performers in its home port, who were then given status as crew members and thus receive wages lower than performer scale.

GAC Ups Romm

Leonard Romm has been assigned foreign bookings at General Artists Corp. He takes over the chores previously done by Josh Meyer, who was recently made a veepee in the legit department.

Romm, in addition to handling the overseas dates, is returning the hotel accounts in Puerto Rico and Miami Beach. He also has the cafe assignments in the Boston area.

Busy Andy Stewart Set In Panto, TV, Etc. Till '64

Glasgow, Oct. 16.

Longterm deals being set for Andy Stewart, 28-year-old Scot comedian-singer, include a possible appearance in pantomime at the London Palladium at the end of 1964. Following his global trek next year (he's set for tours of New Zealand, Australia and Canada), he will be featured in a leading Glasgow pantomime in December, 1963.

A series of BBC-TV show casings is set for 1964, and Stewart will also tour in a production show for Moss Empires. He is currently taping a series of 26 "White Heather Club" shows for BBC-TV. After a one-nighter tour of Scotland, he will play a two-week stand at the Palace Theatre, Dundee, in December and a week at the Capitol, Aberdeen.

London Palladium Resuming Vaude

London, Oct. 16.

Major vaude shows will return to the London Palladium next year if suitable name talent can be lined up. It's planned to run variety from the end of the pantomime season, starting April 1, to the start of the 1963 panto in mid-December.

Sammy Davis Jr. has been signed for a minimum eight weeks' engagement, starting April 1, and Leslie Macdonnell, managing director of Moss Empires, has plans tentatively set to cover between 60 to 65% of the playing time.

Macdonnell will plane to New York in mid-November to prowl for top international talent. Before leaving, however, he will have had an appraisal of the talent market situation from his associate, Bernard Delfont, who is due back from the U. S. today (Tues.).

Macdonnell emphasized, however, that it is not intended to concentrate exclusively on American headliners. Times have changed in Britain since vaudeville was a regular policy at the Palladium, and there are now local artists who could top the bill and bring in the customers.

In the event that a sufficient number of stars is not available, Macdonnell will continue the policy of the past few years and stage a summer revue.

CHRISTOPHER'S VERY OKAY BOOK ON MAGIC

A most entertaining book is Milbourne Christopher's "Panorama of Magic" (Dover; $2), an attractive kingsize paperback whose scope and attractive illustrations, accompanied by the savvy text, makes this the best bargain buy in books at $2. It could command and rates a fancier pricetag because of comparative standards alone, separate and apart from the basic merits.

Author is a past national president of the Society of American Magicians and president of the Magic Collectors Assn. He is a seasoned pro, w.k. on national tv and slated for a Westinghouse video spec in November which will costar him with Zero Mostel and Julie Harris.

The theatrical posters in all languages, from both sides of the Atlantic, hark back to the pioneer mountebanks and swordswallowers to the great 19th century development of the Robert-Houdin school. They then traverse the Houdini-Hardeen era to the sundry still more modern prestidigitators, cardmanipulators, illusionists who have trod the boards from the

Bright's Lurid Charges (Off The Record); Wants AGVA Job Back

Jackie Bright, suspended national administrative secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists, failed to get several sensational charges on the record of the union. In an executive session of the AGVA national board at the Barbizon Plaza hotel, N.Y., at which no minutes were taken, Bright gave testimony during Monday (15) afternoon and the following morning wherein he made several disclosures of alleged wrongdoing by several of the top echelon of AGVA.

Some charges that Bright made were attributed to Irwin Mazzei, the western regional director of the union, and others were attributed to AGVA counsel Harold Berg. Bright stated that they were told to him by Berg and Mazzei, but there was no firsthand knowledge of the allegations.

A motion to put the talk on the record was defeated by a vote of 12 to 20 largely on the representation of Georgie Price who declared that to record this speech would be playing into the hands of the Government and the McClellan Committee. It's recalled that tapes, recording the minutes of the special meeting which suspended Bright, were seized by the McClellan probers.

Bright charged that his suspension was illegal for several reasons. He said that the AGVA constitution makes no provision for the suspension of the chief executive officer. He averred that, after the vote to fire him was defeated, this should have been the end of the matter. Any further action on this score was illegal.

He also claimed that the national board was unfair in suspending him during a period when he was ill and could not defend himself. He added that repeated requests by him and his attorney to get a copy of charges against him and the minutes of the meeting which suspended him have been unavailing.

Prior to the board meeting, Bright indicated he would resort to legal action to regain his post. Also threatening to go to court were Ernie Fast, who was fired from his post as midwest regional director and suspended for 10 years, and Clayton (Smiley) Hart, dismissed as Sarasota branch manager for failure to tell the union's executive committee what he disclosed to McClellan probers.

Bobby Faye, acting national administrative secretary, hadn't made his report up to press time. He is slated to recommend a series of branch manager transfers which will move Chicago manager Marty Cavanaugh presumably to Philadelphia; Minneapolis rep Herbert Maye to Atlanta; and other shifts to be announced.

Morris Joins Miami Carillon

Miami Beach, Oct. 16.

Sam Morris, former comedian and theatrical agent, is new director of activities for Carillon Hotel. He worked in an act billed as Morris & Rogers.

Morris at one time was president of the Gold Coast Theatrical Agency.

Judy's Precedent: 2:30 Vegas Show

Las Vegas, Oct. 16.

Judy Garland, who set a precedent for the Las Vegas Strip when she signed to do one show per night at the Sahara, has set another.

Entertainment chief Stan Irwin signed the chirp for two more weeks, to be added to her current engagement which was to close Monday (15). Starting Tuesday, she will continue to do one show per night, but will do it at 2:30 a.m.—the only star ever contracted to do a show at that hour.

Alan King and Kitty Kallen will do the dinner and midnight shows.

PP&M Chi Sellout

Chicago, Oct. 16.

A Peter, Paul & Mary concert set for Nov. 2 at Orchestra Hall has been sold out three weeks prior to that date. Promoter Frank Fried, head of Triangle Productions, said he's currently selling seats on the stage. Top price for the show is $4.

Fried added that he is arranging for a return engagement of the trio next March in the 5,000-seat Arie Crown Theatre at McCormick Place.

AGENCIES' STARS IN THEIR EYES

AGVA Nat'l Board Meet May Set Course of Union's Future Autonomy

Whether the American Guild of Variety Artists continues as an autonomous unit may well depend on actions taken by the union's national board which convened Monday (15) at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel, N. Y., for a four-day meet. Not only will the Associated Actors & Artistes of America, parent union of AGVA, be vitally interested in the result but so will the Senate Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations headed by Sen. John McClellan (D.-Ark.).

Thus far, little has been done to correct unsavory conditions brought to light by the McClellan Committee probers. AGVA's major action has been a circular letter to agencies informing them that it's contrary to union regulations to book entertainers in any spot where mixing is required by the management.

A plea was made by attorney Henry M. Katz to be given permission to address the meeting as attorney for former president Penny Singleton who is seeking to have charges of conduct unbecoming a union member quashed. She was originally suspended for five years by a trial board, but an appeal panel recently sustained the guilty verdict, but decreed she is no longer under suspension. Katz wants the board to wipe out the charge. Permission was refused by a 13-20 vote.

Also likely to be probed by the board will be the suits and countersuits by Miss Singleton and Irwin Mazzei. The board may have to determine if AGVA will ante up the costs of defense of Ted Lesser, the Coast agent who originally charged Miss Singleton with libeling the union. Miss Singleton has named Lesser one of the defendants in her suit against Mazzei.

On the agenda is whether the union will close the AGVA Old Age Home, South Fallsburgh, N.Y. The home reportedly is costing the union approximately $70,000 annually to operate although it never had more than eight inmates at one time.

Johnny Gibson may be named outdor organizer. He and board member Johnny Woods had been in the running for the post. The last outdoor head was Dewey Barto, who was ousted by the board sometime ago.

Chicago, Oct. 16.

A pair of club date producers will revive two-a-day vaudeville in the midwest next March, starting with Chicago, once the hub of the major vaude circuits. The duo, Dave Malcolm and Mark Williams, say they have legit theatres lined up in five midwestern cities for their projected vaude wheel.

The cities are Chi, Detroit, Cleveland, Kansas City and St. Louis. The promoters said they will let the theatre operators in each city announce the vaude policy for their own houses.

Format of the shows will be roughly that of earlier vaudeville, with a name headliner and other acts. Current plans call for "popular" prices in the area of a $2 top. The shows will also feature oldtime vaude acts where possible.

Malcolm is a former vaudeville singer, and Williams had been an orchestrater and tv writer. Their new company will be known as Malcolm & Williams Enterprises Inc.

BORGE'S DENVER DATE

Denver, Oct. 16.

Andrews-Garner Attractions is bringing the Victor Borge show, "Comedy in Music," to the Auditorium Theatre here for three nights, Thurs. (18) through Sat. (20).

The 2,200-seat house is scaled at $5.50 top. Advance sale has been heavy.

Scots Rescue Only Girl Trapped in Gilded Cage

Glasgow, Oct. 16.

Aleta Morrison, song-and-dance girl in Howard & Wyndham's "Five-Past Eight" revue, was rescued by firemen last week from a gilt cage 30 feet above the stage of the Alhambra Theatre here. She should have been lowered for an "All That Eastern Jazz" harem scene.

The 1,600 patrons didn't know a thing about the emergency while comedian Stanley Baxter extended his gags off the cuff. Femme stayed in the suspended cage for over 30 minutes until theatre fireman Harry Hunt was ascended a ladder to put a harness around Miss Morrison. Latter was then lowered to the stage, where she drank a glass of brandy to steady her nerves.

Less Bad Manners, Ditto Spending, By American Legion

Las Vegas, Oct. 16.

The 44th Annual American Legion National Convention, which ended here over the past weekend, was a bomb, as far as Las Vegas showbiz is concerned.

Although there were about 15,000 registered delegates, bringing approximately 30,000 visitors into town for the week-long confab, showroom and lounge maitre d's complained that "you wouldn't know they were here."

A nightly check during the week found most spots "normal" or "below normal." Consensus is that most delegates were here on a tight budget, and on top of that, were in an age bracket which found them retiring early. This, plus the fact that many locals stayed away from the Strip during the week because they thought the Legionaires, with their old reputation for raucus horseplay, would be a threat to dignity.

Possibly because of pleas by Legion execs, the horseplay was held down to a minimum, with only a few squawks coming from locals about fireworks being tossed at women on downtown streets, and drunken heckling in a few showrooms.

'Happy (?) Birthday' To Dodgers Walter O'Malley Via Dinah Shore Parody

Las Vegas, Oct. 16.

Dinah Shore was told by Riviera prexy Ben Goffstein the other night that L. A. Dodgers chief Walter O'Malley was to be in her audience celebrating his birthday, and he'd like her to sing "Happy Birthday" to him.

Miss Shore and accompanist Ticker Freeman got together just before the show, wrote special lyrics to "I Left My Heart In San Francisco," and sang them instead of the birthday song. The parody went like this:

We blew the game to San Francisco,
Our hopes were bright and Alvin's Dark.
It was the happiest of days . . .
Then along came Willie Mays
And turned our blue skies to gray . . .
Oy, Vay!
Now they can play in San Francisco
Amidst the wind, the rain, and fog . . .
So lots of luck to you, San Francisco,
What you did to us shouldn't happen
To a dog!

FANCY DEALS FOR TOP NAMES

A bitter inside battle among all talent agencies has been intensified in recent months since the foldo of MCA's percenter operations. The vast pool of unsigned, high-priced and prestige-laden talent remains a prize sought by all offices. Attempts to corral such names as Tony Curtis, Jack Benny, Cary Grant along with Connie Francis and a load of lesser lights probably have been the agencies' most high-priority project.

The normal tempo of operations at times has been suspended in pursuit of this goal. Although the agencies have lined up no new task force to get these names, they have been straining their ingenuity to devise trick deals which will attract them.

Agency attorneys and business administrators have been working on a group of unusual gimmicks. Most of them call for capital gains deals on a longterm basis. Others call for cut commissions or even no commissions for personal representation. The offices will take their gains out of package cut off the top. This entails more loot than is evident on the surface. For example, should a performer make personal appearances on a solo basis, he would pay commissions.

Meanwhile, sundry performers in all fields have been pitting one office against another. They have been weighing jobs against salary offers as well as what an office offers in personal services, and have been extracting what they think is the best deal. Some agencies have been forced to represent acts without the formality

Chicago, Oct. 16.

Lyndon A. (Lynn) Durant, Chicago manufacturer of pinball machines, and a regular $100 tipper in Chi and Las Vegas nightclubs, was found guilty of tax evasion in Federal Court here last week and sentenced to 60 days in jail and fined $15,000.

Durant, legendary in the Rush St. boites as the last of the big spenders, was found to have evaded $142,714 in taxes on $620,939 of taxable income for 1954 through 1956. He owns the United Manufacturing Co. here and maintains a luxurious penthouse on top of the plant.

At one point in the case, Durant claimed that his frequent gifts of furs and expensive cars to cafe society playgirls and night club handgers-on were by way of compensation for ideas that they had given him for his business.

Judge Hubert Will denied a defense counsel request for probation. Durant's attorney based his request on the fact that the manufacturer has an $8,500,000 contract with the Army Signal Corps for communications equipment. However, a stay of execution was granted until Nov. 8, during which time Durant will have to make up his mind whether to appeal or not.

Successful Cafe-Legit Policy at Vegas Thunderbird Keys Show Biz Changes

The success of the cafe-legit policy at the Thunderbird Hotel, Las Vegas, has resulted in changes that will have a profound effect on many facets of the entertainment industry, Joe Wells, operator of the hotel, asserted in New York last week.

The primary result, according to Wells, has been its influence on the legit field. The Las Vegas hotels can now bid for top Broadway successes and be more of a hearing from their producers. This largely stems from the vast sums paid to Richard Rodgers and the estate of the late Oscar Hammerstein for "Flower Drum Song" during its 10-month run at the hotel. It's the longest road company run of any legit musical in the U.S. "South Pacific" follows it around Dec. 20.

"Flower Drum Song," Wells pointed out, could have run considerably longer. The house is SRO on virtually all nights. However, he feels that its maximum effectiveness for the hotel has passed. Most of the Vegas regulars and big spenders have seen the show at least once. The smaller spending tourists are now the major customers. The change is being made to bring back the top coin spenders.

'South Pacific's' Potential

Wells also declared that "South Pacific," despite its record Broadway run (since exceeded by "My Fair Lady"), plus the road companies that have plied the U.S., has been seen only by about 1% of the public. The film version, he added, will only whet the appetite for the stage show.

The amount of money which can be taken out of Las Vegas by a legiter has placed an increased premium on a show's condensed rights. Previously, this was a minor point in a property's overall value. Now it has become extremely important because of its value to Las Vegas, which in turn

Tokyo, Oct. 16.

"The headline show will always stay," said Wilbur Clark, here on the first leg of a six-week global vacation, when considering the Las Vegas trend toward repackaged Broadway musicals and splashy revues.

"The headliner makes a pretty big attraction for people who come to Las Vegas from all over the world," added the Desert Inn topper. "But there aren't too many headliners," he continued. "You have to have the same ones come back."

In mulling star salaries, Clark observed, "When you hear $40,000 and $50,000 a week, they're not kidding. That's what they run. There isn't much to say about it. The salaries have just gone up with the times in the last 12 years."

He added, "I think the salaries have reached their limit. I don't know how they can go any higher."

Eddie Fisher 57G B.O. Keys Move To Extend B'way Run

"Eddie Fisher at the Winter Garden" stays on another week at the former citadel of Al Jolson's musical heydays until Nov. 3 when another prebooked show comes in.

Milton Blackstone, coproducer with Monte Proser and Ramrod Productions Inc. (Fisher's own corporate umbrella) of the current vauderevue, is casing another available Broadway legit for a possible further extension of the run. A house like the Music Box is preferred.

Business has been building and last week's $57,000 (nine performances) at the $6.90-$7.50 scale, sparked the singer's inclination to remain east rather than resume nitery bookings.

Fisher, incidentally, will be the second "fall guy" of the Circus Saints & Sinners end-November. Next Tuesday (23), show biz attorney-author Louis Nizer is the CS&S' inaugural ('62-'63 semester) "fall guy."

Smiley Hart Passes Lie Detector Test On McClellan Testimony

Clayton I. (Smiley) Hart, former branch manager of the American Guild of Variety office in Sarasota, has been notified by the Jerome S. Adlerman, counsel for the Senate Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations headed by Sen. John McClellan (D.-Ark.), that he passed the lie-detector test to which he voluntarily submitted last August.

Adlerman's letter said, "According to the evaluation of your performance on this test, as furnished by a representative of the Florida Sheriff's Bureau, it would appear that the truth and accuracy of your testimony before the Subcommittee on certain controversial points have been corroborated."

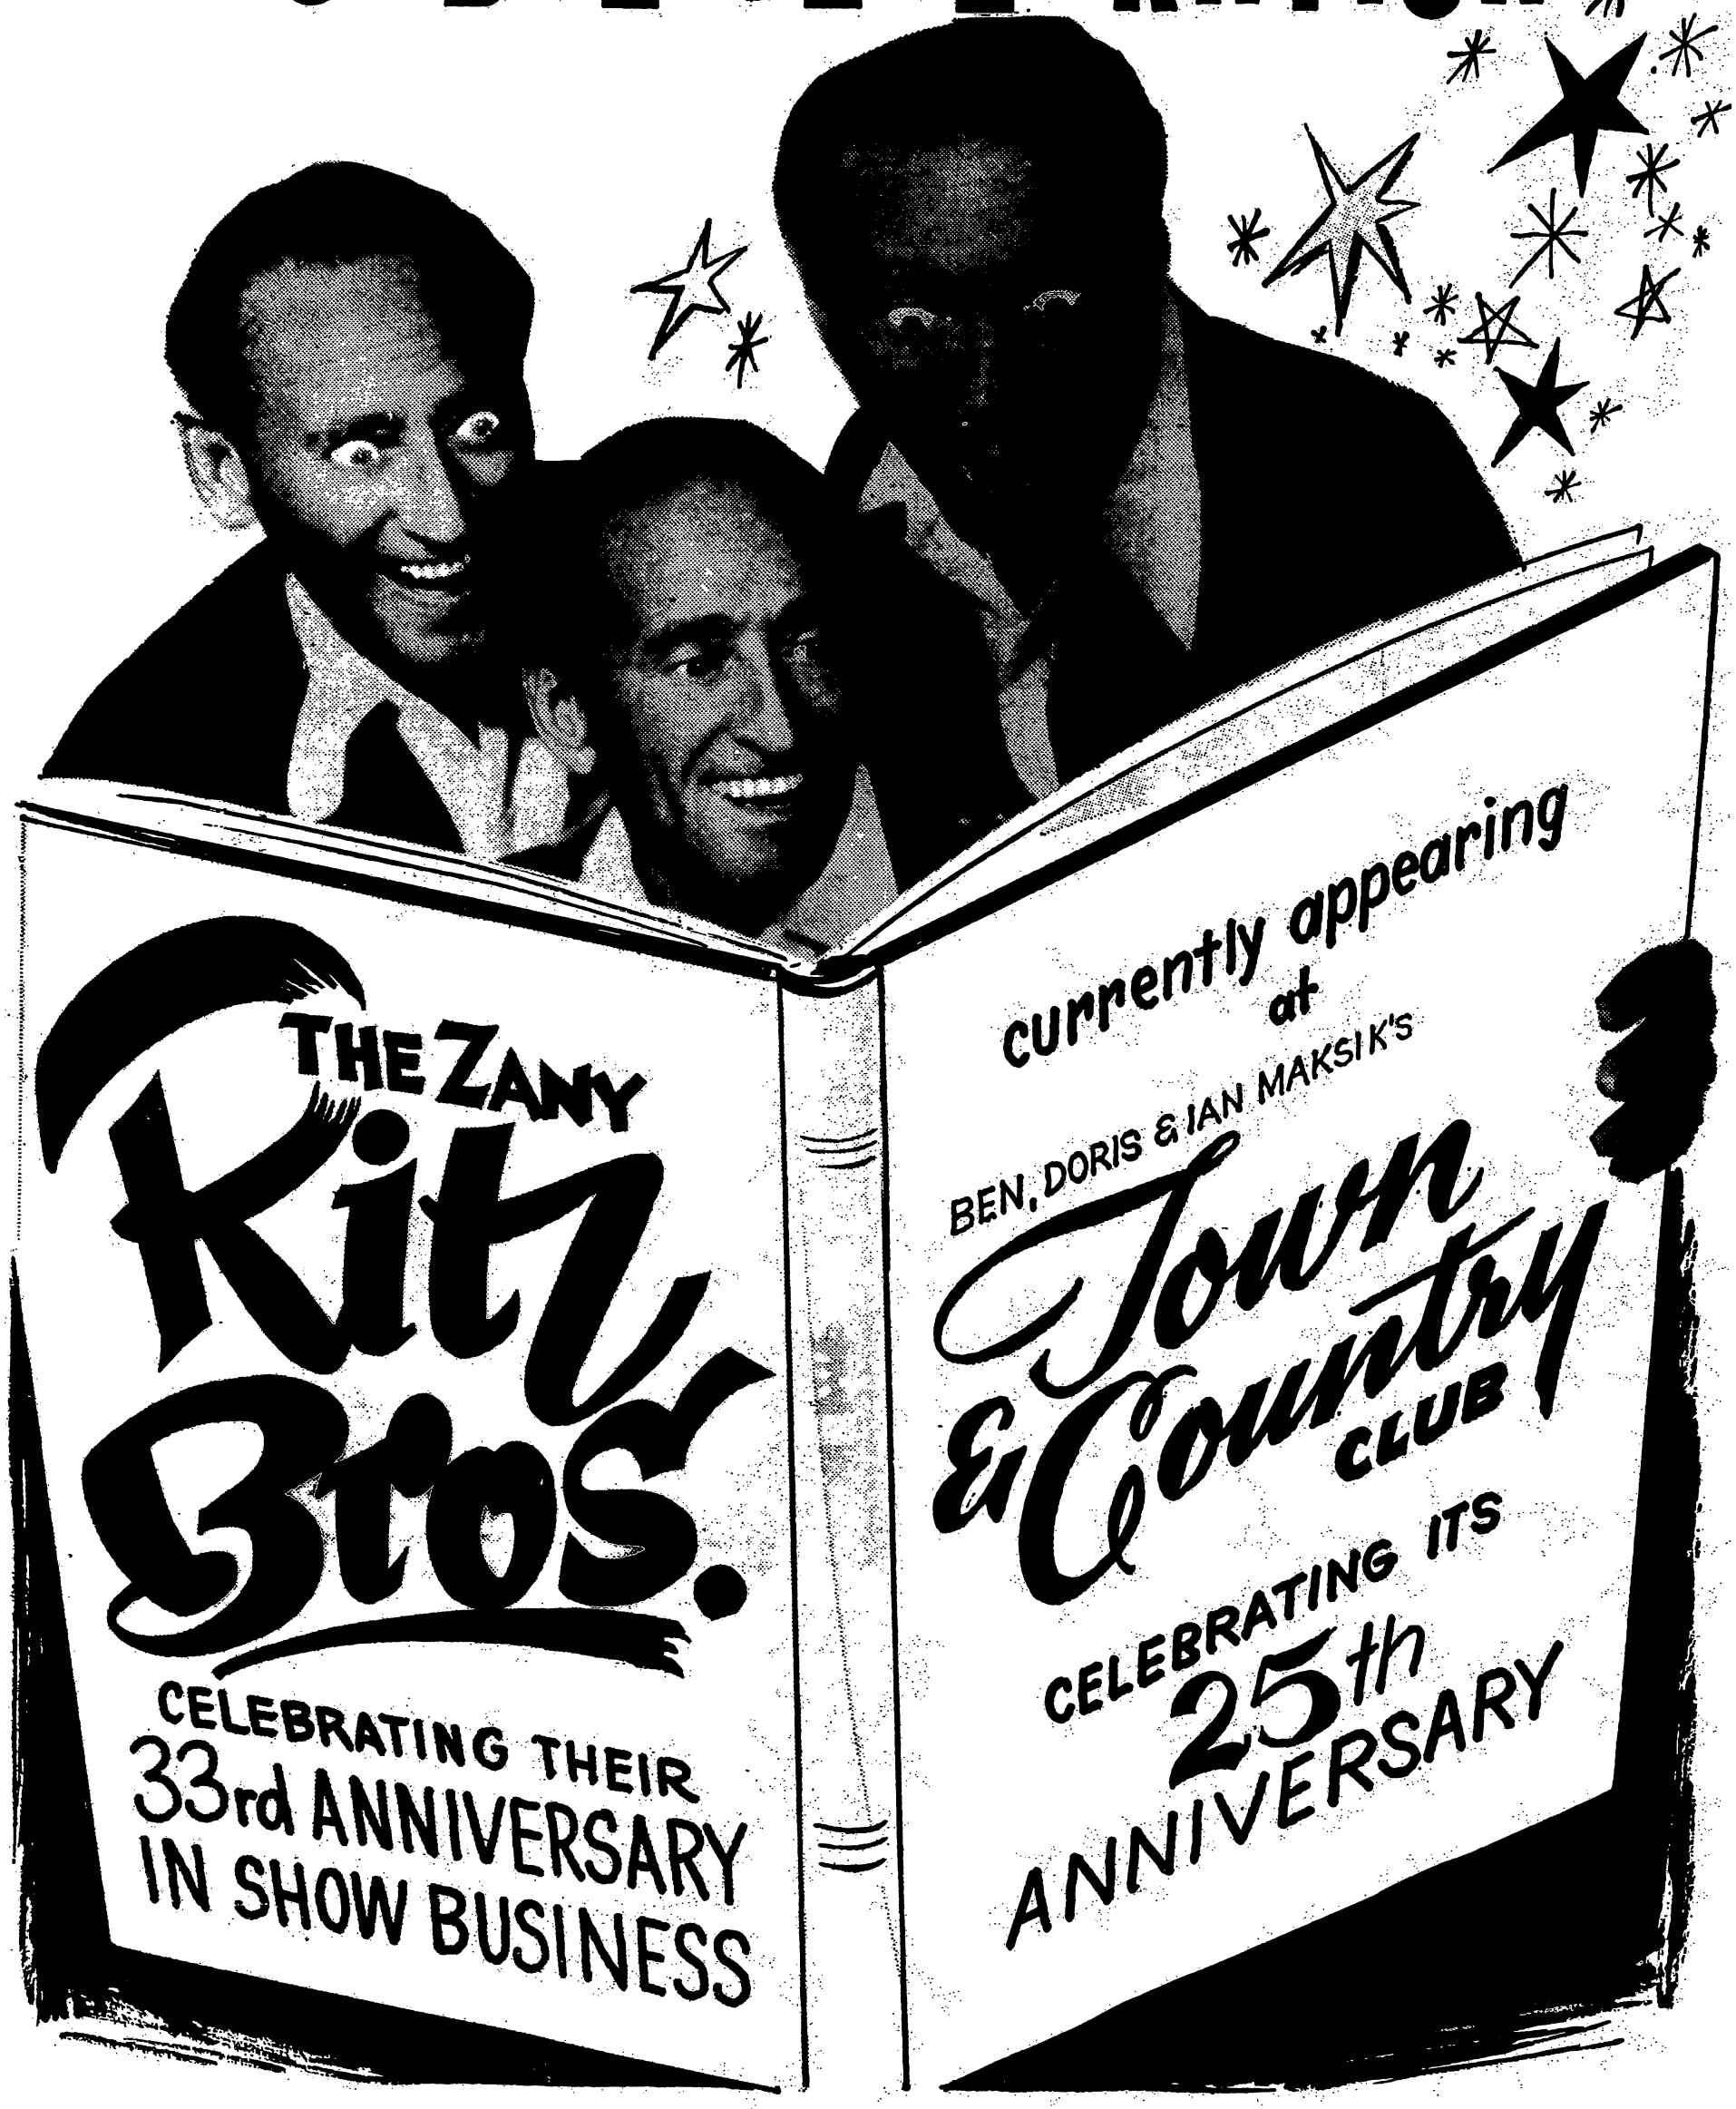
Hart volunteered to take the polygraph examination when his testimony on payment of $2,000 to now suspended national administrative secretary Jackie Bright for transferring him from Washington to Sarasota was denied by Bright. Hart and his wife volunteered to take the test. Bright later agreed to submit as well. After Hart took the examination, Mrs. Hart's appointment was cancelled. Bright, thus far, hasn't been examined.

Paris Cafes Avec Food And Shows Mop Up Via Public's Eat & Treat Yen

Paris, Oct. 16.

Eat and treat seems to be the growing vogue in local nitery outings. With the Algerian crisis settled and aided by increasing affluence, Parisians are beginning to hit the town again. But parking problems and early risings next day seem to be making present cabarets where one can dine more popular than most other forms of entertainment.

The Lido now serves more meals than ever, over 500 a night, to both locals and foreigners who make a whole evening of it. The many Russo pizzicato clubs also serve meals, give shows and do all right.



A show entrepreneur, Jean Mejean, who has extended this format to name bookings and vestpocket revues in several clubs, has found it paying off. His La Tete De L'Art now has Portuguese fado singer Amalia Rodriguez and chansonnier Jean Riguax.

In Montmartre, at his Chez Ma Cousine, Mejean has a bevy of star and solid staple singers and comedians. He has also taken over a Champs-Elysees spot, the Night Club, where he will feature comic Raymond Devos in skits and varied routines.

On the Left Bank he turned the old cellar club, Le Vieux Colombier, into L'Oeil for specialized singer Cora Vaucaire and others. Naturally, food will mix with entertainment at all these spots.

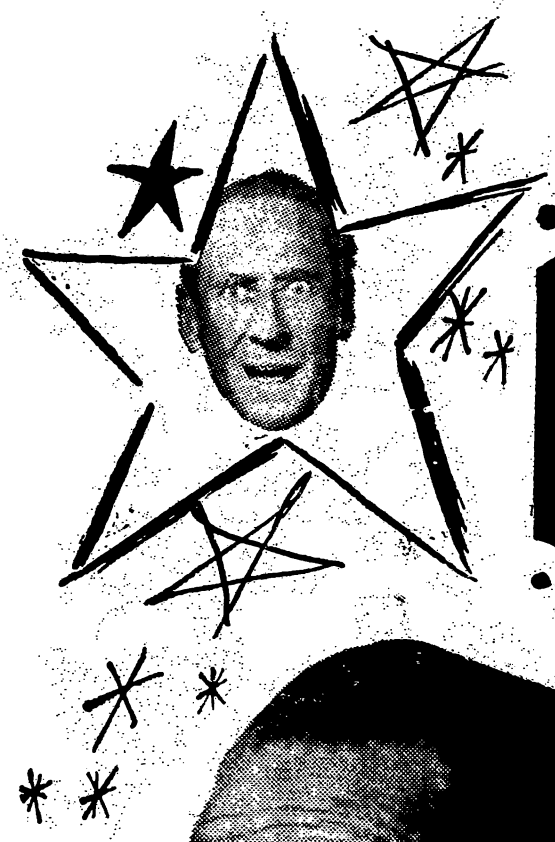
Book pub Maurice Girodias has his La Grande Severine, where a series of rooms all serve food and give Russo music, jazz singer Mae Mercer or just plain food. The various discotheques for Twisting have snacks. A series of private clubs has records, at least, while at the Gaslight Key club, pretty girls in tights sing, serve and dance. There's also an orchestra.

A fabulous DOUBLE CELEBRATION

● "I've said it before and I'll say it again. In my opinion Harry Ritz is the funniest single male in show business. If you don't believe me, go . . . and watch his fans laugh themselves into hysterics over the mad material of Harry and his two zany brothers Jimmy and Al."
—Lee Mortimer, NEW YORK MIRROR.

● ". . . Three of the best comics in the business. They sing, they joke and the whole act is peppered with laughs —belly laughs we mean. And you should see these men dance. Maybe dance isn't the word for it. They seem to float in perfect rhythm."
—Herb Kelly, MIAMI NEWS.

● "Show folks en masse turned up . . . to watch and listen to the frantic Ritz Brothers. (Harry is the one comic who has been known to break up Milton Berle, Jan Murray and other comedians. They never try to top him or heckle him)."
—Louis Sobol, JOURNAL-AMERICAN.



● "The Ritz Brothers came back . . . and these old pros have a quality lacking in today's boys: they work at their trade and they work on their customers until, by sheer force of energy and ability, they slaughter you."
—Robert Sylvester, NEW YORK NEWS.

● "The Ritz Brothers return . . . is a rare and exciting event. Seldom have we seen the reception accorded this zany trio. Twice the packed cafe stood up to applaud. Showmanship is their trade. They're experienced old pros and they know the value . . . the full value of timing. They provide excellent pace and plenty of variety to sustain the laughs from opening to closing."
—Frank Quinn,
NEW YORK MIRROR.

● "THE RITZ BLITZ HITS . . . Jimmy, Harry and Al Ritz, stars of the first magnitude . . . On stage more than an hour . . . they performed at top speed until they were on the verge of collapse. They don't have acts like that in night clubs anymore."
—Gene Knight, JOURNAL-AMERICAN.

● "The Ritz Bros. blew in with gale force and all but knocked down the walls. The Ritz freres didn't only fracture customers, they broke 'em into little bits, pounded 'em into a pulp and then rocked, socked and yocked them till the laughs were turned into gasps. And after being on stage for well over an hour, after which the audience was more exhausted than they were, the Ritzes were given an unusually prolonged standing ovation from a hip opening night, cafe-going set that sounded as if they were hailing a team of Nobel Prize winners. After three decades of headlining the Ritz Bros. are selling one of the great standard routines in show biz. This is an act, which though timed with the precision of a Swiss mechanism, has a madcap quality of uninhibited inspiration as the Ritzes pile bedlam on top of pandemonium in a sight-and-sound pyramid of gags. The basic ingredients of this act have changed little over the years. As usual Harry Ritz is the take-charge pivot man of the trio, demonstrating his unique species of rubber-faced mugging and dazzling variety of dialectical double-talk. The trio probably hit their peak in their 'Continental Gentleman of Song' routine in which Harry Ritz does his Viennese composer burlesque, one of his zaniest bits."

Chicago, Oct. 16.

Of a total of 30 acts who auditioned for the nitery owners last night (Mon.) at the Associated Night Clubs of America conclave here, one hit a jackpot that led to an immediate skein of nine prime bookings. The act was Bob Charles, a 15-year vet of the cabaret boards who, when he appeared before the nitery ops, was admittedly at the nadir of his career. He confessed that he was down to one good suit to work in—and was wearing it.

An eastern comic, Charles had come to Chi only a few days ago because of what he considered a surfeit of comedians in New York.

He said he couldn't even get an audience with Chicago agents until he ran into Harry Breyn, who took him on as a client and book him into the ANCA auditions that very morning. After his sock 20-minute turn before the jaundiced trade audience, he was propositioned not only by the nitery ops but a half dozen agents, most of whom had previously ignored him in their offices.

Among the cafe owners setting dates with Charles were Enrico Banducci hungry i, Frisco), Elizabeth Neustaedter (Exodus, Denver), Jay Landesman (Crystal Palace, St. Louis), Gene Norman (Crescendo, L. A.), Bill Newkirk (Tidelands, Houston), Bill Ball (Embers, Indianapolis), John Volpe (Holiday House, Milwaukee), Harold Van Orman (Northcrest, Fort Wayne), and Oscar Marienthal (Mister Kelly's, Chi.). Auditions ran four hours at the Marienthal—owned Happy Medium, cabaret-Theatre on Rush St.

Cafe Legits

has shown the effectiveness of this policy in many cafes throughout the country.

Wells and his entertainment director, Monte Proser who introduced the cafe-legit policy at the Thunderbird, emphasized that "My Fair Lady," which had Las Vegas' Riviera and The Thunderbird bidding against each other for the rights, will need a lot of legal untangling before it can essay a hotel stand. The condensed rights are obscure and, according to Wells, cannot be touched at this point.

Thunderbird Flourishing

The success of the cafe-legits has also had a marked effect on the Thunderbird. The inn had been a moribund operation before Wells took over and had Proser install "Flower Drum." The late owner, Marion Hicks, had been cutting down considerably and spenders had lost interest.

With its revival, Wells has embarked on a huge building policy, which he hopes will get added interest from top spenders to insure attendance by this gentry even with a longrunning show. For example, construction of a 16-story building with 350 rooms is on the boards. Two convention halls are being built. A race track for quarter horses is also under construction, with a cutting horse competition planned as its first event.

Wells, incidentally, recently purchased $2,520,000 worth of Thunderbird Hotel stock from the Marion Hicks estate, which he is retiring from the open market. The Hicks estate, however, is retaining its interest in the Algiers Hotel, next door to the Thunderbird. Mrs. Lillian Hicks, widow of the owner, is its president.

In addition, the Thunderbird is duplicating some of the N.Y. eatery gimmicks as a gastronomic attraction for Vegasites. A replica of Joe's Oyster Bar in the Grand Central Terminal, N.Y., as well as a branch of Max Asnas' Stage Delicatessen is being built. Wells figures that this, too, can be a lure for the casino habituees.

Dick Gregory Gag Book's Acid Tinge

By ABEL GREEN

Dick Gregory's "From The Back of the Bus" (Dutton; $1.85), a king-size paperback replete with wit, humor and grim racial reflexes to existing prejudices, is more than a comic's topical happenstance. It is a sardonic commentary on the times, done primarily with wit and wisdom, most of it with good humor though not a little of it in anger. For even a $5,000-a-week comedian, whose copyright ownership of this property, for example, already bespeaks big corporate business (tax writeoffs, etc.)—for he is now Dick Gregory Enterprises Inc.—can be angry.

His barbs, however, are two-edged and if the Faubuses and the Barnetts and their constituents have local reasons against integration, Gregory is one not loath to spotlight it for appraisal from whichever perspective. From his teeoff dedication to the Great Emancipator—"if it wasn't for Abe, I'd still be on the open market"—to one of his signoff gags ("I was planning to write much more, but prudence dictates we end it here. Gov. Faubus may ask for equal space")—it is a breezy, readable book that will enjoy wide circulation.

The rapier shafts are brilliant betimes, the minor-key observations redolent with sagacity. And the overall tenor is something the mugg and the intellectual will dig.

The entire 125 pages, illustrated by Jerry Yulsman's photos, are cannily subdivided into categaries that range from America, Alabama, apartments, Brotherhood Week, buses through fairytales ("White Christmas"; "once there was a little Black Riding Hood"), education, employment, Freedom Riders, housing, hypocrisy, KKK, segregation, sit-ins, southerners, with lots more in between.

Hugh M. Hefner, editor-publisher of Playboy at whose Chi Playboy Club Gregory first came to attention, wrote the foreword. He credits his "young, inexperienced but inexhaustible p.a. Tim Boxer" for "badgering a Time mag writer into watching Gregory work. Time's spotlighting gave Gregory impetus, followed by Jack Paar's videxposure which is when VARIETY and the trade furthered Gregory's full-fledged professional impact. Bob Orden did a capital editing job. Whoever is responsible for the many bright gags has probably supplied beaucoup cuffo material to other comics, ofay or colored.

In sum the book may be an historical document of our times. It has the same impact as the Will Rogerisms of the '20s but is more significant in the new brand of social militancy that is indiginous to the times—not only the NAACP, CORE, integration, Freedom Riders, but the new African states and the global races and peoples of all hues.

a hike of $28,000 from last year's take. The BBC will pay $56,000 for the right to televise the programs on Sunday, Nov. 4. Under a mutual arrangement, the BBC and commercial tv will in future alternate in screening the gala. ATV has voluntarily agreed not to put on its normal London Palladium tv show, since it could provide competition.

A number of theatres will have to be closed on the night to enable several stars to be available. Macdonnell told VARIETY: "I estimate that it will cost Moss' Empires around $40,000 in loss of receipts and running expenses to stage the show." Robert Nesbitt, again will handle the Royal Variety Performance for the stage.

early Vaude-de-Vire to ultramodern Vegas and video exposures.

What emerges dominantly in Christopher's diverting book on the craft and skill of abracadabra is the fundamental showmanship. This is a commanding quality which is in sharp contrast to what has been dominantly lacking in recent show biz years.

"Panorama of Magic" is almost too esoteric a tag for what is real savvy insight on an ancient and universal art form of sorcery and showmanship, universal in appeal because the great Chinese now-you-see-it-now-you-don't illusionists and their European (later American and other Occidental) counterparts can always play to audiences interchangeably and independent of racial, cultured or linguistic barriers. Abel.

Establishment, London

London, Oct. 12.

"The Second City," with Bill Alton, Del Close, Mina Kolb, Dick Schaal, Avery Schreiber; staged by Paul Sills; $3.50 minimum for members, $4.25 for guests.

In an exchange arrangement, The Establishment cast has gone to the U.S., where it has already opened in Chicago, prior to Washington and New York, and the Second City company has come to London. It's the first anniversary bill for The Establishment, now recognized as Soho's popular satirical nightclub, and which has achieved a phenomenal success in its first year.

The Establishment's own resident artists made their mark by their biting satire, which was always witty, though occasionally crude and coarse. It was also ferociously topical, with many pointed out well-timed comments on news events of the day. By comparison, the Second City company from Chicago is a minor league entry.

True, there is some satire, but it's mainly mild stuff, and there's precious little of the devastating commentary on events that always distinguished The Establishment's productions. There's also an attempt at improvising a song, using key words provided by the audience. However, it is only moderately effective.

This reviewer caught the late show on opening night, which started at 12:30 a.m. and finished 80 minutes later, with just a brief intermission. The material was inadequate to sustain a show of this length. Drastic editing would help enormously, and would give the production a tighter and more controlled look. Most of the individual items, many with promising ideas, drag on unnecessarily, and there is rarely the essential punch line to ram home the message.

Out of more than a dozen items only two or three make more than a moderate impact, though it must be admitted that most of the paying customers laughed uproariously at the company's antics. One novel bit is a clockwork man, who goes into action for a few seconds when a coin is pressed into his hand.

A suggestion that "Jack and the Beanstalk" is subversive literature makes for a diverting, though overlong, parent-teachers' association meeting; and finally, there's a very funny and almost devastating takeoff of "West Side Story."

But too much of the show is obviously contrived, and other sketches dealing with the admission of Red China to the United Nations, nuclear preparation, and the spread of U.S. influence in Latin America miss their targets.

It's a pity because most of the cast is talented, particularly Avery Schreiber, who has a warm and uninhibited manner. Bill Alton, Del Close and Dick Schaal make engaging contributions, but there is indifferent femme support from Mina Kolb. Paul Sills has the directorial credit. Unfortunately, he seems to have given the artists too much of a free hand. Myro.

Adolphus Hotel, Dallas

Dallas, Oct. 9.

"Bottoms Up, '62," musical revue produced by Joe Peterson; directed by Breck Wall; special material by Wall, Bill Fanning; choreography, Buster Cooper; costumes, Peterson; features Bill Fanning, Breck Wall, Carol Stovall, Penny Robbins, Suzanne Buhrer, Hazel Rippe, Claire Brooks, Sally Ransone, Jan Sutton, Max Callaway; Ray Herrera Orch (7); $1.50-$2 cover.

This is the sixth intimate revue produced locally in the last four years by the successful Joe Peterson-Breck Wall team and, with the multiple talents of performer-writer Bill Fanning, they score again. This fourth edition of "Bottoms Up," retaining surefire sketches and blackouts from three previous hits, should bring heavy patronage to the plush Century Room for the balance of 1962, for which it's aimed.

The sophisticated, swiftly-paced 50-minute show packs lotsa entertainment with the oldies, but goodies, and also contains fresh sketches and some new blackouts. The tablers alertly respond to the energetic offerings, and the mitting is admission that even the bluest lines are acceptable as the 10 local talents dance, sing, skit and kid away to a begoff.

Fanning is a standout as a sophisticated roue in "Miss Meadows, It's Time to Go Home," in a skit comparing English tea parties with American soirees, both holdovers, and a new funny, "Forthia." Penny Robbins capably belts a risible vocal, "Evil."

Carol Stovall clicks in skits, "This Is Your Life," with Wall, and "Don't Futz Around," with Fanning. Wall scores as a tipsy airline pilot on a champagne flight and a holdover must for the girls, "Mink, Mink, Mink," pulls yocks.

The seven femmes score easily, and with numerous costume changes there's mucho gam display. Max Callaway, a fine hoofer, leads the girls through exciting terp routines, especially clicking with "African Waltz" enhanced by strobelite. House maestro Ray Herrera ably conducts with fine showtime backing, and provides good dance sessions for the patrons.

Revue, with options, expects to stay until New Year's, with a new Fanning-authored revue, "Razzma-tazz," to follow. Bark.

Freddie's, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Oct. 11.

June Christy, Jack Sheldon & Joe Maini, Ian Bernard, Frank Oliveri Trio; $2-$2.50 cover.

A June Christy or a Julie London still pulls big crowds to niteries in Minneapolis. Miss Christy is doing socko biz this chapter at Freddie's, where most name acts have been falling flat during past nine months. Room was crammed to near capacity at midweek show caught.

There's no mystery why Miss Christy continues to be solid boxoffice. In her voice, looks and dress, class stands out. Her faultless chirping makes for marvelously pleasant listening. Thrush mixes up her selections nicely, doing an expert job on all offerings including a near impromptu effort on "Misty" which she hadn't rehearsed.

As a jazz vocalist, of course, she still rates at the top. Miss Christy benefits substantially from the first-rate backing she receives from Ian Bernard, her pianist-conductor, and the Frank Oliveri trio.

Show's curtain raiser is a new comedy team, Jack Sheldon & Joe Maini (see New Acts). Pair are accomplished musicians, but their comic dialog and songs are too thin at present to be suitable for leading supper clubs.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Mel Torme, Johnnie (Scat) Davis Orch (7); $2.50-$3 cover.

It's been too long since Mel Torme last played a local nitery date, but at this opening he delighted the aficionados and should draw new fans, plus hefty biz, in a fortnight here. Opening with "Get Happy," he works easily and his casual gag tossing and banter with the musicians reaps rapport.

Torme, perched on a stool, scores heavily with a fine songalog—"Where Can I Go Without You," "It's All Right With Me," "When the World Was Young" and "Hey, Look Me Over." The show savvy comes through when, at the piano, yet singer pipes "Lulu's Back in Town," "Blue Moon" and parodies lyrics to "I Can't Get Started With You" and adds an uptempo "Mountain Greenery" for big palming.

Versatile baritone takes over drums for solid hide hitting on "Jump for Joy." He gets maestro Scat Davis on for a wild, ad libbed lyric session of "Old Man River" that welds the fans. Between tunes Torme tells "inside" show biz yarns and gets yocks with a series of mistaken song titles. After a big 45-minute score, he has 'em standing in a singsong of "The Eyes of Texas."

Davis returns to the Empire Room for this outing and opens the show vocalizing his theme, "Hooray for Hollywood." Anita Grant clicks with "Bill Bailey," bearded Murray Horn belts "Live, Live, Live" and Frank Miller scores with the comic "Please, Mr. Custer," to preface the zingy twice-nightly shows. Davis' band cuts the entire show expertly and loads the floor with terp addicts.

Torme stays through Oct. 17, with The Mello-Larks (4) up next for a fortnight. Bark.

On Broadway, S. F.

San Francisco, Oct. 13.

"Six Appeal," revue in two acts. With Erica Speyer, Sally Smaller, Corinne Mason, Mike Kitay, Ned Hutchinson, Robert Rawlings. Musical director and pianist, David Williams. Presented by Tom Gee and Sheilah Dorsey; admission $1-$3.

Up to midnight Keith Rockwell and John Ward's 400-seat On Broadway cabaret theatre here is Equity, with "Yum Yum Tree" at $2.20-$4.4$, starring Hans Conried who replaced Russell Nype Saturday (13). From midnight on, Friday asnd Saturdays, it's AGVA, because "Six Appeal" which starts then has no story line but is straight revue. Neither show plays Sunday. Seats have drink and ashtray slots.

Since AGVA minima are much different, presenters and house hadn't broken even after two weekends. Rockwell and Ward also own nearby Casa Madrid, with an excellent flamenco group from Spain current, and two Purple Onions—here folknik) and on Hollywood's Sunset Strip (flamenco), "Yum Yum Tree" and "Six Appeal" are their feetwetters in legit.

The young sextet performing the 20-odd "Six Appeal" numbers recall—except for not writing all their own material—the Revue of the '40s, which included Judy Holliday, Adolph Green and Betty Comden. One of the femmes even resembles Miss Comden. One of the men, Mike Kitay, directed the show and wrote some added material including a nifty song satire, "Good Morning America." All are San Franciscans, four newly professional.

Strongest pieces are a song, "I'm Glad I'm Not a Man," by Ogden Nash (lyrics) and Vernon Duke, done well by Sally Smaller; "String Quartet" by Paul Nassau, with Miss Smaller, Kitay, Robert Rawlings and Ned Hutchinson; "Auf Wiedersehn" by Canadians Stan Daniels and Ray Jessel, with above plus Erica Speyer (whose style somewhat resembles Joyce Grenfell's) and Corinne Kason.

These kids are loaded with talent, but direction and playing are heavy. Not that the smallish audience seemed to mind—some of the ripest mugging reaped yocks. But these clever Californians might achieve better results with less sweat. It would certainly suit most of the material better.

One number about incest seemed supersick, but again many in the audience howled. David Williams' musical direction and 88ing were good, with capable assist from Gordon Cox on skins. Gard.

Monticello, Framingham

Framingham, Mass., Oct. 12.

Bobby Rydell (Rocky Valentine, conductor), Charlie Stavin, Harrison & Kossi, Johnny Archer Orch (13); $5 weekday, $7 Saturday minimum.

In for a 10-day stand, Bobby Rydell is making his first appearance in Caesar Tamagno's 1,3000-seater on the Boston-Worcester pike. He sets a fast pace with rock 'n' 'roll, ballads and impresh bits to solid biz. On preem night Thursday (11) he drew 700 and won a repeat date.

Opening with "I've Got a Lot of Living," Rydell segues to "Sway," "Black Magic" and special material number that's slick. In "They Don't Write Them Like That Any More," he takes off on the oldies like "Mairzy Doats," "Flat Foot Floogie," "Caledonia" and others for big audience reaction.

He scores with medley of rock 'n' roll hits, "Wild One," "I Want To Thank You" and gives out with a big "Volare." Diminutive piper shows he's okay in the ballad department with big "Around the World," and nice projection on "Girl That I Marry" with echo chamber effect.

His impresh bits also come off sharp. The songster is pro all the way, fast moving and weaving in terp steps for good showmanship. He winds with his own version of "Mammy."

Charlie Slavin, standup comic with Irish stories, gets over big with tales of his Uncle Dinny's drinking and fantasies. The slim dark haired comic makes his Irish studies lively with his brogue and finales with a good rendition of "Donegal."

Harrison & Kossi open the show with interpretive adagio routines replete with lifts and spins. The two dark-haired terpers are impressive in their interpretive adagio and win rounds of applause. Rocky Valentine conducts Rydell's numbers with eclat. Johnny Archer cuts the rest of the show with classy snap.

This show closes Saturday (20). Jane Morgan comes in for a one night sold out party Sunday (21). Club then goes dark for three days. Xavier Cugat and Abbe Lane open Thursday (25). Guy.

Los Angeles, Oct. 12.

Billy Gray, April Stevens, Nino Tempo, Herb Dell Trio; $1.50 cover, two-drink minimum.

Unless there is a complete reversal of opening night form, it appears that the bottom half of the bill may be generating the lion's share of the action for the current three-week attraction at the Slates. Headliner Billy Gray seems a bit out of his element at this spot, forcing him to reach and strain in his efforts to break in new material.

On the other hand, April Stevens and Nino Tempo are a hot and dynamic new team, and their exciting work figures to spur profitable word-of-mouth in the local entertainment colony.

Ace dialectician Gray—the Earl of Fairfax—will have to depend on his most loyal followers for support if he sticks by the tasteless new routine he launched opening night Thursday (11). Something old, something new, something borrowed, mostly blue is the formula for his turn, which ran too long at an hour on the opener.

Act features several song parodies, mostly swishy or smutty in nature. Gray inevitably relies on overworked Yiddish "laugh" words or idioms to bail him out of difficulty, in much the same fashion that many comics rely desperately on words like "Brooklyn" for their ace in the hole.

Atco wax stars Miss Stevens and Tempo serve up a slick, polished 20-minute act, wisely begging off at the peak of their momentum. Pair work together snugly on several vocals, split for individual solos, then reunite with Tempo on sax or guitar and Miss Stevens doing the chirping. High spots are the Twist-tempoed disclick version of "Sweet and Lovely," a smooth "Desefinado," Miss Stevens' solid rendition of "What Kind Of Fool Am I?" and sexy delivery of "Teach Me Tiger" plus Tempo's torrid "Largo" medley on sax. Tube.

Isy's, Vancouver, B.C.

Jackie Gayle, Joe & Eddie, Bobby Hales Quintet; $1.50 admission.

The current scene, with its political, social and topical foibles, is a natural target for hip comedian Jackie Gayle, and he makes pointed and trenchant use of it. His material is as fresh as this morning's headlines, and ranges from wry remarks on the racial ruckus in Mississippi to pertinent slants on British Columbia's own perennial problem people, the nudie-noted Sons of Freedom Doukhobors.

Gayle also displays an acute ability for mimicry, and offers sharp impressions of Hollywood and show biz personalities, standouts being Lawrence Welk, Charles Laughton, Louis Armstrong, Pearl Bailey and Louis Prima. He finishes this skein with what could soon become a standard for other mimers, a devastating portrait of Walter Brennan as President Kennedy. Gayle has a keen ear for vocal nuances and injects his takeoffs with just enough accuracy to identify and the tabasco bite of satirical wit to sting.

While some of his material and style is reminiscent of early Lenny Bruce, Gayle keeps clear of any objectionable references and establishes a clear and unique satirist identity in his own right. On show caught, he did non-stop 35 minutes.

Show opens with Joe & Eddie, folk-oriented pair from San Francisco, accompanied by guitarist Bill Munday. Baritone-tenor combinations runs through a songalog of folk, gospel and ballad tunes that opens loud with "There's A Meeting Here Tonight."

Bobby Hales quintet backs expertly and Richie Walters, sans notes, emcees. Arthur Lee Simpkins next up, with Duke Ellington band slated for a November gig. Shaw.

Shoreham, D.C.

Washington, Oct. 9.

Shelley Berman, Teddi King, Bob Cross Orch (14), Steve Kisley Orch (5), Shoreham Strings (8); $3 cover.

Shelley Berman, sparking the greatest volume of advance reservations in the history of the Shoreham Hotel's posh Blue Room, came into Washington as if he were playing Schenectady. The political capital may be a vast storehouse from which other comedians extract endless gags, but not Berman.

Berman opens with an announcement that he wouldn't have any D.C. jokes. "I see nothing funny about Washington," he avers. He also covered himself early for use of familiar material later. Noting his exposure on tv and LP records, he claimed it was a problem "to play before an audience when everybody's lips moved with mine."

Judging from the heavy yocking and loud mitting given him by an enthusiastic sellout crowd, the Berman apologies were excessive and unnecessary. If the material was often familiar, it was received with hearty approval. In fact, ringsiders shouted request for old favorites from Berman's first album.

The Bernie Bralove swankery is a huge room, and it was hushed to catch every Berman line. Such vast areas may be a gamble for some standup comedians. But Berman, who has not previously played a D.C. nitery, has the talent to catch and hold attention.

Not only did Berman refuse to yield to the trite temptation to joke about D. C. in D.C., he also resisted going off color. His act here is clean enough for any child to watch.

Teddi King, a little looker with a big voice, gets the show off to a rousing opener with several tunes, including "Lady Is a Tramp," "Mr. Wonderful" and "Am I Blue?" She and Berman haven't played together in a long time, but make an enjoyable billing.

The Bob Cross Orch is up to its familiar high standards, with the Steve Kisley quintet (which moved this season to the Shoreham from the Statler-Hilton here) alternating to keep good music continuous. Eight violinists taken from the two bands and dubbed the "Shoreham Strings" wander among the tables during dinner. The crowd liked the romantic note. Carp.

Harolds, Reno

Reno, Oct. 13.

Vivienne della Chiesa, Dave Barry, Don Conn Orch (10); no cover, no minimum.

After a long summer run of the "Riverboat Follies," Harold Smith Sr. has reverted to his regular two-act policy for the seventh floor Fun Room with Vivienne della Chiesa and Dave Barry initialing the fall-winter season.

Current stanza marks a playback for Miss della Chiesa but a debut for Barry in this room. He's the first standup comic to play the spot, and like the headlining singer, he's a natural for the intimate confines of the room.

Miss della Chiesa is again proving her status as one of the most talented vocalers to play any nitery, and shows her command in any area. With great attention to phrasing and lyrics, she gives tablers a varied catalog including such as "The World Is Mine Tonight," "My Man," "September Song," a gusty "St. Louis Blues" and a medley of Italian titles.

The Don Conn Orch has been augmented to 10 pieces for the singer's engagement and is under the baton of conductor-writer-arranger Allyn Ferguson while Miss della Chiesa is on. Singer is gracious with selections and earns full devotion from audience. Her gowning also rates superlatives.

Barry, for this outing, comes in with much new material but retains some of his better trademarked stuff. He's personable, sells with authority, and (on night caught) had auditors offering much mid-term approval. He touches on the like of the gaming tables, his wife's driving (with attendant sound effects), politics, and television commercials. He also scores in the sound effect department with an original thing called "I Like Sounds."

Miss della Chiesa is in for an eight-week stand through Dec. 2. Barry exits on Oct. 28 to be replaced by the Half Brothers. Long.

House Review

Apollo, N. Y.

Fred Barr-Doc Wheeler Gospel Caravan with the Swanee Quintet, Caravans (5), Soul Stirrers (4), Andrewlettes (5), Rasberry Singers (4), Gilbert Atkins, Irene Derico; "Desert Patrol" (U-I).

While the current gospel show fronted by deejays Fred Barr and Doc Wheeler runs long by any standard (close to two hours), it still has a nicely building pace and real impact at the wind.

Latter element is provided by the Caravans, possibly five of the finest religioso voices extant, who can chant, wail, shout, scream and plain sing while at all times remaining musical. Girls rate individual intros and beg off to shouts for more.

This group could easily follow Sister Clara Ward's lead into Birdland and the Vanguard. Along with a remarkable number of other fine gospel singers and groups, the Caravans are out of Chicago, which could mark old Number Two as the heartland of the idiom as it once was for jazz.

Former Caravan singer Inez Andrews, has formed her own quint, the Andrewlettes, a strong group paced by the powerful and deftly dramatic vocal skills of the leader. Miss Andrews is a bit lengthy in the preachment, which could be subbed to good effect by more in the vocal groove.

Soul Stirrers and Swanee Quint are veteran and solid, and the Rasberry Singers quartet open, scoring primarily on the fine contralto voice of the group's lead. Guest perfomer on show caught was pre-teen Irene Derico, a poised and gifted youngster who has a running start on the future. Still another unique feature is the gospel narrative of legit actor Gilbert Atkins, whose poetic story of creation is related in very stirring terms, but still has a definite refinement in contrast to the emoting around it. Bill.

Los Angeles, Oct. 16.

Mort Sahl has been named defendant in a Superior Court suit filed by Norman Granz, who described himself as comic's former personal manager and is owed $6,531 under an oral contract of March 25, 1959 in which he said he was to receive 10% of Sahl's gross earnings as consultant and adviser on engagements.

Amount demanded by Granz, who pointed out he did not obtain employment for the comedian, comprises 10% of $65,310 assertedly earned by Sahl during the period of March 25 to June 21, 1959. Sahl, according to the complaint, terminated agreement June 21, 1959.

ART PERRI
Songs
20 Mins.
Gay Nineties, Minneapolis

Baritone Art Perri is a surefire comer. This 22-year-old Philadelphian was the winner of the first Mario Lanza Institute scholarship award and is a protege of the Lanza family which first heard him sing in Wildwood, New Jersey, and took him under their collective wing. Perri started singing at the age of nine on a local tv show, was a classmate at South Philadelphia highschool of such well established pop vocalists as Chubby Checker, Fabian, Frankie Avalon and Bobby Rydell. For the past year he has been taking voice lessons from Bobby Tucker at MGM and has worked in Los Angeles at the Coconut Grove and Moulin Rouge.

His backers, and there appear to be plenty of them, think he's ready now. His first engagement at this stage bar bistro has been extended from two to four weeks. Gay Nineties is advertising him as a star in the making, advising nightclubgoers that "it's one of the few chances we have to say, 'I heard him when . . .'" He rates as the top vocalist to appear in this spot.

From here Perri returns to his home town for a fortnight stay at Palumbo's and in February he's slated to make a screen test for Joe Pasternak at MGM.

Perri definitely has a lot going for him. Tall, well-built, good looking youngster is more than a little remindful of Lanza. He boasts a fine set of pipes, has a wide repertoire of songs ranging from Italian arias to pop tunes and jazz offerings and has plenty of self-confidence to go with his obvious talent. For a beginner in the nightculb trade, he also exhibits an amazing degree of poise and stage presence. Slight drawback is a distracting tendency to roam too much when he's performing. Otherwise, he's tops in all respects.

His future in nitery biz appears set. Singer should also be an excellent bet for tv, films and the stage. Rees.

LOS COBALLOS (3)
Spanish Dance
12 Mins.
Palumbo's, Philly

Fast and flashy terping is provided by young trio (two boys and a girl), who stem from this country but put the finishing touches on their routines in Madrid. They kick off with a castanet-clicking, heel-stomping Andalusian number. The girl is an attractive senorita and so engrossed in her dancing she went through a solo turn with a faulty zipper and slipping jacket with complete unconcern.

The male dancers duet in a fast zapateado, Spanish clog dance, enlivened by the addition of long poles with which they accent the beat. They are rejoined by the girl for a gypsy flamenco number and close with a lively jota, a Spanish peasant number which brings back the castanet effects. Act is obviously new, but the youngsters are adept and make good warmup turn for show. Gagh.

JENNIFER ADAMS

Broadway Inn, Portland, Ore.

Blond and stacked Jennifer Adams has been chirping in niteries for nearly three years, but never filed under New Acts. Many customers would have been satisfied just to ogle her. Pipes are pleasant and adequate with ballads the best bet. She displays salesmanship all the way.

Miss Adams needs counsel on repertoire and special material to get her on the road to the major league. Gal too frequently abandons her forte in favor of not so becoming tunes. Although, Miss Adams is not one to cause an audience to lose interest, her songalog would be more impressive in a slightly larger room with better presentation by the bosses. With a little more experience and solid management Jennifer Adams could have a winning stint. Fere.

JACK SHELDON & JOE MAINI
Comedy, songs
25 Mins.
Freddie's, Minneapolis

A pair of topnotch jazz musicians, Jack Sheldon and Joe Maini are striking out on the comedy route, one they may find a bit bumpy. Sheldon, former trumpet player with Stan Kenton and Woody Herman bands, has been working with warbler Julie London for past year and has been doing some short comedy stints. When Miss London took sick on the final night of her engagement here three weeks ago, Sheldon filled in for her and was such a hit that Freddie's boniface Pete Karalis brought him back, putting him on the bill with June Christy.

For this first crack at laff-getting, Sheldon has teamed up with saxophonist Joe Maini who has also played with several top name bands. While Sheldon drew raves here as a solo, duo act needs considerable refining. Pair's material, much of it original songs and impreshes, is too uneven for a supper club routine. Sheldon does most of the singing, mainly sicknik lyrics and parodies, in a so-so voice. Straight-faced Maini has the appearance of a comic but needs better lines.

Twosome show occasional flashes of promise. A takeoff on an army indoctrination session include some good yocks, and Sheldon is funny in an impersonation of a sideshow character. But the act needs more "A" material as well as plenty of time to polish timing and delivery. Rees.

MICHEL LOUVAIN
Songs
34 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Michel Louvain, young Quebec chanter whose popularity is upping among French Canadians mainly via his Apex disks, has a clicko set of pipes and a song library to suit them. Stint shows some lack of attention to staging and dominance of tunes in French which is a good tongue for romantic songs as long as there are enough customers who understand it. Louvain works nicely in English and should splice more English-language songs into the stanza except where his audience is dominantly French-speaking, as in most Quebec location.

Chanter has had some exposure in eastenr Canadian and Puerto Rican rooms plus television on the CBC webs. He has a restricted US circuit set for fall and early winter, then back to the Caribbean. Add improved staging and Michel Louvain can be strong material for niteries, lounges, tv, radio, disks. Gorm.

Agencies' Stars

of a contract. For example, Gordon & Sheila MacRae have nabbed a healthy lineup of dates from United Talent Management but haven't signed a deal.

The agencies by now have departed from the crude gimmicks that prevailed when MCA first went out of the agency business. During that period one office offered a prominent team a Rolls-Royce. Some were willing to represent some teams for 5% instead of the normal 10%. Others offered to take care of a lot of administration expenses, such as tax work.

But despite all the attractive deals being made available on one-shot basis, some acts may figure "who needs a permanent office?" They can pay-as-you-go just so long as agencies come up with their best deals. Cary Grant, for example, hasn't had an agent in years yet has had some of the top jobs the film industry has to offer. There is a danger to agencies that other performers may fall into the same viewpoint.

Others, however, feel the need of a "home." For instance, George Gobel who had been taking some offers from UTM, settled down with the Morris office. This type of talent feels a necessity to find someone who will be interested in their artistic and personal welfare and a permanent office is the ticket.

'Fiorello' Panned by London Critics, May Get Moderate Run on Low Nut

London, Oct. 16.

Although the production drew a record gross in its Bristol tryout and was given an enthusiastic hand by first-nighters at the Piccadilly Theatre last Monday (8), "Fiorello" got generally cool reviews in the London morning papers. The only unqualified rave came from the Times.

Bernard Levin's Daily Mail review was headlined, "This tale is Un-American, Unoriginal, Unmemorable, and Un-Good" and he thought that the introductory commentary retarded "the already slow production almost to paralysis point." He also suggested that an American leading man should have been imported.

David Nathan of the Daily Herald, rated it "a middling kind of musical," but he said the book is "almost humorless and makes its dramatic peaks with all the predictability of one of those Hollywood glossies of the lives of great showmen—as La Guardia was."

Fergus Cashin, the Daily Sketch reviewer, hit out, "The acting was hopeless, the production was helpless, the voices were useless and the whole thing seemed endless." In his view only two tunes registered, "thanks to Bryan Blackburn and Peter Reeves" (a cabaret act playing two bit roles—Ed.) and he gladly named them ("Politics and Poker" and "Little Tin Box") in order "to say something nice about this show."

A qualified nod came from Herbert Kretzmer, of the Daily Express, who reckoned that for about half its running time "Fiorello!" deserved its exclamation mark, and commented, "In these days, when good musicals are harder to find in London than good parking spaces, that may well be enough." However, he thought the show suffered from a "kind of bittiness" and more seriously from the inadequacies of the locally recruited cast.

T. C. Worsley, in the Financial Times, considered the result "decidedly bizarre, an unhappy marriage between a real subject

Dallas, Oct. 16.

The State Fair Musicals made an estimated net profit of $20,000 for the 12-week 1962 season, managing director Tom Hughes reported last week to the board of directors. It was the first profitable summer run since 1957.

The 21st season showed a record total gross of $631,597 for six show. The Carol Burnett Show set two records, biggest gross ($184,959) and largest attendance (57,745) in a fortnight stand, including 10 sellouts in the 14 performances.

The 1962 run, June 18-Sept. 9, opened with a dusty $180,000 advance season ticket sale against the Musicals biggest budget in history, $546,000. The Burnett show pulled one-third of the 1962 nut, however. The five other shows, each in a two-week stand, and b.o. takes were: "Wildcat" ($75,383); "Carousel" ($88,363); "Gypsy" ($91,588); "The Merry Widow" ($92,047) and "South Pacific" ($99,257).

The State Fair Musicals board of directors has authorized the officers and the State Fair of Texas to start the necessary legal procedures to dissolve the corporation as the first step toward formation of a new organization to take over the operation of the annual summer season. Another meeting of the board will be held later to actually dissolve the corporation.

Preliminary steps toward forming the new civic group to take over sponsorship of the Musicals have already been taken, with the election of a steering committee which is drafting a charter application.

Chi's Sarah Siddons Nod To Florence Henderson

Chicago, Oct. 16.

Florence Henderson, who appeared here in "Sound of Music" during the 1961-62 legit season, won the 10th annual Sarah Siddons Award as actress of the year in Chicago. Runnersup were Margaret Leighton and Bette Davis, both of whom had appeared in "Night of Iguana." Miss Henderson will receive the award at a banquet this fall.

Voting is done by a closed group of social register theatregoers and drama critics. Miss Henderson is the second performer in a musical to win the Siddons statuette, the first being Anne Rogers, who won it last year for her performance in "My Fair Lady."

Plan Musical Of 'The Matchmaker'

Thornton Wilder's capitulation from his longstanding refusal to permit musicalized versions of his plays has resulted in another of his works being tagged for legituner transition. The playwright, who recently okayed a projected musical treatment of his Pulitzer prize-winner, "The Skin of Our Teeth," has now given the green light for a words-and-music treatment of his comedy, "The Matchmaker."

The musical version of "Matchmaker" is planned for Broadway presentation by David Merrick, who produced the straight-play edition on Broadway in 1955, in partnership with the Theatre Guild. Librettist Michael Stewart, whose credits include the book for Merrick's production of "Carnival," has been commissioned to adapt "Matchmaker."

The musical adaptation of "Skin" is to be made by the librettist-lyricist team of Betty Comden and Adolph Green, composer Leonard Bernstein and choreographer-director Jerome Robbins. A producer hasn't yet been designated.

"Matchmaker," a rewrite by Wilder of his 1938 Broadway flop, "The Merchant of Yonkers," based on an old farce by Johann Nestroy, was a Main Stem click with much of the credit for its success attributed to Tyrone Guthrie's staging. The play, in which Ruth Gordon, Eileen Herlie and Loring Smith costarred, and Robert Morse and Arthur Hill featured, was subsequently made into a film by Paramount with Shirley Booth, Anthony Perkins, Shirley MacLaine and Paul Ford costarred.

The Merrick-Guild presentation was capitalized at $70,000 and as of last June 30 had netted $207,549, all of which has been distributed equally between the management and the backers. That represents a return to the latter of nearly 150% on their investment.

The musicalization of both "Skin of Our Teeth" and "Matchmaker" were suggested by Wilder's agent, Harold Freedman, and the latter persuaded the author to approve the projects.

Rep Groups At Princeton To Produce 'Fantasticks'

The professional repertory company of the McCarter Theatre, Princeton, N. J., will make its first fall appearance next Friday-Saturday (19-20) and Oct. 26-27 in "The Fantasticks."

The musical will precede the November start of the McCarter's "Mediterranean Heritage" series.

SURE IT'S GRAND DO-IT-YOURSELF

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Dublin, Oct. 16.

The Dublin Drama Festival is over, and that means that the 1962 season of European festivals is over. (Well, almost. Berlin, which started at the same time, is still on.) There were about 200 Festivals in Europe this year, not counting the film fests and the jazz jinks. It all started with the Paris Fest (Theatre des Nations), which is the most ambitious of such shenanigans. Two-week Dublin derring-do may be the most fun.

Everything they present in Dublin during Festival is not good. Far from it. But which other city in the world can offer a two week romp consisting of 22 first nights—14 of them new plays specially written for the occasion? This nasochistic tourist dutifully limped to all and found only four impossible to sit through.

A Small Town

Dublin is different from all other theatre festivals in that it concentrates chiefly on home talent. Dublin is a small town, as world centers go, with barely over half a million inhabitants. To get that many plays done in the prescribed time, the city's five theatres work double-time, a bus station newsreel theatre is pressed into service, a gas works "company" auditorium is a first-night rendezvous. The pubs are full of theatre talk, the taxi drivers discuss show biz with their clients. After one grueling day—a matinee performance, an evening performance of a second play, and a midnight showing of a third—this reporter returned to his hotel to find that the elevator was not func-

West End 'Blitz' Nets 14G Weekly

London, Oct. 16.

Lionel Bart's "Blitz," believed to be the most expensive British musical ever staged in the West End, has paid off its investment within five months, and is now showing a steady weekly profit.

The musical, presented by Donald Albery, opened at the Adelphi Theatre last May 8, at an estimated investment of nearly $170,000. It's grossing around $28,000 weekly at a $4.25 top, and netting nearly $14,000.

Lionel Bart is the author of the show's music and lyrics, and also did the staging, besides sharing the book credit with Joan Maitland. The production was brought into the West End after a short tryout engagement at a neighborhood picture theatre.

Bart also wrote book, music and lyrics for "Oliver," which has been running at the New Theatre since June, 1960, also under the Donald Albery banner. An American edition, presented by David Merrick, is currently playing a preliminary engagement in San Francisco and is due Dec. 27 at the Imperial, N.Y.

PROPOSE ARTS CENTER IN MIDTOWN TORONTO

Toronto, Oct. 16.

Construction of a $25,000,000 arts centre surrounding St. Lawrence Hall has been proposed by the Toronto Planning Board. The nine-acre site is east of the O'Keefe Center, near the Lake Ontario shoreline.

The project will be called the St. Lawrence Center of the Arts, and will include a 1,500-seat theatre, a smaller repertory house, a concert hall, a gallery of modern art, restaurant, underground parking, an office building for film distributors and theatrical agencies.

The financing will be from public and private sources.

Merrick Steps Up Taubman Attack, Using 'World' Quote Ads in Greek, Radio Spot Blurbs in Doubletalk

Talent and management attacks on critics are an old story in legit, usually taking the form of brief outbursts of indignation. In contrast, Broadway producer David Merrick's needling of N.Y. Times reviewer Howard Taubman, has become a continuing campaign of ridicule.

Merrick, whose publicity savvy has been apparent for some time in his feuds with aisle-sitters, has taken a new tack in his latest campaign against Taubman. The producer is retaliating against the critic's pan of his latest Broadway presentation, "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off," with advertisements making fun of the Times' review of the British musical import.

It's significant that Merrick has not followed the conventional course of assailing the reviewer for panning the show, but has attacked Taubman as being "dull" and "unreadable" and "incomprehensible." He has also used wit, which generally sticks more than indignation and serious condemnation might do.

A series of display quote ads being run in the New York dailies on "World" includes one devoted to an excerpt from Taubman's review of the show. It differs from the other ads in that the quote is printed in classic Greek. The name of the musical is in English, as is Taubman's credit line and box-office data. In addition, Merrick has launched a new radio campaign for the show in which recorded excerpts from Taubman's review are read by doubletalk comic Al Kelly.

The Greek-language ads, which Merrick claims constitute an accurate translation of parts of Taubman's review, have been running in the Herald Tribune, News, Mirror and World-Telegram. The producer says that copy for the ad is submitted daily to the Times and regularly turned down. When asked for a translation of the Greek, the producer replied, "Ask Taubman."

Radio stations carrying the Kelly gibberish include WCBS, WINS, WPAT, WNEW, WVNJ and WMCA. Merrick explains he did not approach the Times-owned WQXR with the commercial because of the station's policy barring recorded or taped advertisements.

Taubman, incidentally, was one of four critics to rap the musical in the New York dailies. The other three morning reviewers also were unfavorable in their appraisal of the show which was endorsed by the aislesitters for the three afternoon papers.

Maurice Bailey Now Prez Of Indie Booking Office

Maurice Bailey, operator of the Shubert Theatre, New Haven, was elected president of the Independent Booking Office at the organization's annual meeting in New York last week. Other officers elected were Herman Shumlin, vice-president; Ernest Rawley, secretary, and Herman Bernstein, treasurer.

Elected to the board of directors were Kermit Bloomgarden, Arthur Cantor, Warren Caro, Albert W. Coote, Alexander H. Cohen, Morris Jacobs, Milton Krantz, Herman Levin, Louis Lotito, James Nederlander, Samuel H. Schwartz, Edward Steinhauer and Robert Whitehead.

'Stop' Repays 50%; Nearly in Black

"Stop the World—I Want to Get Off," now in its third week at the Shubert Theatre, New York, has repaid its investors 50% of their $75,000 investment and has recouped almost all its cost. The British import, which cost around $88,000 to produce, played to mop-up business in its 17-performance Philadelphia tryout. It opened in New York to mixed notices and a hefty advance sale.

The show's move into the black is being slowed down by a heavy advertising budget, including one of the most intensive radio campaigns for a legit musical in recent years. Disk jockey programs have been saturated with paid plugs for the David Merrick production, adding to the extensive promotional ride being given the tuner by the deejays in their frequent spinning of two numbers from the Anthony Newley-starrer.

The record exposure on the d. j. shows, which began prior to the musical's Broadway bow, is centered principally on various waxings of "Gonna Build a Mountain" and "What Kind of Fool Am I?" Some of the platter spinners have also given the musical their own approval and the feeling in the trade is that the combination of paid commercials and cuffo plugs on the disk jockey level has been a principal factor in stimulating public interest in the presentation.

A house record of $73,015 was established by the musical in its final week at the Shubert Theatre, Philly. Several days prior to the show's closing there, ads were placed in the local newspapers stating that the production was sold out for the balance of its Philly run. That failed to deter the subsequent formation of lines of ticket-buyers at the Shubert boxoffice there, however.

The musical, which breaks even on Broadway at around $25,000 weekly, was endorsed by the critics for the afternoon papers in New York, but was rapped by aislesitters for the a.m. dailies. The original London production of the musical, which Newley wrote with Leslie Brisusse, is still running at the Queens Theatre, where it opened July 20, 1961.

Gov. Clinton Hotel, N.Y., Using Legit Ticket Tie

Legit is now being used as a lure in the competition for business among New York hotels. A special plan has been instituted at the Governor Clinton whereby a set price covers a night's lodging plus an orchestra seat to any Broadway show. The price of the package is $16.50 per person or $33 on double occupancy.

The hotel has sent out a mailing piece on the theatre plan and is also placing ads in the resort sections of out-of-town newspapers.

Selling $294,000 Stock To Finance Acquisition Of Little Theatre, N. Y.

A $294,000 public stock offering is being made by the Little Theatre Inc. to finance its takeover of the Little Theatre on West 44th Street, New York. The corporation, of which Roger Euster is president and director, was formed to acquire the premises from the N.Y. Times for $850,000, to operate it and function as a theatrical production firm. It is to take possession of the property next Sept. 1.

Euster has already made a down payment of $50,000 and another $200,000 in cash is to be paid Oct. 25 to close the deal. A first lien mortgage on the premises securing the corporation's note for the $600,000 balance of the purchase price is also due on that date. Shareholders in the corporation are to get their money back if the total stock sale does not reach $110,000 by Oct. 22.

A sale of $110,000 together with a second mortgage loan of $100,000 would provide the required capital for the purchase payment, plus additional cash to cover related expenses. The theatre built in 1913

Joseph Hayes, who harvested a healthy crop of goosepimples with his "Desperate Hours" thriller, has come up with another tensely engrossing work in "Calculated Risk," taken from the London list "Any Other Business," by George Ross and Campbell Singer. It's a unique whodunit, unorthodox in that it does not involve murder or physical violence of any kind, or, for that matter, any actual crime.

The main interest lies in unearthing the guilty individual responsible for an ethical breach in the internal financial affairs of a fabric mill in a New England town. Broadway should take handily to this newcomer, which not only is a challenge to audience wits but also provides an interesting romantic theme as the principals rebound from a potential break-up of their marriage.

The drama involves stock manipulation in a struggle for control of the mill, and the dialog about complex financial affairs needs clarifying. However, the lines are generally exceptionally meaty and provide a number of sparkling clashes.

The entire action takes place in the boardroom of the mill as the directors gather to consider a threatened takeover and liquidation of the company by an outsider. How the outsider got wind of the company's inner affairs, and which member of the board has been playing cagey with the others constitutes the play's mystery. Virtually every member of the board is suspected, but the identity of the culprit is concealed until a punchy climax.

A cast of top-flighters put the production across. Joseph Cotten's version of the man who resents having had everything laid in his lap and wants to accomplish something on his own is credible and engenders admiration. Others who contribute heavily are town banker John Beal, tippling sales manager Roland Winters, venerable board chairman Frank Conroy, labor rep John McQuade, longtime employee Russell Collins, Congressman-board member Gene Blakely, counselor Alexander Clark, and president's younger brother Ben Hayes.

Gerald O'Loughlin is impressive with a Cagney-type delivery. Patricia Medina gives grace to the femme lead. Lois Markle has an excellent tipsy bit, and Dorrit Kelton and Frank Tweddell fill proper niches as faithful company personnel.

Robert Montgomery's staging is excellent and should be even more effective after the tightening-up process. Robert Randolph's single setting of the boardroom is modestly appropriate. Same goes for costuming.

Hollywood might do well to look into "Calculated Risk." Bone.

Philadelphia, Oct. 12.

Paul Gregory & Amy Lynn presentation of comedy in a prologue and two acts, by S. N. Behrman, based on his New Yorker magazine series, "The Days of Duveen." Staged by Vincent J. Donehue; settings, Oliver Smith; costumes, Lucinda Ballard; lighting, Jean Rosenthal; associate producers, Jane Friedlander, Michael Parver. Stars Charles Boyer; features Agnes Moorehead, Ruth White, Henry Daniell, Cliff Hall, Edman Ryan, Betty Sinclair, Reynolds Evans, Lee Richardson, Laurie Main, Brian Bedford. Opened Oct. 11, '62, at the New Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia; $5 top weeknights, $5.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Lord Pengo ..... Charles Boyer
Filbert ..... Laurie Main
Johnson ..... Reynolds Evans
Primrose Dulcy ..... Ruth White
Walter Cannon Brink III ..... Edmon Ryan
Derek Penzo ..... Brian Bedford
Lady Winfield ..... Betty Sinclair
Wilfred Oliver ..... Lee Richardson
Enoch Dulcy ..... Henry Daniell
Miss Swanson ..... Agnes Moorehead
Sylvester Schmatt ..... Cliff Hall

With Charles Boyer furnishing the boxoffice stimulus, "Lord Pengo" might make a modest run, but the S. N. Behrman comedy lacks the strength of plot line and the theatrical dynamics needed for a solid hit. So it's a pleasant evening and an engaging portrayal of an international art wheeler-dealer. The dialogue is intelligent, although plentiful, and there are rewards scattered along the route. But the comedy is a doubtful prospect and nothing at all for films unless given a complete overhaul.

The title character of the play is a fictional character, but he is obviously the subject of the author's New Yorker magazine series, "The Days of Duveen." A native of Hungary, Lord Pengo (like the late Duveen) wins his title in England for contributions in the field of fine arts.

The star's built-in-charm and considerable technical accomplishments are given full rein to present this extrovert merchant of the arts, himself something of an actor. He conveys not only the joy of possessing the treasures of painting and sculpture, but the delight at clinching a deal.

"Berenson may know what is beautiful," he says about an unsalable picture the critic persuaded him to buy, "but I know what will sell." To make these costly transactions he is not above chicanery, and he meddles in the lives of his clients and neglects his own family. Boyer projects his deals with the air of a gleeful conman.

But behind all the man's maneuverings is the ultimate aim, the establishment of a national gallery to house the works he has both collected and collected for. With this goal he is able to rationalize all his actions, even to planting spies in the household staffs of his customers.

Excluding this character study, "Lord Pengo" offers little drama. The hero's chief adversary is time. Death removes rich patron after rich patron, and at the close the exuberant dealer is forced into an admission about his own mortality. It provides a gradually mellowing story and a moving finale, but it doesn't offer much conflict or excitements.

Boyer is fortunately on stage throughout. Agnes Moorehead appears only fleetingly as the knowing and devoted secretary. She makes every appearance acknowledged.

The time of the action is the early 1930s. Henry Daniell provides an incisive bit as an American multimillionaire who loves the throne chairs of the Borgias and hates "that man in the White House." Cliff Hall is fine as the dime-store magnate who wants to buy masterworks in bulk. Ruth White, however, seems rather suburban as a presumably rolling-in-wealth femme buyer.

Brian Bedford gives a standout performance as the son who would rather paint his own pictures, abstractions, of course, than huckster Rembrandts and Raphael Sanzios. Oliver Smith's setting of a New York gallery is tasteful and spacious enough to house a collection of masterworks. Gagh.

George Eckstein & Bill Watters presentation of revue in two acts (24 songs and sketches), with music and lyrics by Billy Barnes, sketches by Bob Rodgers. Staged by Bob Rodgers; scenery, Archie Sharp; choreography, Sylvia Lewis; musical direction, Ray Henderson; lighting, Arvid Nelson; costumes, Max Berman & Sons; production associate, Al Morley. Stars Joyce Jameson, Ken Berry, Ann Guilbert, Tom Hatten, Marilyn Mason, Steve Franken. Opened Oct. 10, '62, at the Coronet Theatre, Los Angeles; $4.30 top.

In this third edition of his revues, Billy Barnes apparently has no eyes to expand to Broadway, although the spotty concoction of songs and sketches could well run indefinitely here. The material is designed to touch satirically on the mores and idiosyncracies intrinsic of Los Angeles, particularly Hollywood. While funny here, it might be lost elsewhere. Barnes has done the music and lyrics, Bob Rodgers sketches. The production was budgeted $22,500 and already has $14,000 advance.

There are some 24 pieces, mostly musical, typical of earlier Barnes-Rodgers work. It is bright, fast, filled with clever lyrics and, for the most part, genuinely entertaining. There is a consistent level, however, with no piece really standout.

The best, perhaps, is a treatise on Aimee Semple McPherson, titled "Sister Aimee," which, though serious in form, may turn into a highly controversial number because of its religious connotation.

Joyce Jameson comes off well in "Covina," and a ballad, "Does Anybody Here Love Me?" The catchiest tune is "L. A. Is," done by expert song and danceman Ken Berry as a comedy tap, but also used as the general musical theme of show. "Keep Away" is an excellent ballad and showcases Marlyn Mason, a promising newcomer.

Among the sketches, "Lady and Bird" is amusing, mostly because of the performances of Ann Guilbert and Steve Franken. Miss Guilbert also does a few clever characteristic Barnes crossstage scene changers. "Weather Report," "Little Leaguers" and "The Forties" are nice, the latter combining several Hollywood takeoffs.

The show's best numbers are in the first half and the biggest duds in the following part, including "Pageant of Los Angeles," "I've Never Attended at All" and "Chamber of Commerce Convention." Dale.

The Playboy of the Western World

Baltimore, Oct. 9.

National Tours Ltd. revival of comedy in three acts, by John Millington Synge. Staged by Dermot McNamara; scenery and costumes, Robin Wagner. Features Dermot McNamara, Fiona Martin. Opened Oct. 8, '62, at Ford's Theatre, Baltimore; $4.88 top.

Pegeen Mike ..... Fiona Martin
Shawn Keogh ..... Tom Lacy
Michael James Flaherty ..... Liam Lenihan
Philly Cullen ..... J. Thomas Digidan
Jimmy Farrell ..... Brian Herbert
Christopher Mahon ..... Dermot McNamara
Widow Quinn ..... Paddy Edwards
Sara Tansey ..... Nancy Donohue
Susan Brady ..... Holly Hill
Old Mahon ..... Brendan Dillon

Though 55 years old and beyond the age where it might cause riots, "The Playboy of the Western World," as presented by the Original Irish Players, is a careful mounting of the Irish classic. It may not satisfy everybody, but should please patrons looking for quality on the road.

The John Millington Synge comedy, reviewed off-Broadway by the Original Irish Players a few seasons ago, is neatly staged, acted with indisputable Irish flavor and smoothly directed. Dermot McNamara plays the title character who is welcomed as a kind of celebrity after informing the occupants of a village tavern on the Mayo coast that he has murdered his father. McNamara, who also directed the production, is shy, aggressive, and boastful by turn and entirely believable.

He is well supported by Fiona Martin as the fiery Pegeen Mike, Tom Lacey as her fiance, Liam Lenihan as her father, Paddy Edwards as the Widow Quinn and Brendan Dillon as the unmurdered father.

Whether or not the Players will do well financially, on a national tour, is another question. "Playboy," with lack of names and concentration on colloquy not always understood, will have limited appeal on the road. Word of mouth should help, though, and the word is likely to be good. Luce.

The Establishment

Chicago, Oct. 8.

Bernie Sahlins, Paul Sills & Howard Alk, in association with Peter Cook and Nicholas Luard, presentation of a two-act (12 scenes) satirical revue written by the cast and others. Staged by Nicholas Garland; musical direction, Stanley Myers; piano accompaniment, William Mathieu. Opened Oct. 7, '62, at the Second City, Chicago; $2.50 admission.

Cast: John Bird, Eleanor Bron, John Fortune, Jeremy Geidt, Carole Simpson.

"The Establishment" of London, equating with those improvisational limners of human folly that have been sprouting in several major cities of the U.S., has traded bare stages with Chicago's Second City for about two months and should do well for the term. Sometimes pointedly satirical but more often only bluntly sacrilegious, the British group impresses

Shows on Broadway

Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?

Theatre 1963 (Richard Barr & Clinton Wilder) presentation of drama in three acts, by Edward Albee. Staged by Alan Schneider; scenery, lighting and costumes, William Ritman. Stars Uta Hagen, Arthur Hill, George Grizzard; features Melinda Dillon. Opened Oct. 13, '62, at the Billy Rose Theatre, N.Y., $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Martha ..... Uta Hagen
George ..... Arthur Hill
Honey ..... Melinda Dillon
Nick ..... George Grizzard

The hideous world of misery-induced fantasy and of compulsive love-hate marriage relationships is relentlessly and fascinatingly explored in "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" which opened last Saturday night (13) at the Billy Rose Theatre. Having made a reputation as the author of several distinctive off-Broadway one-act plays, Edward Albee has written a first full-length drama that runs more than three hours.

As a waggish first-nighter suggested, this marathon work might have been titled "Who's Afraid of Eugene O'Neill?" or "Long Day's Journey Into Nightmare." The analogy isn't so much for the new play's length as for its compression of locale and action and characters, its slashing domestic warfare, and its inexorable probing into the agonies of contorted love and obsessive terror and guilt. Although it is long and seems it, "Virginia Woolf" would be a difficult play to cut very much, at least without weakening it.

Whether such a dramatic ordeal will be successful may be questionable. Probably it will, and perhaps substantially, although its length, somber tone and the lack of major star names are likely to be limiting factors. But as "Long Day's Journey Into Night" demonstrated, there is a public for even a long and torturing drama if it's good enough.

And "Virginia Woolf" is good, and beautifully done. Even the deliberate, repetitious, cumulative first two acts command attention. As returning off-Broadway explorers have been saying for several years, Albee is a talented writer, and it turns out that he's also a strong writer, a big writer. In this new work he has created a vivid, compelling, upsetting drama spiced with acidly funny lines.

Whether it would be suitable for the road or pictures may be dubious, but there's little question that it will boost the careers of the four actors, Uta Hagen, Arthur Hill, George Grizzard and Melinda Dillon, and prove a potent credit for stager Alan Schneider. It establishes Albee as a gifted playwright, if an unenviable individual.

The title apparently has no specific meaning. It's a sort of impromptu conversational game that grows in significance as the two couples, the middleaged and the young college professors and their wives, spend the after-midnight-to-dawn hours drinking and exposing each other's secret guilts and fears. The key to the brutal marital warfare, when it finally comes, doesn't entirely explain it all.

Whether such characters actually exist is obviously a matter of individual opinion, or philosophic attitude. Evidently young Albee believes they do, and presumably he is writing from personal observation. But while an ordinary playgoer may never have run into such tormented and destructive people, it's difficult not to believe them in the characterizations of "Virginia Woolf." They seem not only real, but horrfying and heartrending.

As the older, embittered couple who carry on a savage game of make-believe to endure the agonies of contorted devotion and venom and despair, Miss Hagen and Arthur Hill give virtuoso performances in exhausing roles, rising to an impressive crescendo in the fireworks and final calm of the third act.

Grizzard reveals both deftness and depth as the young professor who blunders into a situation beyond his control or even comprehension. Miss Dillon, making her first New York appearance, is excellent as his self-effacing wife who turns out to have hidden terrors, too.

Schneider's direction achieves admirable variation and dimension, and William Ritman has designed a living room setting that suggests professional surface and sinister undercurrent. Because of the drama's exhausting length, matinees will be played by an alternate cast comprising Kate Reid, Shepperd Strudwick, Bill Berger and Avra Petrides.

Not everyone will like "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" but no one who sees it is likely to forget it very quickly. Hobe.

Seidman and Son

Theatre Guild, Joel Schenker & Michael Kanin presentation of comedy in three acts (seven scenes), by Elick Moll, based on his own novel. Staged by Carmen Capalbo; scenery, lighting and costumes, William Pitkin; associate producer, Elliot Martin. Stars Sam Levene; features Nancy Wickwire, Frances Chaney, Hy Anzel, Martin Garner, Vincent Gardenia, Mitchell Jason, Stewart Moss, Morgan Sterne. Opened Oct. 15, '62, at the Belasco Theatre, N.Y., $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Edme ..... Edme Van Dyke
Helen Sowolska ..... Yafa Lerner

"Seidman and Son," which opened last Monday night 15) at the Belasco Theatre, is a combination "Fifth Season" and "Father Knows Best." Father, in this Elick Moll adaptation of his own novel, is played by Sam Levene. It's just the kind of part he plays best—in fact it just about is Sam Levene, so who could play it better?"

This is the kind of show that used to be rated sure-fire box-office. It's a schmaltzy comedy about a wise, warm-hearted, wrily humorous Jewish husband and father, a successful women's dress manufacturer who somehow retains his understanding and composure amid the aggravations of home or in his Seventh Avenue establishment. So will it be box-office? Possibly, although not as much so as it might have, say, 20 years ago.

"Seidman" will appeal to the Levene following, of course, and probably also to the populous garment trade and its associated out-of-town buyer influx, as well as the sizable audience there must be for good old sentimental comedy in the Jewish idiom, with a liberal assortment of laugh lines on rising inflection and with rhetorical question marks.

There's a barely perceptible story line involving mother's mild complaining because father often doesn't come home to dinner and take her to the movies, the son's somewhat restrained rebellion and bid for freedom, and a minor situation when the pretty and lonely dress designer is harried by the firm's wolfish chief salesman. But father knows best, or at least enough to keep a level head and generous nature, so it's all warm and pleasant, if just a little sticky, at the curtain.

Moll knows his characters, of course—who should know them better? His theatrical technique is hardly expert, but serves the modest needs of a slight play. Carmen Capalbo has staged the performance with attention to tremolo emotional effects.

There are agreeable performances by Nancy Wickwire as the designer who's much too attractive to be that lonely. Morgan Sterne as the brash salesman, Frances Chaney as the wife who finally gets her hair out of curlers for the curtain, Stewart Moss as the callow son, and Hy Anzel, Martin Gardner, Vincent Gardenia and Mitchell Jason as assorted characters at the office.

Oh yes, there's also a squad of notably decorative models who parade on and off at intervals in enough of a fashion show to attract the attention of the women out front. William Pitkin has designed the flossy settings of the Seidman dining room and bedroom, the office, a corner of a cafe and the designer's apartment living room. The gowns are from a New York dress house.

"Seidman and Son" is mild but perhaps amusing enough to get by on its special appeal. It could even be the makings of a passable picture. Hobe.

Donald Babcock and David Vaughn, who formerly appeared in the off-Broadway production of "The Fantasticks," have rejoined the presentation as successors to Charlie Blackburn and John High.

Road: 'Tchin-Tchin' $31,113, Boston; 'Little Me' $55,189, 'Nowhere' $42,468, 'Lord Pengo' $15,600 for 4, Philly

The road was soft in spots, but generally good last week. Philadelphia was a focal point with a spread of five tryouts, including two musicals and three straight plays. The tuners were "Little Me," which played to big business, and "Nowhere to Go But Up," which did okay. The straight plays included "Fun Couple," which didn't fare too well; "Lord Pengo," which registered a satisfactory take in four performances, and "A Matter of Position," which folded Saturday night (13).

Among the tryouts new to the road list last week was "Calculated Risk," which did nicely in six performances in New Haven. "Fun Couple," which had originally been scheduled to play preview performances in New York this week, is currently in New Haven, having altered its plans when a booking there became possible as a result of the Philly fold of "Position," which was to have been berthed in New Haven this week.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Where subscription is mentioned, the gross is the net after the deduction of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

B'way Bullish; 'Camelot' Hot $60,009, 'Milk' $41,400, 'Come on Strong' $21,825, 'Stop,' 'Strings,' 'Forum,' 'Succeed' SRO

Business rocketed for most Broadway shows last week. The rise in receipts passed the $10,000 mark for three musicals and there were four capacity entries, "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "No Strings" and the newcomer, "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off."

The number of productions on the boards climbs to 19 this week with the opening Monday night (15) of "Seidman and Son," the debut tonight (Wed.) of "Step on a Crack" and the preem Saturday (20) of "Mr. President."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta), Rep. (Repertory), DR (Dramatic Reading).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% repealed City tax (diverted to an industry-wide pension and welfare fund), but grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Grosses have been reduced by commissions where theatre parties are mentioned.

Asterisk denotes show had cut-rate tickets in circulation.

Affair, Miller (D) (4th wk; 28 p) ($6.90-$7.50; 840; $33,500). Previous week, $16,716.

London's Arts Offering Sunday and Late Shows

London, Oct. 16.

The New Arts Theatre Club has begun a new policy under the managing directorship of Kenneth Rive. It has resumed Sunday night shows and beginning last night (Tues.) and will offer late-night shows, starting at 10:30 p.m. The initial offering is Jack McGowran in "End of Day," devised from the works of Samuel Beckett.

The Theatre Club will switch to films on Mondays, the first to be "Senelita," with Claudia Cardinale. It is being given four late-night showings from last Thursday (11) and thereafter will be shown every Monday continuously from 1:30 p.m.

Plans are also in preparation for music recitals, are exhibits and a resumption of monthly club suppers. The first guest of honor will be John Trevelyan, secretary of the British Board of Film Censors.

The new entertainment plans coincide with a complete facelift throughout the premises.

Sked 'Sister' Preem, Dallas

The new season at the Dallas Theatre Center will include the preem of "Sister," by Glenn Allen Smith. Also scheduled for the 1962-63 semester is a production of "Julius Caesar."

The regular season was preceded by a presentation of "The Women."

Shows Abroad

Escape from Eden

London, Oct. 5.

Dunbar Productions presentation of a three act (six scenes) comedy, by Graeme Campbell. Staged by the author; decor, Henry Bardon; lighting, Robert Ornbo. Features Vivienne Bennett, Geoffrey Tetlow, Madeline Blakenet, Donald Webster, Martin King, Margaret Bold, Earl Green, Kim. Opened Oct. 4, '62, at the Lyric, Hammersmith, London; $2.17 top.

Sarah Jensen ..... Vivienne Bennett
Johann Sebastian Jensen ..... Jeoffrey Tetlow
Elizabeth Schumann Jensen ..... Madeline Blakeney
Tom Jensen ..... Donald Webster
William Coyle ..... Martin King
Bridget Jensen ..... Margaret Boyd
Barrie Douglas ..... Earl Green
Kim ..... Himself

The Lyric, Hammersmith, was dark last summer, but has reopened with a first play by Graeme Campbell, which is also the first presentation by Dunbar Productions. The author, who describes his work as "a savage comedy," may well write better plays in the future. It's odds on that he'll never write a worse one.

The action takes place on a remote cattle station in New Zealand and the comedy turns out to be a hybrid of moods, with cliche ridden dialog and naive characters. Somewhere a serious play seems to be struggling to get out and, in fact, some of the serious moments are absorbing.

The best of the humor seems to be unintentional and the climax to the second act is a collector's item that had the thin audience rolling in the aisles. It is impossible to believe that this was the intention of either author or cast.

Campbell has assembled odd characters. Mother is a shallow ninny, an ex-classical pianist striving pretentiously to cling to her English ideas of refinement. Father is a stolid, dull dog, more interested in his cattle than his family.

Son is a mother's boy who turns out predictably to be a homosexual. Daughter prefers the cattle sheds to the kitchen and is worried about a marriage that is being contrived between her and a respectable, gauche neighbor. Grandma is a nut.

Into this uneasy household strolls a goodlooking guitar playing young hobo who is practically adopted by the family. He is lonely, insecure, narcissistic and amoral. The native daughter and the even more naive son both fall in love with the stranger and there are signs that mama is not averse to him either. Stranger attempts to seduce daughter, son attempts to seduce stranger.

It is this mess of homosexuality and virginity that provides the incredible second-act climax. In the third act everybody drifts away, leaving mother to her piano playing, father to his cattle and grandma pottering around inconsequentially.

A different director might have pulled the play into some shape, but it is all too plodding and superficial to hold interest. Earl Green as the cause of all the trouble, Madeline Blakeney as the daughter and Vivienne Bennett as the stupid mother, survive best in their efforts to grip the audience, but it is all uphill work. Henry Bardon has provided an adequate set. "Escape From Eden" is in for a limited season and cannot hope for a transfer. Rich.

Talking To You

London, Oct. 5.

Anna Deere Wiman presentation of a double bill of one act plays by William Saroyan. Staged by Arthur Storch; decor, Peter Rice; music, Elliot Kaplan; lighting, Michael Northen. Features Terence de Marney, Harry Towb, Johnny Sekka, Alexis Kanner, Rex Garner and Robert Henderson. Opened Oct. 4, '62, at the Duke of York's Theatre, London; $3 top.

TALKING TO YOU

The Cook ..... Andreas Markos
The Tiger ..... Terence De Marney
Blackstone Boulevard ..... Johnny Sekka
Paul ..... Graham Payne
Fancy Boy ..... Nigel Hawthorne
Maggie ..... Thelma Holt
Policeman ..... Jock McGregor

ACROSS THE BOARD ON TOMORROW MORNING

Tomas Pope ..... Harry Towb
John Collier ..... Terence De Marney
Helen ..... Loelia Kidd
Hunt Markes ..... Alexis Kanner
Peggy ..... Madeline Burgess
Lars ..... Ann Hamilton
R. J. Pope ..... Robert Henderson
Paul ..... Dimitris Andreas
Punch ..... Andreas Markos
Sam ..... Nigel Hawthorne
Fritz ..... Rex Garner
Rhoda ..... Thelma Holt
Callboy ..... Derek Fuke

Some 20 years after they were first staged in New York, these two plays have been brought to the West End, but it's doubtful whether they will be around long. Anna Deere Wiman's managerial enterprise is unlikely to be financially rewarded.

With rare exceptions (and there is one currently around town), a program of one-act plays is a tough theatrical proposition, but it's made all the more difficult in this case because Saroyan's playlets appear to be beyond the mental reach of most theatregoers. There is, undoubtedly, something of a message in the second of the two, "Across the Board on Tomorrow Morning," but that is open to individual interpretation. However, both plays are superbly staged by Arthur Storch, and first-rate casts have been recruited for them.

"Talking To You," which provides the overall title for the show, is set in a derelict basement room, apparently occupied by a blind man answering to the name of Tiger. He seems to run open house, and among his companions is a Negro boxer called Blackstone Boulevard and a Mexican guitar player, known as the Crow. There is also a deaf boy, picked up off the streets, and the blind man's brother, who is given the choice name of Fancy Dan.

The boxer is about to have his first fight, but he loves all mankind and doesn't want to hurt his opponent, so understandably is on the receiving end of a k.o. Fancy Dan apparently has a criminal record, and inexplicably in the final scene, a midget policeman enters, stands on a table and shoots at the boxer instead of the wanted man.

Though the plot is non-existant and the author's intention is elusive, there is impressive acting, particularly from Terence De Marney as the Tiger, and Johnny Sekka as the Negro. Graham Payne makes a touching character of the bewildered deaf boy.

In "Across the Board" the scene changes to a restaurant in East 52nd Street, N. Y. As the curtain rises there are no diners, so the waiter and the proprietor talk to the audience. This is a familiar device, but not very satisfactory in this case.

When the customers do start rolling in they are an odd bunch, including a neurotic, who insists on serving a meal to the waiter, a wealthy gent with fetching blonde, and a woman on her own, who tries to keep herself to herself.

There is not much cohesion to the dialog, but somewhere along the line Saroyan, bearing in mind this play was written many years ago, shows a prophetic awareness of the prospect of world destruction, but there isn't much theatrical tension or excitement.

In this case, too, the performances are all good. Harry Towb is pleasantly confident as the waiter, Terence De Marney gives a polished performance as the proprietor and Ann Hamilton is a blonde looker. Dimitris Andreas and Andreas Markos provide contrasting relief as a couple of Puerto Rican kitchen hands, and Alexis Kanner is suitably tensed up as the neurotic. Myro.

Thin Person ..... David William
Button Moulder ..... Wilfrid Lawson

Michael Elliott, the new director of the Old Vic, has made a smash start for the 1962-63 season with his revival of Ibsen's "Peer Gynt" in a new translation by Michael Meyer. It's a mammoth effort, running four hours, with only two brief intervals, and it's done with verve, polish and fluency.

The Old Vic's stage has been remodeled, and a new arch-effect adds color to the effective and inspired decor by Richard Negri. He deserves an additional accolade

We, Comrades Three

Ann Arbor, Oct. 11.

Univ. of Michigan Professional Theatre Program presentation of Assn. of Producing Artists production of verse drama in two acts, adapted by Richard Baldridge from the works of Walt Whitman. Staged by Ellis Rabb; designed by Ann Roth. Opened Oct. 10, '62, at the Lydia Mendelssohn Theatre of Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

Walt Whitman ..... Will Geer
Mother ..... Cavada Humphrey
Young Walt ..... Clayton Corzatte
Walt ..... Russell Gold
Young Woma ..... Rosemary Harris

No plot, no suspense, no point adds up to no play for "We, Comrades Three," a drama adapted from the works of Walt Whitman by Richard Baldridge. The premiere of the play, which in reality is a costumed and staged poetry recital, was presented by the Assn. of Producing Artists at the Lydia Mendelssohn Theatre on the campus of the Univ. of Michigan.

The failure can be traced to two major errors by the playwright. He has not edited his material nearly enough, and has failed to do the necessary creative work to make the material theatrical.

What Baldridge has done was to take pages and pages of Whitman's fiery words on the Civil War and the Reconstruction period and put them unchanged into the mouths of the performers. That is too much for the ears to absorb.

The listener feels a constant nagging need to have the words repeated or to have a chance to refer to the printed page so he can reread key phrases in order to bring about understanding. Perhaps, the playright felt this too, for he had one of the characters say, "I, too, am untranslatable."

Baldridge, the playwright-in-residence for the university's Professional Theatre Program, is a director at the McCarter Theatre at Princeton Univ. He served as associate director for this two-act play, which has been directed by Ellis Rabb, at the APA.

The action revolves around an aged Walt Whitman, played by Will Geer, who seems to be reliving his life simultaneously as an old man, a 40-year-old man, played by Russell Gold, and as a 20-year-old, played by Clayton Corsatte. All three performers are on the stage together most of the time, arguing, wrestling, or moaning from Civil War battle wounds, all at one and the same time. It's all confusing and unreal.

Cavada Humphrey, billed as "The Mother," meaning that she's Columbia, the mother of the U.S. as well as the mother of a wounded soldier and also the "mother" of a house of prostitution in the reconstruction era, Rosemary Harris is the Young Woman, appearing as a virgin, a prostie, then a pure young woman again. The five performances, working against those odds, manage to make one scene come alive, evoking something of the horror and the tragedy of the Civil War.

As director, Rabb resorts to too much running around and flag waving to provide movement that doesn't derive from action within the play. In addition, he has the performers lying on the stage from time to time. That may endear him to actors understandably tired from running or from extremely long speeches, but it prevents the audience from seeing some of the action. Not surprisingly, a number did not return following intermission.

The single set by Ann Roth, utilizing a summer house with screen and shutters at mid-stage, is simple and effective. The costuming is good, as are the recorded sound effects of battle and the voices of various forms of wild life. Tew.

Nan Fabray and the Deaf

Washington, Oct. 16.

Nanette Fabray took time off from her starring role in "Mr. President" during its final tryout week at the National Theatre here to visit Galludet College, a Washington institution for the deaf to give encouragement to those with a handicap she has.

Miss Fabray's own deafness is about 100% in the left ear and 50% in the right ear. She wears a hearing aid. "When I sing," she told an assembly of students, "I don't hear the orchestra. When I miss a beat, the conductor has to catch up with me." She added that she danced without hearing the music.

"It's foolish to be ashamed and it's self-destructive," the star said. "We're in the same boat. But remember you can be anything you want to be, can do anything you want to do. I was able to do it, and you can do it."

Miss Fabray was brought to tears when the students performed for her a recitation of the Lord's Prayer to musical accompainment.

Off-Broadway Reviews

O Say Can You See!

Greenville Co. presentation of a new musical comedy, with book and lyrics by Bill Conklin and Bob Miller, music by Jack Holmes. Staged and choreographed by Ray Harrison; book staged by Cynthia Baer; settings, Jack H. Cornwell; costumes, Jane Kip Stevens; lighting, Jules Fisher; musical director, Jack Holmes; arrangements and orchestrations, Lanny Meyers; associate producer, Aaron Goldblatt. Opened Oct. 8, '62, at the Provincetown Playhouse, N.Y.; $4.50 top week nights, $4.90 weekends.

Cast: Jan Chaney, Elmarie Wendel, Nicolas Coster, Paul B. Price, Joel Warfield, Joyce Kerry, T. J. Halligan, Thomas Gaines, Richard Neilson, Sally Ackerman, Sallie Brinsmade, Lee Delmer, Michael Douglas, Jerry Mattison, Marcia Rodd, Carolyn Wilmshurst.

The star-studded, flag-waving musicals produced in Hollywood during World War II are reincarnated in "O Say Can You See!" But although the show succeeds in inducing nostalgia, its entertaining moments are few. It's not as much fun as watching one of the films it spoofs on the television "Late Show."

The references to stagedoor canteens, the Brooklyn Dodgers, and once-famous couples like "Rita and Orson" and "Mickey and Ava," provide chuckles, and it's amusing for a short while to see all the screen stereotypes, replete with pageboy hairdos and sequin snoods, parading across the stage.

The tunes, by Jack Holmes, are reminiscent of the Bing Crosby era. But the book, by Bill Conklin and Bob Miller, is too good-natured, passing up opportunities for sharp satire, and offering little to hold interest.

Most amusing of the generally fine cast is Elmarie Wendell, who blasts out a couple of Betty Hutton-type numbers. Nicolas Coster is good as a picture star who joins the army for publicity purposes, but who proves to be true red-white-and-blue by the final curtain. Paul B. Price as a Dodger fan and Jan Chaney as the blonde heroine are right, and Joyce Kerry was inspired casting as the villainess—she looks just like Ann Miller, MGM dancing star of the period.

Ray Harrison does a creditable job of staging, and the Jane Kip Stevens costumes are appropriately atrocious. But despite the best efforts of all concerned, "O Say Can You See!" doesn't quite make it. Kenn.

Angels of Anadarko

Jay Chase & Lawrence Weber presentation of a new play by Duke Marks and Herman Goldberg. Staged by Albert Dekker; sets and lighting, Bernard Leon Sachs; costumes, Barbara Rothman. Opened Oct. 10, '62, at the York Theatre, N.Y.; $3.95 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Michael Kermoyan, Flora Camp, bell, Bob Gentry, Marco St. John, Lisa Marshall, John Buckwalter, Anita Dangler, Barbara Dana.

Although Duke Marks and Herman Goldberg are listed as the authors of "Angels of Anadarko," program credit should have been given to innumerable others. This sorry excuse for a play is a conglomeration of cliches and platitudes used in a hundred plays and pictures, though probably never with worse results.

Angels" seems like a parody of American family dramas. The characters include the kind but uncouth father, the frigid wife, and two sons, one wild but good, the other sexually inhibited and intolerant. Almost inevitably, too, there are the pure-hearted whore, the hot-pants evangelist, and a sweet young thing who deserts the gentlemanly son for the misunderstood one.

The story and situations are hackneyed, the dialog is obvious and laughable, and the acting ranges from poor to ludicrous.

Albert Dekker, currently featured on Broadway in "A Man for All Seasons," makes his New York directorial debut with this play. His staging is not very good, but obviously better than his judgment of scripts. Kenn.

Legit Followup

Stop The World—I Want To Get Off

(QUEENS THEATRE, LONDON)

London, Oct. 16.

With Anthony Newley and the other principals of "Stop The World—I Want To Get Off" now operating on Broadway, there's been a fairly clean sweep of the London cast. A return visit reveals that the production, staged by Newley, remains as slick as ever. Though it is an uneven show in its wit, satire and intention, the musical comes over again as fascinating offbeat entertainment, but still in need of cutting.

Tony Tanner has taken over Newley's role and, if memory serves, gives practically a carbon copy of Littlechap. The show suffers no loss in the change of star except, on the night caught, in some of the singing. The "Mumbo Jumbo" ditty, for example, would not be easy to hear for a first-time visitor.

Thelma Ruby, successor to Anna Quayle, seems a mite mature for the role, but her confident attack and range of mimicry carries her through. Janet and Jennifer Allman adequately replace the Baker Twins and there are four shapely newcomers to the one-the-ball seven-piece girl chorus.

There still seems a lot of life in this show, which is now in its 64th week. Rich.

Umbrian Festival

(With Pablo Casals)

Umbrian, Sept. 25.

A noteworthy Festival of post-war Italy is the relatively unknown Umbrian Sacred Music Festival which is now in its 17th year (and for the first time has a properly functioning press office which extends invitations to members of the foreign press—in some cases paying their hotel expenses). It presents choral and symphonic groups with Italian and foreign soloists. Most of the performances take place in Perugia with some others in Gubbio and Assisi, hill towns. The Festival opened with a beautiful rendition of a Monterverdi work (Vespro della Beata Vergine) conducted by Andrzey Markowski with the excellent Krakow Philharmonic Orchestra and it closed with the European premiere of Pablo Casals' "El Pessebre" conducted by Casals' himself with the orchestra of the Teatro Fenice of Venice and the "Orfeo Catala" chorus of Barcelona and a group of remarkable Spanish singers, notably basso Raymondo Torres and the excellent soprano Montserrat Cabale whose voice is reminiscent of a Tebaldi in her early days.

Other works were Handel's "Judas Maccabeus" and the performance of the Zuerich Stadtheater of Martinus' "Greek Passion" world premiered last year. Casals' appearance was the highlight. His "Pessebre" is work derivative and imitative of romantic composers of the past century—in fact Casals composed as if the 20th century had not existed. Goth.

British playwright Terence Rattigan is writing a new play titled "Man and Boy."

An 'Opera Common Market'

Strassburg, Oct. 16.

The "Common Market" of the opera is making great strides here. And it looks as if the international exchange of operas and singers, proposed last spring, is now coming into actuality.

Members of the International Assn. of Opera Directors just met here, with representatives from the leading houses of Britain, Holland, Belgium, France, Italy, Switzerland, Austria, Norway and Germany.

Aim of the group is to exchange operas and stars, so that the works which are popular in one country can be presented across the borders, and especially to introduce little-known operas from new composers.

Eight leading houses of West Germany belong to the Association, with members from Frankfurt, Berlin, Munich and Stuttgart.

It is planned to present German opera groups in France and Norway this season, while English and Italian operas will be offered in Germany.

Also, exchanges will be stepped up within nations. At Wiesbaden, West Germany, there will be performances of the top German opera and ballet groups during the famed May Festival next spring.

Thus it is hoped to further the work of young composers, young opera singers, forthcoming directors and conductors, by giving them the opportunity to appear in different opera houses in various European lands.

Dance Reviews

Uday Shankar Hindu Co.

Coming on the heels of the floor-pounding Ballet Folklorico, Uday Shankar's Hindu troupe of dancers and musicians made a quiet, reflective contrast. More variety and less length of the two terminal presentations would please U.S. audiences more.

Opening was a new dance revealing with artless good humor the new India. It rose at times to Broadway pace and quality. This was "Khada" ("Food") in which the whole company was utilized for a choreographed story about happy peasants living the good peasant life until an educated boy (wearing a sport shirt) returned from the big city to bug them with regimentation and automation. Painting pictures with human bodies, lighting and the music of the background row of seated drummers, strummers, flautist and vocalist, the company had no difficulty in telling the story of the happy villagers (one man does a difficult push-up as a pump arm), their transformation into robots (a section equal to the 'Mack Sennett ballet' of "High Button Shoes," the 'Secretary is Not a Toy' of 'How to Succeed,' or the factory scenes of 'Modern Times'), their rebellion and eventual compromise between the old and new.

Shankar wisely opened with his top offering which was blighted somewhat by the 40 minutes it stretched. Following intermission came "Astra Puja," in which six warriors and the girls they were about to leave behind engaged in a celebration and invocation of their G.I. cutlery. Here, as with two exceptions, the men dominated the stage, as they do in India. The exceptions followed in "Krisna Ni Began Baro" beautifully and gravely danced by Amala Shankar —"the soul of woman calls out to Lord Krishna in her overwhelming love for him" and "Panthadi," a game with imaginary balls, danced by Menna and Kabita, two lovely girls. Latter was imaginative and graphic.

Shankar provided the second highlight of the evening with "Indra," the boss god, imitating the lesser, dancing gods. At 62, Shankar displays the sinuous, supple arms, shoulders and body movements which first captured attention here 30 years ago and retains the inner fire and authority which has made him a world-wide attraction in his field.

The musicians displayed their virtuosity next and here Lakshimi Shankar, the singer, and Soumen Dey, on the flute, were outstanding. Ravi Shankar, probably India's greatest sitar player, did not come this time. Leve.

Phakavali of Thailand

Presented one night only (29) in New York, the Hunter College (N.Y.) Playhouse date keeps this troupe of 14 within the confines of its campus orbit bookings and subsidy via the Asia Society. It proved a charming entertainment with more rhythm, joy and musical sock than dance recitals by ethnic imports often provide. There is a climaxing thriller in the form of a duel with vicious swords, suggestive of Mexican machetes. It's as close to lethal as artistry can come.

The girls are extremely pretty and handsomely gowned in silks and satins. A fingernail dance is borrowed from Chinese tradition that long ones prove aristocracy—because leisure is implicit. The tour de force solo is by a girl, Saismorn Shammali, whose wrist and hand control work is sheerly fantastic.

Four native musicians are an integral element. The Siamese versions of both oboe and marimba allow much virtuosity. Everything added up to a definite delight. Land.

and the corniest of musical theatre techniques." He felt the show was badly undercast, and that the producer's emphasis "comes down heavy-handedly on the most obvious comedy devices." He opined that the team of Reeves and Blackburn, brought in to provide the funny bits, were "fantastically miscast" and given the feeblest of material.

The Times review, unsigned per office custom, was full of praise, rating it a "musical in the best American tradition. In other words it is an excellent piece of ensemble work: all its components, lyrics, dances and production numbers—flow naturally out of the narrative, and complement one another, and the result displays a professionalism that goes much beyond mere gloss and slickness."

W. A. Darlington of the Daily Telegraph, had praise for Jerry Bock's music and the energetic dancing, and thought the director had got out of his company a "very passable American flavor."

"The latest Broadway lullaby," Philip Hope-Wallace wrote in the Guardian, "comes with a great reputation. If it proved a slight frost the fault was not that of the English cast, except by their being English. However thin their assumed accents might wear, their enthusiasm was never wanting." He was particularly critical of the decor, which he thought was "a mess."

The two London evening papers were also downbeat. Milton Shulman, in the Evening Standard, said the astonishing thing about the show was the power of music and lyrics to crush even the most individuallstic personality into an orthodox mould of tum-te-tum superficiality, adding, "This could have been a musical about a district attorney or a bootlegger or a trade union organizer or a Hollywood tycoon for all the unique information it contained about La Guardia."

Felix Barker, writing in the Evening News, conceded that the show has bursts of vitality, but is a little drab to the eye, adding the comment: "Without being unduly insular, we may, I think, fairly have reservations about this particular American import."

Out-of-town drama critics in New York last week included Bob Thomas, from the Coast office of Associated Press; Frances Melrose, the Rocky Mountain News, Denver; Nathan Cohen, Toronto Star; Stan Eichelbaum, San Francisco Examiner, and Peter Bellamy, Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Herman Levin New Prez Of League of N.Y. Theatres

Broadway producer Herman Levin, who served as president of the League of N.Y. Theatres several years ago, was elected to the post again last Monday (15) at the organization's annual meeting in the Hotel Astor, N.Y. He succeeds Robert Whitehead as head of the producer and theatre owner organization.

Other officers elected were Herman Shumlin, first vice-president; Robert L. Joseph, second veepee; Herman Bernstein, secretary, and Alfred de Liagre Jr., treasurer. The board of governors comprises A. L. Berman, Arthur Cantor, Alexander H. Cohen, Maurice Evans, David Merrick, Gilbert Miller, Lester Osterman, Edward Padula, Harold S. Prince, Victor Samrock, Joel Schenker, Samuel H. Schwartz and Irene Selznick.

Past presidents of the League who have automatic board membership include Kermit Bloomgarden, Leland Hayward, Louis A. Lotito, Arthur Schwartz and Whitehead. Max Gordon is an ex-officio board member.

N.Y. Crix to Pick Best Regardless

The N. Y. Drama Critics Circle has succumbed to Daily News critic John Chapman's long campaign to designate a best play regardless of its origin. The move was made at the organization's annual meeting in New York yesterday (Tues.). The amendment required to change the Circle award setup was passed by only one vote.

In prior years, the Circle's best play award went to an American work. Now both U. S. and foreign plays are eligible for the citation. If a foreign play is chosen by the Circle, the members, if they so desire, may pick a best American play. Conversely, they may select a best foreign play if the winning selection is of American origin.

The situation regarding musicals remains the same, with the critics exercising their discretion as to whether or not an award is to be made. Yesterday's meeting also included the election of officers, with Thomas Wenning, of Newsweek mag, succeeding Thomas Dash, of Women's Wear, as president. Wenning, who was vice-president, has been succeeded in that post by Howard Taubman, of the N. Y. Times.

Re-elected were Ethel Colby, of the Journal of Commerce, as treasurer, and George Freedley, curator of the N. Y Public Library theatre collection, recording secretary.

John Raitt in 'Oklahoma' For St. P. Opera Season

St. Paul, Oct. 16.

John Raitt, who grossed a record $40,000 for the St. Paul Civic Opera in a single week as star of "Carousel" at the local Auditorium last season, is being brought back this season. His vehicle will be "Oklahoma," the week of Jan. 7.

For the first time the company will separate its season into two segments. In the early fall the offerings will be regular operas—"Otello" and "The Magic Flute." The second half will be devoted to single-week engagements of musical comedies, including "Oklahoma" and two others to be chosen from "West Side Story," "Can-Can," "South Pacific," "Brigadoon," "Bells Are Ringing," "Pajama Game," "Blossom Time," "Annie Get Your Gun" and "Kiss Me Kate."

N. Y. City Opera

The Passion of Jonathan Wade

Opera and libretto by Carlyle Floyd. Staged by Allen Fletcher. Scenery by Will Steven Armstrong. Costumes by Ruth Morley. Conducted by Julius Rudel. World premiere Oct. 11, 1962, at N. Y. City Center; $4.35 top.

Taking off from the truism that new operas tend to suffer from libretto trouble like a kind of predictable malarial afternoon fever, there is this to be said in favor of the theme chosen by composer Carlyle Floyd: the torments and clashes in the carpetbagger era after the Confederate defeat carry their own built-in drama. True, this is no substitute for characterization nor power in the score, as to which "The Passion of Jonathan Wade" has deficiencies.

An immediate association arises with the 1915 12-reel epic of race hatred, "The Birth of a Nation." The opera also presents the Ku Klux Klan, though not to glorify it, as did D. W. Griffith. Included, too, are the high-hatted and bribe-happy illiterate Negro legislators during the Federal occupancy of Columbia, South Carolina, and the swarming sharpers from the North, the vindictive New England reformer, a sort of equality-at-bayonet-point Reverend Davidson, superbly realized by possibly the best actor in opera, Norman Kelley.

The tensions inherent in the situation form the "incipient" suspense against which is played out the love and marriage of the belle (Phyliss Curtin) and the Yankee colonel (Theodor Uppman) and the deterioration of the girl's father (Norman Treigle) whose fine-sounding Dixie "honor" is fouled by his pride of class and skin into ultimate membership in the hooded mob that murders his son-in-law just before the final curtain.

The pace is uneven. Some tedium develops during the final act because Floyd the composer won't allow Floyd the author to get on with the story, the denouement of which is fully primed but needlessly elaborated to make an opera three hours long.

Part of the trouble may be that the diction is too good. Most of the words are fully registered—and probably even the great Italian works could not stand up against the discrepancy between the implication of grandeur and the small potatoes of the prose. Floyd does better than most contemporary opera composers, other than Gian-Carlo Menotti, in creating a story-line that moves, holds substantial conviction and is always stageworthy. But he is no Bruce Catton in making Dixie come alive.

Musically Floyd again justifies subsidy and the hope of American talent. If he stumbles over his own words rather often, his music has a certain sweep and much feeling. The prejudices and loyalties of the various figures, as stated, express emotion inherent in the land of the free for 150 years.

Julius Rudel, head of the N.Y. City Opera, personally conducted. The orchestral side was strong in performance with, interestingly, an unbilled, pensive blonde girl concertmaster. A reservation orchestrally would be that Floyd does not fully rise to big dramatic payoffs, sticking more to the lyric line which occasionally discounts his climaxes.

There was no doubt that the world premiere of this work (controlled by Boosey & Hawkes of London) created an essentially favorable impression. Even at the late hour of 11:15 there was plenty of give in the audience for several solid curtains and a considerable ovation for Floyd.

The two leads had what it takes. Miss Curtin brought the requisite looks with the voice. The Met loaned Theodor Uppman and he sang with much splendor and some matinee idol quality. (Bows were taken in groups and solo, musical comedy style). Norman Treigle, who did so well here in "Louise" was again an heroine's irate pa. He was consistently effective though in his long lament, at the Confederate memorial he was lighted so high the spotlighted shower of saliva narrowly missed comedy.

Among a number of Negro singers who were part of the prevailing vocal excellence Miriam Burton as Nicey was deservedly a top audience favorite. Frank Poretta's recently extensive range of roles at this house was extended to that of a hot-headed Dixiecrat. Into his mouth Floyd has put a snarling theme song. "I need a nigger to clean my boots" which might ultimately rank with Oscar Hammerstein II's "You Have to Be Very Carefully Taught to Hate" and Josh White's "Strange Black Fruit."

Clearly the staging of "Wade" was a major undertaking for the City Opera. The scenery of Will Steven Armstrong and the costumes of Ruth Morley showed care and imagination. Stager Allen Fletcher manipulated his throngs, the scene changes and numerous entrances and exits with a lively sense of theatre.

With the exceptions noted above, "The Passion of Jonathan Wade" is an event of considerable importance in the slow growth of contemporary American opera. Land.

Turn Of The Screw

Since Benjamin Britten's "The Turn of the Screw" is an opera with all the joie de vie of an impacted wisdom tooth, it was not surprising that it drew about half the capacity of the City Center as the second offering Oct. 5 of the fall season. The production gives rise to a number of questions: Should a creepy, intimate show be done in tremendous full-stage setting? Or played upstage almost to 56th St.?

If opera in English gets no more understandable diction than here, why not in Welsh, Urdu, or Hungarian? Why must the otherwise admirable Patricia Neway be described in the lines as "young and innocent" — or the sprighly Marija Kova attempt the fiction of a creaky, ancient housekeeper? Miss Neway must be the least temperamental of leading singers if she did not call a strike before going on in the hat she wore.

The Henry James' story is one of the most sophisticated of horror dramas, mainly because no one knows exactly what James meant. The Myfanwy Piper libretto cannot be effectively staged because it is a shallow skim of the original, lacking voltage and build-up. No more effective communication for flesh-crawling than music could be asked for, yet the composer's usual lean scoring is even more restrained in this work. The bones show, and they are not articulated into a frightening skeleton.

Richard Cassilly and Jean Kraft as the wraiths were in good voice, but handicapped by roles wherein they appeared dangerously similar to a pair of well-known Charles Addams characters. As hampered by muddy characterizations and lack of projection when upstage were the two children, Bruce Zahariades and Michele Farr. Richard Krause, a clear-voiced Prologue, was the seventh member of the cast.

The lighting was occasionally tentative and chattering talk, presumably from backstage, was annoying during quieter moments. It was a good idea to provide propmen with black duster coats to make the between-scene changes in the semi-gloom, but why did they wear light-colored pants?

Vocal highlights of the production included the welcoming scene for the Governess (Miss Neway) and the dramatic confrontation of Miss Jesse (Jean Kraft) by the Housekeeper (Miss Kova). Leve.

Drive Carefully; School's Out

Toronto, Oct. 16.

Nathan Cohen, drama critic for the Toronto Star, was burned in effigy recently by cast members of "The Hostage" because he called the Brendan Behan comedy "almost entirely lacklustre composition."

Ernest Rawley, manager of the Royal Alexandra, Toronto, where the show is playing, expressed disapproval of the company's action, but Joseph Schaeffer, co-producer, said the presentation "needed the support of Cohen, as Toronto's foremost drama critic, and a yea from him would have helped a great deal at the boxoffice."

Several members of the troupe were pointedly absent when the stunt was pulled off. During the incident, placards were displayed calling Cohen a "lonely no critic," adding, "this distinction deserves extinction."

Henri Caubisens is production stage manager and Michael Sinclair stage manager of the "Mary, Mary" company at the Blackstone Theatre, Chicago.

Dublin Festival

tioning. How come? No one could find the "lift-boy." Who, it turned out, was sitting in a corner puzzling over the script of a new play.

That's the kind of town it is. And that's the kind of festival they run. Once a year, come one come all, here a play there a play—and all Oirish!

Probably the best new play of the lot this year was "Stephen D," a dramatization from James Joyce's early writing. It's sure to be seen and heard from again, at least in London and would (if edited and recast a bit) be a bet elsewhere.

A lavish new local musical, "Fursey," was the most expensive and most ambitious effort. It reminds (dimly) of "Brigadoon" and "Finian's Rainbow," but will need major operations to make it palatable outside of Dublin, where it could run profitably a couple of months on local momentum. An impossibly weak score is the problem, though the book and lyrics are fine.

Novel is probably the best word for "Othello," with an American, William Marshall, in the title role and Michael MacLiammor as Iago. It is not the first time that a Negro (remember Paul Robeson) has been cast as the Moor but that introduces some interest. But Marshall, who started his show biz career in the Broadway original showing of "Carmen Jones" as a chorister, and who has been singing in a Paris strippery until recently, hasn't the experience for the part. Nevertheless the show went out immediately on a 10-week tour after its opening five day run at the Fest.

One-Man Vogue

Since the current thing in amusements is the "one man vogue," there were a number of examples of this "art." Siobhan McKenna, who should know better, did an evening of cloying charm, which she should file and forget rapidly. A thing called "An Evening with Brendan Behan" consists of excerpts from that extrovert's earlier scribbling, as read and acted by three gents, one of whom, Charles Roberts, is very good. This needs re-thinking, re-writing and re-staging. Alan Simpson, who directed, is the most talented stager in Ireland, so he probably can fix it. It could be wonderful in London, New York or anywhere else. Jack McGowran, a good actor, did a one-man resume of Sam Beckett's writings—which is a bore.

Agnes Bernelle did "From Bercht to Brecht," all songs, and a good evening. Peter O'Shaughnessy and his wife Shirley Smith did "Courtship Through the Ages," highly polished excerpts from classics, well done but so-what?

Exception to the local plays, were two O'Neill productions (one of them, "A Tough of the Poet," was very well done indeed) and T. S. Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral," staged in St. Patrick's. These were still local because with local talent. But there was an import of an "American Dance Company," very Martha-Graham, very dull, and a Spanish Gypsy dance co. The latter was pertty good, though needing staging and lighting advice.

Festival Committee says that next year they will import more plays and shows and make the Festival more "international." Please, gents, please. Don't do it. Stay as you are. That's the best thing you've got, the fact that you're on your own.

Peer Gynt

for his striking costume designs, especially those for the Trolls, the strange people in the mountain, with their hideous masks and tails.

The adventures of Peer Gynt, the shiftless, idle liar, whose daydreams are based on the experiences of others, provides the background for a narrative of motion picture dimensions. After stealing a bride on the eve of her marriage, and seducing the Troll princess, Peer Gynt wanders the world, making a fortune in shipping by transporting natives and selling idols to the Chinese, subsequently finding himself the centre of attraction in a Turkish harem, and later installed as "emperor" of an asylum, before returning to his native Norway.

The kaleidoscopic production, requiring some 40 scene changes, presents Leo McKern with a role of gigantic proportions. He is on stage throughout, and never misses a trick. It is a remarkable portrayal, and his gradual change from a young, barefoot loafer to prosperous tycoon, and eventual old age is effectively carried out.

It is a role which, of necessity, dwarfs the others. Nevertheless, Elliott has recruited first-class talent for the other roles, and the overall effect is outstanding. Catherine Lacey is an impressive mother. Dilys Hamlett has a simple charm as Solveig, the girl who waits all her life for the wanderer to return.

Adrienne Corri delights in three parts, but particularly as Anitra, one of the harem girls. Esmond Knight is standout as King of the Trolls, and there is a superb, though brief, study by Wilfrid Lawson as the Button Moulder, who is waiting to melt the body of Peer Gynt.

Elliott has set himself a high standard with his opening production, which will surely help to lift the Old Vic out of its recent rut. Perhaps the improvement will even be maintained for the remaining four scheduled productions.

more in the talent of its members than in either the form or content of its sketches, dialogs and songs.

There is a good sketch of a boy and girl whose animal desires on a date are frustrated by the social mores; another on how the British Labor Party might use contemporary advertising techniques; and a crackerjack closing song whose frothy lyric is bitingly counterpointed by a silent film montage of political riots, picket lines, H-Bombs bursting and Her Majesty waving from an open carriage. This is the trenchant stuff. The rest for the most part is merely mischievous, approximately on the level of painting a mustache on a poster of the Queen.

The targets are not unlike those of their U.S. counterparts, scoping the British class system, royalty, race prejudice in the U.K. England's dependence on the U.S. JFK and Jackie, and the ministries of defense and trade. It's amusing, but mostly because the players, John Bird, Eleanor Bron, John Fortune and Jeremy Geidt, are sure-footed in their comedy and carry it off with flair. Fortune and Geidt, in particular, appear to be ready for a bigger stage.

Production values are practically nil, but effective use is made of motion picture and slidefilm projection.

by the late Winthrop Ames, originally had a seating capacity of 299, which was subsequently increased to about 600 with the addition of a balcony. The building was purchased in 1931 by the Times and has been under lease by ABC for use as a television studio since 1951. The network, which is now paying an annual rental of $37,950, has been notified by the Times that the lease is to be terminated next Sept. 1.

The Little Theatre Corp. proposes to operate the house as a regular legit showcase with a seating capacity of 550. However, the intention is to get maximum use out of the house by also making it available at all times of the day for varied bookings, ranging from poetry readings to fashion shows. Two performances nightly of legit offerings at the house are contemplated, one around 6 o'clock and the other about 9.

In a producing capacity, the corporation intends offering its own presentations at the theatre, either independently or in association with other managements. The firm plans financing the productions through "normal channels of theatrical investment." Productions are to be limited to runs of about 10 weeks, and if an offering is successful the plan is to move it to a larger house.

It's the company's aim to sign actors, directors and others to contracts with the Little Theatre rather than for individual productions. A restuarant and bar are also being considered for the three-story theatre building.

Officers and directors of the corporation, besides Euster, include Leonard B. Moore, executive vice-president; George Segal, production vice-president and director; Richard Osorio, sales promotion v.p.; Leonard Tow, treasurer; William M. Wilson, secretary and director, and Phyllis Paperno, assistant secretary-treasurer.

Euster has been president, director and a principal stockholder of Intervest Enterprises Inc., a New York investment firm. Moore, Tow and Wilson are also from Intervest. Segal is an actor and Miss Paperno has been a Broadway production assistant.

Rudy Toronto, of the Broadway production of "Carnival," assisted director Peter Glenville in the staging of a dance sequence for "Tchin-Tchin," now trying out in Boston.

John Denson Exits N.Y. Trib

As invariably happens in the wake of a high echelon change, N.Y. Herald Tribune staffers are waiting to see who else may follow John Denson, who quit as editor of the John Hay Whitney morning paper last week.

Denson was the man who appointed Seymour Friedin as his foreign news boss and gave Murray Weiss command of metropolitan coverage. In the week since Denson quit, reportedly after a long-running budget fiff with Trib prexy Walter Thayer, no change has occured in these areas.

When Denson walked, Whitney gave the No 1 Trib editorial job to 40-year-old James Gilbert Bellows, who now holds the title of managing editor.

Old Newsweeker Denson was followed in his walkout last Thursday (11) by Freeman Fulbright, his executive editor — national news. He came to the daily over a year ago from Newsweek soon after Denson made the change and was replaced this week at the Tribune by 32-year-old Richard C. Wald, until then the paper's correspondent in London

Reports indicate that shortly before quitting Denson and Thayer both went to see publisher-editor-in-chief Whitney and Denson made it clear that he'd leave if the vote didn't go his way. Evidently crux of the Denson-Thayer dispute was over problems of late-breaking editorial changes which Denson advocated and which evidently cost more money to handle than Thayer and his production department thought necessary.

It is also reported that Denson's insistence on 11th hour remakes, etc., showed up suburban distribution of the ayem paper.

In parting, via a memo posted on the bulletin board to the Trib staff, Denson—who brought some mag layout ideas to Page 1 of the Trib—noted that September circulation figures "will have a cheerful ring" and that the issues under his aegis in October "appear even brighter" regarding circulation.

Sylvia Beach

Sylvia Beach, 75, bookseller, was found dead in her Paris apartment, apparently of a heart attack. The address was the same one she had had for nearly 40 years and was upstairs over the bookshop she established in 1919 which she called Shakespeare & Co. and which, for many years, was the hangout for virtually every important American writer in Europe.

Besides providing a free mail address and message centre, Miss Beach was also instrumental in helping important artists to meet and communicate. Ezra Pound, James Joyce, Gertrude Stein, Scott Fitzgerald and many others of that era were almost daily visitors to the shop, George Antheil lived in an apartment immediately over the shop, etc. But her prime call to fame stems from the fact that she published Joyce's "Ulysses" when no one else dared do so. She printed a bit under 30,000 copies in about a dozen editions and just about broke even on the venture. Then the book was cleared by the American courts and published in a "regular" edition by Random House—but she refused to take any money for the rights, saying it all belonged to Joyce from that point on. "I was neither the mother or father," she explained. "Just the midwife."

Miss Beach opened the shop on a whim after meeting Adrienne Monnier, a Frenchwoman who had a bookshop across the rue de l'Odeon, which was a centre and gathering place for French literati. She (Miss Beach) cabled her parents in the U. S.: "Opening bookshop send money." They did. She opened the shop and began collecting American "names," which she sometimes exchanged with Mlle Monnier. Although the Joyce book was her only admitted publishing venture, she was helpful in finding publishers for many other writers and poets. She closed the shop when the Germans occupied Paris during the war and never reopened it, but retained the apartment. An autobiography, "Shakespeare & Company," was published by Harcourt Brace in 1959, at which time Miss Beach was also decorated with the Legion of Honor by the French Government for her "service to literature."

Fanning's Shift

Lawrence S. Fanning, who has been exec editor of the Chicago Sun-Times since 1959, has moved over in the same capacity to the Chi Daily News, the afternoon sister sheet also owned by Marshall Field Jr. Fanning replaces Thomas H. Collins, an administrative holdover from the John S. Knight regime, who indicated he would move to North Carolina to devote fulltime to writing.

Moving up to Fanning's post at the Sun-Times is Emmett Dedmon, the morning paper's managing editor since 1959 and previously its feature editor. Fanning had joined the Sun-Times in 1955 after 12 years as managing editor of the San Francisco Chronicle.

Possible TV Series

Pulitzer Prizewinning reporter Miriam Ottenberg is the author of "The Federal Investigators" (Prentice Hall, $5.95) which shapes as a possible tv series. The investigative reporter for the Washington Star covers 17 Federal investigating agencies, both known and unknown.

Miss Ottenberg's approach consists in a brief study and history of each agency. Then lucidly and sometimes dramatically she narrates a sample case of the agency. Among the sections of the book which loom as tv possibilities are: the FBI probing espionage; the State Dept. Office of Security following the trial of U. S. Diplomat Irving Scarbeck who released confidential information to the Polish government to protect his mistress; a case of the Internal Revenue Service Alcohol and Tobacco Tax Division which imparts new facts on the Florida murder of Judge Chillingworth. Mosc.

S&S' Show Biz Books

Stephen Longstreet's new novel, via Simon & Schuster, "The Flesh Peddlers," accents that the "behind - the - scenes (machinations) about a colossal talent agency the size of MCA, William Morris, etc." is fictitious although there is also the climax of a Congressional (not a Dept. of Justice) investigation.

Lillian and Helen Ross' "The Player" is sparked by such thespic authorities as Cedric Hardwicke, Sophia Loren, Zero Mostel, Joan Crawford, Patty Duke, Kim Stanley, Fredric March, Simone Signoret.

Harold Robbins' new novel, "Where Love Has Gone," which Joseph E. Levine will film as he is doing with "The Carpetbaggers," is a novel about Hollywood from Trident Press, an affiliate of S&S, which is also bringing out a king-size $10 gift edition of "The Lerner & Loewe Song Book," with preface by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe. "Pete Martin Calls On . . ." by the ex-Satevepost editor-interviewer, is an anthology of interviews with show biz names.

Book Ballyhoo Via Tapes

Henriette Jelm, who handles west coast public relations for Doubleday, is starting a new type of promotion via radio, tapes and records for her company. She has assigned Dick Strout, Hollywood syndicated radio commentator, to use techniques similar to those he has used to promote Hollywood pictures and personalities, in publicizing Doubleday books and authors. The new type interviews with authors will be distributed over radio stations in the U.S. and Canada.

Strout's first assignments for this series have been Joan Crawford's "Portrait of Joan" with Jane Ardmore, Adela Roger St Johns' "Final Verdict" and Paul Wellman's "Magnificent Destiny."

Elizabethan Theatre

"The Rise of the Common Player," by M. C. Bradbrook (Harvard; $5.25) is a valuable study of theatre and society in Elizabethan England. Book contains some "discoveries" in research; notably correspondence concerning the important early theatre of Leicester's Men (1576). Scholarship throughout is excellent. Author is a Fellow of Girton College, Cambridge, England, known for her volumes on Shakespeare, Ibsen, Malory and T. S. Eliot.

She dedicates this tome to Dame Edith Evans, and to their mutual friend, Judith Wilson. Rodo.

Robert Burns a la Russe

Samuel Marshak, 75-year-old Soviet writer and poet, has completed a new Russian translation of the works of Robert Burns, Scot poet, in two volumes. Emrys Hughes, his longtime friend, who is British Member of Parliament for South Ayrshire, learned this in a letter from Marshak's son, a leading scientist in Russia.

Hughes was planning to visit Marshak's home in Moscow this fall, but put it off when the Russian writer fell ill. Latter is now convalescing at Yalta, and Hughes hopes to fly to Moscow soon to see him.

Marshak's translations of Burns, notably "Tam O'Shanter" and of "Death of Doctor Hornbrok," have been hailed on both sides of the Iron Curtain. He has also translated Shakespeare's works and produced a Russian edition of the "Nonsense Rhymes" of Edward Lear.

Morris' Post

William Morris, lately exec ed of Grolier Encyclopedia, will be editor-in-chief of a new "international" encyclopedia, as yet untitled and unpatterned to be published by same house. He was previously long with Grosset & Dunlap.

The Bell Syndicate feature, "Words, Wit and Wisdom," is also produced by Morris.

Who's Who In Advertising is a new bio book being edited by Eldridge Peterson for Haire Publishing Co.

Ray Russell's musicomedy, "Come To Me, My Melancholy Dane," getting a pre-production trailer with a condensation in the forthcoming November issue of Playboy. Mag's digest includes songs and lyrics for Hamlet, Ophelia, Claudius and Polonius. Russell's approach is that since most click musicals of late have been based on books, novels, etc. he recoursed to the most famous of them all, Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

Random House's forthcoming "Clair De Lune," Pierre LaMure's novel about Claude Debussy, has tied in with the Capitol Records' new album of the same name. This year marks Debussy's 100th anniversary. LaMure's novel, based on the composer's life and times, is hailed as analagous to what he did to focusing attention on Toulouse-Lautrec in his successful novel, "Moulin Rouge."

William C. Lengel, editor-in-chief of Fawcett World Library and long an associate and close friend of Theodore Dreiser, has provided the introductions for two of that author's books, "A Gallery of Women" and "12 Men," 75c Premier paperbacks via the Fawcett World Library.

Charles F. Chapman, publisher of Motor Boating, appointed Eugene S. Waggaman Jr. as g.m. of the publication. Waggaman, presently manager of the magazine advertising bureau of Magazine Publishers Assn., was formerly promotion director of Macfadden Publications and an account executive for Pedlar & Ryan.

Fleet Pub.'s entry into short story anthologies includes "Party of Dreamers" by Robert Lowry and "The Surly Sullen Bell" by Russell Kirk.

Erwin A. Single, editor and co-publisher of the N. Y. Staats-Herold, returned last Monday (15) from a six-week business trip to West Germany, Austria and Switzerland.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs.

Unless you are born in a family with a solid biz and like looking in on it once in a while to pick up some cash, it is no fun being a son of a famous father. People don't really expect you to top him and deride you if you don't.

Nathaniel Hawthorne had a son Julian who wasn't a bad novelist but he never won so much as a scarlet A from the critcs. Julian's son in turn never rose above a sports writer (tennis) for the old N. Y. Trib. That was about as far as he could go, even when surrounded by staffers like Grantland Rice, Heywood Broun and W. O. McGeehan.

Subsidized Scribe

Things may turn out differently for Will Fowler. Gene Fowler's youngest son first tried acting rather than buck the younger son tradition and was making $250 a week when he decided, after all, he wanted to be a newspaperman. Gene helped get a job on th old L. A. Examiner and paid him the difference between the Examiner's wage scale and what he had been earning as an actor. Will put in a 10-year hitch on the now extinct examiner during an era when that sheet was hardly more than a Mickey Cohn handbill.

But now he has broken those lowly chains and has cut loose with an astonishingly interesting bio of his Pop and his quixotic and highly liquored career. It is called "The Young Man From Denver," a phrase publisher Hearst (who never took a memory course) used to describe his free-wheeling and frequently loaded star reporter. Doubleday publishes "Young Man" for a modest $3.95 and to those who think there was nothing like the '20s and '30s or Gene Fowler it makes a delightful reading.

One Buck Equals $283

Though I thought Gene had told us all that was worth knowing about himself in his bunch of books, Will Fowler adds plenty of new stuff and even gives new depth on some of his Pop's already published stories. And he writes with surprising detachment, clarity and humor. Did you know, for instance, that one time Gene was the highest paid scriptwriter in Hollywood, paid $1,000 a day on a year's contract? Previously he had been a $3,000-a-week man, when the contract was renewed for six weeks Gene demanded a raise of $3,001. He got it too, though the negotiations cost his agent $1,700 to get the $6 raise.

Though no man is supposed to be a hero to his butler it is obvious Gene Fowler was a hero to his son. Gene's Hollywood cronies were nonconformists, according to Will Fowler, but many of them were anarchists really, heavy drinking, anti-social, ribald and maudlin in their cups.

Their Pitches "Low and Inside"

Their humor in the main was visceral and though Gene in his last years expressed dissenting opinions on the novelists who could not get their prose, their heroes or their heroines out of bed, his own dialog could have been used as contrapuntal exercises for the novelists of today. (Tourist: "Does Lana Turner live here?" Fowler: "Do you think I'd be sitting out here if she did?")

Like the Prodigal Son, however, Gene turned a cleaner windswept corner in his last 10 years and spent his time praising his flowers, his children and grandchildren, his collection of hats, going to Mass daily and struggling to finish "Skyline," his last book.

As "Young Man" is an honest book, certainly as honest as a Hearst-trained writer could write about another Hearst-trained writer, it swoops up rather than avoids all the vulgarities that made the private lives of Hollywood notables caviar to the mob of peasants who overpaid them. It is easy to say that once in such a circle one had no choice except to go along with it and sort of play Boswell to their obscenities, but it was a big enough town to bypass them if one wanted to.

Took Up Boyhood Too Late

In the main these eminents had lived sheltered lives in their boyhood and never reached the dirty conversations of boys until they reached their middle years. Raised among truckdrivers and muleskinners, they would have dropped the humor of bagslingers on reaching manhood, not carried it on as a sole conversation piece till their arteries hardened and death warned them that it was time to clean up their scripts.

Being allowed to partake of their ribald conversation and drink liquor as a teenager, it is astonishing that more of these sons didn't land before judges in juvenile courts. That Will Fowler was an exception is proof that his guardian angel must have been working three shifts a day.

Fifty years ago, such writing as sprinkles "Young Man From Denver," would have been described as befouling your own nest, but today success is measured by what you leave in, not by what you leave out.

I have long thought that the way to write about the first half of this century, and particularly Hollywood's contributions to it, would have been for the writers to write about the personalities as if they had been dead a hundred years and then bury their prose in a time-capsule. That would be real art for art's sake. But few have shared the desires to contribute their footnotes to the historians of the future in this manner.

The Will Fowler Version

Gene Fowler's letters, poems, wisecracks, personal encounters and binges would have lost nothing if embalmed for a century with him. Besides, some still living who had to suffer the space-suits of anonymity could have been named where now they cannot be named without subpenas from their libel lawyers. But of course in such a case Will Fowler never would have had the chance to show whether he could top his Pop as a writer.

He confuses rather than clears a story in the syndrome of Daddy's Gone-A-Hunting. He tells how Gene, alone in Hollywood while his wife Agnes and the children were in the east, got himself involved with a femme picture star and when it looked as if he were going the way of all Babbitts away from home, he said he was pulling out for home via an oiltanker and the Panama Canal. When the ship reached Havana there was his girl-friend waiting for him. She apparently had flown to Cuba and was waiting around for the fugitive from her charms by going sailing with a Cuban. The boat got overturned in a squall and her Havana gondolier got chewed to death by sharks.

Thus by the time Fowler reached that port his private life was open to other sharks. He telephoned his wife, confessing all.

In New York reporters were waiting for the oiler to dock but Fowler flew in later and crossed them up. His wife Agnes handled their embarrassment with what used to be called aplomb but probably would now be covered by the phrase, "So what?"

'Nothing Today For Milkman'

Except in agreeing to the bare outline other versions to the story shift the issue of sex and blackmail to more powerful personalities. In fact the issues in other versions, once understood, practically absolve Gene and in any event call for a great deal of compassion.

The author of "Young Man From Denver" certainly knows how to write a book. His first chapter, written in a small roundhouse, 17 steps below the Fowler villa in Brentwood, which Will and his brother Gene Jr. built for their father, begins with the day Gene died and follows every step of that day as it happened to the living.

It ends on his leaving the house and looking into a milk bottle at the front door, which contained a note saying, "Nothing today."

But in between is a book that even Gene's old friend Westbrook Pegler would find it hard to pan.

Edward Franklin Albee's impact with his first full-length play, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," spotlights anew that he was adopted by the Reed A. Albees when he was two weeks old in 1928 but that he has been estranged from them since 1960 when he left their well-to-do Larchmont ho[illegible] a writing career. He is named for the late E. F. Albee, th[illegible]th-Albee circuit vaudeville tycoon.

Eddie Fisher hosted a midnight supper at Luchow's for newlyweds Joey Forman and his bride, the singer Jeannine Caire, who were married last Sunday (7) in Philly. Foreman's hometown. Comedian Foreman was to have opened with "Fisher at the Winter Garden," but couldn't because of the wedding date. Incidentally, a box-office snafu at the WG in selling tickets for last Wednesday's matinee, caused refunds and disappointments despite the ads heralding only Sat.-Sun. mats.

Far East showman Run Run Shaw came in like a whirlwind last week for six days of powwows with film biz execs before taking off to Dallas for the Neiman-Marcus "Oriental Fortnight" fashion, film and arts show. Shaw is official delegate of the Asian entrepreneurs. He returns to his Hong Kong base via London. "Oriental Fortnight" teed off yesterday (Tues.) with the Dallas preem of Akira Kurosawa's "Yojimbo" at the Coronet Theatre for benefit of the Dallas Civic Opera Guild at $10 top.

Originally Dick Halliday, producer-husband of Mary Martin, bought the Dwight Taylor biog of his melodrama producer-father, Charles Taylor, as a vehicle for a legit musical. Now he's made a deal for Cecelia Taylor's biog of their mother, Laurette Taylor, the legit star ("Glass Menagerie" etc.), in order to beef up the femme part of the libretto, since Miss Martin will star therein. Attorney Howard Reinheimer and Harold Freedman (Brandt & Brandt) for Taylor worked out the legal details for a split of the libretto royalties.

on Oct. 15 (Monday), gave the Met its earliest-ever inaugural, two weeks ahead of the usual date. "Chenier" is a molasses-slow piece of musical hokum about the French revolution whose set pieces and vocal opportunities are paced too far apart for excitement. It provided the kind of performance in which the claque attracted more attention than the singers in whose causes the calculated delirium erupted.

It was Eileen Farrell's year to be the gala opening diva. On the whole she did well, though uneven. Franco Corelli as Chenier did some standup belting which was "operatic" but he seemed pale and lacking in stage presence at other moments. That second act duel which gets him into a jam was pretty unconvincing as staged by Dino Yannopoulos and executed by the tenor.

Meanwhile at the boxoffice there was $99,207 in hand to make the evening count in this, one of the final, years at the old, yellow-brick stand. As to the cost of admission in the prospective $40,000,000 shrine at Lincoln Center nobody will say because nobody can now know.

Intuition senses that the present season may be an artistic peak of the Rudolf Bing regime. Apparently his 13th season is being planned with care and imagination to cleanse public memory of the 1961 "cancellation" valse macabre. In a repertory of 23 works this season (26 weeks, longest ever), the Met will present five new productions, of which the Feb. 21 "La Sonnabula" with Joan Sutherland, promises greatness.

Inevitably this fall's first night brought comparisons with Philharmonic Hall. Not for the high admission trend ($100 at the latter) but because Philharmonic Hall's commodious foyers and promenades made the Met's passageways seem narrow indeed and its upholstery shabby by contrast. In theory the Met is supposed to move by 1965 but surprise should lift no eyebrows if it's 1966 or even 1967.

As to whether, or to what extent, Monday's gathering of prima donas and other characters constitutes an upper class audience, presumed solvency to one side, there is the small piquancy of "Andre Chenier" being one long lyrical hiss at aristocracy. Of course the lyrics were muffled in the typical non-diction of opera, but even so the audience would hardly have been self-conscious. They reserved their self-conscious moments for the photographers, as usual.

cessive drinking, and not of coffee, was being done on camera. FCC inquiry, in fact, was prompted by a viewer's complaint.

In response to the FCC inquiry about the show, WNEW said that panelists were under the tension of adlibbing for two hours, but otherwise performed according to normal routine. It was pointed out that because it was the preem show, WNEW-TV set up a buffet and bar in the studio for the friends of the panelists before the show was taped. The station emphatically denied that the show was in any way a boozing party.

With Susskind as host, the panelists on that show included Jackie Gleason, Joe E. Lewis, the late Ernie Kovacs, Toots Shor, Marya Mannes, Richard Gehman and Leonore Lemmon.

'Mr. Prez'

fore the St. James opening, with opportunity for additional work.

The basic problem with the version of "Mr. President" which opened here was that it fell dead with the first act curtain. Act I concerned the final weeks the U.S President spent in office. Act II was involved with his life as an ex-President. Can an ex-President be as interesting as a President? Happily ever.

Considerable electric stagecraft has been shot into the second act, with new dances and rewritten songs, fresh staging and a shortened and changed ending. It is far more exciting. And while an ex-President may still have less appeal as a character, the zip and zing of potent production numbers take the attention away from deficiencies in the plot.

There will obviously be some who think the new ending is too, too red, white & blue. There was one suggestion that the only thing missing was a final act of patriotism by star Robert Ryan. He could rip off his shirt to display the U.S. Constitution tatooed on his chest.

But if the final plot lines "be flag waving," as the final Irving Berlin song lyric goes, "do you know of a better flag to wave?"

is wrong in this fair land."

Broadcasting gets shoved outside the traditional American concept of freedom of expression with the excuse that frequencies are publicly owned, Hyde noted.

"I think this argument," he declared, "tends to overlook the fact that the frequencies as such would be useless without substantial investments in plant, and the still larger investments and risks involved in the production of a product whose value in the market is generally fleeting and always subject to many uncertainties.

"It seems to me," he continued, "that the argument that the Government must intervene in program matters because the frequencies belong to the public is an illogical combination of opposing concepts. Wouldn't it be more reasonable to urge that the right of choice should go with ownership?"

Downing's Collection

and John Lacy acting editions.

Among the most important items are Downing's own scripts used in the productions of plays by Tennessee Williams and Robert E. Sherwood, productions directed by Elia Kazan, and plays starring the Alfred Lunts. Artifacts of theatrical production include scene designs, stage plans, technical drawings, and costume sketches which Downing collected as production stage manager in recent years.

Stage "props" include medals worn by Sir Laurence Olivier and Sir Michael Redgrave and other leading men in various Broadway productions, 1940-1960.

Apart from the extensive Downing library on the history, theory and practice of the legitimate stage, motion pictures, vaudeville, circus, magic, music, the dance, puppetry and television, the collection contains numerous inscribed photographs of theatrical personalities. An extensive series of photos by Carl Van Vechten, with his annotations, is included.

The 10,000 items of the collection also include manuscripts, letters, autographs, programs, scrapbooks and sheet music. There are 85 scripts of plays in typescript which bear extensive markings by directors on stage managers, including Downing's own scripts for important Broadway productions.

Downing has served as stage manager for 25 productions, including such Pulitzer Prizewinners as "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "A Streetcar Named Desire," "There Shall Be No Night," and "J.B." He has been associated with outstanding figures of the American theatre — performers, playwrights, producers and directors—since the '30s. He is also a playwright and director.

In the current issue of Drama Survey, Downing describes the evolution of the stage manager in the American theatre, and tells how he became one. "I was 15 years old when I became a professional actor in tent shows and aboard a showboat in the middlewest," he recalls. "When I was in my early 20s, the Lunts rescued me from Federal Theatre in Chicago, and brought me to New York. They turned me into a stage manager."

Downing learned his craft from the Lunts' "master stage manager," George Greenberg, while working as an actor and technician for "Idiot's Delight," "Amphitryon 38," "The Sea Gull," "The Taming of the Shrew," and "There Shall Be No Night."

Commenting on the importance of the Downing Collection to the program of the College of Fine Arts, Dr. Frederick J. Hunter, curator of the Hoblitzelle Theatre Arts Library and associate professor of drama said: "I am especially pleased that this extensive collection is now a part of our Theatre Arts Library in that it will supply so much resource material for research in theatre and drama."

Dr. Harry Ransom, Chancellor of the University System, who arranged the acquisition of the Downing Collection, said that this addition is a major step in the program to build a distinguished research center in the arts for Texas.

NAB Grass Roots

Washington front, in effect exhorted owners not to ask what their Washington Lobby can do for them but what they can do for their Washington lobby.

Tv especially is having image problems in D.C., the NAB lobbyist said. "They allege a complete breakdown in public morality, an insatiable greed for money on the part of station owners, absence of aesthetic quality of the programs (a euphemism for the "wasteland") and numerous other shortcomings," Comstock balefully said.

And on the other hand, he continued, "almost universally they urge a need for more regulation, which salutary event, they say, has been forestalled by an omnipotent broadcasting lobby in Washington."

Comstock never explicitly mentioned the anonymous little "theys" running around Washington sticking thorns in the industry's side. But as far as the omnipotent lobby, it just isn't so, said its boss.

But the effect of the attacks and criticism of the industry is what should worry the owners. And closing the full circle, this is why owners should jump into politics.

Said Comstock, "a Congressional liaison will give stature to NAB as spokesman for people who count in his (a Congressman's) district. By keeping close legislative contact, we shall engender a deeper understanding and sympathy in Congress for the problems and aspirations of broadcasting."

warned, if every show was planned "in isolation" and judged by its selling power for advertisers "based on the sheer number of viewers whose switches are turned on." He believed tv itself didn't mold society but it would be foolish to claim it had no influence at all. Every broadcaster, he said, must work on the assumption that tv has an influence of which he must take account. "When he brings tv into millions of homes, he must surely assume some effect."

His committees probed ownership of tvers and based its consideration on possible damage to broadcasting "and the dangers for democracy inherent in a situation where television was helping to bring about a reduction in the number of competing newspapers while not being a certain competitor with its owners itself." Lauding all tv news, he saw danger in potential abuse of news shows on stations owned by newspapers.

Nitery Owners

owner of the Crescendo in Hollywood, said that the fear of an expense account crackdown would probably hurt business more than the new laws themselves. First order of business was to recommend that the ANCA tell all the tax advisory services that they should not unduly frighten their clients into curbing their swindle sheets. Norman reported that a closer look at the tax [illegible] shows that there is much room for business entertainment if it is fairly reported.

The Prohibitionists were mentioned only in passing in the open meeting, but the operators privately said that the antibooze folk were the closest thing to the classic "small group of willful men—and women." Owners from the various states said that the drys were among the most active opponents of all types of nitery operations. As the owner of a southwestern club put it: "If we lobbied as effectively as the Prohibitionists, we'd be in good shape."

Talent and their agents got a brief but thorough working over at Monday's session. Enrico Banducci, of San Francisco's hungry i, tartly said that the agents were trying to strangle the business. Other members chimed that the whole marquee lure approach to the nitery business was outmoded and impossible in the light of name act money demands.

David Branower, a former club owner and now a Coast producer and agent, suggested that the clubs concentrate less on publicizing name acts and more on selling the club as a place to go. He advocated a stronger pitch for parties, meetings and conventions.

The assembled nitery ops concurred in that a great untapped potential for business lay in the younger set. Bill Newkirk, ANCA secretary and owner of the Tidelands in Houston, said that he had had success with teenage matinees and with urging acts to take on college and high school concerts dates while they were in town. The owners were also urged to take advantage of the prom season by booking acts that would attract the youngsters.

In other discussions, Oscar Marienthal, owner of the London House, Mister Kelly's and the Happy Medium in Chi and host for the meeting, related his experiences with his two successful revues at the Happy Medium, and there was also a brief session on the availability, calibre and cost of foreign talent.

The meeting at one point digressed into a discussion of the public image of the night club today. Banducci maintained that the term "night club" has had a negative connotation since the days of the speakeasies. A committee was appointed to explore the possibility of a new name for ANCA which would omit the night club tag.

'I Was Worth It'

Citing his own stints before service personnel in Hawaii were paid for out of military recreation funds, Vallee said he thought the servicemen felt him well worth the price.

Said Yale to Brown: "Let not envy unjustified as yours rear its head without just cause and reason. Or, as someone has just remarked: Were you trying to get your name in the news?"

Widnall has repeated on the House floor that he has no objection to barrels of loot for performers on commercials, in Las Vegas, on tv, records or motion pictures, but his gripe is against the same scale being paid out of Uncle Sam's pocket, especially when many performers also work free for the USO.

In his reply letter to Vallee, Widnall enlisted President Kennedy and Poet Robert Frost in his cause. He quoted Kennedy's inaugural text, "'Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country'". And he pointed to Frost's request for artist and poet equality. This is what he is proposing, Widnall wrote.

OBITUARIES

TOD BROWNING

Tod Browning, 82, veteran director who specialized in such horror films as "The Unholy Three" and "Dracula" and was associated with the late Lon Chaney in many of his top films, died in Hollywood Oct. 6 as he was recuping from a cancer operation.

Entering silent films in 1917 after having toured the world with such various companies as "Mutt and Jeff" and "World of Mirth," he became identified with horror and mystic pix and for years was a top Metro director.

Among his other best-known films were "The Unknown," "Road to Mandalay," "Hypnotist," "Blackbird" and "The Mystic." "West of Zanzibar," with Chaney, who also starred in "Unholy Three," was probably Browning's most successful production. He also wrote and directed several films for Universal, later returning to Metro where he did "Freaks" and "Mark of the Vampire."

Browning, who retired in 1942, was one of five honorary life members of the Directors Guild of America.

LULU McCONNELL

Lulu McConnell, 80, former vaudevillian who appeared with such stars as Eddie Cantor, George Jessel, Lillian Russell and Anna Held and whose voice was known to millions as a member of the radio panel show, "It Pays To Be Ignorant," was found dead Oct. 9 in the Hollywood home of a friend. She had been suffering from cancer for years.

A native of Kansas City, Mo., Miss McConnell joined a legit stock company at age 17, then went into vaudeville. At the Alhambra Theatre, N.Y., in 1910 she reportedly had stage fright and lost her voice. It was then that she made her "nail file delivery"—a raspy voice—that established her as a comedienne.

She had featured roles in "Poor Little Ritz Girl" and is credited with taking Jack Oakie out of the chorus in "Peggy Ann," in which she starred, to launch his eventual career in Hollywood. In radio she appeared with Gertrude Niesen and Isham Jones.

She was married to Grant Simpson, also in vaudeville.

NEAL O'HARA

Neal O'Hara, 69, columnist in the Boston Traveler for nearly 39 years, died at Massachusetts General Hospital Oct. 4. O'Hara, whose column bore the title of "Take It From Me," joined the newspaper from the old Boston Post, after being a correspondent at Harvard. He was a graduate of the class of 1915.

Known in the theatrical and sports world as well as in politics, he had covered many events with the late Will Rogers. He also had a career as a toastmaster and afterdinner speaker. For years he was responsible for many of the hilarious skits that the Clover Club of Boston turned out.

His beat was the humorous side of life, and he numbered among his many intimates in the show biz world, the late Fred Allen. Often together, they poked fun at many a national figure. In a report to his Harvard class of 1950, on its 35th anni, he wrote: "Oh, well, as Fred Allen recently told me, 'This nation now is being run by a man who couldn't even sell a pair of suspenders. No wonder the country is losing its pants.'" His witty observations were part of the Boston journalistic scene for nearly half a century.

Syndicated columnist for the Boston Traveler also at one time was syndicated by the old N.Y. World. His daily pillar, "Take It From Me," first appeared Feb. 11, 1924.

O'Hara was active in show biz circles for awhile as a material writer for comedians. At one time he wrote for Billy Glason a former performer who for many years has conducted a gag-writing service for performers. He also contributed to VARIETY's anniversary issue.

Because of his success as a comedy writer, O'Hara tried a brief fling at performing in the belief that if he could write lines, he could also deliver them. He found out differently and retired from that field after his first date at Keith's, Boston.

Surviving are his wife, daughter, a son, three stepchildren seven grandchildren, and a sister.

GASTON LAURYSSEN

Gaston Lauryssen, 64, general manager of the Carlton House, N. Y., and president of its operating corporation, the Ritz Carlton Co., as well as president of the Hotel Assn. of New York, died in New York Oct. 15 after a brief illness. He was a hotelman, mainly in New York for more than 40 years. He started after his graduation from the U. of Ghent as a busboy at the Pennsylvania (now the Statler-Hilton), N.Y.

Born in Belgium, Lauryssen came to the U. S. as a guest of the late Ellsworth Statler, of the Statler chain. When refused an executive job, he took the busboy job and worked himself up to an executive capacity in that inn. He moved to the front office of the Ritz Carlton Hotel in 1925, became an executive of the St. Moritz Hotel in 1937 and served at the St. Regis for five years. He volunteered for the U. S. Marines and was discharged as a major in 1945.

Lauryssen resumed his hotel career as manager of the Arrowhead Spring Hotel, San Bernardino, Calif. He restored the hotel to civilian use after its use as a naval hospital. He also managed the Bel Air Hotel, Beverly Hills, and the Boca Raton hotel in Florida.

Lauryssen returned to the Ritz Carlton Hotel in 1952 as v.p. and general manager. He was named president in 1958.

Survived by wife and brother. Burial to take place in Arlington National Cemetery.

it be a choice one. As yet, however, nothing's cooking for her to resume work in America.

Her acting career, entirely in films, started in 1937, and she reached Hollywood three years later. Her last pic here was "The Chase," a United Artists meller opposite Robert Cummings, and which introduced Steve Cochran. Of Miss Morgan's performance, the VARIETY review noted she "registers nicely."

Her favorite role was in the French "Proud and Beautiful," shot in Mexico with the late Gerard Phillipe and released this side a few seasons back by Kingsley-International.

Since returning to France she lives in Paris), she has made numerous French pix, some of them coproductions, and recently completed "Landru," the French bluebeard yarn which, like "Crime," will play here via Joe E. Levine's Embassy Pictures, opening next year. At about the same time she is scheduled to commence work back home in "Les Autres Jours" (The Other Days), described as a dramatic love story that turns on several marital crises.

VISITORS BLAME CORONATION STREET

'TV spoiled our 3,000 mile trip'

TELEVISION'S serial "Coronation Street" has spoiled a dream holiday for William Hounslow, 37, and his wife Mary, 34.

The couple, who went to live in America ten years ago, arrived back in Britain last month for that dream holiday with their friends in Lancashire and Yorkshire.

But yesterday they cut short their seven week holiday by a month and flew 3,000 miles back to New York.

The reason: "Whenever we suggested an evening out, our friends were either about to watch 'Coronation Street' or were too busy discussing it," said Mr. Hounslow.

Last night one of Mrs. Hounslow's sisters, Mrs. Irene Horner of Barnoldswick, Yorks, said: "It's true.

"I am not ashamed to admit it. Coronation-street rules my life and I wouldn't miss a programme for anybody."

Nonsense

But another of Mrs. Hounslow's sisters, Mrs. Peggy Holdworth, of Colne, Lancs, said: "Bill and Mary are talking nonsense.

There was plenty for them to do if they had looked around. To blame 'Coronation Street' is just silly.

"Personally, I couldn't care less about 'Coronation Street.'"

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hounslow of New York City cut short their English holiday because of the ITV programme, Coronation Street. When interviewed at Manchester Airport, Mr. Hounslow declared: "That programme appears to have taken control of our friends and relatives. Whenever we suggested an evening out, they were either about to watch Coronation Street or were too busy discussing it." Farfetched?

"It's true," confirms Mrs. Hounslow's sister, with whom they were staying, "I'm not ashamed to admit it. Coronation Street rules my life and I wouldn't miss it for anybody."

The Affaire Coronation Street delighted the English Press who covered it widely. "You picked the right moment to leave it," editorialized the London Daily Mail's Peter Black, in an open letter to the Hounslows, "if you stayed, it would probably have got you too."

For additional information on the television serial that hooked an empire (it's available to stations in America and the world over) call Granada's h.q. Accepted, 509 Madison Avenue, MU 8-1126, or write: Paddy Crookshank.

Seattle Fair Winds 6-Months' Run In Black; Gate Passes 9,600,000 Mark

By DON REED

Seattle, Oct. 23.

The Seattle World's Fair wound up a tremendously successful six months' run Sunday (21), with 123,169 payees bringing final week gate to a record 350,000 and total attendance past the 9,600,000 mark. Saturday attendance of 128,721 was biggest single day during entire run.

Fair is definitely in the black, management saying it is the first world's fair in U.S. history to be profitable in a onetime run, in this case, only six months.

There are still bills to pay, tax questions to be settled with Uncle Sam and a few lawsuits to be decided. Liquidation of assets of the fair corporation already is in motion. Among assets is the monorail, which cost $4,200,000 to install (postfair value not fixed).

The fair owns the monorail, but the fair or its successor will not take possession until next April 21 under the agreement with Alweg Inc. Other assets include about $400,000 worth of equipment, much of which will be sold at auction.

The traditional elements of a fair — whether world's, state or county — apparently were those that paid off at the Seattle Expo. To itemize: food, rides, games of chance and souvenirs.

Science Show's Lure

In Seattle, in keeping with the times and the Fair's theme, it seems a new element was added—science—with the Federal Science Pavilion racking up the biggest attendance of any single attraction on the grounds, more than 6,000,000, and the Space Needle and Eye of the Needle restaurant, both private operations, paying off tremendously. Both will be around for years to come. Indications are

Calif. Governor Will Aid Film Production, Assuming Nixon Loses

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Governor Edmund G. (Pat) Brown took time out from his race with former Vice President Richard M. Nixon in California gubernatorial sweepstakes to discuss the problems of "runaway" production with reps of International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes locals and came out with this statement: "We'll get more business here, I promise you."

Brown made the assertion while visiting set of Billy Wilder-Mirisch Co.'s "Irma La Douce" last week, when he promised, "after the campaign I'll sit down and work with you to try to work something out in Hollywood."

He praised producer Harold Mirisch for lensing Paris-set "Irma" in Hollywood.

JFK's Big TV Audience

Great interest in President Kennedy's address to the nation on the critical Cuban situation Monday (22) night was evidenced in the New York overnight Nielsens, which showed that 70.7 of the tv sets were tuned in for the Presidential message, which ran from 7 to 7:30 p.m.

The network breakdown ran this way: NBC-TV, 25.8; CBS-TV, 22.3; and WABC-TV, 5.5.

NBC Tunnelcast Put Off Because Of Cuban Crisis

NBC-TV "in view of the critical international situation," has postponed its controversial documentary, "The Tunnel," dealing with the digging of a tunnel under the Berlin wall and its use by escaping East Germans.

The NBC-TV move came the day after President Kennedy's address to the nation on the explosive Cuban situation. Web's postponement of the telecast, slated for Oct. 31, also came after pointed State Department criticism, the theme of which took a dim view of NBC-TV's payment to three of the tunnel diggers, of the possibility of reprisals in East Germany to relatives or friends of escapees, of doing a show such as "The Tunnel" in light of the critical Berlin situation.

NBC-TV in its announcement of postponement of "The Tunnel" telecast made a point of saying that "at no time has the State Department asked NBC to refrain from broadcast of 'The Tunnel' program. The decision of telecasting the show in view of the

YOUNG EXECUTIVES AT LAST GET A TUMBLE

Darryl F. Zanuck-Seymour Poe team is obviously working towards 21st-Century-Fox. Poe, the global veep, stated Monday (22) that the company is immediately starting to build "a corps of at least 100 potential young executives who will represent the company's future manpower reservoir." The men, all of whom will be under 30, will serve in various capacities throughout 20th's operations "as a second line of defense with an eye to assuming top executive responsibilities in years to come."

LUCY A SMASH ALL OVER AGAIN

By GEORGE ROSEN

The Big One's still coming up—that is, the first major, all-encompassing National Nielsen report which will include the entire '62-'63 schedule and the one which has had Madison Ave. champing at the bit. Pending its arrival the coast-to-coast Nielsens for the period ending Oct. 7 have now been posted—reflecting initial sampling of new entries—and the significant news of the season is that the comedy shows, of all the program categories, will make it big.

With the initial Top 10 National Nielsens already posted, eight of them are laugh shows, whether situation comedy, straight comedy or of the comedy-variety format. Most of them are out of the CBS shop. (Last major trend in tv were the westerns. They're now virtually kaput.)

It looks like the closest approximation to a smash among the new entries this season is the Lucille Ball half-hour Monday night show on CBS. By virtue of past performance, this perhaps doesn't come as too great a surpise, and if its present tempo is maintained, it will be Lucy all over again as the Nielsen pacesetter. And looming as the "sleeper" of the season is "Beverly Hillbillies" on CBS.

Meanwhile the early reaction to such entries as the Jackie Gleason

Soviets Balk At 'Top 10' Tune Swap

Washington, Oct. 23.

Russians have yet to hear the sound of America's Top 10 tunes. Under a deal cooked up by WWDC Radio and Radio Moscow, the D.C. station promised to play the Top 10 Soviet tunes if the Kremlin station would follow suit.

WWDC says it has kept its end of the bargain, but charges the Russians with reneging on the deal.

The Washington station sent Radio Moscow 20 more tunes along with a letter to Premier Nikita Khruschchev, saying it has stopped playing Russian tunes until Reds reverse their no play policy.

WWDC has been monitoring Radio Moscow instead of demanding on site inspections.

Funereal Humor

Despite the implicit horrors, American humor was at work at press time. One gag, vis-a-vis the new world peril, is that if Darryl Zanuck should film World War III, he would call it:

"The Shortest Day."

Hurricanes: Ella Misses, Della Hits in Integrated Cocoa Beach

By RIFT FOURNIER

Cocoa Beach, Oct. 23.

The Cape Canaveral area known as Missile Land USA to its boosters, including the Cocoa Beach Chamber of Commerce, had another interesting week. Some things that were scheduled to happen didn't, some things that were expected to happen did not occur, and something happened that no one believed could happen here.

The Minuteman missile misfired causing great concern to those involved; and the Ranger missile firing to the moon was postponed for the second time and finally got off on its third try. Hurricane Ella blew out to sea at the last moment giving all along the Florida coast, from Palm Beach to Cape Canaveral, cause for great relief. And another storm, which VARIETY (Oct. 3) gave credence for its potential danger, also blew out like Ella, leaving in its not-to-be-realized wake only some high wind which did little damage, comparatively speaking.

That storm was songstress Della Reese's scheduled appearance at the Starlite Motel on the Cocoa Beach nitery-motelery strip.

What happened that no one believed could happen here, as a result of Hurricane Della? Cocoa Beach was integrated without incident. Not only did Negroes enjoy Miss Reese's show in integrated surroundings but they journeyed across the street to the heretofore

Chevalier at Palace

The Palace Theatre, N.Y., may get Maurice Chevalier early next year. Broadway producer Alexander H. Cohen plans bringing the vet French entertainer to Broadway in his one-man show for a four-week engagement beginning Jan. 22. A theatre hasn't been set yet, but Cohen says it'll most probably be the Palace.

The presentation, which will include songs and monologs, may play some out-of-town dates. Musical accompaniment will be provided by either a trio or quintet.

'Fringe' a Unique B'way Entry—In Black at Preem

"Beyond the Fringe" will have the rare distinction of being in the black when it opens on Broadway next Saturday night (27). That accomplishment, particularly impressive in light of existing economic conditions in legit, reflects the bangup business registered by the British revue during a six-and-a-half week warmup period in Washington, Toronto and Boston.

"Fringe," produced by Alexander H. Cohen for his "Nine O'Clock Theatre" series at the Golden Theatre, N. Y., recovered its production cost of around $62,000 on the tryout tour. The presentation, which has a capitalization of $100,000 and can break even on

SWING TO TITLE TUNES GAINS IN B'WAY LEGIT

Broadway legit's swing to title tunes is continuing with "Never Too Late." Song, written by Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick, is pegged on the Summer Arthur Long comedy which opens at New York's Playhouse Theatre Nov. 27.

The comedy is being directed by George Abbott who was tied with the songwriting team on the legituners "Fiorello" and "Tenderloin."

Tommy Valando's Sunbeam Music will publish the song. First disking will be by Joe Quinjano on the Columbia label.

Other legiters with title tunes so far this season have been "Come On Strong" by Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen and "The Fun Couple" by Albert Hague and Arnold B. Horwitt.

Riddle May End Vegas Dunes' $7,500 Giveaway Gimmick as 'Undignified'

Las Vegas, Oct. 23.

When Dunes prexy Major Riddle was asked by VARIETY if he plans to continue dropping money on patrons at each show as was done at last week's preem of "Gotta Get To Vegas," where $7,500 in real paper bills were showered from the ceiling, he said.

"We don't really know yet. It's a good idea, and when the word gets around it will help pack the room—however, it has its drawbacks. The people here at the first show didn't know anything about the real money, because the first 'bills' to float down were stage money which advertised the show.

"Then they noticed the real money mixed in with the phoney. Some ringsiders leaped up on the stage just to grab a couple of dollar bills—so this thing could cause a stampede, and it just wouldn't be dignified. We're going to try it for a few nights and see what happens."

Riddle hinted that if the nightly windfalls continue, the amount involved will be somewhat less than the first performance's $7,500.

Somebody Finally Praises Critics, Including 'Variety's' in New Haven

(Text below is an excerpt from a longer talk on other topics of theatrical interest recently delivered in Boston by the founder of the Theatre Guild. The occasion was the New England Theatre Conference's showman-of-the-year award to Lawrence Langner "for service rendered to the American theatre." Linday & Crouse were last year's recipients; Joshua Logan in 1960. Langner stressed the value of critics in helping guide and shape an out-of-town break-in, prior to Broadway. Privately, VARIETY's Harold M. Bone is unforgettable to Langner individually and the Theatre Guild and all concerned generally because the New Haven man was alone in championing "Oklahoma" in face of almost everybody else).

BY LAWRENCE LANGNER

Fine critics have contributed to the development of the theatre all over the world, and nowhere is this more true than in the United States where brilliant men all over the country have leavened the theatre with the knowledge and the enthusiasm which they bring to their work. This is not so easy when you realize that only one or two out of every 10 plays they criticize are worthwhile.

I would like to tell you people in the neighborhood of Boston that

Danny Kaye Baton's Nat'l Symph to $105,000 Tune

Washington, Oct. 23.

Danny Kaye conducted the National Symphony last week to the tune of $105,600. Tickling the ribs of Washington's high society, he led the symphony with 24 batons and as much informality.

The performance at Constitution Hall, with a $25 topper, and the ball at the Sheraton-Park grossed about $60,000 and $45,000, respectively, for National Symphony's Sustaining Fund.

Both events were attended by New Frontiersmen and Republicans alike. Kaye shared his table with Federal Communications Commission chairman Newton Minow and columnist Art Buchwald.

Mrs. John F. Kennedy was patroness for the ball but neither she nor the President was present. Their box at Constitution hall was sold to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert May.

MORRIS' BRUSSELS SPROUT

Paris, Oct. 23.

Stephen Morris, longtime assistant to Douglas Schneider, U.S. Cultural chief here, has been promoted, effective immediately, taking over the No. 1 culture post in Brussells.

Morris, a friend of many in show biz, is a brother of New York's Newbold Morris, politico-socialite with many show biz ties.

LAMBS GAMBOL (APR. 6) HAILS ALL-MAN WAYNE

John Wayne is to be guest of honor at the annual Lambs Club gambol, set for New York's Waldorf-Astoria next April 6. The 1963 outing will mark for the second year in a row the spotlighting of a Hollywood, rather than a Broadway, personality. The 1962 focus was upon Fred Astaire.

Program note from the Lambs cites Wayne as a "symbol of virile masculinity."

Grand ballroom of the Waldorf was chosen because it was felt the 400-seat Edwin Burke Memorial Theatre wouldn't be large enough.

Guy With a Beef: George Maharis

Pittsburgh, Oct. 23.

George Maharis, in town for record promotion, was a very angry young man in his two interviews with Pitt tv columnists. While talking with Win Fanning of the Post-Gazette, he stated flatly that he was through with "Route 66" and that his future lay in feature films. He said that the producers of the series were unreasonable in their attitude to him after he returned to work after his recent attack of hepatitis. He even told Fanning that he was given benzedrine to get him through a performance and that he had to work 15 hours on his first day back to work.

He had mellowed a little during his interview with Fred Remington of the Press and hedged by saying, "The way I feel today, it's very doubtful that I'll be doing the show next year. I have to protect my future. If I keep going at the present pace, I'm a fool. Even if you have $4,000,000 in the bank, you can't buy another liver."

U.S.-Brit. Travel Off 1%, First Drop in 10 Years

London, Oct. 23.

Although the 1,824,000 visitors to the U.K. last year repped a rise of 9% in tourist traffic, the total number of visitors from the U.S. fell by 1% to 424,000. This is the first drop in cross-Atlantic visitors to this country in more than 10 years, says the annual report of the British Travel & Holiday Association:

Combined, overseas visitors spent a total of $574,000,000 in the U.K. during 1961, a hike of more than $47,500,000. Discussing the fall in American tourists, the report notes that total Yank spending on travel last year was higher than in the previous year—but not in Europe.

DARRYL F. ZANUCK

Producer of "THE LONGEST DAY"

"In the final analysis, the test of a picture is public acceptance at the box-office.

"The huge worldwide grosses for 'THE LONGEST DAY' now confirm the artistry, foresight and production wizardry of the redoubtable Mr. Zanuck.

"I am indeed honored to be featured in this glorious film.

Spingold Theatre Of Brandeis At Graduate Level

By GUY LIVINGSTON

Waltham, Mass., Oct. 23.

A $2,500,000 gift in memory of a film home office executive will take form of a university theatre of exceptional design, a fluted, pie shaped structure with a housing sprouting out of its center. This will be the Arts Center at Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass., underwritten by Mrs. Frances Spingold, widow of the late Nate B. Spingold, who was vice president and director of Columbia Pictures Corp., and his estate. Construction will start in the late spring. Nate B. and Frances Spingold Theatre Arts Center, as it will be known, will introduce fresh concepts in performing and teaching facilities as well as theatrical architecture.

Israeli Govt. Frown K.O.'s Orch's German Bookings

Paris, Oct. 24.

The Paris-based impresario of the Ramat-Gan Chamber Orchestra has been notified by Israeli authorities that he must cancel six concerts scheduled for the group in West Germany during November. The orchestra's schedule calls for about 20 performances in France, Switzerland, Italy and Austria which, apparently, are okay although, says the imp, if he cannot find substitute dates for the German visit, the entire six-week tour may be endangered. Meantime the orchestra, which had previously okayed the full scheduled without, apparently, consulting its government, is en route here.

The situation is similar to one which arose last year when Israel's ballet company, Inbal, came to Europe for what it hoped would be an eight-week tour. When the Israeli government nixed visits to

Young Talent's Break-Through: Elvis

[SANDRA DEE GIVES HIM CREDIT]

Boston, Oct. 23.

Elvis Presley may go down in showbiz history as a "before," because a "before," and not to be confused with a "circa" (about), is just what he represents to the present crop of young filmstars. And we have the word of tall, blonde, sveltely slim, 95 pounds, Sandra Dee, wife of another young film recording personality, Bobby Darin, on this matter.

"I don't remember before Elvis Presley," the 20 year old film personality who's now in the top 10, up with Doris Day and Rock Hudson, "pretty good company," said in her Boston visit at the Ritz Tuesday (10) to drum up some excitement for her new film, "If A Man Answers," due at the Memorial Nov. 21.

"Since Elvis," said the former model, "youth—teenagers, if you will, have been given a chance in pictures. Elvis was the breakthrough."

Newest London Club 'The Playboy' Features Gambling 20 Miles Out

London, Oct. 23.

Film producer Irving Allen is head of a syndicate which has launched London's newest nightspot and gaming casino, known as the Playboy, on the Barnet Bypass, close to the Elstree film studios and some 20 miles from the heart of town. The former Barn club has been remodelled and refurbished to provide the amenities for a country club atmosphere designed to satisfy the needs of the spending public.

One unique feature of the new enterprise is that it's about to go public. Allen is offering some of his own stock, along with around $300,000 worth of loan stock, and the offer will be based on the expected earnings of the club. It's estimated that close to $700,000 has been spent on remodelling the

FACES MURDER RAP IN YARBROUGH DEATH

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Actor Robert Richards is skedded to be arraigned Nov. 1 on a charge of having murdered his roommate, tv writer-producer-director James Yarbrough. Yarbrough died Aug. 31 after having been rushed to a hospital from home the pair shared, of what Dr. Harold Kade, deputy county autopsy surgeon, described as "clogging of the breathing passage with blood."

Richards called an ambulance, telling police he had found his friend suffering from an overdose of barbiturates. Coroner Theodore Curphy in a formal medical opinion said that Yarbrough's death was due to an overdose of drugs, but Municipal Judge Ernestine Stahlhut accepted autopsy surgeon's opinion and ordered Richards bound over for trial.

Report London's 'Dorch' for Sale

The Dorchester Hotel (long one of London's top hotels, with a strong Yank customer pull) is on the market. Several offers for the property have been made to the current owners (the MacAlpine family, who built the hostelry in 1928) and although there are two bids for the property from Americans, understanding is that the new owners, when chosen, will be British. This for sentimental reasons. London hotel-men fear that there may be some other top hotels changing hands soon because of alleged "over-building." The Hiltons, the Knotts, the Hotel Corp. of America have moved into the London picture of late and this, London hotelmen fear, may lead to a "price war."

The Dorchester price, it is un-

Louis Nizer's Impact At Saints & Sinners Fete

One of Les Kramer's sketches for the Instantaneous Lambs Club Stock Co., who usually perform the blackouts that punctuate every Circus Saints & Sinners fete, was kidding-on-the-square. It had to do with the court waiting for Louis Nizer, who was yesterday's (Tues.) "fall guy," because he was busy (a) making a speech elsewhere, (b) conferring with a client, (c) writing a book. That's just what happened—Nizer had to ask postponement of the Fruehauf trial in order not to disappoint the SRO 1,200 attendees (at $10 a head) at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Amidst the ribaldry and ribbing, the literateness of the afternoon, on the heels of the historic JFK speech the night before, was capped by "roastmaster" Tex O'Rourke who, in turn, was topped by the honored guest.

Nizer, who needs no further testimonials to his oratory as an after-dinner speaker or persuasiveness in a court, left a profound impression. Without being too esoteric, this was also a quasi-significant oc-

KID-CENTS & FIGHT-VIDEO SENSE

Poe a Booster for UA 'Showcase'

Though 20th-Fox global sales veep Seymour Poe is "sympathetic in principle" to the United Artists Premiere Showcase plan of day-dating Broadway firstruns with up to 14 or 15 other theatres throughout the N. Y. metropolitan area, he hasn't yet made any firm decision to send 20th product out this way.

The exec says he is "very strongly inclined" towards the showcase idea, believing that by making firstrun "A" pix available where the public can most easily see them, exhibs as well as distribs and producers thereby gain revenue not being earned otherwise.

However, he believes that the "ideal" showcase situation would be for the big Loew's and RKO circuits to participate (which they are not now doing with the UA plan), thus making available big key houses throughout the city which would contribute to the maximum success of the day-dating procedure.

David Raphel's New 20th Post

Poe Also Designates Andre Levy as Continental Comptroller — No Foreign Sales Chief Yet Found

David Raphel, who has held a variety of posts with 20th-Fox in Europe, most recently as home-office rep for continental Europe, is being named to the newly created position of continental division manager. The action is one of the first results of worldwide sales veep Seymour Poe's recently concluded three-week o.o. of 20th offices in London, Paris and Rome.

At the same time, another vet 20th rep in Europe, Andre Levy, is being named continental comptroller. Both Raphel and Levy headquarter in Paris.

Poe is expected to followup his European looksee with a similar trip to South Africa, Australia and New Zealand shortly after the first of the year, with a trip to Latin American offices to come later in 1963.

Meanwhile, it's understood that although Poe hasn't yet found anyone to become operating head of the company's foreign sales division, he has not abandoned the idea. If and when he finds the right man, Poe will sign him on. He doesn't feel that the situation is "desperate," but would like someone to relieve him of a portion of the day-to-day chores in foreign operations.

As the foreign chain of command is now set up, Manny Silverstone, headquartered in the New York homeoffice and acting as administrative assistant to Poe on overseas operations, is the funnel through which all foreign affairs are directed by the veep.

Columbia's Net $2,242,000 Versus Deficit Last Year

Columbia Pictures is back in the picture in a large way, based on the latest financial report. This showed that operations for the fiscal year ended last June 30 brought net eanings of $2,242,000, or $1.33 per share, compared with a net operational loss of $1,405,000 for fiscal 1961.

To be added to the new year's profit is $403,000 from the sale of studio property, bringing the total profit for fiscal 1962 to $1.60 per share, or $2,655,000.

This represents the major turning point (at least, for the time being) in Col's modern-day financial history. The company went into the red with continuance of production of secondary features some years back when the industry generally was changing to large-scale filmmaking. Col clearly did not make out.

The new regime under president Abe Schneider, exec v.p. Leo Jaffe, 1st v.p. Mike Frankovich, et al., stressed tall-money production investments in theatricals plus enhancement of Screen Gems, the television subsidiary. The segue in large part, though, was to alignments with indie producers in the theatrical field and lowered studio charges.

Sounds like the entire program has paid off.

TRUCKDRIVER'S SON IN 'ALL WAY HOME'

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 23.

Michael Kearney, 7-year-old son of a Verona, N. J. truckdriver has been chosen to play the role of Rufas in the Paramount production, "All the Way Home."

Newcomer will play the boy whose experiences were used to build the theme for the James Agee novel "A Death In the Family." Major roles go to Jean Simmons and Robert Preston.

Under direction of Alex Segal, a good portion of the film is being shot in the Knoxville area. More than 100 locals are being used in the tcpuri.e

Writers Guild of America execs, from both L.A. and N.Y. offices will have a first joint meeting with WGA's new affiliate, the British Screen and TV Writers Guild, in N.Y. Nov. 10-12.

President David Davidson discloses that highlight will be a Nov. 12 luncheon for 200 national and global dignitaries will be present, with Prof. Arthur Schlesinger Jr., member of President Kennedy's advisory staff, to be the toastmaster. Invites to speak have been sent U.S. UN Ambassador Adlai Stevenson, the Earl of Home, British envoy to the UN, Gov. Rockefeller and Mayor Wagner of N.Y. (Authors League of America held a somewhat similiar Authors & Dramatists Assembly in New York three years ago.)

Discussions between American and British writers will cover a wide range of subjects, including better working conditions and coin; encourage friendly relations with other writer groups (Australia has already made inquiries).

DOCUMENTARY AWARDS: (1) ITALY, (2) FRANCE

Madrid, Oct. 16.

Italy took top honors at the fourth International Festival of Hispano-American documentary films when Ennio Lorenzin's "Un Luogo Appartato" (An Isolated Spot) was awarded the golden trophy at Bilbao. France was runner-up in silver with "Le The a la Mente" (Mint Tea), directed by Pierre Kafian.

Festival scope was broadened this year with the debut presentation of industrial films. In this category, the Argentine entry "Acero" (Steel) won top honors.

Festival sponsors are the Ministry of Information's film dept. and the Spanish-American Cultural Institute.

READE RATIONALE ON 6-12 TRADE

By VINCENT CANBY

It's bad enough to lose potential adult theatre patronage to television, but to give up kid patronage, too, may well eventually be fatal, says distributor-exhib Walter Reade Jr., whose Continental Distributing is currently lining up buyers for what is probably the only kiddie-oriented series of theatrical pix on the U.S. market today. That's the Children's Adventures Series, feature films and serials made originally in Great Britain by the Children's Film Foundation.

Reade, in his role as exhib, originally imported one series of eight features, plus an eight-chapter serial, to hypo biz at his own theatres and to provide suitable material for kiddie shows, in short supply this side ever since the demise of the Motion Picture Assn. of America's Children's Film Library.

The experiment went over so well that he subsequently contracted to distribute two of the series in the States via his Continental Distributing Inc., an organization that has made its mark with the release of intelligent adult features on the order of "Room at the Top," "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning" and "Taste of Honey."

"I'm not saying I don't have a selfish interest in the financial success of this venture," Reade said in New York last week. "However," he added, I really would be happy if we just break even."

His interest is two-fold: to have available children's films that can be supported by interested teachers' and civic groups, which are inclined to be most vocal about the rise of sex and six in today's films, and to do something towards establishing the filmgoing habit in youngsters whom Hollywood has apparently seen fit to abandon to the small screen.

The fact that television, especially in the Saturday morning and afternoon hours, abounds with kiddie material, makes the selling of such a theatrical series just that much more difficult, but Reade, and his coordinator for the series, Al Sherman, do not believe it to be impossible.

For one thing, they believe their series to be unique. Each series,

Jerry Lewis Sneers at 'Sophisticates'; Sees Film Industry Gone 'Adul't As Against Logic of a Family Media

By DALE OLSON

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

"Sophisticate," according to Webster, means "to deprive of genuineness, or simplicity; to disillusion; to make worldly-wise." According to Jerry Lewis, there are only about 20 "sophisticates" in the world and "I don't make pictures for them." Comedian-producer-director-writer virtually closed the set of his current Paramount production "The Nutty Professor" for two hours to tell VARIETY exactly who he does make pictures for and why and also to reveal a number of the motivations of his work which have resulted in a record of 27 winners and no losers. "Professor" is hopefully his 28th.

Essentially, it's a question of merchandising, activity in which Lewis is actively involved by personal tieups that use his image in every conceivable product aimed to sell his films. However, the performer feels it goes beyond that, to a point of "merchandising for Hollywood." He feels that pictures must be made and then sold to attract a wide audience, "to give them something other than the routine of their own lives." For this reason, Lewis advises a national ad campaign under which "the motion picture industry must take out ads in every national newspaper, saying 'We apologize, we made a mistake, we have allowed our own people to use the industry to their personal gain and we're going to try to make it better. We're sorry we are making pictures with adults only signs and

Par's Coin In Bronston Circus Film With Wayne

Intelligence around Manhattan has it that Paramount is guaranteeing Samuel Bronston in the area of $2,500,000 for the Western Hemisphere rights to an upcoming production from Bronston about the international circus.

It's said to be a complex deal—but the $2,500,000 is the base figure and will change (but not too much) on the basis of final negative costs, grosses and net profits.

As per custom, Bronston will make the picture with financing guaranteed from various global distributors who, in turn, take the territorial releasing rights. The biggest chunk is coming from Par, and that's for sure. Its also established that Par, in this maneuver, is ante-ing up the greatest amount of money in its modern history for limited rights to a produtcion from an "outsider."

John Wayne is penciled in as star of the circus picture (final title unset) and rumors were around that Par would pay his salary in addition to the $2,500,000 guarantee. This was denied by officials close to the situation.

INBAL DANCERS SET FOR 'GREATEST STORY'

Tel Aviv, Oct.23.

The Inbal dance group left last week for Hollywood to participate in George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told." Stevens signed the group for three months with an option for three more. Choreography for the dancers will be done by Sara Levi-Tanai, founder and director of the group.

Being a relatively large organization, 30 members, the group has had economic difficulties, despite widespread critical acclaim and economic aid from the America-Israel Cultural Foundation. Because of their deeply-held religious convictions, there was considerable anxiety about whether the group should appear in a picture about the life of Jesus. They therefore solicited opinion from various Jewish organizations in Los Angeles and elsewhere in the States, and when the reports were favorable, citing the picture as an historical epic, approval was granted.

The Inbal group toured the U.S. a few years ago under the Sol Hurok banner. Dancers will again make a U.S. tour following completion of the picture.

Norman Elson to Asia; In Quest of Features

Norman Elson, president of Guild Enterprises, which operates three art theatres in New York, left yesterday (Tues.) for an extended Far East tour.

He's on the prowl for more product such as "The Island," Japanese import, which is current at his Guild Theatre, Manhattan.

'Longest Day' In Spillover to 3d Paris Theatre

Because of the turnaway business done by Darryl F. Zanuck's "The Longest Day" at two theatres in Paris, 20th-Fox is now negotiating for a third Paris house to take to take care of the overflow.

Negotiations are going on with Gaumont, operator of the Ambassade and the Richelieu, where the picture already is ensconsed, for another theatre. In this third house, showings would be continuous but seats would be sold on a reserved basis, though not hard-ticket.

According to a 20th homeoffice exec, a problem at the Ambassade and Richelieu, where film also is shown on a continuous basis, is that patrons are not leaving after having seen the pic through once.

GERMANS FACE FRENCH WARSAW GHETTO FILM

Mannheim, Oct. 23.

Frederic Rossif's (French) full-length documentary. "Le temps du Ghetto," which depicts the horrors in the Warsaw ghetto during the Nazi occupation, was on official entry at the 11th International Mannheim Film Week (Oct. 15-20). This film was submitted to the Venice Festival this year but the festival committee there turned it down fearing it could insult the Germans.

The fact that "Ghetto" was given a chance to run at the Mannheim festival was appreciated by both German and foreign press people. In fact, it spoke for this German film festival in particular and the Germans in general. "Ghetto" utilizes never seen footage from SS archives that were confiscated in Poland after 1945. It made a deep impression on those who say it and was praised for its objective treatment of a gruesome chapter of German history.

Wm. Shelton Heads 20th's New Art Film Subsid, Still Without Name; Will Acquire, Coproduce Product

Plans for the formation of 20th-Fox subsidiary for the distribution of specialized product were being rapidly advanced this week with the appointment of William Shelton, indie distrib, to head up the operation. Shelton Monday (22) was installed in his own office at the h.o., which will also be homebase for the artie—exploitation org.

The legalistics involved in naming the new firm haven't yet been completed, but several possibilities are being considered, including Century Films.

Scope of the firm is likely to be considerably broader than was originally understood. It's expected that in addition to acquiring class product, both foreign and domestic, already completed, Shelton will be making preproduction distribution deals, as well as coproduction deals. In this latter connection, there is a strong possibility that 20th may seek partnership in a continental production company in Europe, a la the Metro-Titanus firm in Italy.

By this move, 20th thus becomes the first of the former "Big Five" of the Hollywood producer-distrib-exhib combines (dissolved by divorcement) to organize its own artie subsid. Neither United Artists, which has its Loper artie subsid, nor Columbia, which has followed up its artie arrangement with Kingsley International with Richard Davis' new Davis-Royal Films, was ever a theatre owner.)

A Growing Way

In addition to being a logical followup of the increasing success of imported features in the U. S. market, the new 20th company also reflects the increasingly popular practice of the major U. S. distribs of picking up foreign product for local distribution abroad. Now having a vehicle for the han-

Youngstein Co. Picks Long Tag

Youngstein-Pickman-Simonelli triumvirate of a "new" show business enterprise is to use as its launching pad a corporation already established. It was disclosed this week that Television Industries, heretofore engaged in the licensing of theatrical pictures to television, is to be the nucleus of a new corporation named Entertainment Industries Inc., of which Max E. Youngstein is to be president, Jerry Pickman exec v.p. and Charles Simonelli v.p.

All three will have stock participations and, in effect, will run the show. New theatrical production will be the first order of business but all in all it's to be a diversified (within amusements) operation, encompassing theatricals, tv distribution, legit rights, music publishing, records.

At first glance it looks like Television Industries is a corporate

Film Actors Lab To Prime Talent In Camera Tricks

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Industry support of the newly-formed Film Actors Lab, unique group banded together to prepare actors and directors for camera technique, has been indicated by addition of four new guest directors donating their time for the sessions. New group are Robert Butler, Tom Gries, Ted Post and Herb Strock, with agreements for future sessions also in from Kirk Douglas, George Englund, Michael Gordon and Bud Yorkin.

Group joins Producers Studio head Fred Jordan in aiding the Lab. Jordan has given all studio facilities to the Lab for meetings, with only costs imposed for rental of an office and telephone expenses. Group, for Tuesday and Thursday meetings, are allowed use of stages and standing sets not in use in which they can recreate actual filming conditions on which to work. Additionally, Charles Austin, of Mitchell Camera Co., has offered to donate all necessary camera equipment when they add cinematographers and other film production personnel to the group.

London, Oct. 23.

In his recent press conference here, 20th-Fox prexy Darryl F. Zanuck gave his first indication that he may well be staying on in his present post for something longer than the 18 months to which he committed himself last July.

Zanuck told the press that, as he sees it, he has "two or three years of work ahead of me," though he neither intends to be "a permanent president or a permanent fixture as a president."

Then he added: "After all, I may change my mind . . . everyone says they do not want to run again, and they always do."

Again Hollywood Passes Up Frisco

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Frank Perry's indie pic, "Lisa and David," which won director the Venice Film Festival's new director award, will be the sole U.S. entry in competition in the San Francisco International Film Festival, Oct. 31-Nov. 13. The only film fest of any pretension in the U.S. will once again, be bypassed by the country's major filmmakers.

The list of features entered in competition for the Fest, a total of 23 representing 18 countries, includes, for the most part, pictures that have been shown and taken prizes at the major 1962 European fests, as listed below:

Argentina: "Three Times Anna"
Brazil: "Keeper of Promises"
"The No-Good Ones"
Bulgaria: "Sun and Shadow"
Czechoslovakia: "Baron Munchausen"
France: "Therese Desqueyroux"
"America, The Unexpected"
Greece: "Aegean Tragedy"
India: (1) "Folk Tales of the River Bend"
(2) "Waves After Waves"
Italy: "Disorder"
Japan: "Immortal Love"
Mexico: (1) "Smiles of the City"
(2) "Tlayucan"
Poland: "The Past"
Rumania: "A Bomb Was Stolen"
South Korea "The Evergreen"
Thailand: "Embrace of Fate"
USSR: (1) "Ivan's Childhood"
(2) "Nine Days of One Year"
U.S.: "Lisa and David"
West Germany: "Hamlet"
Yugoslavia: "Dance in the Rain"

Congress of Exhibs Coin in 'Peking'; $675,000 Figure Lacks Confirmation

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

American Congress of Exhibitors is involved in the financing of Samuel Bronston's "55 Days to Peking," it was confirmed by Allied Artists prexy Steve Broidy. AA is putting up part of the coin for the Bronston film, in return for which it receives western hemispheric distribution rights, and exhibs are also involved as bankrollers.

It's believed to be the first time C. of E. has actually put coin into a film, although the group has talked about doing this for years.

Report was that C. of E. financial involvement adds up to $675,000. When Broidy was asked about this, he declined to confirm or deny, saying the extent of the trade org's participation was a confidential matter. Charlton Heston and Ava Gardner star in the film.

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Mickey Spillane, creator of character, will limn Mike Hammer in Colorama Productions' "The Girl Hunters," based on new Spillane tome.

Roy Rowland will direct the Robert Fellows production.

Metaphysics Pic: It's Peale's Biog

Producer Frank Ross obviously believes in the power of positive filmmaking. The man who made a killing with the screen version of Lloyd Douglas' "The Robe," is now about to embark on "The Norman Vincent Peale Story," a film bio of the Protestant psycho-metaphysical clergyman (Marble Collegiate Church, Manhattan) whose "Power of Positive Thinking" and other books are among the all-time U.S. bestsellers.

How does he think such an "inspirational" subject will go in today's market? Ross says he believes there is a vast audience for it in the U.S.—as indicated by Peale's own popularity as an author and public speaker—though selling the picture abroad may be a somewhat knottier problem. The idea will be to budget the picture (at approximately $1,000,000) so that it can recoup in the State-side market alone if need be. He "certainly is not going to sensationalize" an ad campaign for it, which wouldn't attract the "pseudo-sophisticates" anyway.

"Peale," which is to go into production this winter, will be the first picture under a three-pic deal the producer has with United Artists.

Amusements Fared Okay at 87th

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Oct. 23.

These are the days when Republicans and Democrats everywhere are in a fierce argument over the accomplishments (or lack of them) of the recently adjourned 87th session of Congress.

But as far as show biz issues are concerned, when they are isolated and looked at alone, it was an eventful session.

Here are the highlights of the 1962 session in activity of major interest to the entertainment industry:

UHF Television

—UHF television, always a phlegmatic weakling, got a stiff dose of B-12 with enactment of the all-channel bill. Subsequent action by the Federal Communications Commission set the stage for the 1965 line of receivers and all of them manufactured thereafter to be equipped to receive all UHF as well as VHF channels.

Copyright Interim

—A new law freezes copyrights slated for final expiration on or after Sept. 19 until Dec. 31, 1965. This is designed to protect works which would otherwise go into public domain until Congress has time to overhaul the out of date copyright act. The Sept. 19 date is the day President Kennedy signed the stopgap extension into law.

Communications Satellites

—It stirred considerable controversy in the Senate, but Congress finally passed a law to create a combination public-private corporation to own, manage and operate communications satellites. It will set machinery in motion for global television and other revolutionary concepts in communication.

Disk Theft A Crime

—Disk counterfeiting became a crime, subject to a one year prison term or a $1,000 fine or both under a longsought bill which was voted into law.

Probe of AGVA

—Several weeks of hearings before the Senate Permanent Investigating Subcommittee, headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), spotlighted nationally questionable conduct by some of the higher officers of the American Guild of Variety Artists. The subcommittee ordered the union to "clean up or face the consequences." A number of steps have already been taken.

Expense Accounts

—The 1962 tax bill at one point threatened to clamp down tightly on expense account deductions, a step which would have been harmful economically throughout the entertainment industry. But as finally enacted, the new law maintains the old status quo in expense accounts for tax purposes. The law does put a fresh bite on performers and others who take up foreign residences to escape U.S. taxes. But no move was taken with a material effect on runaway practices in films and other industries.

No Bluenoses for D.C.

—An anti-obscenity law affecting the District of Columbia which easily could have brought film censorship here (it exists in both bordering states, Maryland and Virginia) was vetoed by President Kennedy. Broadcasters in Washington also feared it would result in censorship of radio and tv programs.

Jukebox Disappointment

—Efforts failed again to enact a jukebox bill repealing the 1909 exemption of coin operated machines from the payment of performance royalties. Rep. Emmanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) had fashioned a compromise bill which appeared to have a chance, but it was lost in the shuffle.

Re Sex-and-Violence

—Dodd-gooders continued the probe of the harmful effect of tv sex and violence programs on juves. It was a public relations black eye for tv networks. A report on the findings of the Senate subcommittee under the chairmanship of Sen. Thomas Dodd (D-Conn.) will be issued later this fall, and it is certain to bring a pile of unfavorable clippings into network offices.

Cultural Subsidy

—For the first time ever, a bill to subsidize the performing arts was approved by a Senate committee, although it died without further Congressional action. The measure by Sen. Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.) would authorize a $10,000,000 annual federal dole to cultural pursuits.

Bob Hope, Forever!

—Congress again voted to confer its highest honor, a special gold medal, on Bob Hope, but again adjourned without providing the $2,500 appropriation to finance the medal. The money is a cinch to be approved early next year, however.

Congress Passes But Kennedy Vetoes Censorship Law for Capitol District

Washington, Oct. 23.

President Kennedy has sided with the Motion Picture Assn. of America and the American Civil Liberties Union and vetoed a strong District of Columbia censorship bill.

While the bill was basically aimed at obscene literature sold in D.C., it carried provisions for police to close theatres for a year and seize projection equipment and obscene films.

In his veto message Kennedy said "grave constitutional and other considerations" compelled him to nix the bill.

Congress, which is the only law making body for the District, passed the bill earlier this month after two years of hassling.

MPAA urged Kennedy to veto the bill saying the $50-$500 fines for exhibs have the "effect of restraining that speech which cannot be Constitutionally restrained."

ACLU in its protest to the President said the bill "gives every policeman in the Nation's Capital the untrammeled authority physically to disrupt and close down any newspaper, broadcasting station, motion picture or live theatre."

The President said the 1961 Supreme Court decision in Marcus vs. Search Warrant "seems clearly to make the search and seizure provisions of this bill unconstitutional."

Kennedy proposed the next Congress write a censorship bill for D.C. to "obtain an enforceable law which will achieve the worthy objectives which prompted the bill before me."

RACKMIL DETAILS FIRST OBJECTIVES

By JACK PITMAN

Its consent decree official last week (18), with signature by the Federal Court in Los Angeles, usual reticent Music Corp. of America furnished some added clarification of functions within the regrouped MCA family that now embraces Revue Productions, Universal Pictures and Decca Records. (Not to mention Columbia Savings & Loan in Colorado.)

To the big question of film activity, responsibilities are unchanged—all theatrical screen production continues at Universal under studio head Edward Muhl, and vidfilm remains the exclusive sphere of Revue under prexy Taft Schreiber.

The further word, as issued in New York by MCA vicechairman (and U-Decca prez) Milton R. Rackmil, is that feature production is expected to increase, but always consistent with boxoffice values. Rackmil's statement that "we're not interested in quantity for its own sake" serves to reaffirm the previous operational philosophy at Universal under his leadership. Credo is not to be tampered with.

Exec orated that "this is the beginning of a new era in the entertainment business." Ordinarily that's ornamental palaver, but on this occasion not to be discounted. Partly because of MCA's bluechip status with its reputation for a Midas touch, but partly also because of other upbeat indicators in

Knoxville to Hollywood: Stand-In You Can Have; 3 Walk on Paramount

Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 23.

Stand-in assignments for the stars in the Paramount pix "All The Way Home" are proving unpopular with local people. Three Knoxvillians were hired last week for stand-in jobs. In eight days all of them quit the production which is being filmed here.

Former U. of Tennessee basketball coach, John Sines, booked as stand-in for star Robert Preston, was the first to resign. "Any ape could do that job. I just couldn't afford to stay there for $75 a week," Sines said.

Mrs. Earl T. Henry, local housewife, was stand-in for actress Jean Simmons. Told she would have to work Saturday, the day of the Alabama-Tennessee football game, she gave up her job.

A third stand-in was young Michael Dennard, a five-year-old, who was working as a replacement for child discovery Michael Kearney. His parents gave the long hours as the reason for his departure.

Replacements were readily available on the local scene. Filming of the picture, based on the novel "A Death in the Family," is expected to be completed in the Knoxville area by October 28. David Susskind, who is producing the motion picture with Paramount, is in charge of direction.

Unafraid of Kenya's Independence, Ross to Produce 'Mister Moses' There

A Hollywood Festival

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Film colony here which has until now resisted a film festival for the U.S. and failed to cooperate with the one in San Francisco will as of 1963 have an international fete here in Hollywood. Screen Producers Guild will be the auspices. Co-chairmen lining it up are Walter Mirisch and John Houseman.

SPG has approached State Dept. for its and U.S. Information Agency's aid.

Second of three features Frank Ross will produce for United Artists is "Mister Moses," a Max Catto novel set in present-day Africa. This has to do with an adventurer who finds himself responsible for moving a native tribe out of the path af a dam which is being constructed. That is scheduled for production next fall in Kenya.

When interviewed in New York last week, Ross was just off the plane from a tour of East and South Africa in search of "Moses" locations. Despite reports to the contrary, he found Kenya the ideal spot in all respects and will shoot there. The tales, spread by the likes of Robert Ruark ("Something of Value." "Uhuru") to the effect that chaos will follow Kenya's independence from the British next year, are exaggerated and little sort of slanderous, Ross feels. There is, he thinks, a genuine fear and concern among the wealthier white residents of Kenya who are going to lose their most-favored position via independence, and they have been responsible for many of the terrifying predictions. His on-the-spot tour convinced Ross that the transition of power will be orderly, and that, in fact, the new government will go out of its way to cooperate on his venture.

"Mister Moses," he says, is strictly an adventure story and will make no attempt to comment on the emergence of modern Africa and its manifold problems. Ross gives the impression that he thinks it would be presumptuous for him to try and make such a comment. Which is not to say that "Moses" will be patronizing or prolonging the myth of the "funny looking black people," he says. The heritage and dignity of the native tribe depicted in the film will be shown with compassion and understanding. To make sure of this, he showed his script to reps of the now independent Tanganyika government and received their approval.

Ross plans to shoot "Moses" in Kenya in its entirety, which will be his first experience in doing a film abroad, though he did some location work for "Kings Go Forth" in the south of France. As yet, he hasn't lined up top names for either "Peale" or "Moses."

Dept. of Justice Eyes Films & TV; MCA Phase Finis

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Concurrent investigations into a number of phases of the motion picture and television industries are being conducted on the q.t. by the Dept. of Justice's Anti-Trust division, it was learned here following the discharge of the special Federal Grand Jury impaneled last Nov. 20 to hear evidence in the Music Corp. of America case. Grand jury, discharged by Federal Judge Harry C. Westover on recommendation of the U.S. Attorney's office, returned a "no true bill," meaning the jury found no grounds for criminal prosecution against MCA.

It's understood some of the investigations may dwarf the MCA case in importance, MCA-U.S. dispute was resolved with a consent decree last Thursday in Federal Court.

Final chapter to the MCA case was written on Friday, when on a motion by Chief Asst. U.S. Attorney James Moriarty, Judge Westover discharged the jurors. Previously, Moriarty and Leonard Posner, Anti-Trust division attorney who handled the MCA case, both had lauded the jury highly for its work, and Judge Westover joined in the chorus of praise to the jurors.

The Government attorneys said this grand jury had worked an average of four days a week, as compared to grand juries working one day a week in a recent N.Y. case. Said Posner: "This is the finest grand jury I've ever worked with." He told the court "after a review of the evidence, they have reached the stage where they feel they no longer have matters to pursue."

After dismissal of the jury, Posner said the grand jury felt satisfied that the U.S.-MCA consent decree "had achieved the purposes of the investigation." Discharge of the jury eliminates the last dangling thread—any possible criminal prosecution of MCA.

MILT LEVINS SCRAMS TRADE

Four Weeks as Par Booker Enough For Salesman

Albany, Oct. 23.

Milt Levins' stay with Paramount as booker, after being called off the road, lasted only four weeks. He resigned effective Friday (19), to join a paint and wallpaper contracting company in Fairfax, Va.

A Paramount salesman 18 months—before that position was eliminated—Levins had been in motion picture trade for 15 years. He came to Albany with Warner Bros., from Jacksonville, Fla., as a booker, then advanced to office manager. Later Levins toiled for Columbia and for United Artists, in the office and on the road.

Paramount, which once maintained a large exchange on Film-row and then a smaller one in the business section, is now down to two staffers—a booker and a secretary.

Cass, Detroit, to Films; Smerling Mum on Cost, Gear, Policy; Gives Name

Detroit, Oct. 23.

Downtown Cass Theatre, operated as a legit house since it was opened in 1926, will be converted into an all purpose film theatre at a cost of about $250,000, per Sheldon Smerling, prexy of Beacon Enterprises Inc. It will be renamed The Summit.

Purchase price of the 1,482-seat house, until now owned by the estate of the late Edward D. Stair, was not disclosed by Smerling. Also, he would not state what projection equipment would be installed.

Smerling operates the Music Hall here, the Boston Theatre in Boston, the Claridge in Montclair, N.J., Imperial in Montreal and Orpheum in San Francisco. Each of these theatres show Cinerama attractions.

The Summit probably will have about 1,200 seats when remodeling is completed. No opening date has been set. The Summit will be under the supervision of Frank Upton, Eastern Division manager for Cindedome Theatres, Inc., a division of Beacon Enterprises.

No stage productions had been booked so far into the Cass, a legiter which has been dark more often than it has been open in the past few seasons. Detroit now has two legit houses, both operated by the Nederlander family, the Fisher and the Shubert. Also available to the Nederlanders is their Riviera, a large film house which has been used to stage musicals.

The War Lover

Lack of sharp focus on title character strips otherwise okay filmization of John Hersey's novel of appeal for discriminating audience. But still good action market entry.

Hollywood, Oct. 10.

Columbia Pictures release of Arthur Hornblow Jr. production. Stars Steve McQueen, Robert Wagner, Shirley Anne Field. Directed by Philip Leacock. Screenplay, Howard Koch, from novel by John Hersey; camera, Bob Huke; editor, Gordon Hales; music, Richard Addinsell; asst. director, Basil Rayburn. Reviewed at studio, Oct. 10, '62. Running time, 105 MINS.

Arthur Hornblow's production of John Hersey's "The War Lover" is accomplished in all respects save one. Lamentably, that one flaw happens to be a major one: lack of proper clarification of or penetration into the character referred to by the title. This single conspicuous shortcoming strips the film of its potential "prestige picture" appeal for more discerning, demanding audiences, leaving it to be claimed by less choosy buffs of the war picture. Since its action scenes have been meticulously and expertly mounted, an air of authenticity pervades the film that, coupled with its earnest, skillful performances, gives the Columbia release some promise as a contender for the action market buck.

Fuzziness of the central character drains Howard Koch's screenplay of emotional impact. The scenario seems reluctant to come to grips with the issue of this character's unique personality—a "war lover" whose exaggerated shell of heroic masculinity covers up a psychopathic inability to love or enjoy normal relationships with women. The film tends to dodge this psychological facet every time it is approached, often leaving the audience suspended and groping for clear understanding of the character. The story transpires in 1943 England and focuses on B-17 bombing raids over Germany, with the title character (Steve McQueen) a pilot of one of the planes.

That the central character emerges more of an unappealing symbol than a sympathetic flesh-and-blood portrait is no fault of McQueen, who plays with vigor and authority, although occasionally with too much eyeball emotion. Robert Wagner and Shirley Anne Field share the film's secondary, but interesting, romantic story. Wagner, a rapidly improving actor, does quite well and the English Miss Field has a fresh, natural quality rarely found in the ranks of young leading ladies in Hollywood—where the perfect features of physical beauty tend to be overemphasized. Supporting work is strong, notably that of Gary Cockrell, Michael Crawford and Jerry Stovin.

Outside of his failure to focus more lucidly and attentively on the central issue, director Philip Leacock has done a sound job. Scenes of the bombing raids and accompanying aerial incidents are adroitly and authentically executed through the meshing, imaginative teamwork of Bob Huke's photography, Gordon Hales' editing, Bill Andrews' art direction, the Ron Taylor-Skeets Kelly aerial camerawork and the Norman Bolland-Red Law sound, all under Leacock's careful surveillance. Composer Richard Addinsell's theme is affecting and the film's incidental music is the music of the time.

Two For The Seesaw
(PANAVISION)

Good b.o. looms for this translation of the hit Broadway play in spite of film's tendency to expose its talky, listless aura.

Hollywood, Oct. 15.

United Artists release of Walter Mirisch production. Stars Robert Mitchum, Shirley MacLaine. Directed by Robert Wise. Screenplay, Isobel Lennart, based on play by William Gibson; camera, Ted McCord; editor, Stuart Gilmore; music, Andre Previn; assistant director, Jerome M. Siegel. Reviewed at Academy Awards Theatre, Oct. 15, '62. Running time, 119 MINS.

Jerry Ryan	Robert Mitchum
Gittel Mosca	Shirley MacLaine

Sophie	Elisabeth Fraser
Oscar	Eddie Firestone
Mr. Jacoby	Billy Gray

The multitudes who haven't yet seen William Gibson's "Two for the Seesaw" figure to respond as favorably to the screen version as playgoers did for the stage version. The play does lose something in translation, but the loss is apt to be sensed only by those able or prone to draw such comparisons. Spearheaded by Shirley MacLaine's enactment of Gittel Mosca, a portrayal that is sure to be talked about, the Walter Mirisch production for United Artists shapes up as a good boxoffice prospect.

There is a fundamental torpor about "Seesaw" that is less troublesome on stage than it is on screen, a medium of motion that exaggerates its absence, that emphasizes the slightest hint of listlessness. On film, it drags. It drags in spite of the charm, insight, with and compassion of Gibson's play, the savvy and sense of scenarist Isobel Lennart's mild revisions and additions, the infectious friskiness of Miss MacLaine's performance and the consummate care taken by those who shaped and mounted the film reproduction.

The basic flaws appear to be the play's innate talkiness and the unbalance of the two-way "Seesaw." The selection of Robert Mitchum for the role of Jerry Ryan proves not to have a been a wise one. The strong attraction "Gittel" is supposed to feel for "Jerry" becomes less plausible because of Mitchum's lethargic, droopy-eyed enactment. Something more appealing and magnetic is needed to make this love affair ring true.

Miss MacLaine's performance in the meatly role of the disarmingly candid, stupendously kindhearted Miss Mosca, is a winning one. Her handling of the Yiddish dialect and accompanying mannerisms is sufficiently reserved so that it does not lapse into a kind of git-gat-gitterless caricature. Minor roles written into the screenplay are dispatched effectively by Edmon Ryan, Elisabeth Fraser, Eddie Firestone and Billy Gray.

Director Robert Wise has succeeded in many respects, but the several aforementioned shortcomings of "Seesaw" as a motion picture were largely his to correct. Photogrphically and artistically, it is a superior film. The compositions, textures and lighting subtleties accomplished by cameraman Ted McCord go a long way toward alerting and interesting the eye when the action flags, as it does so often. Boris Leven's production design conveys that New York character and the personality of the principals. The contributions of McCord and Leven are especially noteworthy for the atmosphere created in a bohemian Village party sequence. Stuart Gilmore's editing is smooth, and Andre Previn's melancholy score is moving, but neither is exactly helpful in enlivening the tempo.

"Seesaw" is pretty frank in its attitude toward adult matters such as who sleeps where, when, and with whom. But this is honest, not obnoxious. It shouldn't and won't bother anybody except those who aren't satisfied unless they are bothered.

The Legend Of Lobo
(COLOR)

Lesser Disney animal opus. Satisfactory contender for kiddie mart buck.

Hollywood, Oct. 19.

Buena Vista release of Walt Disney production. Screenplay, Dwight Hauser, James Algar, based on story by Ernest Thompson Seton; camera (Technicolor), Jack Couffer, Lloyd Beebe; editor, Norman Palmer; music, Oliver Wallace. Reviewed at Academy Awards Theatre, Oct. 19, '62. Running time, 67 MINS.

"The Legend of Lobo" ranks as about the skimpiest and least effectual of Walt Disney's animal operettas. But the fact that adults in attendance will find little to ululate about doesn't figure to deter the moppet brigade from flocking to see the Buena Vista release in satisfactory, though not unusually large, numbers.

The film, coproduced by James Algar, runs only 67 minutes, yet actually drags. Aside from a smattering of information such as the fact that wolves are monogamous critters, co-scenarists Algar and Dwight Hauser, working with a story by Ernest Thompson-Seton, have done an astonishingly half-hearted and unimaginative job of translating the legend into a film story. The scenario, punctured by overly abundant musical breaks in which narrator Rex Allen and the Sons of the Pioneers chant a rather monotonous title tune by Richard M. and Robert B. Sherman, traces the career of the great legendary wolf, Lobo, who roamed New Mexico around the turn of the century. But it is never made quite clear in the film why Lobo became such a legend. Some fascinating details, such as Lobo's impressive proportions and abilities, are hardly even hinted at, narratively or pictorially.

Lobo is traced from puppyhood to maturity, and observed in various skirmishes with animals and man, as well as in intramural activities with his own kind. Best interlude is his bout with a very self-sufficient badger. The narrative is written from the wolf's point-of-view, with man as the heavy. It is sprinkled with such patented Disneyesque observations as, when pup Lobo takes up with a baby antelope (his natural prey), "so an unusual friendship developed—one of those things that only happens in nature" (and, the narration might have added, inevitably happens in nature-a-la-Disney).

Film was shot entirely in Arizona mesa country by photographers Jack Couffer and Lloyd Beebe, with Couffer serving as field producer for Cangary Limited. The Techcnicolor camerawork is painstaking and picturesque. Norman Palmer's editing tautly binds action and reaction, such as animal response to rifle fire. Score by Oliver Wallace is often used to comic story advantage, such as its accompaniment of the Lobo-badger tracas with the strains of a square dance.

Escape From East Berlin

The real-life escape to the West last January of 28 East Germans via a tunnel under the "Wall" served as the basis for Walter Wood's production of "Escape From East Berlin." A suspense melodrama with political overtones, the film is timely, topical and exploitable. It lacks the insight, penetration and dramatic neatness to attract fussier filmgoers, but should prove serviceable for Metro as a short haul saturation item.

A considerable amount of suspense has been generated in the Gabrielle Upton-Peter Berneis-Millard Lampell scenario about a young East Berliner (Don Murray) who burrows a tunnel under the infamous wall and leads his family and a couple of dozen others to freedom. Accepted purely as a suspense entry, the film is sufficiently engrossing. But more careful scrutiny discloses a number of dramatic errors, oversights and cliches. Oddly enough, at times one tends to forget he is watching a depiction of a 1962 incident—it is almost as if the time is 1939, and the Nazis are in charge.

The cast, almost entirely German, performs competently under Robert Siodmak's generally able direction, marred by a rather erratic climax. Murray and Christine Kaufmann are earnest and attractive in the leading roles. The film introduces Carl Schell, brother of Maria and Maximilian. He plays capably, but makes no especially vivid impression. Horst Janson is memorable in a small role.

Skillful assists to the production are those of cameraman Georg Krause, art directors Ted Haworth and Dieter Bartels, soundman Heinz Garbowski and composer-conductor Hans-Martin Majewski. But Maurice Wright's editing leaves several loose ends dangling from the scenario.

Two Before Zero
(DOCUMENTARY)

Anti-communist tract. A mixed exploitation prospect.

Ellis Films release of Motion Picture Corp. of America (Fred A. Niles) production. Directed by William D. Faralla. Features Basil Rathbone and Mary Murphy. Narration written by Bruce Henry; camera, Jack Whitehead; editor, Robert L. Sinise; music, Sid Siegel. Reviewed in New York, Oct. 18, '62. Running time, 78 MINS.

"Two Before Zero" is a hybrid documentary on Bolshevik behavior and the Orwellian implications of communism. It is simplified and emotional, intended to exploit boxofficewise presentday East-West tensions. It will find a presold type of spectator in selected situations.

Turned out by Motion Picture Corp. of America, a Chicago outfit, and released by Ellis Films, "Zero" employs Basil Rathbone and Mary Murphy in stagey, self-conscious symbolic roles, laced with clips parading the top communist names, past and present, and a grisly recital of Soviet atrocity over the years. Rathbone, as the figure of History, and Miss Murphy, who seems intended to symbolize American innocence, are staged somewhat like ancient Greek drama. Their duolog, which also serves to narrate the pic, is embarassingly "arty," incomplete in historical analysis, and at times inaccurate as to facts.

It has been produced with technical competence. The actors do the best they can with their lines, but the fault is not to be found in the stars.

Running time, 105 MINS.

This Dutch feature film is strictly for the home market because it has no aspects, storywise or artistically, that would make it a worthy item for export. Story is stereotyped, depicting a provincial gang fight over a hidden treasure, with the law likewise hunting for the briefcase containing jewels.

Plot develops slowly and story follows all kinds of side issues, few of which have to do with locating the jewels. Characters are mostly too bleak. Blame for this film to jell can be put on director John Korporaal, since he also wrote the script.

"Rififi In Amsterdam" follows a style that was popular in Dutch film producing circles in the 30's. Songs are inserted in the film that slow up the action. At the climax of the film, a popular Dutch singer, Willy Alberti, comes in to sing a song.

Technical credits are okay, but the acting is awkward and amateurish. This is the type of film that should be left to foreign directors who have proved they can do them more professionally.

It could be that this one may be a little late in the "Angry Young Man" series but it is a wellmade and exciting picture if only because producer Betty E. Box and director Ralph Thomas have unleashed a half dozen new potentials in key roles. Britain for some years, has not been so rich in vigorous young talent. Several of those in "The Wild and the Willing," adapted from "The Tinker," a play by Laurence Dozie and Robert Sloman which didn't make the grade in the West End, seem likely entries for bigger things.

Though it has nothing much new to say on its chosen theme—youth trying to find its place in society—the screenplay is lucid and the background of a provisional university authentic. Spiced with humor and sex, it should prove solid b.o.

It concerns a brilliant young student from a poor working class family who is acutely class-conscious and rebels against the university, its professors and the opportunities they offer. He does not know where he is going and is arrogantly content to drift along raising cain, drinking beer, playing football and pawing his girl friend, another student. He is a leading light in the university with a particular influence on his roommate, a shyer, more introspective lad. His professor recognizes the boy's ability but dislikes him for his brashness.

Things come to a head at a cocktailerie thrown by this prof. They openly insult each other and the professor's wife is attracted to the student. Her marriage is virtually on the rocks and she spends her time in drinking and dallying with selected students. Her husband knows about her indiscretions but chooses, contemptuously, to ignore them.

The wife and the student have a brief affair but when she rejects his plea for her to run off with him, he is stung into a reckless stunt in connection with the university Rag. He and his roommate climb the school's tower, and the result is tragedy. The film ends with the student being sent down in disgrace. But it seems that he may be on the treshold of a more useful, understanding life.

Some of the opening student scenes are rather too hearty but gradually the film settles down to a thoughtful pace, rising to a grim climax with the tower climb. Throughout there is a complete air of realism. The students, the pro-

Devi

"Devi," directed by Satyajit Ray, "World of Apu" trilogy, was the official Indian entry at the 1962 Cannes Film Fest where Mosk reviewed it for VARIETY, May 23, 1962. Film, which is being released in the States by Ed Harrison, is now playing its first U.S. date at the Cinema II in New York.

In "Devi," Ray is looking "at a case of a religious miracle which is based on personal hallucination and superstition." Reviewer added, "having the same feeling for place, people and imagery as its predecessors, it looms as an arty entry."

The story concerns a young, happily married couple whose lives are shattered when the girl is reputed to be the reincarnation of a deity. Ray tells his tale "with a luminous pattern of scenes, an insight into his characters and a subdued but never faltering pace. It has stringent allusions to Indian life and beliefs and should find a specialized audience if well placed and handled."

Yojimbo

"Rousing good action, told with vigor and visual excitement by (director) Akira Kurosawa and splendidly acted by Toshiro Mifune" is the way reviewer Hawk, described "Yojimbo" at its Venice Fest screning (VARIETY, Aug. 30, 1961.)

Japanese film, which is being released in the States by Seneca International, started its preem date at the Carnegie Hall Cinema in New York Monday (15).

Los Angeles, Oct. 23.

L. A. firstruns are on the fairish side this stanza, with the accent on the opening of "Requiem For Heavyweight," which looms lusty $15,000 at Warner Beverly, plus a number of strong holdovers. Of other newcomers, "If Man Answers" looks modest $18,000 or close in four theatres. "300 Spartans" looms slow $12,500, also in four sites.

"Humanoids" with "Silent Witness" shapes mild in two houses, also for opening round. "Longest Day" is great $22,500 in second session at Carthay while "Chapman Report" also is hotsy in second at Pantages. "Divorce, Italian Style" is rated smash in second week at the Lilo.

"Brothers Grimm" is likely to get slick $20,000 in 11th round at Warner Hollywood. "Music Man" is still rated sock at Hollywood Par in 13th week. "West Side Story" continues smash $17,000 in 45th Chinese stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Warner Beverly (SW) (1,316; $1.49-$1.75)—"Requiem for Heavyweight" (Col). Lusty $15,000. Last week, with State, Pix, Baldwin, "Thank Fool" (MGM) $18,500.

Los Angeles, Hawaii, Wiltern, Baldwin (Metropolitan-G&S-SW-State) (2,047; 1,106; 2,344; 1,800; $1-$1.49)—"If Man Answers" (U) and "Tammy and Bachelor" (U) (reissue). Modest $18,000 or over. Last week, Los Angeles, Hawaii, Wiltern, "Damn Defiant" (Col) $11,400.

Orpheum, Village, Loyola, Vogue (Metropolitan-FWC) (2,213; 1,535; 1,298; 810; $1-$1.49)—"300 Spartans" (20th) and "Firebrand" (20th) (Orpheum), "Boy on Dolphin" (20th) (reissue) Slow $12,500. Last week, Orpheum, "Miracle Worker" (U) (2d wk), "Jessica" (UA), $2,700. Village, Loyola, Vogue with Hillstreet, El Rey, "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue), "Almost Angels" (BV) $23,700.

State, Hollywood (UATC-FWC) (2,404; 856; 90-$1.25)—"Humanoids"

St. Louis, Oct. 23.

Some new screen fare here this round but not all of the fresh entries are doing well. "No Man Is an Island" looms good at the huge Fox while "Divorce, Italian Style" is rated torrid at the Shady Oak. However, "Pressure Point" looms mild on opener at Loew's Mid-City and "Phantom of Opera" is only okay in first at the St. Louis.

"Lady and Tramp," paired with the new pic, "Almost Angels," is doing excellent trade in second State session. "Kid Galahad" is rated light in first holdover round at Esquire.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Arthur) (2,970; 90-$1.25)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Fine $18,000. Last week, $25,000.

St. Louis (Arthur) (3,800; 75-90)—"Phantom of Opera" (U) and "Desert Patrol" (U). Okay $11,000 or near. Last week, "King Solomon's Mines" (MGM) and "Naked Spur" (MGM) (reissues), $8,000.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (760; 90-$1.25)—"Divorce, Italian Style" (Embassy). Hep $4,000 or close. Last week, "Operation Snatch" (Indie) (2d wk), $3,000.

'Day' Whopping $18,000, Frisco; 'Affair' Sad 9G

San Francisco, Oct. 23.

Firstrun trade here this round is quite uneven, with hardticket films doing best. "Gigot" is rated okay at Coronet while "Longest Day" is great at Alexandria, both in second sessions. "Brothers Grimm" continues boffo in 11th round at Orpheum. "No Man Is an Island" looks fairly good in second at Golden Gate.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; $1.25-$1.50)—"No Man Is an Island" (U) and "Battle Hymn" (U) (reissue) (2d wk). Fair $9,000. Last week, $12,500.

Coronet (United California) (1,250; $2-$2.50)—"Gigot" (20th) (2d wk). Okay $8,000 or close. Last week, $10,000.

'Angels,' 'Lady' Hot $14,000 in L'ville

Louisville, Oct. 23.

Two oldies, "Lady and Tramp" dualled with "Almost Angels" in sparking the downtown firstrun area this week. Combo looks socko at the United Artists, 3,000-seater. "Brothers Grimm" in eighth at the Rialto has perked somewhat to a good figure and over the previous week. "Chapman Report" in second at the Mary Anderson is rated good while "I Thank a Fool" at the Ohio is brisk on opener. "Pigeon That Took Rome," at the Kentucky in second, looks good.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (900; 75-$1.25)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) and "Forever My Love" (Par) (2d wk). Good $4,500 after first week's $6,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,100; $1-$1.25) — "Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Good $5,000 after initial week's $6,000.

Ohio (Settos) (900; 75-$1.25)—"I Thank a Fool" (MGM). Bright $6,000. Last week, "Rear Window" (Par) (reissue) (2d wk), $4,500.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (1,100; $1.25-$2.50) — "Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (8th wk). Slight upbeat to good $5,000 after seventh round's $4,500.

United Artists (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; $1-$1.25) — "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV). Big $14,000. Last week, "300 Spartans" (20th) and "Air Patrol" (20th), $6,000.

'White Slave' Hotsy 7G, Port; 'Angels' $6,000, 2d

Portland, Oct. 23.

City is still digging out from damage done by first hurricane in the Northwest's history about a week ago. The several first-runs, shuttered by the big blow, are back in full swing currently. "White Slave Ship" is rated hotsy on initialer at Orpheum while "Lady and Tramp" looks lively in second at the Paramount. "West Side Story" is holding for 32d round at Music Box, and the end doesn't seem in sight.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-$1.50)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) and "Forever My Love" (Par) (2d wk). Slim $4,000. Last week, $6,200.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.49)—"Music Man" (WB) (14th wk). Fine $5,000. Last week, $3,700.

'Pigeon' Good 14G, Philly; 'Day' 20G

Philadelphia, Oct. 23.

Trade shapes spotty here this round with new films not adding much to the b.o. activity. "Mongols" is just fair on opener at Stanton while "No Man Is an Island" shapes very quiet in first at the Fox. However, "Pigeon That Took Rome" looms good at Stanley on initial frame.

"Brothers Grimm," now doing bulk of biz on weekends still is sock in 13th session at Boyd. "Almost Angels" with reissued "Lady and Tramp" is rated okay in second at Randolph.

Estimates for This Week

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; $1.20-$1.80)—"Secrets of Nazi Criminals" (Indie) (2d wk). So-so $4,000. Last week, $6,500.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 95-$1.80)—"Damn the Defiant" (Col) (5th wk). Dull $3,500. Last week, $5,000.

World (R&B-Pathe) (500; 95-$1.80)—"Purple Noon" (Times) and "Big Deal on Madonna Street" (Indie). Neat $3,000 or near. Last week, "Best of Enemies" (Col) (2d wk), $2,900.

'Grimm' Lusty $6,500, Indpls.; 'Chapman' 5G

Indianapolis, Oct. 23.

Biz continues moderate at firstruns here this stanza. "Chapman Report" is having an okay second week at Keith's while "Brothers Grimm" continues strong in 10th session at the Indiana. Both are leading the week's new pix, "Three Stooges in Orbit" and "Very Private Affair," latter being on thin side at Loew's.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; $1-$1.25)—"Three Stooges in Orbit" (Col) and "Ring-a-Ding Rhythm" (Col). Slow $5,000. Last week, "Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par), $3,500.

Indiana (C-D) (1,100; $1.25-$2.50)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (10th wk). Big $6,500. Last week, $6,000.

Keith's (C-D) (1,300; $1-$1.25)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $5,000 or near. Last week, $7,000.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 75-$1.25)—"Very Private Affair" (MGM). Dull $3,000. Last week, "Sky Above" (Embassy) and "No Place Like Homicide" (Indie), $3,000.

Washington, Oct. 23.

Trade is moving on the high road this round with some holdovers still strong. "Lady and Tramp," on relssue, and "Almost Angels" are initialing socko at Capitol. "Very Private Affair" is mild at Palace.

"Longest Day" looks great in second round at Ontario.

"Boccaccio '70," now only at one house, shapes wow at Trans-Lux. "Chapman Report" looks good at two big houses for second stanza. "West Side Story" is hep at the Warner for sixth round.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador-Metropolitan (SW) (1,480; 1,000; $1-$1.49)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Good $10,000 after $13,000 in first frame.

Apex (KB) (940; $1.25-$1.40)—"Waltz of Toreadors" (Cont) (3d wk). Oke $4,500. Last week, $5,000.

Capitol (Loew) (3,240; $1-$1.49)—"Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV). Sock $17,000 or over. Last week, "No Man Is Island" (U) (2d wk), $8,400.

Dupont (Mann) (400; $1-$1.65)—"Girl With Golden Eyes" (Union) (2d wk). Fair $3,300 after $3,000 initialer.

Keith's (RKO) (1,839; $1-$1.49)—"Hero's Island" (UA) and "Something Wild" (UA). Fair $8,000 or close. Last week, "Horror Chambers of Dr. Faustus" (Indie) and "Monster" (Indie) $7,500.

'Answers' Fast $14,000, Toronto; 'Polo' Oke 29G, 'Barabbas' Boff 19G, 3d

Toronto, Oct. 23.

Newcomers include "Marco Polo," fairish in seven-house Taylor tiein, and "If Man Answers," which is lusty at the Uptown. But holdovers are leading the city to exceptional biz currently. Setting the pace of these is "Barabbas," great in third stanza at the Carlton.

"Up the Creek" looks good in second frame in two houses. "Rear Window" on reissue at the Imperial shapes solid for opener. No change in smash runs of "My Geisha" and "Waltz of Toreadors." "Touch of Mink" still is fast in 12th round.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton (Rank) (2,318; $1.25-$2.25)—"Barabbas" (Col) (3d wk). Still sock at $19,000. Last week, $28,000.

Century, Downtown, Glendale, Midtown, Odeon, Scarboro, State (Taylor) (1,342; 1,059; 995; 1,082; 752; 682; 696; 50-$1) — "Marco Polo" (Astral) and "Five Bold Women" (Astral). Fairish $29,000 or near. Last week, "Pirates of Blood River" (Col) and "Ring-A-Ding Rhythm" (Col), in three houses, $20,000.

Danforth, Humber (Rank) (1,328; 1,203; $1-$1.50) — "Up the Creek" (20th) (2d wk). Good $9,000. Last week, $12,000.

Eglinton (FP) (918; $1.50-$2.75)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (10th wk). Steady $5,500. Last week, same.

Fairlawn (Rank) (1,165; $1-$1.10)—"Touch of Mink" (U) (12th wk). Fancy $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

Hollywood (FP) (1,080; $1-$1.50)

Chicago, Oct. 23.

A hefty batch of art preemers is helping several solid recent vintage holdovers to boost Windy City firstrun tallies. "A Kind of Loving" is teeing off with a fat $9,000 in its Esquire bow, while "Shoot the Piano Player" is debuting stoutly at the Surf.

"Operation Snatch" looks socko $6,000 in first Cinema round. American preem of the Russian "Unsent Letter" looks frisky at Carnegie.

"If a Man Answers" is holding up solidly in its second Chicago lap; "Convicts 4" is okay in same Oriental stanza; "Very Private Affair" is nabbing a hep second session at the Loop. "European Nights" is snappy in second Town round.

Third session of "Chapman Report" continues good at State-Lake. "Lady and Tramp," on reissue, and "Almost Angels" shape frisky in Woods for third week. "Boccaccio '70" is okay in United Artists fourth stanza.

On hardticket, "Longest Day" is grabbing a socko second frame at the Roosevelt, "Brothers Grimm" is rated okay for 10th McVickers canto, and "West Side Story" is steady in its Todd 35th.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (495; $1.25-$1.80)—"Unsent Letter" (Artkino). Sharp $3,800. Last week, "Psycosissimo" (Ragan) and "Rocket From Calabuch" (Ragan), $2,800.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; $1.25-$1.80)—"If A Man Answers" (U) (2d wk). Snazzy $21,000. Last week, $30,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.25-$1.80)—"A Kind of Loving" (Gov.). Hotsy $9,000. Last week, "World of Comedy" (Cont) (3d wk), $6,500.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

'Grimm' Hep 10G, Pitt; 'Pigeon' 8G

Pittsburgh, Oct. 23.

"Chapman Report" at Stanley rates nice but is not enough to perk up the generally slow biz setup at the Pitt deluxers. "Forever My Love" at Squirrel Hill and "Lady Doctor" at Shadyside are only okay.

Standout in town is "Brothers Grimm" sharp in 11th week at Warner. "Roman Holiday" on reissue, is limp at Gateway. "Pressure Point" continues weak in second at Fulton. "Pigeon That Took Rome" is rated fair in second round at Penn.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Assoc.) (1,530; $1-$1.50) —"Pressure Point" (UA) (2d wk). Drab $4,000. Last week $4,900.

Gateway (Assoc.) (1,900; $1-$1.50) — "Roman Holiday" (Par) (reissue). Soft $5,000. Last week, "Damn Defiant" (Col), $4,900.

Penn (UATC) (3,300; $1-$1.50)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) (2d wk). Fair $8,000 or close. Last week, $11,000.

Shadyside (MOTC) (750; $1.25)—"Lady Doctor" (Indie). Oke $2,500. Last week, "Ashes and Diamonds" (Janus), $1,800.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (834; $1.25)—"Forever My Love" (Par). Sharp $3,500. Last week, "Waltz of Toreadors" (Cont) (3d wk), $3,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,700; $1-$1.50)—"Chapman Report" (WB). Nice $16,000 or near. Last week, "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV) (2d wk), $9,000.

'ANGELS' NICE $9,000, CLEVE.; 'WALTZ' OK 5G

Cleveland, Oct. 23.

Everything is rather sluggish at downtown deluxers here this round. Best showing is being made by "Almost Angels," paired with the oldie, "Lady and Tramp." Combo is rated good in second session at Allen. "Divorce, Italian Style" also is doing nicely in second at Colony Art. "Brothers Grimm" is heading for a nice 11th stanza at Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (Stanley-Warner) (2,866; $1-$1.50)"Almost Angels" (BV) and "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) (2d wk). Good $9,000 or over. Last week, $13,000.

'Pigeon' Potent $9,500 In Cincy; 'Angels' Fair 5G; 'Grimm' 8½G, 11th

Cincinnati, Oct. 23.

Cincy film traffic currently bids to slow down at most spots. "Pigeon That Took Rome" looks nice in opener at the Albee and as town topper. "Almost Angels," with reissued "Lady and Tramp," rates fairish at Keith's. Holdover "Chapman Report" looms okay at the Palace. Hardticket "Brothers Grimm" holds fairly well in 11th stanza at the Capitol.

"Hero's Island" with "Sword of Conqueror" looks so-so at Twin Drive-In. "Miracle Worker" in fourth at suburban Valley is doing nicely. "Divorce, Italian Style" rates hotsy as new entry at Guild. Reissued "Sabrina" and "Roman Holiday" shape okay at Grand.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; $1-$1.50)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par). Nice $9,500. Last week, "I Thank A Fool" (MGM), $8,500.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,540; $1.25-$2.75) — "Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (11th wk). Fair $8,500. Last week, $9,000. Night biz slow. Sunday second show time changed from 8 to 5:30 p.m. after 2 p.m. matinee.

Esquire Art (Cin-T-Co) (500; $1.25)—"Best of Enemies" (Col) (3d wk). Okay $1,400. Second was $1,500.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; $1-$1.25)—"Sabrina" Par) and "Roman Holiday" (Par) (reissues). Oke $6,000. Last week, "A Very Private Affair" (MGM) and "Love Is Better Than Ever" (Indie) (reissues), $6,500.

Guild (Vance) (300; $1.25)—

B'way Biz Better; 'Requiem' Wow 50G, 'Phaedra' Boff 22G, 'Barabbas' Great 33G, 2d; 'Day' Capacity $44,000, Third

Fresh screen fare in three theatres, one of them a new art house, is helping Broadway firstrun trade. "Requiem for a Heavyweight" looks to land a mighty $50,000 for initial session, day-dating the Criterion and the Kips Bay, the new 519-seat Baker operation on the east side.

"Chapman Report" hit very good $37,000 opening round daydating the Victoria and Trans-Lux 52d St. "Pressure Point" slipped so sharply in the second week, daydating the Astor and Trans-Lux 85th St., to slim $15,100 that it's being supplanted by "Manchurian Candidate" today (Wed.) at the two houses.

"The Longest Day" still is capacity with $44,000 or close in its current (3d) stanza at the Warner. "Barabbas" is holding with near-capacity $33,000 in second round at the DeMille.

"Gigot," with stageshow, looks like fine $130,000 in fourth week at the Music Hall, and holds a fifth. "Long Day's Journey Into Night" held with smash $16,000 in second stanza at the newly opened Tower East.

"Convicts 4" finished its third session at the Paramount with a mild $18,000. It stays a fourth.

"Brothers Grimm' wound its 11th session at the Cinerama (Capitol) with big $25,000. "West Side Story" is heading for smash $28,500 in 53d round at the Rivoli, being the initial week of the second year for this marathon-runner.

"Very Private Affair" looks like fair $18,500 at State and Beekman in fourth week. The State shutters Nov. 3 to prep for opening of "Mutiny on the Bounty," which preems on hardticket Nov. 8. Long string of previews starts on Nov. 5.

Newcomers on the art front include "Phaedra," heading for a wow $22,000 opening session at the Plaza; "Crime Does Not Pay," a good $9,500 in first week at the Sutton; and "Yojimbo," which hit boffo $10,700 opening round at the Carnegie Hall Cinema.

Estimates for This Week

Cinerama (Loew) (1,552; $1.50-$3.50)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (12th wk). The 11th session ended Sunday (21) was big $25,000 after $37,000 in 10th week, with five extra shows naturally helping.

Criterion (Moss) (1,520; $1.25-$2.50) — "Requiem For Heavyweight" (Col) (2 wk). Initial round ended yesterday (Tues.) was smash $36,500. Daydating with Kips Bay, new eastside arty theatre.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; $1.50-$3.50)—"Barabbas" (Col) (2d wk). This stanza finishing today (Wed.) is heading for near-capacity $33,000 after $34,800 for opener. Advance sale has improved, and number of parties is soaring.

Embassy (Guild Enterprises) (500; $1.50-$2.50) — "Riff-Raff Girls" (Cont). First week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for fair $8,000 or less. Stays only for the single week, with "Nude Odyssey" (Fine Arts) opening Friday (26).

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1.25-$2)— "No Man Is Island" (U) (3d-final wk). Initial holdover stanza finished yesterday (Tues.) was only fair $15,000 after $20,500 for first week. "2 Before Zero" (Indie) is due Oct. 31.

Forum (Moss) (813; $1.25-$1.80) —"We'll Bury You" (Col). Opens today (Wed.) In ahead, "Smashing of Reich" (Indie) and "Kamikaze" (Indie) (3d wk-8 days). Hit mild $9,500 or less after $10,500 in second.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Convicts 4" (AA) (4th-final wk). Third week ended yesterday (Tues.) was $18,000 after $20,500 for second. "Period of Adjustment" (MGM) opens Oct. 31.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75) — "Gigot" (20th) plus stageshow (4th wk). This week is heading for nice $130,000 or close after $154,000 for third. Holds a fifth, with "Gypsy" (WB) due next.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.50-$3.50) —"West Side Story" (UA) (53d wk). This session, first one of second year of run, winding today (Wed.) looks like rousing $28,500 after $32,000 for 52d wk, covering 12 performances.

State (Loew) (1,900; $1.50-$2.50) — "Very Private Affair" (MGM) (4th-final wk). Current stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for mild $13,000 after $15,000 for third. House closes Nov. 3 to prep for Nov. 8 preem of "Mutiny on Bounty" (MGM) on hardticket. House will also be used for many previews starting Nov. 5.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,003; $1.25-$2)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Initial week ended yesterday (Tues.) hit solid $22,000 or close. In ahead, "Thank A Fool" (MGM) (5th wk), $10,500.

Warner (SW) (1,813; $1.50-$3.50) —"Longest Day" (20th) (3d wk). This round finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for capacity $44,000 after $48,000, also capacity, for second week, but taking in one extra performance.

First-Run Artles

New Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$2)—"Loneliness of Long Distance Runner" (BL) (3d wk). First holdover round ended Sunday (21) held with big $12,500 after $13,000 for initialer. Still playing only at nights as construction continues on front of house in afternoons.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; $1.80-$2) —"A Kind of Loving" (Gov) (4th wk). Third stanza ended Monday (22) was sock $9,500 after $12,500 for second.

Beekman (Rugoff Th.) (590; $1.50-$2)—"Very Private Affair" (MGM) (4th wk). This session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for fairish $5,500 after $6,500 for third week. Stays a few days past fourth week to bring in "Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) Oct. 29 on subsequent-run.

Carnegie Hall Cinema (F&A) (300; $1.50-$2)—"Yojimbo" (Indie) (2d wk). First week ended Sunday (21) was socko $10,700.

Cinema One (Rugoff Th.) (700; $1.50-$2)—"Boccaccio" (Embassy) (18th wk). The 17th session ended yesterday (Tues.) was solid $10,000 after $11,000 for 16th week. "Billy Budd" opens Oct. 30.

Cinema Two (Rugoff Th.) (300; $1.50-$2)—"Devi" (Indie) (3d-final wk). Second week finished Saturday (20) was modest $4,000 after $5,500 in first. "Billy Budd" (AA) opens Oct. 30, daydating with Cinema One.

Fifth Ave. Cinema (Rugoff Th.) (250; $1.25-$2)—"The Outcry" (Astor). Opened Monday (22). In ahead, "Mr. Hulot's Holiday" (Cont) (reissue) (3d wk), was okay $3,000 after $3,500 for second week.

Normandie (T-L) (592; $1.25-$2) —"Passion of Slow Fire" (T-L) (2d wk). This stanza ending today (Wed.) looks like sturdy $8,000 after $10,000 for opener.

Kips Bay (Baker) (519; $1.50-$2) — "Requiem For Heavyweight" (Col) (2d wk). First session ended yesterday (Tues.) was great $13,500 or close. First pic to play this new house, it had benefit of opening night showing Tuesday (16).

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)— "The Island" (Zenith) (7th wk). Sixth frame completed Sunday (21) was good $8,000 after $9,000 in fifth.

Gerard Oury Sees More Yanks-In-Paris As Aiding French, Now Tailing Italy

By JACK PITMAN

Using his own personal logic, Frenchman Gerard Oury suggests his country's film fortunes in America should pick up momentum as more peripatetic Yank talents come to roost in Paris. This is asserted by the actor-writer-director after acknowledging that the French have been trailing the Italians in their postwar impact on the U. S. market.

In New York for the American preem of "Le Crime ne Paie Pas" (Crime Does Not Pay), which he wrote-directed, Oury hopes the influx of Yanks in Hollywood-by-the-Seine portends an upbeat in France-American coproduction, which he assumes will pay off commercially over here. He articulates the key point that robust boxoffice should in turn liberate the French filmmakers artistically, permitting more attention to their more trademarked cinematic creations. It's in this idiomtic avant-garde area, after all, that Gallic producers are smarting behind the pacesetting Italians, although the latter have been outdistancing the French globally with their spear-and-sandal epics, too.

Limited Domestically

Oury's thinking on such economic liberation spotlights the plight of the French, who, because of a severly limited domestic b.o. potential, usually must operate with the commercial audience uppermost in mind. By so doing they have been able generally to make out okay at home while making little dent elsewhere. This condition, as Oury observe, has "opened the door" for the recent "new wave" talents—the fact that their output has been relatively inexpensive and thus not nearly as dependent on domestic takes for monetary success.

While he expects, in this roundabout fashion, the American influence to prove a substantial boost, Oury concedes another, and possibly even more cogent, factor in the Italians latterday favored status over the French on foreign (mainly U. S.) screens. It reduces to the never-settled pro-and-con over form versus content. The Italians, director explains, have "retained a way of telling the story" in their neo-realist cinema, while the French have been preoccupied with "atmosphere"—that is with form. The Romans, he adds, have been more successful (i.e., more interested) in getting both artistic manner and digestible content onto the screen, hence have made off with most of the Yank after glory.

Oury's own filmmaking philosophy is heretical to the French spirit of the Truffauts and Godards thrown up by the late "nouvelle vague." He doesn't particularly dig the way-out, opting with the Italians for both form and substance as his mode of expression. This appears to be at the nub of his remark that "when a film has quality, it goes all over—there is no problem." Of marketing, that is, and thus M. Oury is very much an internationalist.

Oury has been acting since age 18, first on the stage (including a year with the Comedie Francaise). He's now 43, with three pix under his belt as a director, the first having been "Les Mains Chaudes" (Blind Man's Bluff) in '59. That was followed a year later by "La Menace" (The Threat) and, last year, by "Crime Does Not Pay," for which he also supplied the story. When he returns to Paris (his home) a week or so hence, he'll start preparing "Overture to Danger" for producer Gilbert Bokanowski. This is a World War II yarn about a group of French cutthroats in England who operate in pirate-style on Nazi shipping.

Oury, who speaks passable English but often lapses into French when theres an interpreter at hand, as there was for his N. Y. rounds), intends to continue acting, but prefers directing as broader (creatively, hence more fulfilling.

His current Manhattan visit is his first of any duration, and is further relished because of the opportunity to do some legging around town in the company of his 20-year-old daughter Danielle, a third-year Columbia Univ. student taking literature and the history of art.

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Turns Spotty; 'Day' New Champion, 'Grimm' 2d, 'Chapman' 3d, 'Story' 4th, 'Angels' 5th

Seasonal influences are being blamed for the very spotty appearance of biz across the nation this stanza. These include interest in elections, the crucial situation in Cuba and both college and pro football games. But actually, the soft condition of the boxoffice stems from a dearth of enough strong pix to go around.

"Longest Day" (20th), although in only eight key cities covered by VARIETY currently, is soaring into first place, with biz ranging from big to wow and capacity. Pic has caught on with amazing vigor in every key spot in which opened.

"Brothers Grimm" (MGM), which was No. 1 last week, is finishing a big second-place winner. "Chapman Story" (WB) looks to wind up third. "West Side Story" (UA) is capturing fourth position.

"Almost Angels" (BV) is winding in fifth spot. "Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) will take sixth money after being fifth a week ago. "Divorce, Italian Style," also from Embassy, will take seventh place.

"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) is finishing eighth. "If A Man Answers" (U), a newcomer, is edging up to ninth. "No Man Is Island" (U) will wind up 10th.

"Waltz of Toreadors" (Cont) is finishing 11th while "Pressure Point" (UA) rounds out the Top 12 pix. "Very Private Affair" (MGM), seventh last week; and "Sky Above" (Embassy), long much higher on list, are runner-up films.

"Barabbas" (Col), now playing only in three keys, shapes as a potentially big winner. It is near-capacity in N. Y. at the DeMille, is rated smash in Boston and very big in Toronto. It's in third week in last-named city. "Phaedra" (Lope) also shapes a probable big grosser based on its first two dates. Pic is wham in N.Y. and wow in Boston.

"Kind of Loving" (Gov), also new, is torrid in Chi and sock in N. Y. at the Fine Arts. "Interns" (Col), which has finished high on the list for weeks, is adding some nice coin in about three spots currently.

"Requiem For Heavyweight" (Col), another new entrant, should do well based on its first three key city openings. It is rated wham in N. Y., mighty in Boston and lusty in L.A. "Gigot" (20th), now in fourth week at N. Y. Music Hall and set to go a fifth, is rated good in Frisco for second stanza.

"Touch of Mink" (U), still in some of bigger keys, looks good in K.C. and N. Y., and fast in Toronto currently. "Thank A Fool" (MGM), good in Toronto, looks brisk in Louisville.

"300 Spartans" (20th) shapes slow in L.A. "Coming Out Party" (Union) is nice in Minneapolis.

'Pilot,' Diocesan Paper, Cites and Raps Copy Of The 'Fast Buck Boys'

Boston, Oct. 23.

Taking a swipe at film advertising by the "fast buck boys," the Pilot, official organ of the Archdiocese of Boston, contended in an editorial, "Pick A Picture," Saturday (20) that this kind of lurid advertising may in the end "bring about filmland's greatest tragedy."

The Pilot listed eight paragraphs of film advertising blurbs used in Boston the past week. "All Boston's talking about the screen's most revealing new hit! The personal story behind a sex survey . . . from the controversial best selling novel . . . No one under 16 will be admitted unless accompanied by an adult. The passion of Phaedra . . . who at the same moment embraced her love and her destruction. Youth seeking thrills and finding them . . . the wrong kind! It strips the secret from the intimate key clubs . . . The wildest party ever filmed! The birth of a baby! The 'forbidden' romance!

"No longer a child . . . Not yet a woman . . . What is she?

"See this in the privacy of your car! Due to the delicate subject:—Not recommended for children. A shocking new relationship! If a boy is different . . . can he learn to love a woman? Am I guilty of imparing the morals of my son?

"And so the wearisome litany of ads runs. In point of fact, these are but a sample of what appeared in the local newspapers within this very week."

Stars In Local Feature Re Doukhobors

Calgary, Alta., Oct. 23.

A feature-length color film about Russian religious cultists, the Doukhobors in a fictional British Columbia town is being made at Canmore, Alta., by Westland Productions Ltd.

Titled "The Naked Flame," it has Dennis O'Keefe starred. Canadians have been cast in about 20 speaking parts.

Larry Matanski, of Edmonton, is producer and director. He is also president of Westland Productions.

ROTH RE L.A. 'TIMES' ON CENSORING 'FLAME' ADS

George Roth, producer of "Flame In the Street," said in New York this week he just wouldn't compromise, thought it best to forego advertising in the Los Angeles Times rather than submit to its censorship standards.

The copy offered by Roth was the same as appeared in the New York papers. The L.A. Times said no. Rejected was the art work depicting a Negro male and a white woman in an embrace.

Interestingly, as Roth related it, is the fact that the L.A. Examiner and the Hollywood Citizen News accepted the copy and the controversey over the Times reluctance made for a feature on two L.A. television news programs, Channels 2 and 5, reported Roth, picked up the matter locally and indeed focused on the exact ad which the Times rejected.

Says Roth: "The Times asked us not to use the words 'Negro,' 'dark' and 'intermarriage,' and to change the artwork. But it is not fair to a picture to be misleading in the ads and for this reason I withdrew all ads from the Times."

Filmmaker said he bought radio time with the money that had been allocated for the Times and, possibly as a result of this, a two-week booking at the Egyptian Theatre, L.A., has been extended to a third week.

Twentieth-Fox prexy Darryl F. Zanuck reportedly eyeing Kirk Douglas' forthcoming indie project, "Seven Days in May" . . . Everybody's got to open their own cab doors now. The two doormen at the 20th homeoffice on West 56th St. have been assigned to other duties. Meanwhile, a plan to open a cafeteria for 20th employees there has been abandoned. Of the 900 questionnaires sent out seeking info on whether h.o. personnel, including De Luxe Labs and Fox Movietone people, would use such a facility, only 528 were returned, of which, only 110 indicated the cafeteria would be used regularly.

Adolph Herman hosts a cocktail party at La Zambra tomorrow (Thurs.) to mark the Nov. 1 opening of his new Sands Point Theatre in Port Washington . . . Mirisch has added "I Love Louisa" to its 1963 production sked. Pic is being produced by J. Lee Thompson and pubrel exec Arthur P. Jacobs from a script by Betty Comden and Adolph Green . . . "Last Year in Marienbad" took in a total of $251,697 in its 32-week run at the Carnegie Hall Cinema before "Yojimbo" moved in last week . . . Times Film has postponed the local preem of Michelangelo Antonioni's "The Eclipse," originally set to open at the Little Carnegie yesterday (Tues.). Meanwhile, a Times spokesman flatly denies that the pic has been cut, as reported in last week's Soundtrack. The error was traced to a credit sheet sent out by a Times rep which incorrectly reported the film's running time to be 98 minutes. Says the spokesman, the film is still the 130 minutes it was when shown at Cannes earlier this year.

Red Buttons and Tony Randall will be among the show business personalities attending the testimonial for Barney Balaban tonight (Wed.) at the Jewish Community Center of White Plains. Paramount's president is to receive the Clarence K. Whitehill Award.

Maurice Ronet after being an on-and-off item for Carl Foreman's next feature, "The Victors" is now definite. He arrived in London Oct. 19, for the shooting which started Oct. 22 with Eli Wallach, George Peppard, George Hamilton and James Mitchum . . . expected to follow in later sequence; Melina Mercouri, Michael Callan, Peter Fonda, Romy Schneider . . . typical international casting . . . For whatever it proves about the financial health of Times Square which was invaded recently by a branch of the Bank For Savings, first new bank in area in decades, over 10,000 new accounts have been opened.

Anatole Litvak, producer-director of UA's upcoming release, "Five Miles to Midnight," in from Europe . . . Meanwhile, Jules Dassin and Melina Mercouri have taken off for Chicago on the first leg of their transcontinental tour on behalf of Lopert's "Phaedra" . . . The Italo "Nude Odyssey," which Davis-Royal is releasing for Col, will open at the local New Embassy Theatre on Times Square following the current tenant, "Riff Raff Girls" . . . Herman Weinberg has done the English titles for Continental Distributing's "The Lovers of Teruel" and Casolaro's "Le Amiche."

Actor Darren McGavin plans to produce and direct a small budget indie here, "Facades," but won't appear in it . . . Astor Pictures prexy George Foley is planning for a December opening here for Orson Welles' "The Trial." Film will have a four-theatre preem in Paris Nov. 21 . . . Sid Blumenstock has wound up his assignment as roadshow coordinator for "The Longest Day" and will now devote his full time to Safranski Productions, which produces radio-tv commercials and of which he is an officer.

Milton Platt, who has been acting as assistant to the sales manager of Continental Distributing, has been formally named assistant general sales manager. . . . Does novelist Richard Condon spot-check (or write) some of the press releases going out on behalf of the film adaptation of his "Manchurian Candidate?" One last week reported that in seeking a name for the presidential candidate in the script, director John Frankenheimer and writer George Axelrod came up "at random" with the name "Benjamin K. Arthur." It was only after filming was completed, says the release, that Frankenheimer and Axelrod "realized that the name has special significance"—a similarity to the name of the 21st U. S. President, Chester A. Arthur. Who's kidding whom, including Arthur Krim and Bob Benjamin?

Elia Kazan and the cast and crew of his "America, America" are currently cruising the Mediterranean aboard the chartered motorship Marianna, to shoot shipboard sequences for the pic . . . In Esquire, Jerry Lewis asks interviewing Peter Bogdanovich, "Did you ever read 'The Catcher in the Rye'? Well, you never saw a more Holden Caulfield guy than you're sittin' with right now. And Salinger's sister told me she used to call him 'Sonny.' That's what my grandmother used to call me. It's frightening" . . . France's other BB unknown this side, is Birgit Bergen, a veteran of 10 features who just signed for Joe E. Levine's "Young Girls of Good Family," which producer Gilbert Bokanowski is shooting on the Riviera. The mamselle recently won something called the Lady Europa beauty contest . . . Allied Artists' "Billy Budd" preems here next Tuesday (30) at Cinemas I and II . . . Orson Welles' "Mr. Arkadin" reportedly cracked the first-week b.o. record at the uptown New Yorker. It stays, of course . . . Polan Banks and George Marshall have deferred their "Maharajah," to be filmed in India for Allied Artists, until early '64. Blame it on the monsoon schedule.

Universal bought Oscar Brodney's comedy, "The Richest Girl in Town," as a Ross Hunter production to star Sandra Dee . . . Shelley Winters into Pietro Germi's Italian production, "Time of Indifference," starting in February . . . Chuck Connors for Ivan Tors production for Metro, "Flipper" . . . Jack Kruschen joins John Wayne in Batjac's "McLintock" . . . Jack Cardiff set to direct "The Long Ships," Irving Allen production for Columbia release to lens next year in Yugoslavia . . . Mirisch Co. added "I Love Louisa," original screenplay by Gwen Davis, to its 1963 slate, to be produced by J. Lee Thompson and Arthur P. Jacobs in association with MC . . .

Margaret Twyman, director of the MPAA's community relations department, last week presided over a meeting of film execs and educators seeking to determine areas where the two groups might work together for mutual benefit . . . UA exec veep Arnold Picker is heading up industry participation in the 1962 Santa Claus Ball at the Americana Dec. 8—with proceeds to go to the Foundation for Child Mental Welfare.

Felix Bilgrey, general counsel for Times Film, will discuss ways in which exhibs and distribs can work together against censorship at the annual TOA convention in Miami Nov. 8 . . . The indie production firm of Contrast Corp. of the Arts of Miami has signed David Braha to star in an as-yet untitled $300,000 feature to be made in Miami later this year . . . Having completed his role in Sam Bronston's "55 Days in Peking," actor Mitchell Kowal has returned to New York.

Walter Reade Theatres are not going along with that "Chapman Report" ad tag that says "children 16 and under will not be allowed unless accompanied by an adult." Reade isn't letting any kids in to see the pic, no matter who accompanies them!

CATHOLIC CRITICS' NEW LOOK

Stephen Boyd on 'Anything Goes' Sex; Regrets Making 'Imperial Venus'

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Stephen Boyd discussed a just-completed foreign picture "which I wish I had not made" and which, he feels, "is a bad comment on the state of the international film industry." Boyd was talking about the Royal Films' Italian production of "Imperial Venus," in which he costarred with Gina Lollobrigida, and said, "If it were made in Hollywood it would be a fine motion picture but, as it was made, I have my doubts if it will even be shown here—or in Italy."

Boyd charged the film, produced by Guido Gianbastolmei, is "maimed art" that thwarts any "code of ethics that might try to be developed in the film industry." He said it flaunts sex to a degree "that is disgusting," noting "there are two different standards of morals between Americans and Europeans."

He deplored fact that often "we allow foreign films to be shown here that use things we won't allow our own industry to use." He said, in case of "Venus," which was made in both French and American versions, "they were not interested in listening to what can or cannot be done here because they feel they can get away with it."

Boyd charged U.S. is ruining its own business by allowing such pix to play here. But he said his observations showed pix are not being made in Rome today; they are being made in London and Madrid. He said he "believes Italian producers are paying a great deal of money to have Rome publicized as a film capital in the other film capitals of the world, even though most of the pictures made there don't even deserve a mention." Actor charged "The worst Hollywood A picture is 10 times better for worldwide consumption than the best foreign picture."

Boyd next goes in Samuel Bronston's "Fall of the Roman Empire" in Madrid. He has one commitment left for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and one a year for next six year for 20th-Fox.

"Venus" has no U.S. release date. Picture was finished in mid-September in Rome, with Jean Delennoy directing.

Dearden-Relph's 3 For United Artists

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

British filmakers Basil Dearden and Michael Relph have signed a three picture deal with United Artists under which they will make films in England for UA worldwide release. Dearden directs, Relph produces.

First picture in works is "A Woman of Straw," translation of French novel by Catherine Arley. Pix will all be made under Eady Plan on flexible budgets, though Dearden yesterday said they will try to stay in $750,000 budget area. Pix go under Allied Filmakers banner, company in which Dearden and Relph are also connected with Jack Hawkins, Guy Green, Richard Attenborough and Bryan Forbes. All could be associated in future pix.

Dearden, here discussing new UA deal with Robert Blumofe, also revealed upcoming film he and Relph will do for Bryanston in London. Picture is "Bethnal Green," name of a district in London's East End. Clive Exton is scripting. Dearden is a major stockholder in Bryanston, which made his last picture "The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner." Picture opened last week in New York. Walter Reade has U.S. distribution. He is also screening "Life for Ruth," written by Janet Green and John McCormick, for U.S. distributors.

It's An Adult World

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

Films suitable for children are becoming more and more conspiculously absent here with the current week probably setting a new record in that respect.

It's a case of "for adults only" at three loop and two neighborhood firstrun houses, the pictures in question being "A Very Private Affair" (MGM), "The Chapman Report" (WB), "Boccaccio 70" (Embassy), "Surfside 77" (CI) and "Eve on the Apple" (Indie).

With the exception of "Wonderful World of Brothers Grimm" (MGM), "Hatari" and, perhaps, a couple of others, none of the remainder of the screen fare now on tap could qualify, either, as exactly "family entertainment."

ACLU's Attorney Vs. Loyola Dean On 'Obscenity'

Albany, Oct. 23.

A two-hour panel discussion, in Albany Law School auditorium, on "The Law and Obscenity," had Mrs. Harriet F. Pilpel, an attorney from the American Civil Liberties Union, and Dr. John C. Hayes, acting dean of Loyola University Law School and spokesman for National Office for Decent Literature, expressing widely divergent views. Associate Judge Charles W. Froessel of the N.Y. State Court of Appeals first reviewed obscenity from Plato, more than 3,000 years ago, to the U.S. Supreme Court decision on Manual Enterprises vs. Day in June, 1962.

Woman in audience asked, was there any value to the reading by her son in school of "Command Decision"? Mrs. Pilpel, graduate of Vassar College and a member of the Ethical Cultural Society, replied: "I have not read the book, but I saw the motion picture and my impression is that it would have a positive value on my son, inculcating in him the spirit of American sportsmanship."

The Evangelist, official weekly of the Albany Catholic Diocese, in an editorial commenting on the panel exchange, declared, "The unyielding stand taken by Mrs. Pilpel and Dr. Hayes points up very emphatically that existing concepts regarding obscenity as a moral evil are poles apart. What is no problem for the average layman of intelligence, and, as a matter of fact, is in no way puzzling for a seven-year-old who is capable of distinguishing what is good and clean from that which is dirty and forbidding, just about stops legal

Theme & Dialog Require Maturity, Decency Legion Slant on O'Neill Film

The Roman Catholic Legion of Decency has given a separate classification to Eugene O'Neill's work "Long Day's Journey Into Night," filmed by Ely Landau, distributed by Joseph E. Levine's Embassy Pictures.

Noting that the film does not have a Code seal but is being "recommended for mature audiences" in all ads, LOD says that it requires "maturity in the viewer because of its difficult cult theme and strong language."

Legion also condemned the indie-made "Too Young, Too Immoral," calling it "a pseudo-sociological film of no merit" which "introduces gross sensationalism for its own sake."

DUPREY LATEST OF URBANE SORT

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Another book by another Catholic critic, this time Richard A. Duprey, gives fresh evidence of the intellectual ferment which propels religious-slanted reviewers of that faith beyond the old Sunday sermon emphasis upon "dirty movies and filthy stage plays." In "Just Off The Aisle" (Newman, $3.95) Duprey, who is reviewer on the Catholic Standard of Philadelphia, follows some of the Jesuit savants of the past several years in hinting that Catholic entertainment slogans have been too extreme to win converts and too stale to arm the faithful for major effectiveness against "smut."

Of the Legion of Decency Duprey writes: "Even in Catholic circles there is great disagreement in regard to the Legion—its nature, its aims, its value." But he balances that statement by elsewhere remarking: "The American bishops have attempted to warn the public that the motion picture makers are lying when they claim a self-regulatory responsibility which they have beyond all shadow of a doubt abandoned."

Realistically assaying the Catholic critic, his comparatively rare visibility, his extremely recent emergence, Duprey offers a historic reprise. He does not trace Catholic criticism in America further back than Conde S. Pallen's comments on the legitimate theatre of 1909 in America, the Jesuit weekly. In 1916 one Thomas J. Gerrard in Catholic World was advocating stage consorship. He suggested deletion on the rule-of-thumb of what would shock "a well-bred young lady of 17." Remarks Duprey: "The World didn't maintain this position for any length of time." In 1920 it began printing a more urbane reviewer, Euphenia Wyatt, who "manifested a genuine regard for the importance of art when, all too often, Catholic writing about the theatre treated art with even more crass disdain than the men who sought to commercialize and debase it."

Today the emphasis of Catholic reviewing centers a good deal on films and television. Duprey puts Jerry Cotter of The Sign and William Mooring, who is syndicated to diocesan papers, on the extreme "prudential right," still heavy-stressing theology over art. He observes that showfolk tend not to know the more liberal small-circulation Catholic periodicals and tend "to ignore the rightists as sin-busters rather than as valid critics."

'Heavenly Yardstick'

Deploring, as have certain priests, criticism couched in the terms of "a sort of heavenly yardstick," Duprey speaks of "films in the A-1 category which are so lacking in art and taste that they are offensive to human intelligence and sensitivity."

He suspects some priest-critics are the more liberal: "I've heard it said, and it sounds likely, that the priest can get away with much less kow-towing to the censorial, Puritan-tainted mentality of his fellow Catholics." There is a reprise of the earlier priestly blast against the essential vulgarity of Bing Crosby's clerical film, "Say One For Me."

Duprey speaks of his own shock when a Catholic professor informed him, in all solemnity, that a Roman Catholic "cannot really be a creative artist" because "an artist asks questions and for a Catholic, all essential, really basic questions are answered in the Baltimore Catecheism." Duprey's own estimate of the professor: "All one can do is admire his faith and shudder at his rigidity."

Book offers extended analysis of "La Dolce Vita," the Italian film, and of the works of Ingmar Bergman in Sweden. Both very moral. Federico Fellini's story "filmed in the flat, overexposed manner of a newsreel" reminds Critic Duprey of "A retreat master conference and the warning of the confessor,

Maryland Cheers Anti-Nudity Ruling of Screen Actors Guild

Baltimore, Oct. 23.

Quick-buck nudist films constitute a constant annoyance to the Motion Picture Censor Board of Maryland. Resultantly its vice-chairman, Mrs. Louis E. Shecter, has associated herself in praise of the Screen Actors Guild pronunciamento from Hollywood against "showmen" who make disrobing by SAG gal members a condition of employment.

Mrs. Schecter, a former exhibitor herself and still landlord of four Baltimore situations, deplores the recent flush of fly-by-night producers who specialize in epidermis epics. She adopts the position that the peephole stuff is undesirable screen fare for juveniles.

A letter to president George Chandler of SAG conveys Mrs. Schecter's satisfaction that the talent union feels its membership degraded by bare-skin stuff. SAG has stated it would back any woman member fired for refusing to strip for camera.

Not 'Our' Marlon Brando

Milton Rackmil says Marlon Brando was all charm and good deportment during his stint in Universal's "Ugly American," an allusion to the star's much chronicled turmoil with Metro.

So much so, noted exec, that the pic wound under budget. "We've had no trouble with this man—he was wonderful to work with." Brando reports back to U soon for a comedy, "King of the Mountain."

Trade Lacks Info On New Justices' Censor Slants

Anticipation of how the presently-constituted U.S. Supreme Court will look upon motion picture censorship is heightened for industryites close to the problem by the presence of new justices Byron (Whizzer) White and Arthur Goldberg.

White is much the unknown quantity in this sphere, but less so Goldberg. While admittedly it's difficult to gauge judicial attitude once the robes of office are donned, fact is that Goldberg as a Chicago attorney (prior to being tapped for duty by Prez Kennedy) often was in the thick of the censorship fray. With his Loop associate, Abner Mikva, he prepared several court tests against the Chi police censor board, all resulting in triumphs against the cops. Mikva, by the way, continues active in this field.

Whether Goldberg will sit on all cases heading for the court is uncertain. Some of them, echoing earlier tests originating in Chi, may prompt the new justice to rule himself out. Otherwise, although his sympathies are anti-censorship, it's always risky to try to foretell how it will go when a man switches from pleader to arbiter.

Critic Mooring Hates Condon's 'Candidate'; Calls It Anti-Rightist

Albany, Oct. 23.

William H. Mooring, syndicated Catholic film critic who appears in diocesan papers all over U.S. (see adjoining story on "Catholic Critics' New Look"), has reacted to Frank Sinatra's "The Manchurian Candidate" (UA) with his own special tangent. He thinks film will "tend to create confusion and distrust among those who do not yet comprehend the nature of Marxism and the sinister aims and tricks of the pro-Communists in this country."

Mooring characterized "The Manchurian Candidate" as "a bitter, brutal, morally mish-mash version of Richard Condon's novel about Communist brain-washing of Korean veterans."

He observed: "It is written (and produced) by George Axelrod and directed by John Frankenheimer. Its melodramatic excesses may warn the alert. Its effect upon politically supine citizens is liable to be mischievous. The picture inferentially exonerates extreme, left-wing activities in this country, while insinuating that corresponding right-wing organizations in the USA, are instrumental of dissension and disloyalty, forged by the Russo-Chinese Communists themselves."

"This," concluded Mooring, "is anti-anti Communism gone crazy, like a fox. Like a red fox."

7 Judges Hearing 'Connection' Case

Albany, Oct. 23.

New York State Court of Appeals has scheduled for the last case on today's (Tues.) calendar, arguments on the Regents' appeal from a previous unanimous decision by the Appellate Division, Third Department, overruling the Board's refusal to license "The Connection," because 11 times use of a four-letter word for excrement made it "obscene."

The State's highest tribunal (seven judges) was expected to reach this much-litigated dispute over censorship, around 4 p.m. Some 80 minutes were tentatively allotted for arguments by Charles A. Brind Jr., counsel for The Regents, and by Ephraim S. London, attorney for Films Round World.

EXCESSIVE PROMISCUITY BARS 'JULES ET JIM'

Edmonton, Alta., Oct. 23.

Alberta film censor P. J. A. Fleming here knocked out Calgary Film Society's plans to show Francois Truffaut's "Jules et Jim" recently on grounds of being "morally objectionable, degrading and offensive, with emphasis on excessive (sic) promiscuous relationship."

Fleming said the film might be OK for some adults "but if we classified it for adults, anyone could get in to see it."

"Jules et Jim" has been shown commercially in Toronto and was screened by Ottawa Film Society. Ontario Censor Board usually allows film societies to show their members uncut films, as does Quebec Censor Board in case of all films publicly shown at Montreal Film Festival.

INCH UP ADMISSION

$2.80 Slightly Higher Than Minneapolis Knows

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

A new top for hard-ticket roadshow pictures here is being tried for "Longest Day" (20th) at the local loop Mann. It's $2.80 for Friday and Saturday nights. On other nights the usual $2.65 top prevails.

"Longest Day" followed "West Side Story" (UA) at the Mann. Latter ran 34 weeks to sock grosses and had the previous highest top, $2.75 for Friday and Saturday nights and otherwise $2.65 (which has been the highest tab for all other roadshow films in Minneapolis).

Det. B.O. Sluggish But 'Sky' Lofty at $8,000; 'Grimm' 17G, 'Spit' 12G

Detroit, Oct. 23.

Overall firstrun biz shapes sluggish this week with two of the three newcomers doing only fair. "If A Man Answers" is below average at the Michigan. "Trojan Horse," is producing little boxoffice traffic at the Palms. However, "Sky Above" shapes trim at the Adams.

Meanwhile, the only holdovers doing really good biz in Detroit are "Brothers Grimm" in 12th wonderful week at the Music Hall and "I Spit on Your Grave," good in third at the Fox.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox Theatre of Detroit Corp.) (5,041; $1.25-$1.49)—"Spit On Grave" (Indie) and "Ninth Bullet" (Indie) (3d wk). Good $12,000. Last week, $15,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,026; $1.25-$1.49)—"If Man Answers" (U). Fair $13,000. Last week, "Lady and the Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV) (2d wk), $8,500.

Palms (UD) (2,995; $1.25-$1.49)—"Trojan Horse" (Indie) and "The Mongols" (Indie). Sad $7,500. Last week, "Pressure Point" (UA) and "Doctor Blood's Coffin" (UA), $10,000.

Madison (UD) (1,408; $1.50-$3)—"West Side Story" (UA) (36th wk). Good $6,500. Last week, $6,800.

Grand Circus (UA) (1,400; $1.25-$1.49)—"Marco Polo" (AI) and "Mermaids of Tiburon" (AI) (2d wk). Nice $7,000. Last week, $8,000.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; $1.25-$1.50)—"Sky Above" (Embassy). Trim $8,000. Last week, "Tarzan Goes to India" (MGM) and "Tartars" (MGM) (2d wk), $5,500.

Hollywood Paramount (State) (1,468; $1.75-$2.65)—"Music Man" (WB) (13th wk). Sock $18,500. Last week, $20,000.

Fine Arts (FWC) (631; $1.49-$2)—"Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) (13th wk). Firm $4,000. Last week, $3,900.

Beverly (State) (1,150; $1.49-$2)—"Lolita" (MGM) (18th wk). Strong $4,200. Last week, $4,400.

Chinese (FWC) (1,408; $1.25-$3.50) — "West Side Story" (UA) (45th wk). Potent $17,000. Last week, same.

'Point' Soft $5,500 In Buff; 'Lady' Lively 9G

Buffalo, Oct. 23.

Most firstruns are on the skids here currently. Failure of some newcomers to measure up is hurting. "Pressure Point" is very disappointing at the Buffalo while another newie, "Two Tickets To Paris" shapes slow at Century. "Lady and Tramp," the oldie, is still solid in second at Lafayette. "Pigeon That Took Rome" also is okay in second session at Paramount.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 90-$1.25)—"Pressure Point" (UA) and Court Martial (UA). Soft $5,500. Last week, "Very Private Affair" (MGM) and "Pickup on South Street" (Indie), $7,000.

Center (AB-PT) (2,500; 90-$1.25)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Shapes so-so $7,000 or close. Last week, $12,000.

Century (UATC) (2,700; 90-$1.25)—"Two Tickets to Paris" (Col) and "Ringading Rhythm" (Col). Slow $4,000. Last week, "3 Stooges in Orbit" (Col) and "Zotz" (Col) $3,500.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 90-$1.25)—"Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) (2d wk). Fine $9,000 or close. Last week, $13,400.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,000; 90-$1.25)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) and "Happened in Athens" (Indie) (2d wk). Okay $7,000 or better. Last week, $8,800.

Teck (Loew) (1,200; $1.75-$2.75)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (9th wk). Rated sluggish $4,000. Last week, $4,200.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 90-$1.25)—"Carry on Teacher" (Gov) (2d wk). Okay $2,500. Last week, $3,500.

Rock Hudson in "Man's Favorite Sport," Howard Hawks production for U.

'Day' Wham $16,000, Mpls. Standout; 'Grimm' Great 12G, 'Angels' Fast 7G

BROADWAY

$3.50)—"Long Day's Journey Into Night" (Levine) (3d wk). Second week completed yesterday (Tues.) was smash $16,000 after $18,000 for opener. Nights and Saturday-Sunday matinees play reserved-seat policy; other matinees are unreserved with $2 only scale.

68th St. Playhouse (Leo Brecher) (370; $1.50-$2)—"Touch of Mink" (U) (subrun) (2d wk). This session ending today (Wed.) is holding with big $5,500 after $6,800 for opener.

Sutton (Rugoff Th.) (561; $1.50-$2)—"Crime Does Not Pay" (Embassy) (2d wk). Initial round ended Monday (22) was good $9,500. In ahead, "Waltz of Toreadors" (Cont) (10th wk-8 days), $6,000.

Trans-Lux 52d St. (T-L) (540; $1.25-$2) — "Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). First round finished yesterday (Tues.) was very good $15,000 or near. Daydating with Victoria.

Trans-Lux 85th St. (T-L) (550; $1.25-$2) — "Manchurian Candidate" (UA). Opens today (Wed.). Last week, "Pressure Point" (UA) (2d wk), mild $4,600 after $6,000 for first.

World (Perfecto) (390; 90-$1.50)—"Immoral Mr. Teas" (Mishkin) (5th wk). Fourth round ended Thursday (18) was smash $12,000 after $14,000 for third.

Denver Bright; 'Angels' Wham $14,000, 'Pigeon' 10G; 'Grimm' 11G, 11th

Denver, Oct. 23.

Scarcity of new product this stanza has had little effect on the boxoffice here, with most firstruns reporting good biz despite reissues and subruns in many spots. Others are carrying some holdovers to the limit. "Pigeon That Took Rome" shapes fine at the Centre in first week while "Almost Angels," paired with the oldie, "Lady and Tramp," is racking up a wow take at the Denver.

"Brothers Grimm" still is big in 11th session at Cooper. "West Side Story" continues in business although in 25th week at Denham.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (900; $1.25)—"Seven Brides for Seven Brothers" (MGM) and "Father of Bride" (MGM) (reissues). Neat $3,500. Last week, "Three Coins in Fountain" (20th) and "Love Is Splendored Thing" (20th) (reissues) (2d wk), $2,500.

Capri Art (Art Theatre Guild) (238; $1.25)—"Connection" (Indie) (3d wk). Nice $1,000. Last week, $1,500.

Centre (Fox) (1,270; $1.25-$1.45)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par). Fine $10,000 or close. Last week, "I Thank a Fool" (MGM), $7,500.

Cooper (Cooper) (814; $1.65-$2.50)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (11th wk). Big $11,000 or over. Last week, $12,000.

Denham (Indie) (800; $1.25-$2.50)—"West Side Story" (UA) (25th wk). Stout $5,000. Last week, $5,000.

Denver (Fox) (2,432; $1.25)—"Almost Angels" (BV) and "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue). Wow $14,000. Last week, "Humanoids" (Indie) and "Scavengers" (Indie), $8,500.

Esquire (Fox) (600; $1.25)—"Sky Above" (Embassy) and "No Place Like Homicide" (Indie) (m.o.) (5th wk). Good $1,800. Last week, $2,800.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,690; $1.25)—"Gigi" (MGM) and "Les Girls" (MGM) (reissues). Mild $5,000. Last week, "No Man is Island" (U) and "Battle Hymn" (Indie), $6,500.

Paramount (Wolfberg) (2,100; 90-$1.25) — "Chapman Report" (WB) and "Dream Wife" (Indie) (2d wk). Big $12,000 or close. Last week, $15,000.

Paris (Art Theatre Guild) (350; $1.25)—"Cinderella" (Indie) (subrun). Mild $800. Last week, on reissues.

Towne (Indie) (600; $1.25-$1.45)—"Very Private Affair" (MGM). Shapes moderate $3,000 or over.

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

"Longest Day," of course, is making by far the loudest boxoffice noise among the newcomers currently. Helped by crix and word-of-mouth raves, it's off to a wow opener at the Mann. "Boccaccio '70" is sturdy in second at Academy. "No Man Is An Island" is rated brisk at Lyric for second round.

Otherwise, no fresh entry seems likely to draw much at the b.o. However, "Almost Angels" looks lofty at State for first week. Among the holdovers, "Hatari," in its 11th week, and "Brothers Grimm," racking up a 10th, are the longrun champs.

Estimates for This week

Academy (Mann) (1,000; $1.50-$1.75)—"Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) (2d wk). Dandy $6,000. Last week, $7,000.

Avalon (Frank) (800; $1)—"Erotica" (Indie) and "Sun Lovers Holiday" (Indie) (reissues). Okay $1,800. Last week, "Surfside 77" (Indie) and "Once Upon a Knight" (Indie) (reissue) (3d wk), $1,000.

Century (Par) (1,300; $1-$1.25)—"Roman Holiday" (Par) (reissue). Satisfactory $6,000. Last week, "Very Private Affair" (MGM) (2d wk), $4,500 at $1.25-$1.50 scale.

Cooper (CI) (808; $1.65-$2.50)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (10th wk). Great $12,000. Last week, $12,500.

El Lago (Carisch) (600; $1) — "Back to Nature" (Indie) and "Case of Dr. Laurent" (Indie) (reissue). Lively $1,600. Last week, "Eve on Apple" (Indie) and "Make Mine Mink" (Cont) (reissue) (2d wk), $1,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25)—"Damon and Pythias" (MGM) and "Savage Arms" (MGM). Mild $4,000. Last week, "King Solomon's Mines" (Indie) and "Naked Spur" (Indie) (reissues), $3,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.25) — "No Man Is Island" (U) (2d wk). Brisk $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Mann (Mann) (1,000; $1.25-$2.80)—"Longest Day" (20th). Wow $16,000. Last week, "West Side Story" (UA) (34th wk), $5,000 in four days at $1.50-$2.75.

Orpheum (Mann) (2,800; $1.25-$1.50)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $8,000 or near. Last week, $14,000.

Park (Field) (1,000; $1.50) — "Hatari" (Par) (11th wk). Healthy $2,800. Last week, $3,000.

State (Par) (2,200; $1-$1.25) — "Almost Angels" (BV) and "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue). Fast $7,000. Last week, "Marco Polo" (AIP), $4,500.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; $1.25)—"Coming Out Party" (Union) (2d wk). Okay $2,000. Last week, $2,700.

World (Mann) (400; $1.25-$1.50)—"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) (2d wk). Smooth $4,000. Last week, $5,000.

'Point' Sharp $8,000, Prov.; 'Angels' 6G, 2d

Providence, Oct. 23.

State's "Pressure Point" and Majestic's holdover of "Chapman Report" lead a more active main stem this week. Albee's second of "Lady and the Tramp" helped by "Almost Angels," is good. Elmwood is mild with two oldies. Strand has subsequent-run with "The Interns," but it looms weak.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 75-$1)—"Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV) (2d wk). Big $6,000 expected after $11,000 in opener.

Elmwood (Snider) (724; 90-$1.25)—"Meet Me in St. Louis" (MGM) and "Day At Races" (MGM) (reissues). Trial run expecting mild $3,000. Last week, "El Cid" (AA) (8th wk), $5,500.

Majestic (SW) (2,200; 75-$1)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (2d wk). Good $6,000. First was $9,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 75-$1)—"Pressure Point" (UA) and "War Hunt" (UA). Fairly nice $8,000. Last week, "Very Private Affair" (MGM) and "Savage Guns" (MGM), $6,500.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 75-$1)—"The Interns" (Col) and "Best of Enemies" (Col) (subruns). These were shown here just recently and look meek $3,000. Last week, "Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) and "Escape from Zahrain" (Par), $4,500.

The Wild And The Willing

fessors and the townsfolk are real people about whose problems audiences will care. Ralph Thomas has directed with tact and his brought out some surprisingly sure performances from his inexperienced actors.

Ian McShane, with a broad Manchester accent, came straight from drama school to play this leading role. He is a virile, goodlooking young man with authority who is a real discovery, as is John Hurt, also a first timer, who plays his sensitive roommate. Johnny Briggs, John Standing, Johnny Sekka, Jeremy Brett and John Sumner also click as students.

On the distaff side, a couple of other newcomers, Semantha Eggar and Catharine Woodville are noteworthy new candidates for future stardom. The role of the humorless, cold professor is safe in the capable hands of Paul Rogers while Virginia Maskell, one of Britain's most improved young actresses, gives a deftly observed performance as the young, unhappy wife.

Ernest Steward's camerawork is firstclass and all other technical departments do their stuff well. Norris Paramor has provided a lively score. Johnny Sekka, as well as being provided with some shrewd lines as a Negro student, also has a distinctive singing voice. This he puts to good effect in a closing calypso, which sums up the whole film in a touching finale.

The faults of "The Willing" are largely those caused by the film covering wellworn ground and because the screenplay has rather too many interwoven themes. But it is a sturdy addition to current crop of British "down to earth" pix.

Axel Munthe, der Arzt Von San Michele

(Axel Munthe, Doctor of San Michele)
(GERMAN-ITALIAN-FRENCH)
(COLOR)

Berlin, Oct. 16.

Gloria release of CCC (Arthur Brauner) and Divina production, in collaboration with Cine-Italia (Rome) and Criterion-Films, Paris. Stars O. W. Fischer, Rossana Schiaffino, Sonja Ziemann; features Maria Mahor, Valentina Cortese, Heinz Erhardt. Directed by Georg Marischka, Rudolf Jugert. Screenplay, Hans Jacoby, H. G. Petersson, adapted from book "Axel Munthe, Doctor of San Michele," by Axel Munthe; camera, Richard Angst; music, Nascimbene; sets, Willy Schatz and Warner Achmann; editor, Jutta Hering. At the Marmorhaus, Berlin. Running time, 144 MINS.

Axel Munthe	O. W. Fischer
Antonia	Rossana Schiaffino
Princess Clementine	Sonja Ziemann
Ebba	Maria Mahor
Eleonora Duse	Valentine Cortese
Brunoni	Heinz Erhardt
Natascha	Ingeborg Schoener
Mugthe's client	Renate Ewert
Paulette	Christiane Maybach
Leblanc	Antoine Balpetre
Petit-Pierre	Fernand Sardou

The late Axel Munthe (1856-1949), a Swede, was an unusual personality. He was a successful medico, a helper of the needy, a friend of animals, a poet and philosopher. And he had a way with women, being a handsome chap. Moreover, he wrote a book, "Axel Munthe, the Doctor of San Michele," which has been translated into more than a dozen of lanaguages. This German-Italian-French coproduction depicts the life story of this unusual man, and O. W. Fischer, Germany's top screen lover, plays the title part. There's no doubt but that he loved the role very much.

The film is disappointing, and the fault may lie with O. W. Fischer. This is no Axel Munthe story but an O. W. Fischer film. Fischer is walking and talking through the entire film, and one always feels that he's merely acting. One is convinced that he dominated the director. It's reported that he changed dialog passages extensively. True or not, one must be an ardent Fischer fan to like his portrayal of the famous Swedish doctor. Others will feel that there's too much Fischer and, besides, too much philosophical chatter.

Additionally, it's hard to decide where the direction begins and ends. Originally, Georg Marischka was named the film's director but screen credits list Rudolf Jugert (who took over) as director. This indicates the behind-the-scenes controversy between the directors and Fischer.

The cast includes some star names but few show up to advantage in this. Most of the characters remain sketchy. In addition, "Axel Munthe" is overly long. The number of dull moments is remarkably high for the 144-minute pic. Technical credits are generally adequate.

Les Mysteres De Paris

(The Mysteries of Paris)
(FRENCH—COLOR—DYALISCOPE)

Paris, Oct. 23.

Unidex release of PAC-DAMA production. Stars Jean Marais, Dany Robin, Raymond Pellegrin, Jill Haworth; features Pierre Mondy, Noel Roquevert, Jean Le Poulain. Directed by Andre Hunnebelle. Screenplay, Jean Halain, Pierre Foucault, Diego Fabbri from novel by Eugene Sue; camera (Eastmancolor), Marcel Grignon; editor, Jean Feyte. At Normandie, Paris. Running time, 110 MINS.

Rodolphe	Jean Marais
Irene	Dany Robin
Marie	Jill Haworth
Baron	Raymond Pellegrin
Chourineur	Pierre Mondy
Maitre	Jean Le Poulain
Shoemaker	Noel Roquevert

Remake of a novel that has been done several times already, Eugene Sue's turn-of-the-century melodrama about Paris lowlife and highlife, this looms mainly a local entry on its flashy direction and obvious posturing. Only possiole foreign slotting could be for moppet shows via its moral ending.

A nobleman's carriage runs over a man, and he decides to help the man's pretty orphan daughter as he expires. He dons workers' clothing and goes into the French worker and criminal districts. Here he is struck by the squalor and decides to help these people. Also he is enamored of the girl when he finds her.

Hence, he lives in two worlds but becomes the enemy of an evil leader. Latter wants him out of the way as he won't reveal some building shenanigans. All ends happily. Production values are okay but director Andre Hunnebelle lacks the snap and drive that would make this hoary tale a more winning adventure yarn.

Lagging treatment unfortunately robs this ripe old yarn of the bounce and mock seriousness it needs. Pic has local chances on the widely known book but little for offshore spots. Acting is mechanically proper, with good and bad guys well defined.

El Extra

(The Extra)
(MEXICAN—COLOR)

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

Columbia Pictures release of Posa Films International production. Stars Cantinflas; features Alma Delia Fuentes, Carmen Molina, Guillermina Tellez Giron, Alejandro Ciangherotti, Magda Donato, Leon Barroso, Raul Meraz, Guillermo Rives and "Chabelo." Directed by Miguel M. Delgado. Screenplay by Jaime Salvador; Alfredo Varela Jr. from original story by Jose Maria Fernandez. Varela Jr.; camera, Rosalio Selano; music, Cesar Carrion. At the Roble, Mexico, Olimpia, Polanco and Opera theatres, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

In his latest Mexican film, Cantinflas plays not so much the role of an extra as a sort of jack-of-all-trades and hanger-on at studios who effectively louses up scenes being shot, causing sundry directors to froth at the mouth.

But the comic also has a "heart of gold" and lends money to those short of cash, gives counsel to would-be actors and actresses, and specifically helps one lass achieve stardom after the usual discouragements. Alma Delia Fuentes, as the gal who makes the grade and then spurns her benefactor for the more opportune company of a producer, is comely. Finale has Cantinflas, struggling off the snub, already picking up another starlet of future for fashioning into star material.

It is rather obvious that the comic enjoys himself in this one. While he is not the selfsame decrepit Cantinflas of old, he does come back nearer to the role that made him famous in his native Mexico—the average Juan Doe of the streets who fights against adversity and does all he can to help his fellow man.

Cantinflas has a chance to display his comedy bent in dream sequences where he imagines how the scene should have been shot, instead of way it was actually directed by director. Opportunities range from a French Revolution sequence where a bewigged Cantinflas contributes to the confusion to a funny take off on Camille and also a sequence where he plays an Aztec Indian with special vim and comic flair.

Cantinflas is the center of attention 90% of the screen time in this one, yet he does not pall since the pace and contrasts between bona-fide and comic-angled scenes is well timed. More than ever, Cantinflas in this one is the tramp-like character who talks a lot and says nothing much, a role especially dear to his Mexican fans.

Mario Moreno as Cantinflas playing Cantinflas is in his element. Aside from which the production is luxuriously staged, the Eastmancolor good and sound faultless. Supporting cast serves as foils for the comic's style. There is a laughable scene where the actor billed as "Chabelo," in knickers, as a bully, towers over Cantinflas but is eventually brought down to size by the comic. Comic's "acting lessons" for Miss Fuentes so that she can make the grade are also not without some sly wit.

In toto, this one turns out to be an excellent Cantinflas vehicle which will enrich the comic not only in his traditional markets but possibly via worldwide release as well.

dling of specialized product in the States, some of these films which 20th has been distributing exclusively abroad may find their way to Stateside screens.

(Parenthetically it should be noted that this practice of acquiring foreign product for limited distribution overseas, which has been done on a sort of hit-and-miss basis up to now, is being systematically organized by 20th's global sales chief Seymour Poe. Exec has a huge chart in his office with a country-by-country break down of releases for each month, allowing him to see at a glance where and when local release skeds might be bolstered and supplemented. "No more of this buying films for territories where we're already loaded with product," he says.)

Shelton expects to get into actual distribution sometime after the first of the year, but he declines to talk product until he has a firm sked lined up. Already available to him, of course, are the Brigitte Bardot starrer "La Bride Sur Le Cou" (which is being called "Only for Love" here and over which there was a slight contretemps with U. S. Customs because of a nude scene), as well as the Abel Gance spectacle, "Austerlitz," which will probably go out here as "The Battle" of Austerlitz). Neither of 20th's two forthcoming Titanus pix, "The Condemned of Altona" and "The Leopard," will go out via the subsid, however, being considered "major mass market investments."

Pointing to the phenomenal U.S. success of such imports as "La Dolce Vita," "Never On Sunday," etc., Shelton says that while his company will be looking for big grossers, it will be flexible, seek profit and satisfaction from the specialized product able to bring in rentals of something less than the million dollar range pix which the majors ordinarily cannot afford to handle.

Exec also emphasizes flexibility in the number of releases to be handled, stressing the need for continuity of releases but also noting that pix acquired depends on availability of suitable material. There will be no wholesale acquisition of product just for numbers sake. He thinks that perhaps 12 per year, or one a month, would be a likely sked.

Though the physical setup is still in planning stage, it's expected that Shelton will run company with perhaps two salesmen for the field, with physical handling being done by 20th exchanges, along the lines of the UA-Lopert operation. Shelton would oversee the launching of the pix, initial campaigns, etc., with his assistants helping to make key bookings around the country. The idea will be to offer foreign and other indie producers the personal, tailor-made handling offered by indie distribs, backed up by the facilities only available at a major company.

Shelton most recently has been active via his own Cameo International Films, and has extensive production experience in Europe. He was associated with Paul Graetz in latter's "View From The Bridge" as well as "Devil in The Flesh." He was also a veep of Jean Goldwurm's Times Film.

keeping your children out of the movies, taking their Saturday afternoons away from them."

"What kind of business is this?" Lewis asks, charging "we are depriving children from seeing movies in their formative years and by doing so we get them out of the habit so when they are adults they will stay home and watch television."

Lewis decries the industry getting into such "adults only" fare and feels it is jeopardizing the entire future of the industry by turning away potential audiences. He admits "I have to hire a projectionist for $50 to show 'Babes in Toyland' at home to may kids on Saturday afternoons; I'm certain 'Toyland' at home to my kids to go to a theatre and see a Lesbian concept. What I miss most is seeing 65 kids' bicycles in front of a neighborhood theatre on Saturday afternoons."

Some Questions

Lewis pointed out "product has an obligation and a dedication and responsibility to the people if it is going to pick up the marbles" (money). He asks why Hollywood, "because the overall economic structure is rising, excludes the glamor and everything else that made it in the first place." He says "we're special, we're looked to for showmanship and for answers and also as an entertainment medium that makes product for fun. The film has to show the attitudes of the people who made it. That's merchandising and if it shows the right attitudes, the people will buy it. We don't have to publicize the product itself after it is on the screens, the people will tell the other people about it, but we must tell them it's coming. Don't cheat them. Remember at 60 cents they had 200 boys dancing with Ruby Keeler, now at $2.50 they have one man dancing alone."

Lewis says we must first do it ourselves. "I want to congratulate the others who are making good movies and I want them to congratulate each other when good things are made. Then we'll get people to respect the film business and go to the theatres. Why don't they go now? Because they don't want to see what we ourselves think is junk."

Lewis says the biggest problem in personal merchandising is a big problem in personal living—"people won't use three words—I Like You. And this feeling of love shows in the product they turn out. You have to give to get and what you do is always better if you take the time to give." Lewis charged "there is too much junk on the emulsion and if it's there your heart and your love must be too or it won't win."

No Guts

Entertainer pointed out the "industry today lacks guts." He stated "motion pictures have always been the instigator in styles and fashion and other trends. We came to a setback when we allowed someone else to set trends for us." He exemplified by noting "we let the twist come out and then made movies from it. The Twist should have come from the movies. We created degradation by latching onto a motion picture subject that comes from a degraded form just because it is lucrative. It is degrading to take our talent and apply it to this just because of the greed of some people. To put a dame in a film because of her measurements is not substantial enough to make product—there just mustn't be that kind of greed," he charged.

Lewis also said "when an actor is contracted to make a picture, there should be a renegotiation clause under which he will be contracted after the picture is finished, at the same salary, to go out and sell that picture."

Lewis himself sells constantly. He noted he has "turned down $100,000 to plug an ad for Schenley because I won't do ads that aren't for products children or entire families can't by." On the other hand, performer lends his image free to products of this nature, with only the request for a plug for his current pictures involved. He noted a recent ad for Purilator gave his plug for the picture bigger space than the product got. Latest tiein is with TWA, which will have an office in "Proffessor," in return for ads by the company plugging the film.

Product Scarcity Creates Returns And Couplings

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

Because of the product shortage situation twin billing is creeping in here along with repeats and reissues bookings and there's film circle wonderment as to what the eventual boxoffice consequences will be. Duals usually comprise the lesser new pictures, one which sometimes is coupled with an oldie or repeat or both may be reissues or repeats.

It isn't so long ago that double featuring was virtually absent locally. But currently, for the first time, there are two leading loop firstrun houses, the State and Gopher, twin billing simultaneously. There now are two neighborhood "skin" firstrun "for adults only" theatres doing it regularly.

In the Gopher's case it's the second successive week for the double features. That's something which never happened before at a loop firstrun house here.

This week also finds another important downtown firstrun house, the Century, reverting to a reissue, "Roman Holiday" (Par). This United Paramount house, one of the city's most beautiful theatres and among the few boasting 70m, recently interrupted its first-run policy for five weeks of third or more runs. These subsequent-runs were four pix originally road-shown in Minneapolis and one that hadn't had a 70m showing. All had played the nabe theatres as well as downtown.

Last week the Gopher had two independently distributed reissues, "King Solomon's Mines" and "Naked Spur," for its twin bill. The Berger house currently is double featuring two new MGM pictures, "Damon and Pythias" and "Savage Guns." The 2,200-seat States double features are BV's new "Almost Angels" and reissued "Lady and the Tramp."

FOX-INTERMOUNTAIN INTO ALBUQUERQUE

Albuquerque, Oct. 23.

Fox-Intermountain Theatres of Denver has broken ground for a new $1,000,000 indoor theatre planned in Winrock (Shopping) Center in Albuquerque. New house, skedded to seat 850, is expected to be completed in May.

It'll be first Fox Intermountain theatre in Albuquerque, although the chain does operate three houses in Las Cruces and two more in Las Vegas, both in New Mexico.

Fox is building the theatre on a 2½ acre tract at the shopping centre, owned in part by Winthrop Rockefeller. Chain has a 46-year lease on the land. It'll be a 15,000 square foot building and will include a nursery.

Projection equipment is planned to accommodate wide screen and Cinerama productions, even though firm hasn't got green light on the latter. Screen will be 64 feet wide and curved.

Ray W. Davis, Fox area supervisor, and city officials participated in groundbreaking.

Liens and Modernization Needs Chill Bids for Roach Studios Via Court

By SID BENJAMIN

Scranton, Oct. 23.

Upwards of $3,000,000 would be required to utilize Hal Roach Studios for modern film production, in the opinion of a Hollywood executive. This appraisal came from George Elber, executive vice-president of Four Star Television Productions, in advance of a public auction in this city Nov. 2 of the historic Roach property.

Elbert was on hand "only as an observer" when the scheduled auction flopped for lack of bidders last Friday. But he told Federal Judge Michael H. Sheridan his firm previously had been a prospective purchaser.

Judge Sheridan, who had set $1,500,000 as the upset minimum price for the Culver City, Cal., lot, continued the auction until the November date. The action was on motion of Attorney Norman Harris, of counsel for the trustees, who expressed the belief the missing bidders would then show up.

But Elber said Four Star won't be around. "When we took a look at the place, we lost interest," said he. "The amount of money required to fix it up for our purposes would be tremendous."

Asked if the renovation cost would exceed the upset minimum, Elber replied, "Yes, very much so."

The Four Star executive confirmed reports possible merged use of the 14-acre studio property between his firm and Danny Thomas had reached the discussion stage. "We spent a lot of time considering the possibilities," he said.

Thomas Also Cold

Thomas, who was in this area for benefit performances last month, then told a VARIETY reporter he was seriously interested in the Roach property. But, after conferring with the trustees, Attorney J. Julius Levy and John F. Murphy, he tempered his enthusiasm with qualification "if it doesn't cost too much to fix it up."

This coal-mining city came into its rare tieup with the production end of show business when Scranton Corp. acquired the Roach Studios as a wholly-owned subsidiary.

But the financial manipulations of the later-imprisoned Alexander Guterma swept both Scranton and its satellite into reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act in 1959. Since that time, the trustees decided show business is too risky and have been trying to unload the studio property.

These efforts appeared successful earlier this year, when a tentative sale was made to Wanrob Inc. of Santa Monica, Cal., for $2,100,000. But the sale was nullified when State of California took an appeal, later dropped. A condition of the agreement was that such an appeal would knock out the transaction

Tax Claims

California was a minor tax creditor compared to the U. S. government, which has tax claims of about $1,500,000, in addition to a claim for a loan from the Office of Defense Lending for $500,000.

Asked if the government would consider taking over the property (used for production of Army training films during World War 2) U. S. Attorney Bernard J. Brown replied in the negative.

A similar lack of enthusiasm has been displayed by other major creditors—Hal Roach Sr., with claims of around $2,000,000; William Morris Agency, which seeks about $1,600,000; and Heldan Trading Corp., New York, $1,000,000.

The "Who wants it" attitude is a sad one for the studio which has been a landmark of comedy for more than 40 years, showcasing the talens of a parade of toppers from Harold Lloyd to Cary Grant.

Riverdale's New House

The first new film theatre to be built in the Bronx in over 20 years has been revealed by New York exhib-distrib, Meyer Ackerman.

The 600-seat house, to be built in a shopping centre now under construction in Riverdale, will be called the Riverdale. Opening is tentatively planned for April or May of next year.

MCA: Clear Track

Grand jury probe was directed solely at MCA—"anything else was purely incidental," remarked Posner, adding "we had an extremely difficult task getting evidence." Over 150 witnesses, some of them the most important figures in tv, paraded before the jury during its 11-month session, he said. At least 20,000 documents were compiled during the lengthy hearings. Posner said the jury was originally impaneled to consider criminal proceedings, but after the months of evidence and testimony, was "satisfied" with the outcome of the case—the consent decree.

Posner disclosed, too, that actually MCA investigations by the Government have been going on in an off-and-on fashion for 20 years. It was two decades ago that the first one began. "There were about eight prior investigations of MCA (before the one just concluded). There was absolutely no politics involved in the termination of these. One was terminated because World War II was on, and the Government felt there were more important matters to consider. Another was terminated because the Government felt it didn't have theory to go on at that time, when MCA was principally in the band business. For one reason or another, none political, the investigations were terminated," Posner said.

He stated the investigation just ended began in October, 1960. Briefly reviewing the sequence of events, he recalled the U.S. filed its divestiture action against MCA and Decca Records for their merger, last July 13; July 16, MCA sought to have removed a temporary restraining injunction obtained by the U.S.; July 17, the court denied the MCA motion; July 23, the U.S. and MCA entered into a stipulation agreement providing for dissolution of MCA Artists Ltd., the MCA talent agency; Sept. 18, the U.S. and MCA filed notice on agreement of the consent decree; Oct. 18, the decree was finalized.

FBI agents interviewed hundreds throughout the industry during the course of the Government investigation, and Posner even compiled a booklet familiarizing the FBI agents with show biz terms and background so as to make their work easier. In addition, the FBI was provided with brief bios of those involved.

Posner ended his 12-year tenure with the Government on Friday, resigning to join the BevHills law firm of Zagon, Aaron & Schiff. He will now study California law, so as to qualify for practice in this state, and will take the state bar exams in February.

MCA prexy Lew Wasserman on Friday had only a "no comment" regarding dismissal of the special grand jury.

that grace refused—unheeded over and over—may not be offered again and that man . . . may find himself plunging down the well-greased chute to hell."

There is, here again, the characteristic genuflection of a Catholic reviewer to the best of his own kind. Walter Kerr of the N.Y. Herald-Tribune. It would hardly be precise to state that Duprey is out to sell critical "sophistication" to the Catholic press, but on the other hand, that's not too far off the truth in terms of net. Call it the latest in a series of books by Catholic critics going that way.

Leon Duquette Guilty; Majors Awarded 23½G For 16M Print Piracies

Boston, Oct. 23.

Seven majors won $32,500 in damages in a copywright infringement suit for unauthorized sales of 16m prints in a judgment handed down by U.S. District Judge Andrew A. Caffrey in district court. Suit against Leon Duquette of Fitchburg, Mass. charged sales of 16m prints of 138 features released by the majors. Companies were each awarded $250 statutory damages for each of 130 of the copywrighted films sold by Duquette.

Majors were also jointly awarded $3,000 for counsel fees and costs. A permanent injunction restrains Duquette from having anything to do with any of the 138 films. Eight films of the 138 had been seized by court order and were ordered destroyed.

Amounts awarded and companies are: $10,750, 20th Century; $6,000, Universal; $4,500, Warner Bros.; $3,750, UA; $3,500; AA; $3,250, Columbia; $750, MGM. The Hub law firm of Nutter, McClennen & Fish represented the majors with the New York firm of Sargoy & Stein appearing as counsel.

Economic Community

the industry—climbing domestic theatre income, bullish production planning variously, etc.

Of the vexing problem of talent grooming, so long in forced neglect by Hollywood out of the need for attunement to marquee insurance, Rackmil acknowledged the now-present opportunity to upbuild players via first exposure in Revue

Realestate

Not least impressive in the new MCA scheme of things is the company's niche in realestate development, whereby its 408-acre Universal City (and Revue let) on the Coast is in the throes of extensive facelifting. Of that territory, 200 acres are intended for commercial-residential usage—some tenancy, in fact, has already been signed, others are lining up. So far, since '58, some $10,000,000 has gone into the project, and a duplicate sum is said to be assigned for completion.

All MCA activity will consolidate under one roof at Universal City. But unremarked by Rackmil are future housing plans in New York. The MCA building in Manhattan is owned personally by chairman Jules Stein. The reasonable assumption is that U-Decca operations, now on Park Ave., could transfer, now that several floors at MCA have vacated with dissolution of the talent agency. But so far, contrarily, landlord Stein has been booking outside tenants.

Of more pressing conjecture is the fate of U's post-48 catalog, 215 features of which must go to television by next June under the consent decree, but circumventing the MCA distribution apparatus. As of last week, according to Rackmil, no action had been taken, pending the decree's effectuation. "No action," of course, does not mean the negotiation machinery has been idle. Informally active, at least, is a more plausible surmise.

As ever, Rackmil was avid to emphasize, too, that Universal is most deliberate in its marketing approach. As of now, this is vouched by 16 pictures completed or in production, including "If a Man Answers" for general release next month.

Arthur Freed assigned Julius Epstein scripting chores on his Metro picturization of "Carnival."

Profit Picture, Per Rackmil

Milton Rackmil, as MCA's voice last week, was chipper on all fiscal counts.

Universal, he said, could hit an alltime earnings peak this year. Decca diskery, which he said ranked third in profit for U. S. labels, also shapes rosy. And parent MCA can sight "well over" an $8,000,000 profit, exclusive of capital gains and the U-Decca contributions to the consolidated total. That of course means the Revue teleshows are fancy moneymakers.

Sammy Davis' Film Acting Chores

He's Own Producer In 'The Hill' With All-Negro Cast For Continental

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Sammy Davis Jr., will enter indie production through his Will Mastin Trio Inc. "The Hill" will be produced and directed by Victor Stoloff starting in N.Y. Dec. 10 for Continental release. With Davis starring, all-Negro cast includes Frederick O'Neal, Ruby Dee, Ossie Davis, Frank Silvers and Ivan Dixon.

Davis reported company plans using a number of new, young people in an effort to aid development of Negro actors.

Entertainer also revealed he is set to play character comparable to Robin Hood's "Will Scarlet" in upcoming Dean Martin-Frank Sinatra coproduction of "Robert Hood," to be done in Chicago.

Davis has deal to do one picture every 14 months for Sinatra. Additionally, three (Martin, Sinatra, Davis) are doing new Reprise album this week together, with special material written by Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen. Pair will also join him late this year in a week of his three-week engagement at Villa Venice in Chicago.

For television, Davis just ended starring in a "Rifleman" segment at Four Star, has an "Andy Williams Show" on Oct. 25 and is talking summer replacement deal with Williams. Latter he wants "because it looks like the only way I can get my own show on television." He noted there are now segments of "Ben Casey" and "The Defenders" being prepped for him.

Entertainer, now in a three-week engagement at Cocoanut Grove here, has solid nitery bookings through next Fall, including April date at Palladium in London. He is skedded to star in musical version of "Golden Boy" end of next year. Clifford Odets is doing book, Straus and Adams words and music. Hilliard Elkins produces.

Davis says he wants to be straight actor, but can't get roles without going to producers with his own ideas. He says, "I want people to stop thinking Negro actor and just think actor. Wouldn't it be nice if they brought you something instead of having to go to them?" he asks. "In Europe I've been offered 10 pictures, but doing one there will have no impact because it's not in my own country."

Pilpel in Albany

minds attempting to identify obscenity by determining where the not terribly bad ends and where the very bad begins."

"Experience has already proved that whatever the legal norms be for obscenity, they are strenuously objected to."

The Evangelist believed that "To quibble over a definition of obscenity is no less absurd than trying to draw a clear line of demarcation between patriotism and betrayal . . ."

Mrs. Pilpel and Dean Hayes agreed on three points: they were "against sin," favored the NODL's exercise of its civil liberties, and opposed "obscenity."

Dean Hayes said: "We think it is possible to define, to identify obscenity. Obscenity has been defined appropriately for governmental control." Dean Hayes thought the phrases Mrs. Pilpel had viewed as ambiguous were effective guiding lines to determining what is obscene. He thought that if the material is aimed at or is readily available to any special age group," the test of obscenity should be the standards of the average members of the target audience." Hayes added that such a standard "has been adapted to persons under 17" in a Chicago municipal law enacted two years ago. He observed this law has not yet been litigated; perhaps the Civil Liberties Union will set up a test case.

Mrs. Pilpel derided the "assumption of punishing a person if something he does is likely to produce bad sexual thoughts." She emphasized that "No other law is based on such a hypothesis—that someone might induce impure mental reactions in another person." She called this "a kind of thought control."

The Office for Decent Literature has a right to its opinion, Mrs. Pilpel continued, but ACLU opposes it when the organization goes beyond "advice" and obtains "semi-governmental action." Private telephone calls to bookstores, drugstores and other outlets urging the latter to cease selling certain books are integrated with other NODL actions more formidable than official censorship."

The ACLU contends that urging people to withhold patronage from stores which will not "go along with the list" is "damaging to a free society." Mrs. Pilpel underlined that "Police and prosecutors, even military commanders at our bases, have given order no books on the NODL list should be sold." This she described as "Putting state power to private use."

and thus far only $25,000 has been repaid.

Besides Broidy, the other officers are exec v.p. George Burrows, and company secretary Sam Wolf. All three made loans in two installments apiece, totaling $50,000 for each. To date, Burrows has been repaid $15,000, and Wolf $10,000.

Giroux's Shares

Statement also confirms that AA's largest single stockholder is New York drug magnate Claude A. Giroux, remembered as the figure avid to take over the distrib when he first came into the picture some months back. Giroux' holdings total 88,500 shares, or about 13,500 more than prez Broidy's second-fattest portfolio.

Giroux is now on the board, having replaced Norton V. Ritchey, veepee of the foreign arm. Other eight of the directorate, likewise urged by management for repeat terms, are chairman W. Ray Johnston, Broidy, Burrows, Roger Hurlock, Sherrill Corwin, Edward Morey, Paul Porzelt and Herman Rifkin.

Corwin and Rifkin provide exhib representation, and Porzelt is the Wall St. member from Emanuel, Deetjen & Co.

relations. Membership is limited to professionals, who must be members of one of the theatrical unions. Group now has 29 members, charges $30 a month as membership fee, and has limited itself to top of 35 members. They work with model of a Mitchell camera, made by Miller and Paul Casey, and rent an actual view finder as means to show members their actual work on camera. Future plans are for use of actual film to further develop technique.

Casting director Ruth Burch has shown her support of the Lab by using two members, Ron Stokes and Vic Werber, on film jobs. Werber was also cast by John Florea when latter was a guest director. Other guest directors in past have been Ralph Nelson, Gene Nelson and Mack Bing.

Guest directors and other industry execs, according to Patricia George, have also sent letters supporting application of Film Actors Lab for a Ford Foundation Grant under which they would be allowed to make experimental films, for workshop but not release.

21 'Arty' Situations in Manhattan; Whence the (1) Product, (2) Patrons

By MIKE WEAR

Two extremely tough problems loom for the N.Y. arty theatre operators within the next two or three months. One is the very apparent overseating situation, already causing much head-shaking among these exhibitors. The other is the difficulty of getting enough strong product to fill the needs of some 21 arty theatres expected to be operating by the end of 1962.

With the launching of Cinema One and Cinema Two several months ago, the recent preem of Loew's Tower East and that of Kips Bay, a Baker house, only last week, plus the impending preem of the Coronet, new house atop the facelifted Baronet, and the launching of the Trans-Lux East expected by the end of 1962, some 3,400 seats have been added to the New York City arty theatre seating capacity. This does not take into consideration the tiny D. W. Griffith on 45th Street near Broadway nor the Carnegie Hall Cinema, opened late in 1961.

Although the number of arty houses in the U.S. has increased from 50 or 60 of some 12 years ago to 350 to 400 cinemas, which today regularly play on an arty pix policy, is not considered out of line, the rapid expansion in New York City in the same period admittedly has arty theatre operators worried. Where 12 to 14 houses regularly played an arty policy at the close of 1960, by the end of the current year there will be 21 spots following this policy. This more than doubling the number of theatres in such a short space of time presents a real dilemma.

The primary problem will be to get enough regular patrons to fill the new houses. The second is the task of obtaining a steady flow of suitable product. The product situation even now shapes as a real stumbling block. A highly successful arty theatre operation requires a minimum of six pictures annually. However, the average likely will run higher for after all few arty theatres can book pix that will run two months on an average for a full year.

Hence, most operators figure eight to 10 films will be needed every year. If they can get by with only eight productions, this would mean the 21 arty houses would require 168 pictures annually.

And, as one exhib said; "Where are they going to get the 168 worthwhile pix. Somebody is going to suffer."

Of course, there are films like "Never On Sunday," which ran 60 weeks at one N.Y. arty firstrun. And there is the case of "Room at the Top," which had an engagement of 39 weeks. Also in the long-run category there is "Saturday Night, Sunday Morning," which lasted for 22 weeks.

There is the current longrunner, "Boccaccio '70," which looks to go 18 stanzas. "Taste of Honey" lasted for 14 weeks as did "Purple Noon." "Gigi" also came in with a record longrun. There are other examples but these are outstanding. And along with these longrunners, the arties encounter pix that last only three or four weeks.

Arty houses in N.Y. in the past year also played "Summer and Smoke," "Splendor in Grass" and "Loss of Innocence" although exhibs mainly do not regard them as strictly arty house vehicles.

The arty theatre operators do not expect much help from Hollywood for some time although some of them are hopeful that several new indie producers soon will be coming up with screen fare to fill the void.

But in the meantime, the scramble for product is expected to reach amazing proportions. Bulk of their fare will have to come from England, France and Italy, and even some from Germany. And then there is the matter of overseating which is not likely to be helped much if economic conditions do not improve.

Flinn Heads for Texas

Dallas, Oct. 23.

Film stars Charlton Heston.

ALBERTINI EXITS WOLFBERG

Neal Ross Succeeds Co-Founder of Chain as District Mgr.

Denver, Oct. 23.

Leonard J. Albertini, cofounder of the Wolfberg chain of Compass Drive-in theatres circling Denver, exits effective Oct. 20.

Neal Ross, former newspaperman and currently manager of the Wolfberg Crest Theatre, will succeed Albertini as district manager of the Wolfberg chain except for the firstrun Paramount.

Albertini will retain his financial interest in the company, but says his future personal working plans are not set.

Right-to-Switch Divides Universal & Writers Guild

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Echoes of the 1960 Writers Guild of America's strike were heard here. Universal and the Guild are tangling over interpretation of the "favored nations clause," part of the original settlement reached between them in February of that year.

Guild told its members a hearing will be held on the dispute late this month on the motion of a new trial, initiated by U. The company refuses to arbitrate a dispute about the controversial clause, said the guild.

Guild had agreed to give U the favored nations clause as part of its theatrical basic agreement with the company. Thus, Universal was given the right to take the guild's subsequent contract with the major studios if it so desired at the final settlement of the strike.

According to the writers, a month after the strike was settled, in July, 1960, Rackmilites advised WGAW it would not take the majors' contract but would continue with its settlement of the preceding February.

Guild contends, however, that in 1961 U completely reversed itself, and asseted it still had the right to exercise its favored nations clause, so notified WGAW it would accept and operate under the general studio pact instead of the original terms.

WGAW countered that U had made its choice of terms in July, 1960, that as a result it had no right to reverse itself, and asked for arbitration of the dispute. Company refused to arbitrate, so the guild filed suit to compel arbitration. After months of court hearings and a trial, the Federal District Court issued an order compelling Rackmilites to arbitrate.

WGAW had begun prepping for the arbitration, when Universal filed its motion for the new trial, so end of the prolonged litigation is not yet in sight.

JEWELER-TURNED-CRITIC

Edgar S. Van Olinda, critic columnist for Albany Times-Union, was editorially saluted by the paper last week on his 78th birthday. The sheet said it would be "a gay and vigorous" natal day for "our most venerated contributor, Edgar Sim Van Olinda," whose "Around the Town" column that morning "is estimated to be something like his seven thousandth." Its fans "are legion."

The editorial pointed out that "Van" had been with the T-U for "about three decades," and as a full-time staffer, for 24 years. Van Olinda had "long been a jeweler before he found his real home at a typewriter."

Even "more remarkable," the paper declared, was his career as a singer: for more than a half-century as a choir member and soloist at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, and in the earlier 1900's, as second tenor with the Albani Quartet (heard in Albany theatres, among other places).

derstood, will be approximately $20,000,000. The hotel profit for last year was approximately $1,000,000, a dip of about 8% over the year previous. The Savoy, which says it is not on the market, dipped about the same amount, blaming this on a drop in U.S. tourist trade. Local trend-in-the-wind watchers point out that it is interesting that Savoy had to bother to make the denial.

A new American hotel (the Hilton, 510 rooms) is due to open next February and the HCA's 330-room Carlton Towers opened recently.

"It's not running hotels any more," said a veteran London hotelman. "This has become a real-estate business. Look what is happening in America. All the big hotels keep changing hands daily; it's hop-scotch hankypanky. And that's what London may expect, too."

The French Idea

Paris, Oct. 23.

In spite of the big dip in American tourism the past couple of years, and particularly in 1962—brought on by the nervous Wall Street situation—de luxe Paris hostelries are still oversold at peak seasons.

Which is why Hilton and other Yank chains would like a toehold in the rich Parisian market. This has come up before, and there also have been bids from Restaurant Associates (the New York operators of the push Forum, the Four Seasons and kindred class eateries) and other chains. Claude C. Philippe, exec veepee of the New York Americana, periodically has put in bids for the Hotel George V, and also has plans to build a large hotel complex above the railway station, the Gared'Ouest.

The French Government Tourist Bureau would like some new class hostelries to invade the scene but also appreciates the French idea of keeping the foreigners out.

Paradoxically the last new Parisian hotels, built in the 1920s, were financed by the late Atlantic City hotelier Joel Hillman—the George V and the Prince de Galles (Prince of Wales), originally "twin hotels" but since operated independently.

Another paradox is that, despite the current "Yankee, stay home!", feeling many of the grand hotels throughout Europe, both in the capitals and at the spas, have large foreign capital, much of it British, and a good deal of it from the Scandinavian and Lowlands financiers.

Bruce Young New Prez Of Ark.-Tenn.-Miss. MPTOA

Memphis, Oct. 23.

Bruce Young, repping the Commonwealth Theatres in Pine Bluff, Ark., was elected prexy of the 53d annual Arkansas-Tennessee-Mississippi Motion Picture Owners Assn. in a two-day powwow held at the Chisca Hotel. Other officers elected for the coming year were: J. M. (Monk) Mounger, chairman of the board, Calhoun City, Miss.; Nona White, Riley-United Theatres, Little Rock and Hayes Redmon of Millington, Tenn., veepees. R. B. Cox, Batesville, Miss., K. K. King, Searcy, Ark. and Redmon named national TOA reps.

Jim Alexander, state campaign manager for Gov.-elect Frank Clement of Tennessee, addressed some 250 delegates at the opening session. Other speakers were Jerry Berger of 20th Century-Fox and James V. Blevins of Nashville. Dave and Abner Lebovitz, brother duo who own-operate the Sunset and Sky-Vue ozoners, were named to the arrangements committee for the 1963 session which also will be held here at the Chisca Hotel.

M.D. Raps 'Fool' Stress

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

Morning Tribune published a letter from Dr. David J. Vail, state medical director, protesting against an advertisement which it carried for "I Thank a Fool" (MGM). Vail accused the picture itself, and the ad, of depicting mental illness in an unjustifiably bad light.

He called the ad "tasteless and offensive and not in the interest of public education toward the mentally ill." It was an ad generally used everywhere in selling the picture.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Bild-Zeitung, W-Germany's largest mass daily, recently stirred some anti-Marlene Dietrich feeling when it reported that the German-born American songstress had "suddenly asked" for an additional payment of 23,000 D-Marks ($5,750) shortly before the UNICEF benefit concert of Oct. 6 in Duesseldorf. Miss Dietrich didn't ask for any salary in connection with the UNICEF concert itself, but since the German Television had purchased the rights of the concert (to be telecast next year) and demanded her not to sing the song, "Tell Me Where the Flowers Are," on any German tv show within period of one year, she had asked for compensation (the above amount). When German TV rejected the demand, she had the choice of either letting down UNICEF or yielding. She decided to sing for the sake of UNICEF. Bild-Zeitung had to apologize to her via a front page article headlined "Pardon, Marlene" after Miss Dietrich's lawyer insisted.

Though he produced the first film ever shot in CinemaScope, 20th-Fox's blockbusting "Robe," producer Frank Ross reported in New York last week that he will shoot his upcoming African adventure, "Mister Moses," in Panavision.

The producer recalled that producing the first C'Scoper had been a somewhat dubious honor-financially. He found that 20th was charging off a good deal of the costs of promoting the CinemaScope process against "The Robe," a joint venture of his indie company and 20th.

One day he learned that he was helping foot a bill of something like $120,000 for C'Scope equipment in Australia, which he naturally thought to be going "too far." Even though he was still working on the 20th lot, he instituted suit against the company for $600,000 in moneys he figured he was losing as a result of management's magnanimous share-the-cost policy. He settled out-of-court for half.

"I'm not a big movie star in North America because I've never had a teenage following, but I do very well with people over 22 and in Europe," Toronto Star's Ralph Thomas quotes Rod Steiger, there rehearsing as Capt. Ahab in the Orson Welles dramatization of "Moby Dick," opening tryout at Royal Alexandra Theatre Nov. 1.

Steiger, who originated Paddy Chayevsky's Marty on tv, says he turned down the film lead (then played by Ernest Borgnine) because he'd have had to sign a seven-year contract—"I would have sacrificed whatever independence I had if I'd signed."

Considering the big bundle of cash which Joe Levine is paying for that elaborate billboard advertising "Madame" on the east side of Broadway, between 42d and 43d Sts., it's probably a good thing he wasn't on hand Friday (19) night when the moving electric sign beneath the billboard went completely awry. After announcing Levine's "Long Day's Journey Into Night," it went on to quote the critics in the following fashion: "'Stunning' — Bosley Czother, N. Y. Times; $51MDO 33GR 5HGNOZ'—Paul V. Beckley, Herald Tribune." That Beckley's sometimes an inscrutable critic to be sure.

GRANTS MISTRIAL

Drive-In Op Ill-State Fears Jury Sympathy

Des Moines, Oct. 23.

District Judge Randall has ruled a mistrial in the $345,000 lawsuit brought by Capitol Drive-In Theatre Inc. against the Iowa State Highway Commission in a land condemnation case.

Lloyd Hirstine, principal stockholder and manager of the Capitol Drive-In, became ill after testifying last week and the acting attorney for the commission asked for a mistrial on grounds there was a possibility of unmerited sympathy for the drive-in theater and that a fair and impartial verdict could not be returned and an expert witness for the commission was not available because of postponement of the trial during Hirstine's illness.

The theater company asked $300,000 in lieu of a lesser amount awarded by a sheriff's condemnation jury in the commission's taking of four-tenths of an acre of land and access in connection with the widening of U.S. 69 north of Des Moines. The firm also asked $45,000 for loss of direct access to its property for about 16 months.

casion as the attorney-author stressed the gap between the sciences and the humanities—Russia, for all its scientific progress ("after all," he observed, "they were the first with the sputniks"), is still lacking in the humanities.

Harry Hershfield, the CS&S president, accented that his longtime friendship with Nizer made this a special occasion. O'Rourke in between his "scandalous tintype" of the g. of h., observed that JFK did have three choices with the Cuban problem—"he couldn't make up his mind whether to send down his old man to buy it, Billie Sol Estes to steal it, or consult Harry S. Truman who would have told them what to do with it."

Nizer's show biz legal background was fore and aft—his clients aft, and many from show biz out front. Darryl F. Zanuck was the among the missing—his plane wasn't due to get in until last night (Tues.) from Paris.

The Circus Saints & Sinners' next shindig shifts to the Americana Hotel with Eddie Fisher as "fall guy," and because of the larger capacity because it will be "ladies' day," i.e. femmes permitted.

35 OPENINGS IN 1962 FOR 'LONGEST DAY'

Twentieth-Fox's "The Longest Day," currently playing its first eight domestic hardticket dates, is expected to have opened in approximately 35 U.S. situations before the year-end. Company confidently expects all these dates to be still running by Oscar time in the early spring, when it hopes to pick up at least several major awards. By that time, also, the 35 dates will have been supplemented by a number of others.

The eight current dates are all reported to be running at or near capacity. At the Warner in New York, there have only been two performances which dipped slightly below capacity—and those were the Wednesday matinees of the second and third weeks. According to one exec, even with a hit hardticket film, the midweek matinees seldom go absolutely "clean." The Warner also reports that its advance is not only holding steadily, but growing weekly, despite the fact that a sizeable portion of the advance is used up each week.

Youngstein Chairs Feed Honoring S.P. Skouras

Max E. Youngstein, recently with Cinerama, now in a new show business enterprise in association with Jerry Pickman, Charles Simonelli and others, has been named luncheon chairman for the Joint Defense Appeal tribute to 20th-Fox board chairman Spyros P. Skouras tomorrow (Thurs.) at New York's Americana Hotel.

This climaxes the film industry's campaign in behalf of the American Jewish Committee and the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Skouras is being cited for his "leadership on behalf of human rights."

Hollywood Unionists See 'Red' In All-Out Rage Over Runaway Subsidy

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Charges of Communist infiltration into Hollywood films as a cause for runaway production in Europe were flung hotly at a recent Hollywood meeting of the newly-formed newspaper, the Los Angeles County Labor Leader, edited by Leo Green. Meeting, held at the Roosevelt Hotel, keynoted a strong attack on Hollywood by Clayton Thomason, business rep. of the Scenic Artists, Local 816, who was joined on the dais by Herbert Aller, Cinematographers' local 659, and A. T. Denison, Lamp Operators, local 728. Three unions are those which earlier had left the Hollywood Film Council and published the pamphlet "Awake America," distributed in Washington.

Thomason, in a lengthy speech which mentioned many things but not "featherbedding," charged Hollywood with running away chiefly for "subsidies." He asked why Samuel Bronston's "John Paul Jones" should be made in a studio in Spain, "Road to Hong Kong" in London, "America America" in Greece, noting "these can't be for authentic locals." He pointed out the Eady Plan in England was used on "Bridge Over the River Kwai" and said "they got $1,000,000 on the Eady plan for this picture and are getting more than that on "Guns of Navarone."

Thomason charged filmakers can get "90% of their negative cost in Yugoslavia, but that country just got $90,000,000 in foreign aid from us. Two out of three pictures on the screens are made under these conditions," he asserted.

Thomason charged studios with doing business with Communists, particularly discussing the "unfriendly 10" whom, he said, have gone to Europe. He named "Exodus" in this regard and stated "we have knowledge that Twentieth Century-Fox did business with the Communist unions in Italy." Union leader also charged "Fox sold its studio for $42,000,000 to make two runaway productions where they employed Communist people." These he named as "The Longest Day" and "Cleopatra."

Eric Johnston and the MPPA were accused of lobbying tactics, with Thomason asking for investigations by Congress. He, additionally, asks for "legislation to wipe out financial gain by going abroad and for the U.S. to refuse to allow advertising of product unless it be clearly stated as foreign." Speaker charged "fraud and deceit against the American public who are denied the right to see an American made film." He charged, "Who is to present the face of America to the world—America or Yugoslavia, also saying "Khrushchev can take over this greatest informational product if we are not careful."

Thomason used quotations from Sen. Thomas Kuchle and Congressman Thomas Hutton, latter from the Congressional Record, to illustrate his points. Hutton, he quoted, as saying the "Hollywood 10 has caused the American public to boycott Hollywood boxoffice."

Thomason was joined on the rostrum by Roy Brewer, former business rep. of the IATSE and now with Allied Artists in New York, who charged "the shortsightedness of our industry in building up little Hollywood in other areas in the world." He said "there is an atmosphere against people fighting for this," calling "politics the real problem today facing Hollywood production."

Other speakers included attorney Robert Gaston who revealed a non-profit organization called SAM (Save American Movies) is being formed by the Labor Leader, with incorporation signatures to include the names of James Morgan, associate editor of the paper, Thomason and Ralph Clare, latter of Teamsters Union. (It has not yet filed in Sacramento).

Other speakers included Gordon McDonnaugh, Congressman from 30th District, who said "American producers who use foreign talent and exploit it in American theatres are doing a disservice to their country. Rep. Edgar Hiestand (R.-Cal.) called for a tariff on importing of films.

OCTANE TRUCK BLOWS UP

Destruction Includes Film House In Alberta Burg

Peace River, Alta., Oct. 23.

Some 12 business establishments, including the Uptown theatre, were destroyed by fire which swept this town's main street after a semi-trailer truck loaded with high octane aviation fuel crashed and exploded.

Loss was estimated at $1,000,000, with the theatre loss at $50,000 to $75,000.

BRACKETT IN $105,825 SALARY SUIT VS. 20TH

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Producer Charles Brackett on Monday (22) filed a Superior Court suit against 20th-Fox for asserted breach of contract, asking $105,825 as salary to date of July 3, 1963, when his pact was due to expire.

Brackett pact had been terminated by the studio on Oct. 15. Figure asked is based on $2,350 per week salary plus expenses.

John Considine makes first film appearance since his juve roles as one of 12 apostles in George Stevens' "Greatest Story Ever Told."

Engineering a 'Tax Spread'

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

In your item captioned "Deferred Income for Floyd Patterson" (VARIETY, Oct. 3) you say that other "high bracket people" would like "to spread their income for tax purposes too"—mentioning the question as being "of interest to authors and others." Well, "authors and others" can spread their earnings if they so choose and embody their understanding to this effect in a proper contract in accord with Internal Revenue strictures. For the Treasury Department some years back put its blessing on deferred earnings arrangements under specified but not onerous conditions and the creative folk of this country are at least that much ahead tax-wise. Good news when it happened and still good news for all "authors and others" who can and do take advantage of the so-called deferred compensation ruling.

Boston-based Redstone Theatres, until now a drive-in circuit, has acquired its first hardtop, the Park, in Worcester, Mass. Chain is spending $250,000 to refurbish the house, with relighting as Cinema I slated for Xmas.

House will seat 670 and operate as a firstrun. John P. Lowe will manage.

LABOR UNION CLASS AT ROOSEVELT U; CHI

Chicago, Oct. 23.

A class for labor union officers at Roosevelt Univ. is using a Loop motion picture theatre as a Little Red (old some) School House and regular feature films for textbooks. The pictures shown will be part of the Clark Theatre's series of revivals, and the unionists will attend at the same time as regular patrons.

Pictures scheduled include "I'm All Right, Jack" and "The Angry Silence," both of which deal with union morality, "Twelve Angry Men" (how to persuade uncommitted men), "Compulsion" (the social scene in Chi in the 20's), and "On The Waterfront" and "Edge of the City," which are concerned with labor racketeering. The class will view the French "The Red and the Black," the British "Room At The Top" and the American "Point of No Return" to illustrate social class systems, and will see "The Kitchen" and Jaques Tati's "My Uncle" to demonstrate attitudes toward industry. General political morality will be exampled with "No Love For Johnny," "All The King's Men" and "Advise and Consent."

More than 50 union officers have signed up for the course, including representatives from the Railroad Brotherhood, Grain Millers Federation, an dthe Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union. Among the individuals who have signed up for the class are air line stewards and stewardesses, broadcasting employees, retail clerks, brewery workers, cap makers and longshoremen.

Don't Scorn Distribs

Buffalo.

Editor VARIETY:

In regard to Otto Preminger's most recent and previous statements to VARIETY ragarding the high cost of distribution, please be advised that the reason for this doesn't lay with distribution, if there is any blame to be placed anywhere, it is the fault of the producer.

You will find that in every case where a boxoffice picture was produced and distributed, the profits were enormous, and a lot of pictures that aren't exactly top quality pictures are placed in theatres, only due to the distributor's efforts.

If Preminger has in mind the cost of his recent picture like, "Advise And Consent," there soon will be no need for producers or distributors.

All the distributor can do is place the picture that the producer makes and if the picture dies at the box office, that picture turns out to be costly to production, and if the distributor wasn't there to place the picture, it would even turn out to be more costly.

20th Releases Until June; 'Gigot' as December Item; MM Documentary in Jan.

After scheduling a January release for its feature length documetary, "The World of Marilyn Monroe," 20th-Fox has realigned its entire release schedule through next June.

"Gigot," now playing its world premiere engagement at the Radio City Music Hall in New York, will get several more prerelease engagements in November and then go into general release in December. Scheduled for pre-release showings at the year end is "The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah," with general release in January.

Also set for general release in January are "The Young Guns of Texas" and "The Day Mars Invaded Earth."

Set for February release are "The Robe," with a new ad campaign backing up the first pic to be made in CinemaScope. In March 20th will release Mark Robson's "Nine Hours to Rama," starring Horst Buchholz and Jose Ferrer, as well as Robert Youngson's new comedy omnibus feature, "Thirty Years of Fun."

The April release will be Jerry Wald's "A Woman in July," starring Joanne Woodward and Richard Beymer. Titanus "The Leopard," starring Burt Lancaster, will be pre-released in May, followed by general release in June. Also set for June is "The Condemned of Altona," starring Sophia Loren, Max Schell and Fredric March.

TO CHALLENGE KANSAS BAR OF 'BOCCACCIO'

The Kansas State Censor Board has refused a license to Joe E. Levine's Italo import "Boccaccio 70" unless several deletions are made. Levine's attorney, Ephraim London, says, however, no deletions will be made and that the distrib will take the case to court.

Censor objected to several lines of dialog, a couple of semi-nude shots of Romy Schneider, as well as specifically asking for the elimination "of the bobbling of nearly bare breasts of the billboard girl as she runs." That's a reference to Anita Ekberg in the Fellini sequence of the tripartite pic.

Little Messages to Film Producers

AS TO THE ALWAYS-FASCINATING DISCUSSION OF PUBLISHED CRITICISM . . .

Jesse Zunser of Cue Magazine and Hollis Alpert of Saturday Review defended the press on a recent panel discussion concerning moving pictures, their friends, enemies, motives, talents and runaway trends. The occasion was provided by Barry Gray on Radio Station WMCA in Manhattan with the two publication men pitted against two film showmen, who shall here go nameless. The significant term is "pitted", as in the death-pit sense of "Spartacus". In short, it was a free-for-all.

Such broadcast panel discussions dealing with films have multiplied in recent season. They draw much notice and dispense a certain amount of information and insight. The trouble tends to be, as in this recent instance, that nobody gets a chance to finish a thought except by main force of lung power. Interesting points are raised and shoved aside. Interruptions become constant and irritating to the expectant listener.

There were, however, arresting comments. One of the showmen argued that the most valuable criticism took the form of private scouting reports intended for the eyes of producers alone. The implication was that this was practical. All else was mere ivory tower effusion.

During the general hubbub as to what critics were, and were not, the two spokesmen struck out strongly against a widely echoed falsity that they are "part of show business", and that this meant disloyal. Cried the reviewers, "Our beat is show business, but we are not in show business. We are in the publication business. Our loyalty is to our readers, and to the truth as we interpret it."

Actually there is a comment which is almost never advanced about criticism, and it is this: the severest cracks on films are made by producers, directors, stars. You have only to think back during 1962. No professional reviewer would possibly fault given films as have their own personalities. Laurence Harvey and Stephen Boyd, for example, are far tougher critics than the toughest by-liners.

No publication devotes more space and attention than VARIETY to reporting the running debate as to critics and their writings, nor tries harder in its own reviewing to maintain honest criteria of balanced evaluation. Such editorial independence is not easily maintained against the occasional rages of vanity and the application of punishments. No matter. It is the necessary cost we pay for a policy established 57 years ago.

It is strict accuracy to affirm that any reputable publication, as Zunser and Alpert squarely stated, first respects itself. This is the source of its prestige which in turn creates its advertising value.

So get with, and stay with, real value. Meaning, of course

Zurlini Causes Barcelona Furor By Blasting Spanish Censorship

By HANK WERBA

Barcelona, Oct. 23.

Valerio Zurlini, Italian film director whose "Cronaca Familiare" won the Golden Lion at Venice this year, turned the uneventful Fourth International Film Congress at Barcelona into a conversation piece with a passionate public protest over the release version of his first film in Spain, "The Girl With the Suitcase," that lacked 20 minutes of its original footage.

Using the stage of the Palacio de la Musica as a forum, he drew heavy applause from a packed Catalan audience when he objected loudly to the unauthorized cuts in the Spanish dubbed print.

The incident took place with government, municipal and festival authorities on stage to distribute the traditional "Lady with the the Umbrella" statuettes for all color film entries at the Catalan gathering. Zurlini's "Cronaca Familiare" was scheduled to follow the award ceremony and close the festival. In grabbing the mike instead of the award, he probably gave the impression that "Cronaca" has taken a censor mauling, although he referred only to "The Girl with the Suitcase."

The ensuing uproar was significant as an explosive rejection by at least part of the Spanish-going public of past censor practices.

Ironically, Zurlini's public protest coincided with the first public appearance of Garcia Escudero, recently designated Director General for Cinema, who has himself gone on record prior to, and subsequent to his appointment, against this type of film sniping. In a statement to the press, Garcia Escudero pointed out that "The Girl with the Suitcase" had been in release for more than a year and that Zurlini's unbecoming behavior had placed the stigma of the past event at the festival doorstep, and the authorities present.

Festival organizers made it clear that, for the first time, no films had been banned or deleted by the director general's office. Not only were films previously prohibited for release in Spain programmed (The World of Suzie Wong), but even Zurlini's "Cronaca Familiare" was screened intact.

Zurlini later told VARIETY that his Palacio de la Musica bombshell was a protest on purely professional grounds against the desecration of creative effort without the consent of the author. He planned to communicate his regrets to the director general for whatever embarrassment was caused, but admitted his delight with audience response to his action.

Other entries at the color film fest included Hollywood's "If A Man Answers," "Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation," and "The World of Suzie Wong." Italy sent in "Cronaca," "Hercules Conquers Atlantide" and "Lions in the Sun," "Lovers of Teruel" and the Brigitte Bardot starrer "A Private Affair" (in the Metro version) represented France; "The Inspector" was the British entry; Mexico sent "The Empty Star" and Germany screened "The Wonderful Adventure." Festival highlight was a Japanese retrospective from the works of Kenji Mizoguchi.

Guy V. Thayer to N.Y.

London, Oct. 23.

Guy V. Thayer, Jr., managing director of the newly formed British production company, Mark III Scope, leaves London next Friday (26) for a three-week trip to New York and Hollywood, during which he will give priority to setting a distribution deal for the company's, "A Magic Carpet."

This is a 90-minute feature, to be made in the Middle East, using a new three dimensional process, and will be lensed in Technicolor, with stereo sound. Production is due to start Jan. 10.

Also on Thayer's slate will be the setting up of casting and directional commitments of two upcoming projects, "Miss Jones and the Cannibal" and "Nurse Campbell and her Martian," both of which are due to start in London next spring. He will also be talking a provisional deal for "Ataturk," the screen biog of the father of modern Turkey, for which Omar Sharif (who makes his western debut in "Lawrence of Arabia") will play the title role.

Set 'Lawrence' for Three West End Reserved Runs

London, Oct. 23.

"Lawrence of Arabia," (Col) due for a Royal preem at the Odeon, Leicester Square, on Dec. 10, is already set for three hard-ticket engagements in London's West End.

Its Odeon engagement is for a limited season of eight weeks. At the end of that run, the Sam Speigel opus will follow "El Cid" into the Metropole for an indefinite stay, probably at least six months. Thereafter it will transfer to the Odeon, Haymarket, where Col's "Barabbas" is in residence.

As already reported, ticket brokers have guaranteed the initial Odeon run to the tune of $100,000.

'Tunnel 28' Preem In Berlin, 3d Major Pic To Do So in 1 Year

Berlin, Oct. 23.

Within a year, West Berlin has had its third world preem of an American film (Stanley Kramer's "Judgment At Nuremberg" and Billy Wilder's "One, Two, Three"). Walter Wood's "Tunnel 28" (MG) opened last night with a gala firstnight at Congress Hall. Ernst Lemmer, Federal minister for all-German affairs, and David Lewis, Metro's European prexy, were the hosts. Incidentally, it was Lemmer who suggested the world preem of the film for Congress Hall.

Film's official local preem will be at Berlin's Metro theatre next week. The U.S. preem has been scheduled for Oct. 31 in Detroit and shortly thereafter will open in Boston, plus several houses in Michigan as well as Canada. Producer Wood said he is going to attend the various regional preems.

"Tunnel," Wood's second feature, cost £650,000 and has a running time of exactly 90 minutes. It'll be shown in German (pic was made in English and thereafter, with the exception of Christine Kaufmann, everyone dubbed his English voice into German).

COMEDIE-FRANCAISE DEBUTS WITH A HIT

Paris, Oct. 23.

The state subsidized depository rep company of French classics, the Comedie-Francaise, looks to have a hit addition to its repertory with a sprightly reprise of the 18th century comedy by Beaumarchais "Le Mariage De Figaro."

No staging credit was given, but insiders say that thesp Jean Piat, who plays Figaro, dressed up the C-F version. This was the 1,083d reprise of the perennial. Most critics found it lively, charming and entertaining with one carping that it showed a lack of direction but, on the whole, it was faithful to the play.

The play has plenty of plot and this bears the mark of one of the more liberal works of the time which is said to have given an inkling of the coming French Revolution.

The C-F thus starts the season with a hit, a posh firstnight audience gave it a standing ovation. For the record the full name of playwright was Pierre Augustin Caron De Beaumarchais.

New Roman Studio

Rome, Oct. 23.

A new Film Plant, G.S.C. Studios, was opened here this week on the outskirts of the city. Studio includes two sound stages, with their own power units, tank for underwater lensing, restaurant, office space, and the usual trimmings.

Current tenant at G.S.C. is "Ape Regina" (Queen Bee) directed by Marco Ferreri for Henryk Sroshiski and Alfonso Sansone's Sancro Films. Producers are also 50% partners in the studio ownership.

After "Queen Bee," Sancro plans to produce another pic by Ferreri "The Trial" at the studio, followed by Giulio Petroni's "Tadultera" (The Adulteress) and a film directed by Riccardo Fellini, Federico Fellini's younger brother.

Rome Down to Third In Italo B.O. Ratings

Rome, Oct. 23.

Eternal City boxoffice is dropping at an alarming rate. That's the conclusion drawn by local exhib observers after a belated perusal of the past years' statistics.

Hard figures show Rome b.o. totals off by some 6.2% in 1961, while comparison of '61 with '60 figures for all of Italy show drop to be only 0.5%. In admission totals, that makes it 49,301,000 in 1961 for Rome alone, against 52,549,000 for 1960.

Same source indicates Turin is the new b.o. town in Italy, followed by Milan. Rome, the previous leader, now holds number three position in the firstrun stakes. A look at Sept. b.o. shows that no picture topped the 1,000,000 Lire ($1,600) mark on a Sunday in Rome, while 11 did so in Milan and nine in Turin. Third and fourth Sundays in Sept. showed similar proportions: eight films over the $1,600 mark in Rome, 24 in Milan, 15 in Turin.

Exhib source hints that inflation of firstrun houses (and move-over spots) has upset the balance in the capital, and that the system must be revised to cope with downward trend in public reaction. As example, it cites that Rome, which has 16 more firstrun houses than Milan, grosses less coin than its northern rival.

Fest Within Fest New Mex Scheme

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

A week-long Latin American sub-festival, to be celebrated concurrently with, but outside the World Review of Film Festivals in Acapulco, has been approved by the Film Bureau. Full Bureau aid will be extended to this Spanish language miniature festival.

Each country will have the right to present two feature films and two shorts. So far definite participants include Mexico, Spain and Argentina. However, other republics are expected to accept invites.

Chief regulations call for pictures to have been produced within 12 months before the competition shot in Spanish, not exhibited outside the borders of the producing country and not presented officially or unofficially at any European festival.

Best film will be selected, as well as prizes for direction, acting, etc. Award will be a reproduction of the Aztec Calendar in silver, with trophy to be known as La Piedra del Sol award (The Sun Stone Trophy). Spanish language fest is the outcome of a suggestion by the Mexican Association of Motion Picture Producers. Venezuela is definitely expected to participate and hope is to make this an annual event. Idea had first been proposed last year, but Film Bureau backing was not obtained.

Donaldson Meets With Chamberlain to Talk Problem of 'Premise'

London, Oct. 23.

The Lord Chamberlain and impresario William Donaldson met yesterday (Mon.) to try and iron out the rumpus raised by the American revue, "The Premise," now running at the Comedy. As reported in VARIETY (last week) the censor objected to the inclusion of a sketch in which God is portrayed as a Negro. The sketch was immediately dropped.

But neither Donaldson nor the cast will agree to the censor's stipulation that improvisation in the show must stop. They claim that it would kill the spirit of the revue and that it would have to fold. Since the Lord Chamberlain's letter was received the cast has been carrying on as usual and they and Donaldson have insisted that they "are prepared to risk a fine or even imprisonment if need be."

Failure to follow the instructions of the Lord Chamberlain is a breach of an Act of Parliament of 1843, but he has no power to close down the theatre. In this event the affair would become the headache of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

International Sound Track

London

Press handout from Charles H. Schneer reports that three major powers are engaged in the race through space, to be the first to reach the Moon. One is the U.S., another is the Soviet Union, and the third —yes, you guessed it—is Charles H. Schneer Productions. It's a tieup, of course, with the producer's project to film H. G. Wells' "The First Men in the Moon," written in 1901, for which Nigel Kneale has written the screenplay . . . Producer Betty Box and director Ralph Thomas have been hitting the road, drumbeating their latest Pinewood picture "The Wild and the Willing," which is a Rank release . . . Now that he has completed his role in Michael Balcon's "Sammy Going South," Edward G. Robinson left London last week for his home in California . . . "El Cid," now in its 11th prerelease month at the Metropole in London, has been set for more provincial dates in Oxford, Worcester and St. Helens. Samuel Bronston actioner is released in the U.K. through Rank . . . Metro's latest British picture, "The Haunting," was launched with a Sunday morning Savoy cocktailery, at which director Robert Wise, scripter Nelson Gidding and many of the stars showed up. It's based on the Shirley Jackson novel "The Haunting of Hill House," and the cast is headed by Julie Harris, Claire Bloom, Richard Johnson and Russ Tamblyn . . . Carl Foreman's "The Guns of Navarone" presented a hand-carved, gold-plated miniature of a cannon by Sheikh Rashid Ahmed to commemorate the all-time record engagement of "Guns" in Karachi . . . Ron Goodwin picked by Cornel Wilde to write the score for "Lancelot and Guinevere," which is now completing production on location in Yugoslavia . . . Principal photography started last week on the new Bob Hope-Anita Eckberg comedy "Call Me Bwana," which Gordon Douglas is directing for Harry Saltzman's-Cubby Broccoli's Eon Productions. Pic, which co-stars Edie Adams and Lionel Jeffries, will be released by United Artists in the Western Hemisphere and through Rank in the Eastern Hemisphere and Commonwealth . . . Maria Perschy in last week for the world preem of the Metro British production, "The Password Is Courage."

Eddie Albert, here to play the alcoholic actor in the BBC-TV production of Clifford Odets' "Winter Journey," has been signed for a top role in the Jack Hawkins-Jules Buck production of "The Party's Over," now filming on location in London. He returns to America at the end of the month for a tv date . . . Location filming has started on the new Roy Baker production "Two Left Feet," with Michael Crawford, Julia Foster, Nyree Dawn Porter and Michael Craze. Baker, who is directing, wrote the screenplay with John Hopkins, and Leslie Gilliat is producing. It's a British Lion release . . . "The L-Shaped Room," made by Richard Attenborough, Bryan Forbes and James Woolf, has its world preem at the Columbia Theatre next month. Film, which stars Leslie Caron and Tom Bell, was written and directed by Forbes, and Attenborough and Woolf were producers.

Frank Williams, a boothman at the Leicester Square Theatre, retired on Saturday, Oct. 13. He had previously been at the New Gallery . . . Earl Mountbatten will be attending the charity preem of "Mutiny on the Bounty" at the Royalty on Nov. 19, which is being organized by Metro, with the Variety Club, in aid of the Edwina Mountbatten Trust.

Paris

Yank director Joseph Losey, a 10-year resident and filmmaker in Britain, was in for opening of his latest opus "Eve," made in English in Italy for French producers. Pic got split reviews but is doing early biz. Losey would like doing a pic in the U. S. with the right property but feels after 10 years he is now a European director in outlook. He is prepping a film version of Bertold Brecht's "Gallileo" which he staged in Hollywood with Charles Laughton right after the last war. Star of "Eve," Jeanne Moreau, says she never looks at rushes for she has complete confidence in the director and chooses her jobs thusly rather than by story . . . Joe Besch, repping Jay Frankel's new Union Film Yank distrib setup, bidding for a coproduction deal with Fernand Lumbroso for his current pic "An Honorable Young Man" that has exteriors slated for the U.S. Union would back Yank expenses for Yank distrib rights.

Mel Ferrer doing a walkon bit in "Paris When It Sizzles" (Par) here which stars wife Audrey Hepburn. Incidentally, VARIETY erred in putting Tony Perkins into the pic for a small role, it was the other Tony, Curtis that is . . . Yank singer Nancy Holloway into a top role as thesp in the French pic "Ballad Pour Un Voyou" (Ballad for a Badman) . . . A French clan, similar to the Frank Sinatra Yank counterpart, is in the making here. Young pic stars and thesps Jean-Paul Belmondo, Claude Brasseur, Sacha Distel and Jean-Pierre Cassel have formed their own pic production company, now housed in Distel's uncle's, Ray Ventura's, pic production office, to make a pic in which they will be able to play a fictionalized version of their real life friendly shenanigans together. Project is based on the Jules Romains book, "The Buddies," with Jean Cherasse, an ex-school teacher, to direct. It is a bunch of comic scenes about a group of young fellows in the 20s engaged in the army, jokes, etc.

French Film Museum, the Cinematheque Francaise, prepping a month of Garbo in February. Hope to have her appear but it seems illusory that Garbo will show . . . Rene Havard readying a sketch pic to have all the noted pic detective heroes in it helping a neophyte solve a case. Each will show how he would do it and each seg will depict it to the tyro. Plans are Eddie Constantine to play his usual G-Man Lemmy Caution, Jean Gabin Maigret, Lino Ventura, the French undercover man the Gorilla, Pierre Fresnay, Inspector Wens and Charles Vanel, the head of the French secret service . . . French legit farce of Claude Magnier, "Monsieur Masure," already done as a pic here, may also become a Yank pic with Tony Curtis and Gina Lollobrigida. Metro would do the pic. It concerns an interloper who almost upsets a perfect marriage.

Rome

William Garroni's American-made "The Mastery of Space" was the only Yank winner at the recently concluded Trento Festival of Exploration Films . . . kudo consists of Silver Plaque and some $850 in cash . . . James Mason, Lilli Palmer in Rome waiting for Italo star Gabriele Ferzetti's facial surgery to heal sufficiently to enable them to resume roles in Galatea's "Beta Som" . . . Cyd Charisse and Perez Prado paged by Vittorio Sala for stints in his "Songs Around the World" (Cinegai-SPA) Dean Martin, Nat King Cole already set to be lensed in U.S. by Sala who heads stateside Oct. 20.

Vincenzo Labella is new Italo press chieftain for 20th-Fox, replacing Anacleto Tanda, longtime tub-thumper for the company here, who left 20th to resume his law practice . . . Titanus has started shooting "Young Europe," helmed by Paolo Cavara, young Italian director who recently assisted Gualtiero Jacopetti on his big-grossing hit "Mondo Cane" . . . ten-man crew will be used on Eastmancolor effort which plans to mirror "the lives, labors, and loves of Europe's young generation" . . . Brigitte Bardot reportedly being sought as John Gavin's partner in Titanus' upcoming "Ettore Fieramosca."

'Wear Shoes': Berlin Cinema Bar

Berlin, Oct. 23.

The Pamet on Buelow-Strasse here, an old Berlin film house which went bankrupt, has been turned into what's called a "cinema bar" by its new owners, Edwin Kupperman and Mischa Burszstyn. The newly furnished spot is open (except Mondays) from 8 p.m. to 5 a.m., has a band for dancing, and there are pix (cartoons, striptease shorts, etc.) slotted at 11 p.m., 1 and 3 a.m. The spot has already established a good following. Enterprise concentrates on elegance, that's to say customers must wear a tie, (shoes too? Ed.) leatherjackets are out and there are no pickup girls.

There are similar spots already in existence around the country. Kupperman, incidentally, intends to open more cinema bars in town if this place clicks.

Extend Present Italo Film Aid Pending New Law on ECM Lines

Rome, Oct. 23.

The current Italian Film Aid law, which expires March 31, 1963, will probably be replaced by temporary legislation containing the essentials of the full proposal for a new aid law, due to be presented in next few days to the Italian Parliament.

Temporary legislation (called "legge stralcio") is the Ministry of Entertainment's solution to avoid yet another extension of the current aid setup due to the fact that the 350 amendments already presented concerning the new law would make it nearly impossible to pass before deadline time next March.

New law is expected to contain clauses progressively lowering aid percentages to coincide with European Common Market legislation, but Italian industry officials are fighting to have the drop in aid followed by a proportionate drop in government admission taxes and in special emergency funds for winter relief which now eat strongly into Italian nets.

Meanwhile, it's pointed out here how in self defense, European filmmaking associations are meeting in Paris to work out announced plans for self-financing of continental production efforts. Basic elements are said to have been worked out in advance, and Italian sources are hopeful that some concrete agreement in this direction may emerge from the Paris get-together.

'West' to Get $280,000 Guarantee for London Engagement Via CTL

London, Oct. 23.

Just eight days after Keith Prowse announced its firstever ticket broking deal for "Lawrence of Arabia," the Combined Theatre Libraries have come up with a guarantee for "How the West Was Won," extending over 52 weeks, and involving a minimum of $280,000. It represents the biggest-ever "blind" advance given by the brokers for a production of any kind, legit, or otherwise.

The cash guarantee is equal to 20% of the potential take of the first year, or represents capacity business for a full 10 weeks.

The Cinerama feature has its world preem at the Casino Theatre on Nov. 1, for the King George Fund for Sailors. It starts its regular engagement at normal admission prices the following day. New projection equipment is being installed at the Casino, which will enable the film to be shown with a single intermission.

Making the announcement at a press conference last week, Peter Cadbury, the KP topper, admitted that they had now got a taste for motion pictures, but were determined to tread cautiously. They had made no other deals, and as an indication of their attitude, admitted they would not start talking a deal for "Mutiny on the Bounty" until they had seen the picture. Both "Lawrence" and "West" were guaranteed "blind."

'Running Man' Finishes

Dublin, Oct. 23.

After eight weeks on location in Spain and almost seven weeks studio work at Ardmore Studios, Bray, Sir Carol Reed finishes camera work this week on "The Running Man," based on Shelley Smith's best-selling suspense story about an insurance fraud. Reed is both producer and director of picture which is set for Columbia release. Stars are Laurence Harvey, Lee Remick and Alan Bates.

Aussie's Worried By Reaction To Oversexed Pix

Sydney, Oct. 23.

Over-play of sexy fare in the key Aussie cinemas is presently bringing heavy frowns from religious organizations, parents and citizens associations and other such bodies.

The current question here is: Where have all the wholesome family films gone? Even though exhibitors opine that the current sex overplay will eventually harm the boxoffice via the wrath of puritan-minded folk who will press for a stricter censorship code, especially when the over-sexed pix are routed into the suburbs and are available to juve patronage.

It has been pointed out here that American exhibs have been pressing producers to put a brake on sexy pix. Showmen here mainly object to rape, abortion, adultery and seduction in pix, with no objection to spicy comedy geared for sophisticated laughs.

The British and continental producers are mainly responsible for the current sex overplay here and the public is tiring of pix about prostitutes and redlight themes.

Current sexy crop marquees here include: "Love Now, Pay Later" (Blake), "Lolita" (MG), "A Kind of Loving" (BEF), "Boccaccio 70" (Blake), "Susan Slade" (WB), "Cold Wind in August" (UA), "Five Day Lover" (Kapferer), "A Taste of Honey" (BEF).

Pix sans sex currently in high favor are "The Parent Trap" (MG), 20th week; "West Side Story" (UA), 19th week; "El Cid" (BEF), 26th week; "Touch of Mink" (UI), 8th week; "Windjammer (Cine), 8th week; "Counterfeit Traitor" (Par), 5th week; "Exodus" (UA), 14th week; "Follow That Dream" (UA).

TAX BACK ON BACKS OF ULTIMATE CONSUMER

Madrid, Oct. 16.

Spain's Ministry of Finance reacted favorably last week to a long-standing exhibitor complaint by shifting a four-year-old supplementary tax from exhib pocketbooks to the filmgoing public.

Original purpose of tax bite was to help provide an annual credit fund of 150,000,000 pesetas ($2,500,000) for film production and modernization. The tax was voluntarily absorbed at the time by theatre owners in the hope that burdening multiple taxes would be consolidated and reduced so that a frozen box office price scale would remain consonant with rising operation costs.

When finance ministry officials delayed tax relief, exhibs successfully petitioned the minister last week to reimpose the film credit fund tax on the ticket-buyers themselves, as originally intended when the decree was conceived. This tax shift will up admission prices by 4%.

Edinburgh Aids Fest

Edinburgh, Oct. 23.

Despite the losses involved, Edinburgh Corp. is giving another $150,000 grant to the International Festival here. Annual arts junket brings much tourism and trade to the city.

Mannheim Fest Has 68 Competing Films Plus Eight First Features

By HANS HOEHN

Mannheim, Oct. 23.

The 11th annual International Mannheim Film Week (formerly Mannheim Culture and Documentary Film Week) opened here on Oct. 15 with the screening of two British, two French, two West-German and a Hungarian short film. In all, the six-day affair presented 68 films from 21 countries and organizations. The latter includes the United Nations and "Club of Filmpeople" of East Germany, since East Germany cannot officially participate in this West German film fest.

The interest in the Mannheim fest has been great this year. Around 30 nations submitted a total of 308 pix of which the committee finally picked 68 for the contest. Lineup of contenders also includes eight features, the first feature film of former documentary directors. These films are now allowed to take part in the fest.

Last year, Mannheim skipped all social receptions. This slight to social life, however, met with criticism from both press and film people who opined that receptions are essential in order to make contacts. The City of Mannheim took the hint so there was an opening reception and, also a farewell reception. A third, midnight reception, was given by the German Atlas Distributing Co. which had the French film, "Adieu, Philippine," in the contest.

In order to give the guests (about 150 as compared to 120 last year) more time, all late screenings were skipped this year. In former years, screenings often ran to 1 a.m. or later.

Also new was the "Grand Prix" of Mannheim donated (spontaneously, they say) by its film-conscious citizens. This award amounting to $2 500 will be presented to the best first feature film of a former documentary film maker. (Mannheim's budget, incidentally, amounts to $27.500 of which the lion's share $15 590 comes from the city itself while the remainder is composed of payments from the state and Federal government.)

Argentine film director, Leopoldo Torre Nilsson, who was honored here via a retrospective show and who was supposed to sit on the jury had to cancel out. British Thorold ("Hill 24 Doesn't Answer") Dickinson filled the vacant spot, and incidentally, he was made chairman of the jury. The nine-man jury included American Gideon Bachmann and Hilmar Hoffmann who's head of the Oberhausen (short film) festival. According to Walter Talmon-Gros, head of the Mannheim fete, the utilization of Hoffman as a member of the jury was to prove that there was no "hostility" between Mannheim and nearby Oberhausen which are both more or less the same type of festival.

The lineup of entries follows: Germany (22), France (13), Great Britain (7), Poland (6). There are only two U.S. pix, "Forget Me Not" (Bert Brown) and "With Music Ring" (USIS). A Cuban short, "Gente en la Playa" (People on the Beach) and East Germany's "Mother Courage" are also in the running.

During Past 13 Years $256,000,000 Invested In French-Italo Pix

Milan, Oct 23

In the past 13 years $256,000,000 has been invested in 600-odd features coproduced by Italian and French companies. Totals were revealed by the Italian Minister for Entertainment Alberto Folchi, who spoke at the concluding meeting of the joint Franco-Italian coproduction committee, held at MIFED, Milan's semi-annual Film Mart.

"Full agreement" was reached at the meeting of toppers from both pic industries, the wind-up statement said.

Folchi also paid tribute to the MIFED organization, noting "with pleasure" that attendance figures have steadily risen at the Milan event, with total attendance for the current event expected to top previous fall figures. Next MIFED is slated for April, 1963, concurrent with the Milan Trade Fair.

20th-Fox Asks Union Okay for Staff Cuts In Mexican Offices

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

A belt tightening move on the part of American distributors in Mexico is under way. Representatives of the various companies have quietly been negotiating with the unions for readjustments in personnel to reduce overhead.

The maximum economy policy recently instituted at 20th Fox has reached Mexico. Allan M. Noye, firm's representative, has asked the Union of Film Industry Workers to grant a layoff of seven workers and then brought the problem to the foreground.

Maximo Molina, head of the union, who has been pessimistic about future industry outlook in Mexico, is nevertheless adverse to making any concessions. While he does not say so directly, the feeling here is that a favorable ruling for 20th will invite an avalanche of similar personnel reduction requests from other distribs.

The only concession made by the union was in the case of Distribuidora Mexicana, reported here previously, and affecting four employees. Allied Artists, for its part, has consistently refused to sign a new contract with the union, according to Molina. This calls for a 15% wage boost. The union's general assembly is pressing for a walkout if the distrib does not sign a new contract.

Molina, a shrewd union politician, wishes to avoid a strike at this time, and while other American distributors have refused comment, reliable sources indicate that Molina has been under pressure to accede to the personnel reduction plans.

See No Hitches For U.S. Films In Common Market

Paris, Oct. 23.

It seems likely that the U.S. film industry will be taken into consideration as Common Market film strategy solidifies. A local meeting of industry reps on ECM film future has assured the Americans that they will not be discriminated against when an ECM quota is set up.

One reason may be that the U.S. has the largest piece of the overall ECM film market even though Italy and France control more than 50% of their own. Intended admission tax hikes to feed the ECM kitty for both aid and needed local assistance will also receive contributions on a large scale from American pix.

So it appears that the U.S. will not find much interference under pending common market changes. There will be no need for any U.S. counter measures, and, in fact, French-U.S. talks are progressing without hitches. This is a positive sign for the U.S. film industry which now finds the foreign market indispensible.

With U.S. exhibs needing product, and European countries production coin, the many U.S. banked productions in ECM countries are also considered a factor for continued solid American market openings as well as practically free remittances.

Some observers still fear that global ECM quotas, meaning more coproduction and more interchange of films between member nations, will eventually mean encroachment on U.S. outlets. But the solid film following for U.S. product has other shrugging off any hard knocks as the countries integrate more fully.

The Yanks even envisage openings for backlogged dubbed pix outside any agreed quotas in these areas. And others point out that sound local industries mean sounder film markets which benefit all films.

Nip the Tip

London, Oct. 23.

Theatre cloakroom attendants, waiters and taximen are viewing the activities of Major George Bancroft of Fleetwood, Lancashire, with wary suspicion. The major has declared war on tipping, and has formed the Association for the Restriction of Gratuity Giving.

Says Bancroft: "Tipping is a blemish on our way of life. I have never given a tip in my life. People are shamed into it." The association doesn't seek to cut out all tipping. It will be okay to slip someone a quick buck "where some extra kindness or service has been voluntarily shown over and above ordinary efficient service."

Australians Kill All Restrictions On For. Imports

Sydney, Oct. 23.

The Robert Menzies Liberal Party government has removed all import restrictions, making Australia open territory to world producers. The new edict, effective Oct. 18, means that any country may now export any goods in any quantity to other nation.

Politicians here deny the import restrictions wipeout is a move to offset Britain's entry into the Common Market. Politicos point out that if Australia is to increase export biz to the U.S. and the Far East, a non-curb policy must operate on a fair share basis both ways.

Australia is playing ball today with Japan and will open its doors wide to Japanese goods in return for a $350,000,000 deal for Aussie-made goods.

It can be taken for granted that Japan will market everything possible to cash in on the now open market. The picture industry sees an increase in carbons, projection gear, cameras and pix carrying the Japanese tag.

Presently, American-made goods from autos to cigarettes, are available here. Every department store carries U.S. fashion goods and picture marquees are 90% American, and this also goes for tv.

By next Christmas there will be a huge influx of American products as manufacturers gear export plans to outsmart Far East rivals for Australian biz.

AUTO SHOW BOOSTS ALL PARIS SHOW BIZ

Paris, Oct. 23.

The recent Auto Show gave show biz the usual boost during its two week tenure. Besides packing hotels with visitors, buyers and sellers who were definitely out to ride by night after talking autos all day, most of the play went to light fare though some dramas also got a bit of the biz.

What it proved was that visitors do not read critics or follow Parisian tastes too closely. A flock of legiters that got short shrift in reviews did sock biz. Of course after the crowds leave the shows may fall off again, but the Auto Show boost can sometimes carry faltering shows or at least give them a longer run than usual.

Marcel Achard's panned new play "Turlututu" did $1,313 a night and a fading comedy like the Michel Andre-Roger Bernstein "Elodie's Idea" went from $100 to $500 a night at the small Theatre Michel. Several plays doubled their take and another laggard "La Reine Galante," by Andre Castelot, at the Theatre Ambassadeurs, suddenly did solid biz.

Edith Piaf did a nightly $7,000 at the Olympia at hiked prices.

Films, niteries, concerts also benefited from this pleasure seeking influx. Show bizites felt that a longer Auto Show would keep them in the black, but it was only a two week event and now bleak days, except for the few hits, are setting in again.

ABC's 'Commercial' A Sour Note At EBU's Staid Opening Session

By ART WOODSTONE

First meeting in the U.S. of the European Broadcasting Union began sluggishly this week, not living up to the expectations of American and foreign observers who expected this conclave in N.Y. to achieve if not monumental, at least "important," international decisions.

If the big news is to come, those on the scene feel, it will have to come in the last day and a half of this meeting since today (Wed.) the 60-odd broadcasting delegates from 19 European nations are guests in Washington of the USIA at a luncheon and, presumably, will spend the rest of the day on private business or in sightseeing.

"The excitement as of yesterday (Tues.), as the group ended its second day of program, legal and technical sessions at the modern Carnegie Endowment International Center opposite the United Nations Bldg. on N.Y.'s luxurious East Side was caused by the sideliner...

A luncheon speech to the EBU delegates yesterday by Donald Coyle, ABC's International boss, led to a domestic disagreement. His speech, made at an elaborate luncheon which ABC hosted, was termed commercial and he was accused by NBC and CBS of breaking faith, clearly and indisputably, with an agreement reached some weeks ago by all three American tv networks. The networks last summer decided, if only to avoid unmanageable "distractions" to the European delegates, that it would be unfair and unwise to pitch the wares or even the good name of one American company over any other.

The networks went so far as to try and keep tv film distribution companies in the dark as to the EBU agenda and the housing of delegates, so that other pitches would not occur either.

Coyle's speech, among other things considered "self-serving," contained this unequivocal sentence: "We at ABC propose to seek out each member delegation of this conference for the purpose of discussing what product can be made available to world markets." Remark came after specific mention of ABC programs.

According to both CBS and NBC execs, the agreement among the webs meant to exclude any sales spiels to potential European consumers of U.S. tv or radio product, and those spiels were not to take place either privately or publicly.

Said a high-ranking CBS exec of Coyle's speech: "It's shocking to me, considering the understanding we had."

"Yes, it is a sales pitch, an NBC counterpart exclaimed, "and we had an absolute understanding —very specific—that there would be no pitches, especially at these luncheons. They're distasteful, and for that reason we agreed to behave and stick to—call them high-level ideas."

As for the high-level ideas at the meetings of the EBU itself, the first two days showed none. Reliable sources attending the closed-business sessions in the program area said that most of the morning session was concerned with Telstar. European delegates questioned American non-voting representatives at the session on employment of this satellite.

Approximately two hours later, someone suggested that no valid information about Telstar could be imparted without American Tel & Tel which owns the instrument. AT&T was then invited to a subsequent meeting. One specific request came out of that longish session and that was reportedly by an Austrian broadcaster. Evidently he was expressing a common problem, when he said that the three U.S. tv networks competed so vigorously for his organization's assistance in news stories from Vienna that it created confusion.

The American networks, he said, each asked for facilities, separate from its rivals. Each, in a sense, asked for preferential treatment. The delegate's suggestion to the attending American network observers was perhaps to have a rotating pool to cover fast-breaking news stories. The network men present answered tentatively that being a part of a competitive enterprise system they could make

Within 25-Mile Radius UHF as Clear as VHF Wagner Tells UBE Meet

Mayor Robert F. Wagner said that the apparent finding of the one-year UHF experiment ordered by the FCC in New York City was "no significant difference in signal clarity between UHF and VHF within a 25-mile radius" of the transmitting point, the Empire State Bldg. in Manhattan. But the official was encouraging about the prospect of someday adding a "half dozen more stations" to the present seven . . ." if the final results corroborate the preliminary finding."

This he told to members of the European Broadcasting Union, meeting in the United States for the first time as guests of the three radio-tv networks and the U. S. Information Agency. Wagner also noted that beyond 25 miles from the big building, which houses all transmitters for the city's tv stations, there is "a sharp dropoff in signal clarity in UHF, much greater than in VHF."

On Nov. 1, the UHF station, operated at the FCC's request by municipally-owned WNYC, will turn from experimental to eight-hour-a-day operation.

EBU Foresees 80,000,000 Aud On Rattigan Play

London, Oct. 23.

European Broadcasting Union anticipates an 80,000,000 tv audience, over a 24-hour period, for 14 multi-lingual productions of a play specially written for television by Terence Rattigan, called "Heart To Heart." Skedded date is December 6. Idea for "the largest theatre in the world" was put up by Sergio Publiese, boss of tv section of Italy's RAI service, in an attempt to "overcome language problems."

BBC-TV was invited to produce the first entry. Michael Barry, then BBC-TV drama topper, commissioned Rattigan to write his second tv play. He had already done "The Final Test" in 1951 to mark the Festival of Britain.

Individual productions of "Heart To Heart," in their own languages and with local casts, will be screened practically simultaneously by 13 other countries, France, Luxembourg, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden, Italy, Denmark, Austria, Finland, Norway, Eire and Spain.

The new project has not only wooed Rattigan back to writing for the small screen ("Who could resist the challenge of an audience of 80,000,000? he put to VARIETY) but has persuaded Kenneth More and Sir Ralph Richardson to play the two leading roles. More has not appeared on tv since Rattigan's "Deep Blue Sea" 10 years ago. Richardson will be seen on tv for the first time, though recently he made his debut with Ingrid Bergman in "Hedda Gabler," which has not yet been screened. Both insist that they are not anti-tv but have not, till now, found roles that interested them as actors.

"Heart To Heart" is "a backstage tv story." "It's the first, as far as I know," Rattigan says. Alvin Rakoff, who is directing the play, says that he did one with Sam Wanamaker a year ago, but he did not labor the point. More plays a cynical, bottle-addicted tv interviewer on Channel 5 of a mythical station called British Television. Richardson is his program victim, a prominent politician with a skeleton in his cupboard. Others in the cast include Angela Baddeley, Megs Jenkins, Wendy Craig, Peter Sallis, Jean Marsh and Jack Gwillim.

It wasn't the money that interested Rattigan, though he'll cop sizable royalties for the 14 countries. "Man challenge," he says.

HUGGINS TO HELM NBC's 'VIRGINIAN'

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Charles Marquis Warren completed his commitment to Revue last week with the filming of the 13th segment of "The Virginian" and will be replaced by Roy Huggins as executive producer of the 90-minute western series. Huggins is continuing his academic program at UCLA for a degree in political theory and won't report until Oct. 26.

Huggins formerly headed up tv production at 20th-Fox and previously was at Warners for five years where he created "Maverick" and "77 Sunset Strip" and was also the first producer of the studio's "Cheyenne."

Resentment Over French TV News 'Bias' Cues Strike

Paris, Oct. 23.

An unprecedented strike by the Syndicate of Radio & TV Journalists forced the cancelling of a news program on the one channel video setup last Wednesday (17). This brought to light the festering resentment towards government interference, and the news slanting in the state run tv newscasting.

A recent ruling by Robert Borzaz, head of the state Radiodiffusion Television Francaise, allowed for special governmental programs before the coming referendum on the election of the president. But it was felt the program in question was to be blatantly used as camouflaged positive government propaganda.

Show in question used clips from a series of interviews by RTT newsmen in various countries on the value of the French franc and French prestige as a country. They were not to be used for some time. But one tv newsman found that the best answers, very pro-French and the franc, had been made up and inserted into the program.

He asked to have it yanked and the head of the program refused and he appealed to the Syndicate which called a strike and held the program off the air. The Syndicate put out a communique that stated that all propaganda for the government and the referendum would have to be so labeled.

So this move may bring more strikes and drag into the open the many problems that have beset newsmen on tv in trying to give an unbiased outlook on a government network.

Thomas Joins Grampian As Managing Director

Aberdeen, Oct. 23.

G. E. Ward Thomas has been named by chairman Sir Alexander King as managing-director of Grampian Television Ltd., north-of-Scotland commercial station.

EBU's Global Impact: 7 Out of 10

A call for members of the European Broadcasting Union to begin supplying new television areas of the world with their top programming efforts was sounded yesterday (Tues.) by Don Coyle, prexy of ABC International Television, at an AB-PT luncheon at Lincoln Center. Coyle said that television's saturation of the U.S. has been, for the most part, accomplished, but the growth potential elsewhere is "still tremendous."

He calculated that there are now well over 2,000 tv stations and 118,000,000 tv receivers now in operation. Some 30 months ago, these figures were at less than half these levels. He estimated that tv outside of the U.S. and Europe will increase 20 fold during the next decade.

"Think," Coyle told the representatives of tv and radio from 19 European nations, Canada, Japan and Australia, "of the effect which tv can have on the new television areas of the world; think of the responsibility its practitioners will have. Think of the important bearing these areas have in the development of a global tv system."

He said there was now an opportunity to "assist in the development of global tv even before Telstar's progeny are airborne . . . an opportunity for the world to know and understand your people and your nation better. If earnestly undertaken, the world can be prepared for and will have already set a pattern for accepting programming which someday, we hope, you will be able to transmit simultaneously to the world at large."

Coyle said the task confronting the EBU was not easy. Collectively, he said, its members represent 69% of the world's television audience, or seven out of 10 of the world's television homes. To falter, to use poor judgment in arriving at decisions; to treat our tasks lgihtly can have frightening implications," he said. He said that the EBU "can draw a blueprint for the world to follow."

Explaining for formation of ABC International Television, he said governments are frequently not in a position to develop elaborate tv systems as they need their funds for building power plants, roads, schools, etc. "Thus," he said, "it has been generally left up to free enterprise to develop capital which has been put to work." He said that ABC International and its 22 associated stations in 14 countries have established the first active organization of commercial television stations of its kind in the world.

"Naturally," he said, "the risks involved were, and still are, considerable. Political problems exist almost everywhere in the world of today. Governments are frequently insecure. Fiscal problems are certain, rather than the exception. Business practices are often unsophisticated and inefficient. Personnel, invariably, is inexperienced. All of the countries represented here today have faced many of the same problems and have survived, developed and prospered. We think that so too will most of the countries now experiencing the pangs of growth. And tv is just essential in those areas of the world as in our—perhaps even more so."

Sarnoff Proposes to EBU Creation Of a 'World Broadcasting Union'

An all-purpose "world broadcasting union," open to broadcasters "of every nationality on earth," was proposed this week before the opening luncheon session of the European Broadcasting Union by Robert W. Sarnoff, chairman of NBC.

Sarnoff told at least 60 EBU reps and three times that number of guests and observers in N. Y. that the union of world broadcasters could have at least three purposes: a "nerve centre" for learning "what programs are available to him from all foreign sources, a library of uptodate program availabilities "in every category — entertainment, information and education"; a means to finding technical uniformity.

A study group was recommended by Sarnoff, whose company hosted the opening luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria. He suggested that the study group propose "concrete steps" for setting up such an organization."

"This is not a suggestion to enlarge the EBU," Sarnoff said, "nor to alter its identity or its present course in any way; it is a suggestion that envisages the creation of another organization, worldwide in character, in which the EBU—as a body or through its individual members — would play a significant role.

"Through your clear record of leadership in international television," he told his audience, "the EBU has earned the right, and indeed perhaps incurred the duty, to lead the way to the formation of a World Broadcasting Union . . . It would be an organization open to broadcasters of every nationality on earth, for its usefulness would rest in large part on its universality."

Sarnoff raised the question of eligibility in the proposed organization: "Would it be by countries, by individual broadcasting companies, by national groups of broadcasters—or a combination of these? What would the relationship be with existing regional organizations, such as the Inter-American Assn. of Broadcasters and the EBU itself? What would the new organization do about financing, permanent staffing, a headquarters, methods of disseminating information?"

The ultimate, as Sarnoff saw it, might be an international television network.

CBS-TV 'Years of Crisis' Expanded to 90 Mins.

CBS News' year-end wrapup telecast, the give and take among CBS correspondents as they view the world, is being given another half-hour this season. "Years of Crisis" will be a 90-minute telecast.

The show, which has been gaining stature over the years, now is being dangled before sponsors. One piece of bait being offered is the origination point of the show. Outing could originate in a market chosen by the sponsor—Detroit, for example, for an auto buyer.

Strange Reaction Of EBU Chief To Sarnoff Proposal

After Bob Sarnoff's speech on Monday (22), about creating a worldwide broadcasting union, Olof Rydbeck took to the floor a second time that day to explain that such a thought was not new to the European Broadcasting Union.

Some observers say that Rydbeck, in an ad lib statement made directly after Sarnoff concluded his talk, was sanctioning what Sarnoff had recommended, but there was also another school of thought among observers of the EBU chief. That was that the tall Swede was at least mildly perturbed that the most detailed recommendation of a universal broadcasting body come from an American, since the U.S. does not belong to EBU.

In English, Rydbeck reminded the luncheon audience which had heard Sarnoff that earlier that day, that the EBU has "in various ways . . . started to study an international tv cooperation . . . to introduce a special study group studying educational problems and the new emergent states and their part in tv."

Rydbeck also pointed out that in his own speech that day he had

Nielsen's Top 10 — Mostly Comedy

(Two Weeks Ending Oct. 7)

While the new National Nielsens (for period ending Oct. 7) aren't all-encompassing, reflecting for the most part viewing habits based on a one-time sampling of new shows, nonetheless it tips the pattern and the reemergence of the comedy show this season. (See Page One story). Eight of the Top 10 are in the comedy vein, including two new entries, Lucille Ball, which is the new No. 1 Nielsen show, and "Beverly Hillbillies." Top 10 rundown gives CBS much best of it with seven and NBC with three. It's a shutout for ABC.

Top 10 follows:

Lucille Ball (CBS)	34.8
Andy Griffith (CBS)	32.8
Danny Thomas (CBS)	32.5
Beverly Hillbillies (CBS)	31.3
Bonanza (NBC)	31.3
Red Skelton (CBS)	30.3
General Foods Opening Night (CBS)	28.1
Hazel (NBC)	26.2
Jack Benny (CBS)	25.8
Kildare (NBC)	25.7

Confessions of An Opium Peeker

Director George Freedland in Far Eastern Odyssey For 'Brinkley's Journal'

First arming him with 20 possible story ideas, David Brinkley's producers last January kissed director George Freedland goodby and sent him, all expenses paid, to the Far East. Eight months later, the freelance, foreign-born director returned with eight of the ideas committed to color film.

In Bangkok, Freedland just could not convince the ministers that their musically adept king should play jazz for "David Brinkley's Journal." In Hong Kong, however, police officials volunteered to encourage newly captured addicts to return to the opium den, for the price of two free pipefulls, just so the tv man could capture an interesting interior shot for his documentary.

Freedland said of his Asian oddyssey: "I went alone, entirely alone, hiring local crews, and, therefore, I had to be my own writer, researcher, my own producer and unit manager. The only thing imported, besides me, was the raw stock."

Ted Yates and Stuart Schulberg, the producers of NBC-TV's "David Brinkley's Journal" — Brinkley joining the discussions from time to time—laid out the ideas they'd like to see developed, recognizing of course that one man with two arms, two legs, one head and eight months could not do them all.

Schulberg and Freedland once discovered each other in the U.S. Information Agency, where both were involved in filmmaking. In 1961, later, Schulberg—and presumably an NBC paycheck—inspired the director to do four picture stories for the Monday night program.

One of the quartet for Brinkley that year was of a N.Y. dog show blended with pictures of Park Avenue's poodle pedicurists. Not unusual for Brinkley, the pedicurists were given a hot foot.

Two other '61 insertions in the "Brinkley Journal" were of American expatriates in Paris and, as Freedland describes it, of "Paris crazy art." For the fourth feature, Freedland, using French camera-

The drapes were not forwarded.

Hayward Dickers NBC Film Feature; Pat Weaver's Too?

Leland Hayward, who reportedly is partnered with Pat Weaver in the venture, has been talking to NBC-TV about co-production of motion picture features. Hayward (who evidently has ceased offering up to tv his personal production services) wants the films aired ultimately on the NBC network's Saturday night movie lineup. Hayward's last network identification was with CBS.

But dickers are said to be in an embryonic stage. How NBC would participate in the profits and when and if the pix get theatrical showing Stateside were points not disclosed.

Weaver is head of McCann-Erickson under Interpublic's Marion Harper. He was once the head of NBC-TV. Hayward produced two tv specials for CBS-TV.

BERLE, OTHERS BACK CHERTOK'S 'MARTIANS'

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

One of the few new shows that doesn't have to depend on network participation to finance a pilot is Jack Chertok's "My Favorite Martian," with Ray Walston starred as a man from outer space. It's a half-hour comedy with $75,000 earmarked for the "sample."

Show will have five backers, each contributing $15,000. Chertok's partners will be Milton Berle, Grifflink (Andy Griffith and Dick Linke), Danny Thomas and Joe Shane, Bevhills capitalist.

Pilot rolls this week and all webs will have an equal chance to make the most flattering offer.

$3,300,000 ABC Daytime Sales

ABC-TV's daytime schedule racked up one of its best sales totals last week when a total of 1,300 daylight minutes brought $3,300,000 into the house. One of the major segments of this total was U.S. Borax's 800,000, matching the amount the company is spending on CBS-TV's daytime shows.

Also coming into ABC-TV's daytime plan were Mennen Norcliffe Laboratories, Midland Labs and Clairol. Most of this business starts in December and some of it runs through 1963.

TRADE'S LAMENT: 'A TV BRUSHOFF'

By GEORGE ROSEN

Is television being singled out as the whipping boy at the New York Times? That, at least, is the general impression that's been gaining momentum in Manhattan industry circles in recent months —since, in fact, Joe Herzberg was designated to ride herd (as the newspaper's cultural editor) over matters concerning drama, films, tv, art, dance, books, music, etc.).

It's a situation that, particularly in recent weeks, has been the cause of increased bafflement and even anxiety, and hardly a week now passes where men of responsibility in tv don't find occasion to lament what they characterize as the "back of the hand treatment" being accorded the medium by the Times.

If bafflement over this so-called indifference to television is slowly turning to resentment it's because of the N.Y. Times' unique status in newspaperdom in setting patterns and in serving both as guidepost and signpost on editorial coverage by other papers throughout the country. Thus, while it's recognized that the N.Y. Times is but one of several hundred dailies in the U.S. covering the tv beat and reviewing the shows, and while it's also recognized that, both in N.Y. and elsewhere around the country, there's frequently a high level of competence among tv reporters and reviewers, the very fact of the Times' sphere of influence extending into other areas of the country has tended to aggravate the situation.

The lamentations over the Times coverage of tv (although, in good old Times tradition, the staffers, gentlemen all as befits their credentials, remain singularly mum on the subject) stems from a variety of factors. Why, for example, to hear the trade talk about it, does the paper give virtual equal billing and position to the Garden Section as to tv in the Sunday edition?

Why, they ask, is there an increasing tendency to slough off the coverage of tv news, with result that on some days there is no tv column at all or it's positioned so that it's frequently hard to find, with seldom any tv news representation at all on Saturdays? (In sharp contrast, they point out, the rival N.Y. Herald Tribune, with its smack - in - the - middle - of - the-paper highlighting of tv news, has been taking away much of the play and attention, and in fact has been upping its coverage extensively, with an enthusiasm and a spirit that was virtually the Times' exclusive domain two or three years ago.)

Why, they're asking, has the Times (in sharp contrast to its policy on the reviewing of books, music, theatre, films) suddenly this season dropped its long-standing habit of morning-after reviews on tv? Instead the Times has adopted a policy of "cluster critiques" or "package reviews" in the lumping together of a whole series of shows by categories, with result that no one show gets treatment in depth. This, apparently, is one of the major sore spots among industryites, one of whom commented:

NBC Station Swap Gets a Replay; WBC's Huggins Tells of 'Pressures'

Washington, Oct. 23

Board Chairman E. V. Huggins of Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp. repeated his charge Monday (22) that Westinghouse was under "heavy pressures" from NBC to sell WPTZ, its o&o station in Philadelphia.

"There had been considerable heat generated over the situation," Huggins said in his testimony as the leadoff witness in the FCC hearings into NBC's petition to trade the Philadelphia channel. The hearing before chief hearing examiner James Cunningham is expected to last about two months.

NBC has asked the FCC for permission to trade even-stephen WRCV, Channel 3 and WRCV-AM in Philadelphia to RKO General Inc.

In return, NBC will get RKO's Boston Channel 7, WNAC-TV & AM, and WRKO-FM.

However, Philco Broadcasting Co. has opposed the switch and applied for a permit to operate Channel 3 in Philadelphia.

Philco produced Huggins as its first witness and under questioning by Philco counsel Henry Weaver, the Westinghouse board chairman repeated his charges made earlier at a Congressional hearing.

"We were called to a meeting one day by General David Sarnoff who told us NBC was determined to own stations in five of the biggest markets of the land," said Huggins.

They wanted to dispose of NBC outlets in Washington and Cleveland and they wanted our stations in Boston and Philadelphia.

"This was a complete shock to us. These stations were the heart of our broadcasting operation."

In the course of several months'

Can't Miss

Whatever happens Monday night at 9 on the three television networks, one thing's for sure — the William Morris agency can't lose.

It's one of the rare instances where all three competing shows bear the same agency representation, to witness: CBS' Monday at 9 entry is the Danny Thomas Show. The comedian's WM association goes way back. On NBC it's "Saints and Sinners," out of the Four Star shop, which is pledged to Wm. Morris. And over on ABC it's "Stony Burke," off the United Artists TV beltline. This, too, is handled via the Morris office.

For Abe Lastfogel & Co. there's only one problem—which show do you root for?

NBC Radio In $1,400,000 Profit; 40% Hike Over '61

NBC Radio broke virtually even in '60 (actually, it was a fractional profit), made a little money in '61 and is reportedly going to make two-fifths again as much in '62. Which means that the network will probably net about $1,400,000.

Relative to all those lean years of the 50s and to the fiscal losses still being incurred most everywhere else in network radio, a million four is considered pretty good. Parent RCA and NBC execs seems to feel that, even if their radio network were losing money, they'd be obligated to keep it going, two grounds being that it is important for the corporate ego to have a network and it is also important as the catalyst for the sometimes more profitable radio owned stations. Another reason, say some observers, is that having a radio network still helps cement relations with radio station owners who also own tv outlets.

None of the divisions of RCA are permitted to make separate profit statements and that includes NBC Radio, but it is reported that the radio web is at least 40% better off in terms of net profit than it was in '61 when it made $1,000,000.

Web said recently that it has 189 affils and that the average one takes 90% of the web's nearly 27 hours of weekly commercial programming.

Andy's Xmas Tree Biz

Raleigh, N.C., Oct. 23.

Andy Griffith, a native North Carolinian is going into the Christmas tree-growing business.

Griffith who owns a home near Manteo sent an order to the State Forestry Division for 3,000 red cedar tree seedlings. He plans to plant them for future sale and use as Christmas trees.

Griffith paid for the two-year-old seedlings with a check drawn on a Hollywood bank.

$3,000,000 Nestle CBS Daytime Biz

Nestle has inked a near $3,000,000 daytime deal, starting Jan. 1. Nestle daytime deal comes on the heels of the $800,000 daytime order of U. S. Borax, also starting after the first of the year.

In addition, biz for the first quarter of the new year on the morning minute plan has been perking. Many big accounts in the web's daytime schedule are up for renewal, and the Nestle and U. S. Borax order are viewed as happy harbingers.

Nestle's biz will be spread on the basis of alternate quarter hours in the following midweek shows: "Millionaire," "Password," "Secret Storm," "As the World Turns," and "Edge of Night." In addition, Nestle bought alternate quarter hours in "Mighty Mouse," "Alvin" and Roy Rogers on Saturdays.

Those coming in on the web's morning minute plan starting the first of the year, include Simoniz, Heublein, Adolph's (meat tenderizer), and Sucrest.

NBC COM'L PATTERN ON ELECTION NITE

Each of the six bankrollers been guaranteed six commercial minutes by NBC-TV in the course of the four prime time hours the network's Election Night coverage. But that's only between 7 and 11 p.m. If the coverage continues past 11—which NBC News execs feel will be the case—the sponsors will divvy up additional blurb time.

A sixth of the coverage or six minutes at the minimum went for $150,000. If that wasn't enough of an SRO-cost-per-1,000 gravy train since these election shows have been breaking 10,000,000 Nielsen homes per minute, the bankrollers also have Huntley & Brinkley.

A Nielsen 30-City Scoreboard

The closest thing to a meaningful national projection of the new tv season is to be found in the Nielsen 30-city report for the period ending Oct. 14. This takes into account the entire schedule and represents 50% of all U. S. tv homes.

A National Nielsen projection has just come off the presses this week, but this is for the less-meaningful period ending Oct. 7, which does not account for all new programming and for the most part reflects rating returns based on a single sampling for the new semester.

Based on the 30-market tally, here's how the scoreboard reads:

SOMETHING NEW HAS BEEN ADDED TO THE GREAT COLUMBIA POST-48's!

There's a new look to the COLUMBIA POST-48's—73 top-quality feature films, most of which were produced after 1956, have been added to the original group of over 200 COLUMBIA POST-48's.

And quick as you could say "From Here To Eternity," four of the Columbia Broadcasting System's owned and operated stations, WCBS-TV New York, WCAU-TV Philadelphia, WBBM-TV Chicago and KMOX-TV St. Louis (already happily signed up for the original group) snapped up these new COLUMBIA releases!

Marion Harper's '6 Heads Better Than One' Gets a Chi Playback —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

Announcing an exec personnel overhaul of the Chicago office last week, Marion Harper Jr., chairman of Interpublic Inc. McCann-Erickson parent, said the changes were to "make ourselves more fully competitive with those agencies headquartered in Chicago." In other words, "We plan to get on the ball and quit dragging our midwestern feet."

Execs involved in the announcement included many moving over from other Chicago shops and others apparently moving in an upstairs direction. But the fascinating item, about midway in the announcement, involved the naming of Ammon B. Goodshall, the relatively new senior veep of the Chi office, as acting chairman of the office's new board of management.

While apparently few are asking, "What is a new board of management?" it may be worth investigation. Harper created the new boards, says one spokesman, under the equation that six heads are better than one—management by committee rather than a boss. There are those, of course, who reverse the equation, concluding that one head is often better than six. As one observer sardonically imagined it, "We will now hold the weekly, three-day board of management meeting." And in Chicago, the new board is composed mainly of new execs (five in all), and "the new guys will of course be playing it eagey." Former execs of Leo Burnett, Edward H. Weiss Co. and Needham, Louis & Brorby all hot Chicago shops—moved to McCann in the shakeup.

Under Harper's leadership, McCann has always been heavily committeed. There have been the marketing plans boards, the creative plans boards and the top of the mount plans review boards. In New York offices, the conference rooms for these groups have often had observation booths behind the mirror where visiting execs can watch proceedings through one-way glass. The booths are wired for sound and can facilitate audio taping of the various powwows if anything memorable happens. Perhaps the Chi phenomenon also will be available for observations.

Could be that one of these days, while all the McCann-Erickson exec heads are together, a client will quietly switch his billings to McCann-Marschalk, the little division of Interpublic with a growing creative reputation.

Time's Slanted Salom

Recent Gallagher Report, ad and media weekly newsleter leaped on Time mag Oct. 12 cover opus extolling Madison Ave. and some of its leaders.

Gallagher said the story included a few digs to establish the mag's "objectivity," "but clearly showed that Time knows who butters its bread. Story carefully weighted in favor of print advertising as against tv. Ted Bates and Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample only Top 10 agencies whose heads did not get their pictures on the cover. Ted Bates puts 79% of its billings into tv. D-F-S puts 55%. Robert Ganger of D'Arcy, Henry Little of Campbell-Ewald, David Ogilvy of Ogilvy, Benson & Mather did rate a bio and picture, even though their agencies are not among the Top 10. But Ogilvy puts only 37% in tv, D'Arcy less than 35%. Campbell-Ewald, of course, is the agency for good Time advertiser, Chevrolet."

It's doubtful, however, that heads of Bates and D-F-S would stand still for a Time mug shot and Time Inc. does have sizable video interests of its own.

Grey's Stomach Pat

Grey Advertising's landing of the Diamond salt account this week is in part fulfillment of the agency's extended pitch for a more balanced billings diet—that is, more food biz.

Diamond is the shop's 14th new account for the year, with a billings total from all at $14,000,000.

Same time, Young & Rubicam, which has been having a good new-biz year, has lost the one-third of the Gallo wine account that the Coast office picked up six months ago. Winery spends about $1,500,000 a year. BBDO has the balance of the billings.

Donahue & Coe has been hit hard with losses, the two major defections being the Grove labs and Squib products the shop handled—about a $3,500,000 drop in gross.

London Agencies

London, Oct. 23.

Philip Edgell has been upped to chairman of Notley Advertising Ltd. and Stanley Brooks and Norman Irving elevate to joint managing directors . . . Colman, Prentis & Varley have made two further senior appointments to the marketing and market research department. Tony Lee has joined as senior executive from C. Vernon & Sons Ltd. and Brian Fells, formerly with Garland-Compton, joined the former agency after 12 years experience on the industrial and consumer side . . . Derek Andrews, ex senior exec of the international division of Mather & Crowther, has been appointed deputy manager of the division under Charles Moucrieff . . . Channel Television introduced its first admag program called "Gilding The Lily." It was bought by three local advertisers . . . Hobson Bates and Partners (International) in conjunction with Ted Bates Co. Inc., New York, are opening a full-service affiliate agency in Frankfrut, Germany . . . G. A. Jones has been appointed creative director of Saward, Baker & Co.

With the Station Reps

Papert, Koenig & Lois will be the next agency to go to the big computer for the billing and estimating function. Media chief Bill Murphy says a central clearing org will probably be named this week (it's between SRDS and the Central Media Bureau).

Murphy predicts that the big machines will be SOP for agencies in another 10 years. By then he predicts, they will be replacing not only the clerks of estimating and billing, but possibly also time buyers.

The machines, he says, can do anything—it's a matter of compiling the information to feed them.

Same time, PKL prexy Fred Papert, who is justly proud of the shop's creative rep, wants it made plain that, "we're not a machinery agency." Copy and art will continue to be done by hand.

In line with the growing agency interest in machines, the Association of National Advertisers has published the papers of marketing execs and social scientists dealing with the problem and potential of the computer in advertising.

"The Computer in Advertising," includes the reports made this spring at weekly sessions sponsored by the Central Media Bureau for ad men. Book's intro is by Kenneth C. Schonberg, prexy of CMB.

Briefs: Ronald Gilbert has been named New York sales manager for CBS Radio Spot Sales. Bill O'Donnell has been named head of the reppery's St. Louis office . . . WHP, Harrisburg Pa., to Katz . . . William McGee joins the San Francisco tv sales staff of Peters, Griffin, Woodward.

Bumping of 'Password' For 'Whiplash' Brings Quick Action

Current trend to preemption of the network in a primetime slot for local scheduling has backfired in at least one instance.

WGAN-TV, Portland, Me., yanked the Goodson-Todman quizzer, "Password," from its Sunday night (6:30-7) web lineup and subbed the syndicated adventure series, "Whiplash." Public demand got the web show back along with an apology in the local Press Herald. An ad headlined, "The Password is 'Goof'," carried the following blush from WGAN's program director:

"With amazing candor for one whose judgment is usually infallible, channel 13 program director Bill Wadman has admitted the 'error of the century' in replacing everybody's favorite program, 'Password,' with 'Whiplash.' 'Whiplash' is being removed to the relative safety of a spot following the NFL football game—clearing the way for the return of 'Password' to the channel 13 lineup.

"Wadman, at last report, was enjoying three square meals a day . . . baked, broiled and roasted crow."

Pepsodent Gets Off The Hook on Com'l

Washington, Oct. 23.

In a 3-2 decision the Federal Trade Commission has ruled Lever Bros. is not necessarily phoneying up its Pepsodent tv commercials.

The commission upheld its Examiner Harry Hinkes whose recommendation was appealed by FTC counsel. Commission chairman Paul Rand Dixon and member Everette McIntyre filed dissenting opinions.

Object of the FTC family squabble was a network commercial in which cigaret smoke is blown onto a white plate and then brushed off with Pepsodent to convey the idea the toothpaste can remove tobacco stains from the teeth.

The commission majority said there was sufficient explanation that Pepsodent removes yellow (therefore fresh) tobacco stains but not brown or black longstanding stains to warrant dismissal of the complaint against the Lever freres.

Dixon and McIntyre contended the majority drew too fine a distinction between stain colors for the public to appreciate and therefore the commercials are "deceptive."

Martin Starr, NBC Settle Title Hassle

Hollywood radio personality Martin Starr, who sued NBC-TV and producer Jess Oppenheimer in N.Y. Supreme Court in a show-title hassle, says the case has been settled out of court for an undisclosed sum.

Starr brought suit when the web and Oppenheimer launched the tv show, "Here's Hollywood," the same title as used by Starr for many years on his radio show. Under the settlement, NBC is restricted to use of the title only on tv with Starr retaining exclusive rights to it for A.M.

NBC's tv version of "Here's Hollywood," stripped from 4 to 4:30 p.m., is slated to be axed Dec. 31 for a new Goodson-Todman quizzer, "The Match Game."

'Call Me Stage Door Mike'

Less than 30 feet separate the two stage doors on 54th St. west of Broadway in N. Y. from which emanate 18 CBS-TV shows a week in perhaps the greatest concentration of show biz activity in the east.

From CBS Studio 50 comes the Ed Sullivan show, the Garry Moore show, "Candid Camera" and the Jackie Gleason show. From Studio 52 comes "What's My Line," "I've Got A Secret," the cross-the-board "Password" plus the once-a-week nighttime version, and the cross-the-board "To Tell the Truth," plus the once-a-week nighttime edition.

All of which cues in the network thinking that a lot of manhours could be preserved through the simple expedient of setting up in that 30-foot separation space a CBS Annex for program v.p. Mike Dann, who rides herd on N. Y. originations.

NON-ENTERTAINMENT: ZINGIER

Danny Kaye's 160G CBS-TV Series

Danny Kaye, who until now has played hard to get with only rare appearances on television, has finally succumbed and will do a full hour weekly show next season. CBS moved in fast and grabbed him (prexy Jim Aubrey making a hurried trip to the Coast over the weekend). It thus makes the second major comedic acquisition in recent weeks. A few weeks back, after some frantic intra-network competitive bidding, Carol Burnett was pacted by CBS in a longterm exclusivity. Like Kaye, she'll have her own series next season. Kaye deal reported represents a one-year firm $5,000,000 commitment for the network.

Kaye has more or less restricted his tv appearances to once a year. His third annual special for General Motors is scheduled (via NBC) for Nov. 11. It's a $500,000 package.

Understood the new Kaye hour is pegged at $160,000, making it the costliest weekly 60-minute show in video. Until now the high cost laurels went to Perry Como, whose Wednesday night Kraft series went for $140,000 per week last season. Kaye show will be a 40-week series.

When Ted Ashley, of the Ashley-Steiner agency, revealed Kaye's availability for next season, it sparked a major three-network jockeying to lock up the comic. By Monday, however, CBS had it bagged. What time period goes to Kaye isn't known as yet, although there's been talk that he may wind up Saturady nights 10 to 11. Alternative hour mentioned is Thursday night 10 to 11.

Since Ashley played a key role in persuading Kaye to go weekly, it wouldn't surprise many if another Ashley-Steiner client—Bob Banner—wound up as producer of the series.

Frank De Vol's Doubling in Brass; From Arpeggios to Hamming It Up

A prominent recording exec and bandleader turned actor, Frank De Vol is now the most recurrent name on the ABC-TV programming schedule. He has billing as a featured player on the web's new comedy series, "I'm Dickens, He's Fenster" and also is the composer-orchestrator and conductor of "My Three Sons" and "Our Man Higgins."

For the time being, De Vol is dropping the arpeggios for his new thesping career. "You can't beat the regular 9 to 6 hour and, of course, there's the little extra of residuals." The residuals is something which music scorers know nothing about but which De Vol caught onto quick. As an actor, moreover, De Vol gets as much for his dramatic stint in the half-hour comedy as for composing and conducting for a half-hour dramatic show. He's signed to appear in seven out of 13 "Dickens & Fenster" stanzas. De Vol, incidentally, was not assigned to write the music for the latter series.

A recent artists & repertoire chief for Columbia Records and still a disk artist for that label, De Vol has been dabbling in theatricals since he was a kid. His father, Herman De Vol was a bandleader at the Grand Opera House in Canton, O., in the classic era of burlesque and the young De Vol was introduced to show biz by way a comedian's baggy pants. Interspersed amidst his musical assignments have been bit parts in radio with the old Jack Carson show and assorted film and legit roles.

Before burgeoning as a comic character in "Dickens & Fenster," De Vol did the score for the Bette Davis-Joan Crawford starrer, "Whatever Happened To Baby Jane?"

'Ben Casey' Beats A Bad Mex Rap

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

Carmen Baez, of the Film Bureau, has officially ruled that the "Reception Hall" segment of a recent "Ben Casey" telecast here was not "defamatory" to Mexico.

Earlier reports alleged segment showed Mexicans and their descendents in the Los Angeles area in "miserable and humiliating" form.

The Film Bureau statement said that "neither Mexico nor Mexicans were presented in a bad light in the American television show." While Latin American elements were shown in the episode, Miss Baez said that these were "not necessarily Mexican."

However, incident shows that Film Bureau is on its toes and will move swiftly to ban anything considered offensive to Mexico or its citizens.

ERNIE FORD'S MAJOR SPONSOR RENEWALS

The "Tennessee Ernie Ford" show on ABC-TV which is scheduled to move from 11 a.m. to a noon slot Nov. 19, has come up with two major sponsor renewals for 1963. R. T. French has renewed through J. Walter Thompson and Norge Sales Corp. has come back through Clinton E. Frank agency.

Although 90% sold out at premium rates, the Ford strip has not been pulling the ratings which the web expected when it debuted last April. Hence the upcoming move to a different hour on the daytime schedule.

'Young Dr. Malone' First U.S. Soaper Into Foreign TV

"Young Dr. Malone" is going to Australia on wings of vidtape. This daily NBC-TV program thus becomes the first American soap opera to be taken, as is, by foreign television.

The one-year deal by NBC International with the ETN-HSV network also is a sign that the new web is out to expand its daytime program operation. (NBC has been trying to sell "Malone" to the Aussies for at least two years.)

ETN-HSV, representing five Aussie stations, will shortly begin receiving tapes of the daily half-hour no more than a few days behind the American airing. Web there has been supplied with synopses of all the "Malone" programs done since it began three years ago on tv. That's so Australian announcers can update the scene for their audience.

But the big thing is that the Australians are buying the work of American performers, acting out their roles five days a week in what presumably are locales peculiar to Americans. While another problem is that the Aussie and American accents are as unalike as French and French Canadian, it has been asserted many times in many quarters that the American and Australians are possessed of the same "psyche."

Furthermore, it must be remembered that the Aussies once made a big business out of shipping radio dramas here for American consumption. Some American radio went the other way.

ETN-HSV will feed "Malone" to a tv network consisting of stations in Melbourne, Sydney, Adelaide, Perth and Brisbane.

THE TALK'S ABOUT NEWS AND SPORTS

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

With the '62-'63 tv season off and running, the excitement generated to date seems to fall more on news, pubaffairs and sports entries rather than the bulk of the entertainment shows.

It's an actuality excitement which hits pitches with an astronaut shoot, sporting events (World Series), and an Ole Miss disaster.

The ratings still go to the entertainment shows, but more and more people are talking about "Did you see that one about how much it costs to be elected to Congress?" or "Brinkley did an expose on highway corruption" or "television is getting gutsy, a program on cigarets and cancer." That's what the press is talking about, too. NBC News' trouble with the Berlin tunnel, the U.S. Bureau of Public Road's rebuttal to Brinkley's highway charges, the tobacco industry's response to "CBS Reports." These are the tv-made news developments which the press cannot ignore, no matter what the newspapers' competitive views towards tv may be. More and more the press turns to tv for picture layouts on astronaut shoots, and the "little debates" of Congressional and Gubernatorial candidates on tv are fodder for news copy.

The network news pubaffairs spurt isn't accidental. At CBS News, the team of Dick Salant and Blair Clark, is clicking. At about this time last year, prexy Salant and his aide Clarke were feeling their way, having taken over the helm only six months fram Sig Michelson and John Day. Worry was rife about NBC News' twosome, Huntley-Brinkley. Then there was the Howard K. Smith dispute. Smith since has moved over to ABC-TV and David Schoenbrun moved in as Washington bureau chief from Paris. This Salant-Clark-Schoenbrun team, with hearty support from Fred Friendly's consistent operation, and the rest of the CBS News roster, has helped to put a new gleam in that CBS eye.

ABC-TV's news operation, under the aegis of Jim Hagerty, also has made strides. ABC-TV moved into the new season with the hour-long closeup on Soviet education, a "Close-Up" show which triggered

Colgate's Selloff Beclouding Sales Prospects in '63

A major selloff by Colgate on network television is clouding up sales prospects for the first quarter of next year. Colgate, apparently anxious to make a good cash showing for the fiscal year, has sold off minutes on NBC-TV's "Dr. Kildare" and CBS-TV's "Perry Mason." The ABC-TV web, on which Colgate participates in "Hawaiian Eye" and "Hollywood Special," has not okayed any selloff at this point.

Since Colgate is selling off on top network shows, new advertising coin is tending to pick up these newly opened spots. Polaroid, for instance, has just bought into "Dr. Kildare," where its coin might have come into a tougher programming slot.

While availabilities for the first quarter of 1963 are scattered all over the board, network execs are not pressing any panic buttons. They anticipate the start of heavy buying during November when the new season will have shaken down into a much more sharply defined rating structure.

Unlike Colgate, which makes heavy network commitments at the outset of the buying season, many important advertisers, such as Bristol-Myers, tend to hold off allocating their full ad budgets as long as possible. While such tactics may result in the loss of advertisers' participating on some hit shows, it also permits picking up bargains when the returns are fully in.

Plight of The TV Actor

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

A generally dismal picture of the actor's situation in today's tv market is sketched by Arthur Kennard, veepee of Irving Salkow agency and head of its tv dept.

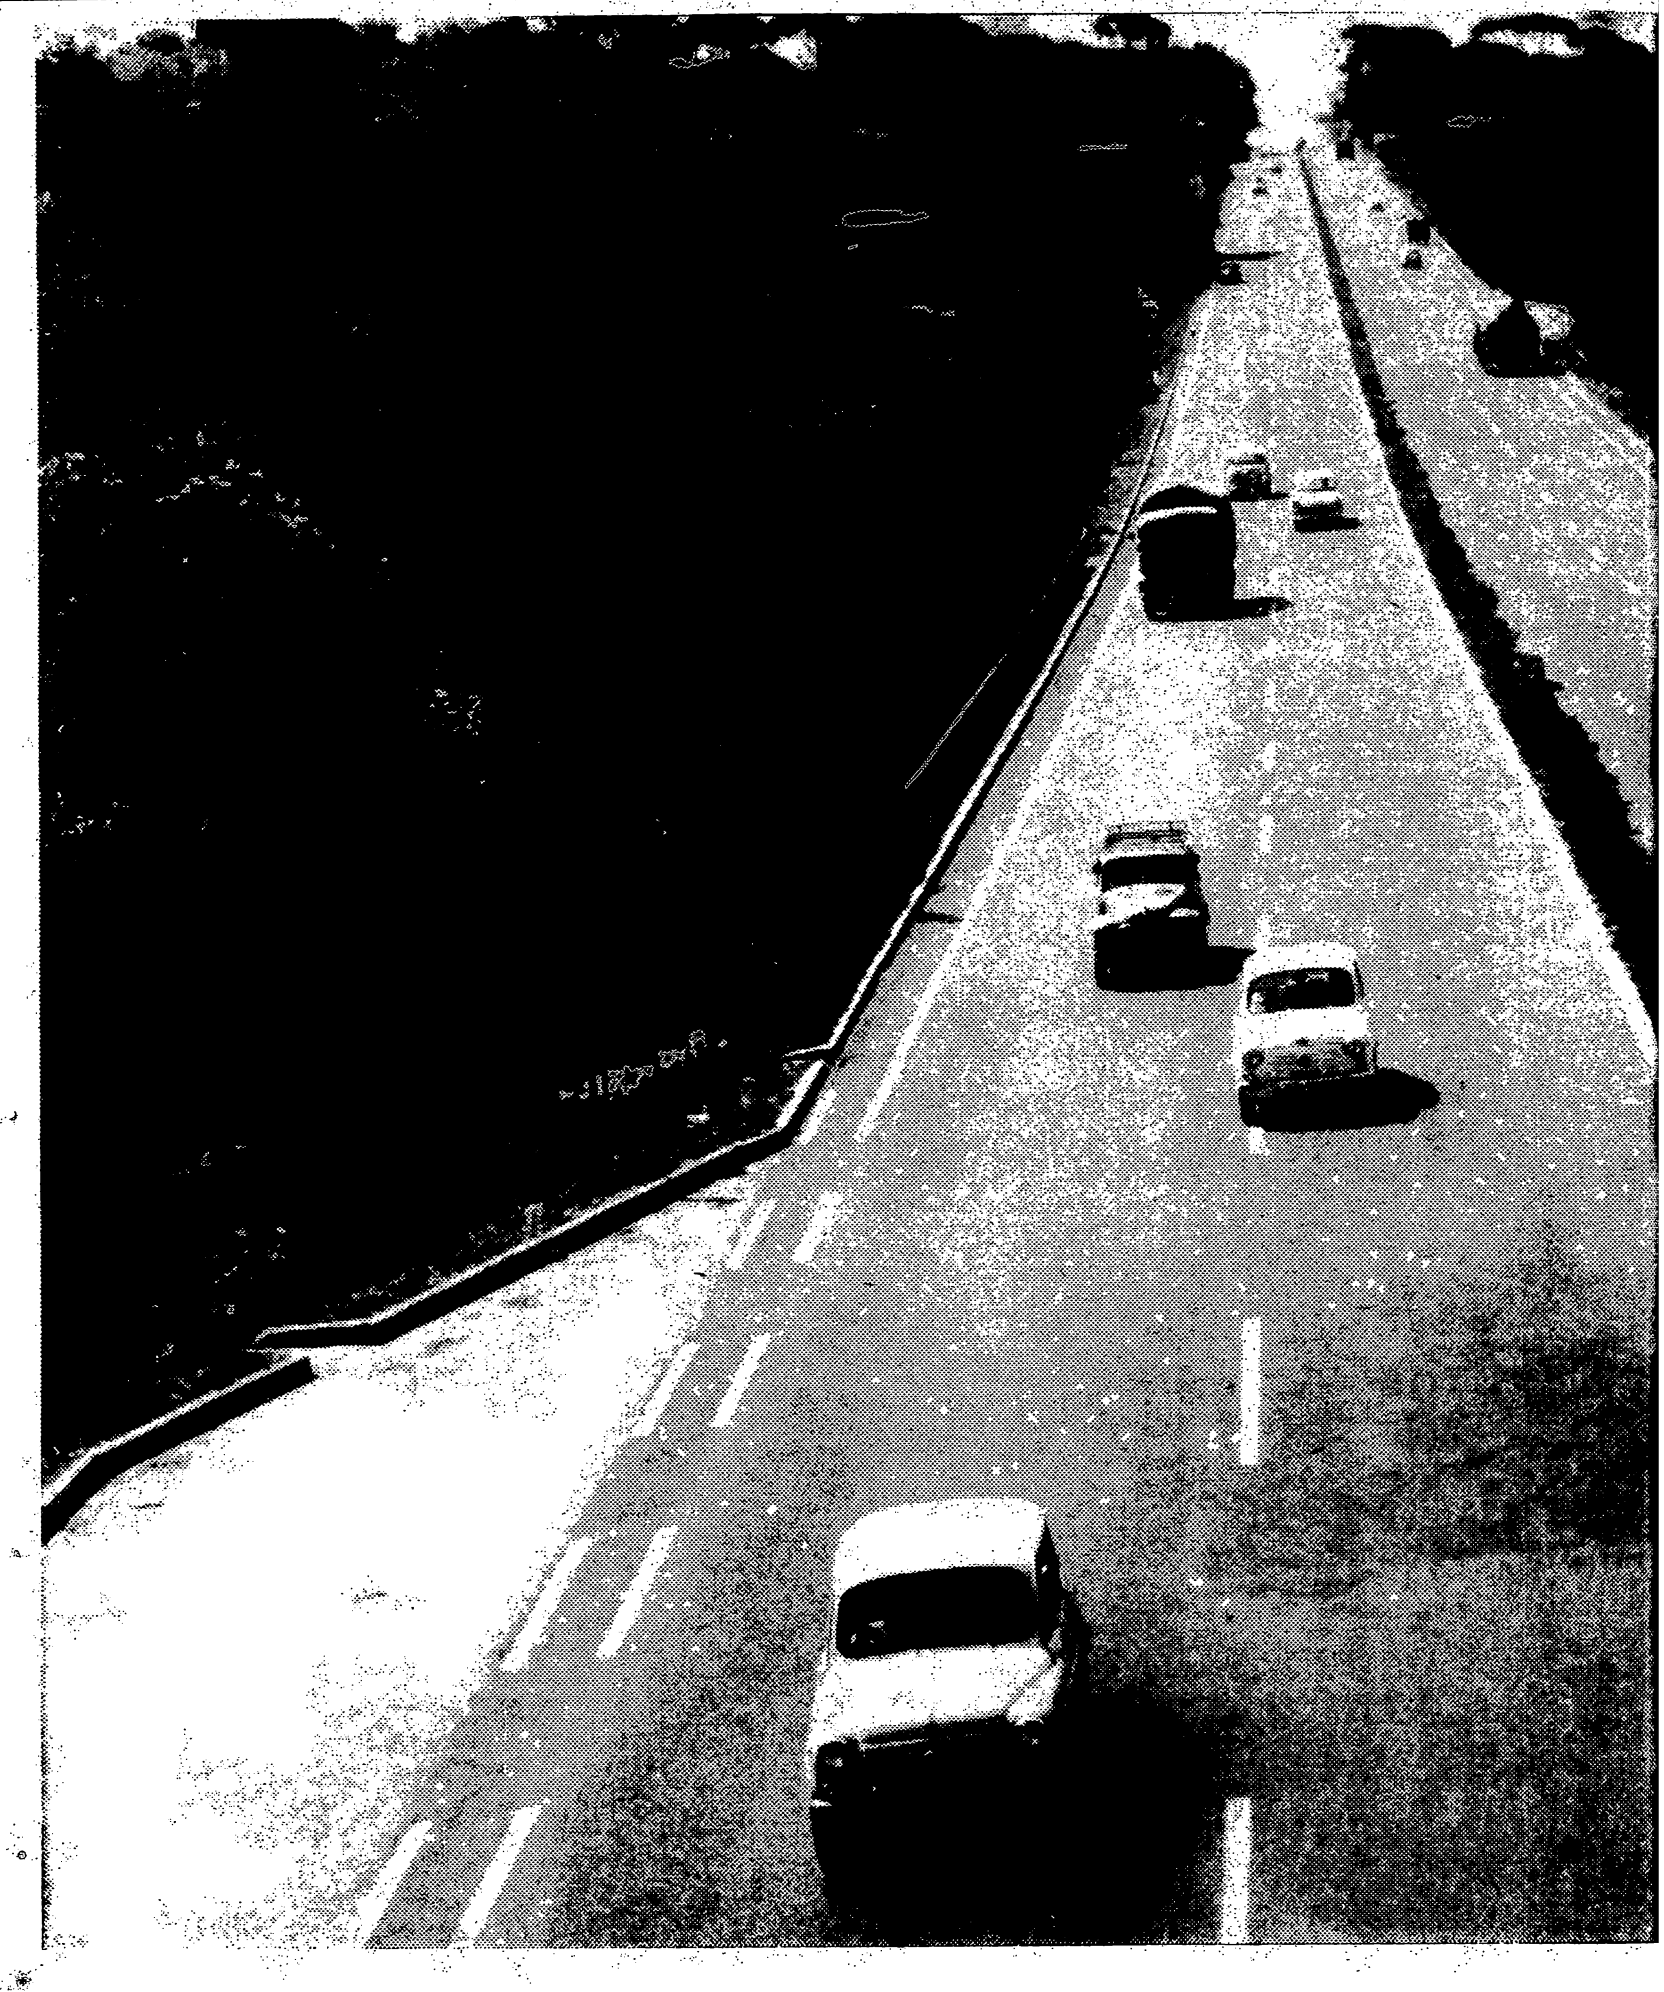
"Pilots," he said, "are currently at the forefront of the actor's thoughts, which can be both good and bad." On the one hand, he noted, these provide a good additional source of revenue; on the other, they usually entail contracts that bind an actor for a year or more, meaning he can't commit himself to anything of any duration until the pilot's producer has exhausted all possibilities of selling it.

Meanwhile, exec pointed out, the thesp might have missed many good longterm deals. Of course, "if the miracle did happen and the pilot was sold, then it could be the biggest thing to ever happen to an actor—especially a feature player."

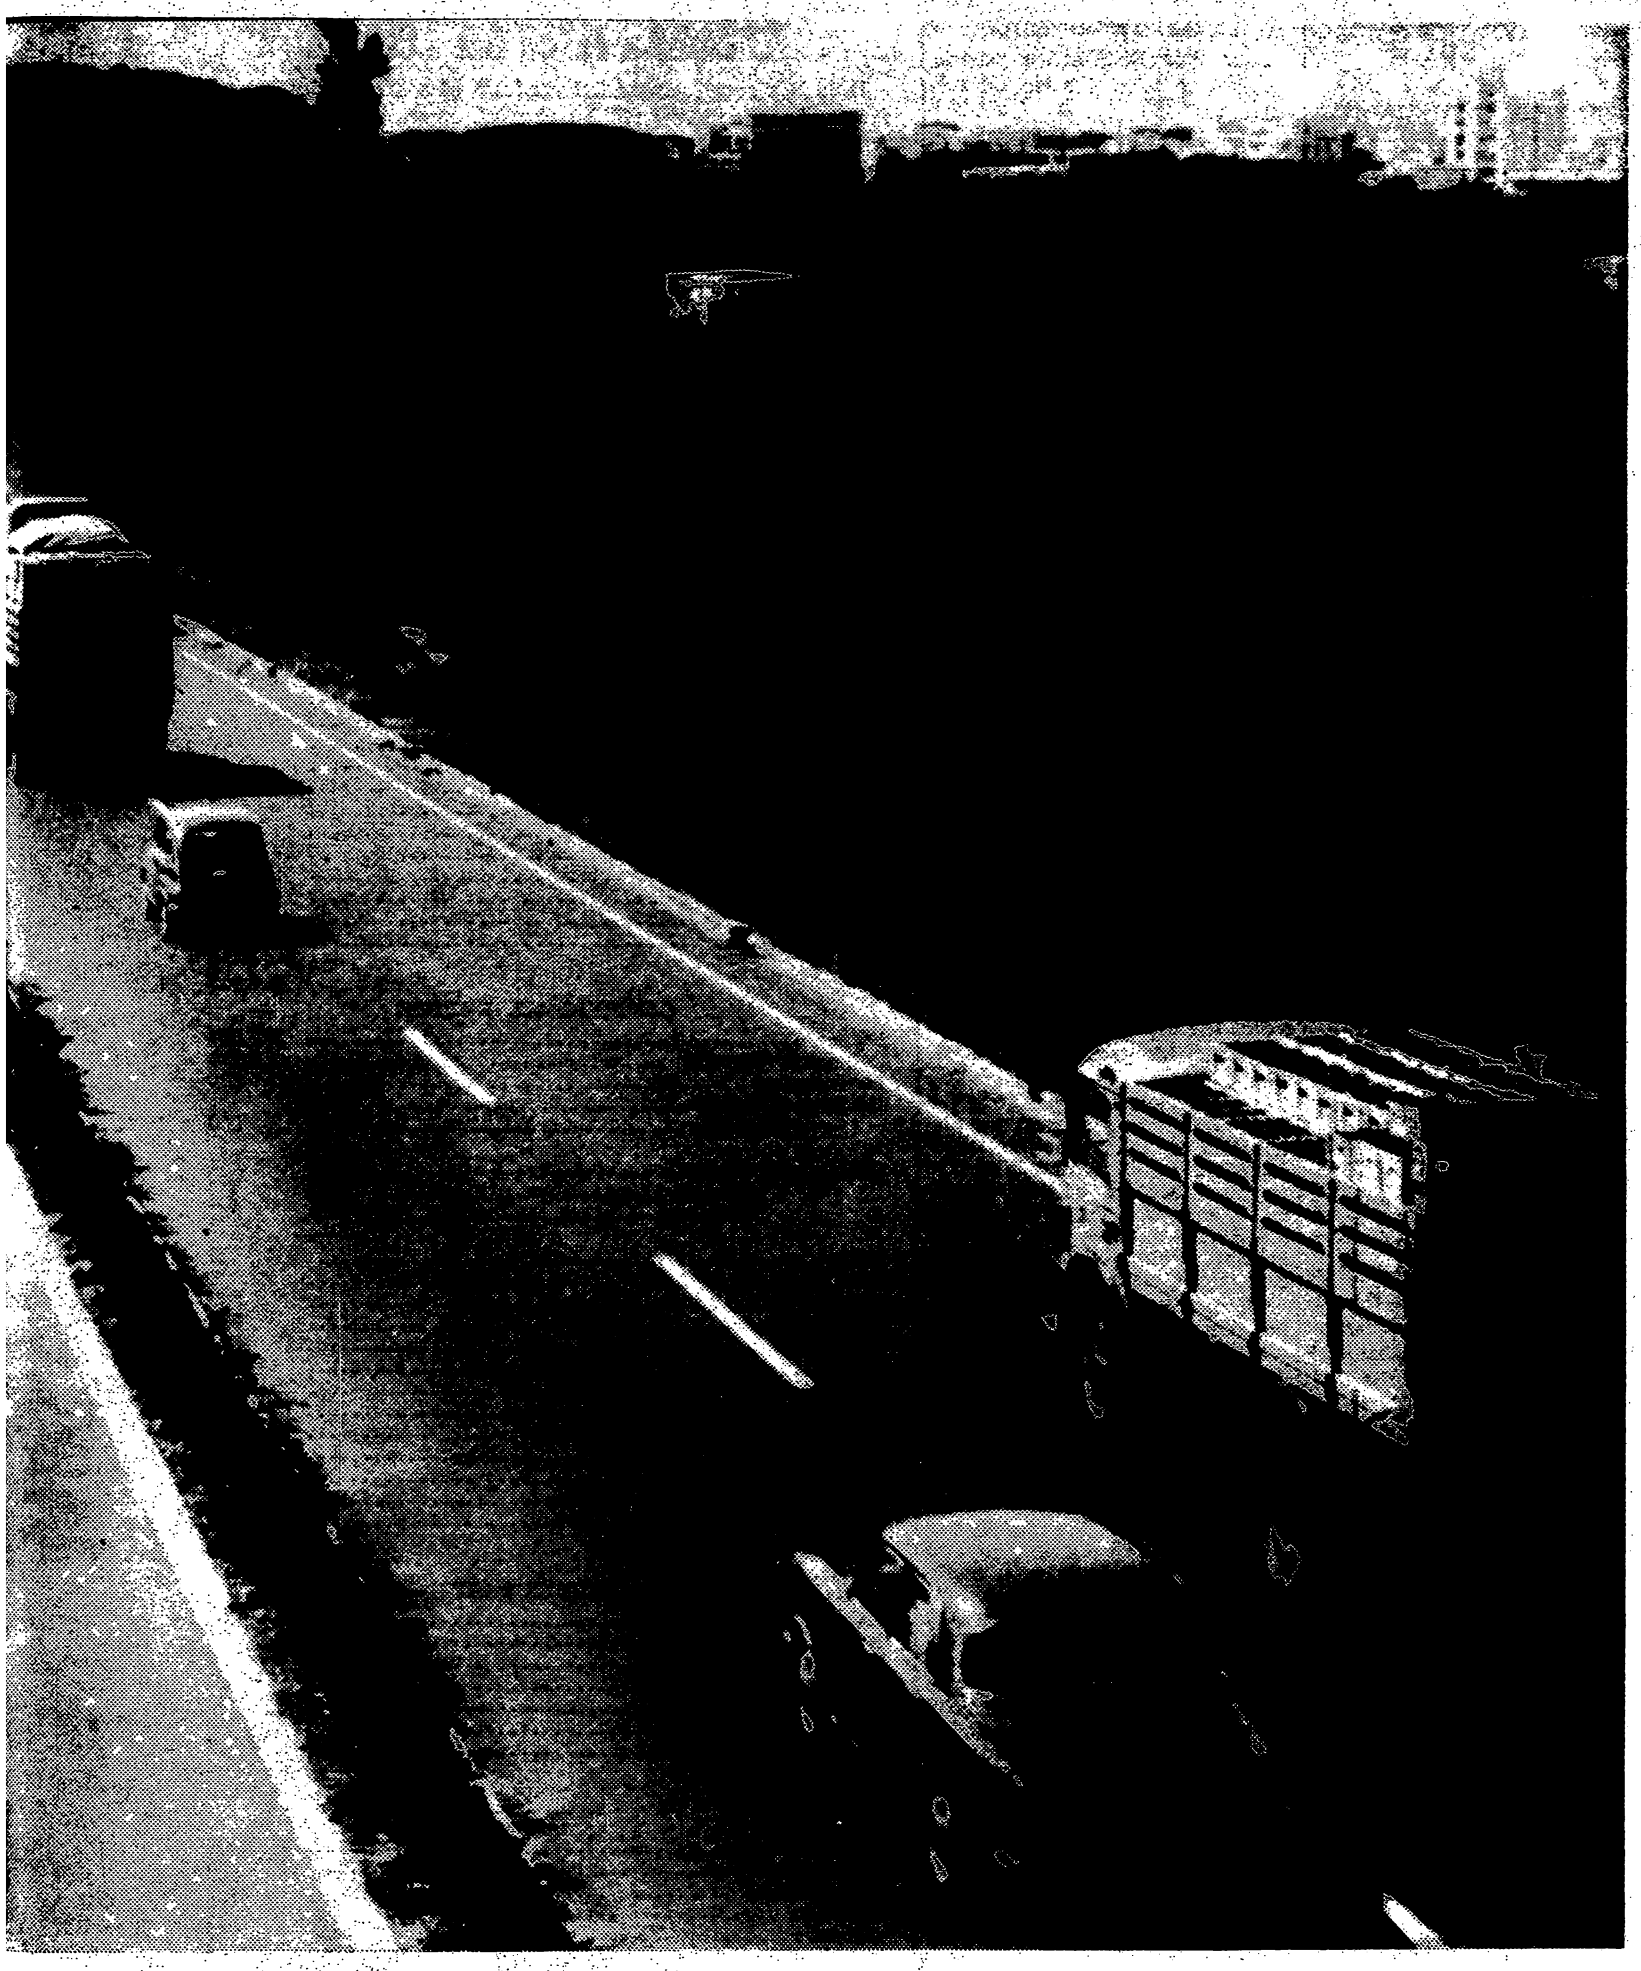
"Trends continue to create a feast or famine condition," Kennard said. "Two years ago any young, blond male six foot or more could walk into any studio in town and come out with a series—everything was being pitched towards the clean-cut, young American god — now everybody is looking for weathered, more experienced Vince Edwards types."

Kennard maintains that it is very difficult to keep an actor's price at its proper level in today's market." It's often a question of the longterm career view vs. day-to-day survival, he says. "Jobs are so scarce that an actor is often more interested in eating money than in keeping his price where it should be. But my advice to an actor is always to pull in his belt one more notch and hold on for a while longer rather than working cheap. What's a producer going to say when you ask $2,000 for an actor who's worked for $750? He's going to say so-and-so got him for $750—so should I. Pretty soon an actor's price is half of what it should be."

"The advent of hour shows has been a blow to actors—as well as everybody else," Kennard said. It's meant fewer parts and more actors to choose from. These large permanent casts aren't helping the freelance player any, either—they cut available roles even further."



Kennard cited "The Travels of Jaimie McPheeters," MGM series to start this fall with 13 regulars and the eight leads in Warner's "Gallant Men" as examples.



One sign of the times is the Salkow agency's recent cut of 18 thesps from its rolls. Claims Kennard: "It takes much more time to do right by a client these days. If we can't do our best for an actor—we'd rather he be with someone who can."

Bumps 'Cheyenne,' ABC Sets 'Dakotas'

ABC-TV will be bringing in a new one-hour western show, "The Dakotas," starting in January as the replacement for "Cheyenne" in the 7:30 p.m. slot. "The Dakotas" is out of the Warner Bros. stable with Larry Ward as star.

Move was dictated by the exit of Clint Walker as star of "Cheyenne." Initially, ABC-TV execs figured to integrate Ward into "Cheyenne" on an alternating basis with Walker so as to run out the full season's string. However, shapeup of the opposition on the other networks indicated to ABC execs that they had a better chance to develop a hit by starting fresh and early with a new show.

TWO-WAY TRAFFIC

The world of television has become increasingly interdependent. Through the exchange of ideas, facilities and material—through the establishment of such associations as the European Broadcasting Union—the major television organisations have created a two-way traffic on a world-wide scale. In a variety of ways, BBC tv has pioneered in this field of international co-operation. In its contributions to Eurovision, for example; in working directly with television organisations throughout the world; in the buying, selling and co-production activities of BBC tv Enterprises. And, finally, through its policy of objectively portraying the world scene, the BBC is proud to be a prominent vehicle on this road to international understanding and goodwill.

Writers Guild, IBEW Claim Storer's WHN Trying to Undermine Unionism

Storer Broadcasting is being accused by two unions of trying to destroy unionism at WHN, the chain's N.Y. station. Union executives believe that Storer twice has made "deliberate attempts to undermine existing labor rights" and that this is part of an overall plan engendered, they charge, at the NAB level last year—to keep stations on the air, making money while allegedly breaking the back of organized labor. Storer has in the past few days taken on two of the big three unions in its N.Y. shop. Writers Guild of America, already striking, and local 1212 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, which is on the verge of striking, each has accused WHN of going out of its way to start a fight and undermine jurisdiction.

In effect, station is charged with asserting in the separate IB and WGA dickers that the union's would have to take management's word that this same management would protect the rights of workers. However, said the unions, WHN's boss John Moler and Storer home office exec Robert Church have insisted in the talks that "most traditional labor guarantees" be moved from future contracts.

WGA, fighting for a contract for five news writers at WHN, went out on strike several days ago and union executives assert that in light of WHN's allegedly intractable position no future negotiating meetings have been scheduled. Union personnel continue to picket WHN's offices on Park Avenue.

Meantime, IBEW's two-year pact with the station expired at the end of September. Late last week, a high official of the local, which represents technicians at WHN, said station's "proposals in effect seek to destroy the union."

"The problem is not our demands," the IBEW exec said. "It's theirs. They say we will have to take their word that they will protect jobs of our members, but they won't put it in a new contract."

The major item in the union's own demands, according to the union, is creation of a pension plan by Storer. "When Loew's sold WMGM (now WHN) to Storer," said the union spokesman, "we lost an excellent pension plan. We merely want a new one from the new owners but Storer says they don't have a pension plan anywhere and won't give it here."

As with IBEW, WGA charges the station of trying to destroy job security. "Newswriters," a union pamphlet says, "can be arbitrarily laid off or discharged without having grievance or arbitration rights, and Storer refuses to include NLRB certification unit description in collective bargaining agreement and refuses to agree to union shop provisions despite employees vot-

WBC Preps Flock Of Radio Entries

Westinghouse Broadcasting is rolling with four new programming entries and four continuing series for its chain of six radio stations, starting this week and continuing through November. Four special shows, each an hour long, are "Chickie, the Cops," a study of crime by Walter McGraw; "Prison Riots Plus Ten," a comparison of penal conditions 10 years ago and today; "Man of the Century," a biography of Sir Winston Churchill produced by Bud Greenspan; and "Twisted Minds," a study of schizophrenia produced by John Reavis Jr.

The continuing series are "America Sings," a history of the U. S. through its music with Eddie Bracken as host; "Words In the News," with Dr. Bergen Evans as host; "Africa, Peace Corps Plus One," an examination of the Peace Corps' first anniversary by Jerry Landay; and "The Voices and Sounds of World War II," written and produced by Greenspan.

Besides being aired on the WBC stations, shows are being offered to other stations on a syndication basis.

Mpls.' Stan Hubbard's Pledge of Allegiance: 'Love Those Two Bobs'

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

The new television season is off to the best start in its history for Stan Hubbard's KSTP-TV, the Twin Cities' NBC network affiliate. And Hubbard is predicting that the current season will be "the greatest ever" for his station. He says he's taking off his hat to NBC's Robert Kintner and Bob Saranoff for the job they're doing.

Hubbard is jubilant because his station has begun the new season in September with "almost a clean sweep" of top ratings among the four Twin Cities commercial and one non-commercial stations.

In September, he points out, Nielsen ratings had KSTP-TV at the top 9 a.m. to noon, 3 to 5 p.m., 5 to 6:30 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. to midnight. The ratings apply to a number of KSTP-TV's own shows along with the network programs.

Nielsen had WCCO-TV, the CBS network affiliate here, leading 6 to 9 a.m. and from noon to 3 p.m.

NAB Will Resist Further Hearings (Like One in Chi)

Chicago, Oct. 23.

National Assn. of Broadcasters prexy LeRoy Collins told the regional meeting of the organization here yesterday (Mon.) that the NAB will actively oppose the FCC if it should attempt to hold public hearings similar to those held in Chicago last spring. (Commissioner Robert E. Lee had recently divulged that hearings are scheduled for another major market after the first of the year.)

Collins said: "The NAB will be glad to join any affected licensee in resorting to any legal recourse which may be available to prevent any such invasion on the rights and integrity of broadcasting." He stated that he does not quarrel with the FCC's right to hold public hearings on license renewal issues, "but I am saying that it should not be permitted to hold a license renewal hearing and call it something else, so that it can proceed under other rules with less safeguards for the interests of the broadcaster.

He termed it "indefensible" for the Commission to bring a group of television stations to a "local sideshow whipping post" when their license renewal applications were pending, as was done in Chicago.

4-Star Syndie Sales

Four Star Distribution reports seven new sales for its off-web packages.

"The Detectives," with Robert Taylor, has been bought by KSMP-TV, Minneapolis, KTAR-TV Phoenix, and KGW-TV, Portland.

"Law and Mr. Jones" has been sold to KOAA-V, Colorado Springs, and KREX-TV, Grand Junction, Colo. "Target: The Corrupters" has been bought by KMSP-TV, Minneapolis.

"Dick Powell's Zane Grey Theatre," sold to KPTV, Portland, is the subject of a promotion booklet being distributed by the syndie firm, touting the award-winning talents of the package's stars and guest stars.

Par Ponders Being Own Syndicator Of 200-to-TV

Paramount Pictures, with its backlog of 200 post-1948 pictures, may decide to go it alone in the marketing of these for television. Par has made no bones about its wanting to sell to tv, and would have sold if the price and the cash were acceptable.

But the syndicators so far haven't put up the guarantees that Par would like to see. Consequently Par is entertaining ideas along the lines of its own theatrical pic distribution to TV. Another major consideration is centered on the premise that an outside buy-&-sell agency would reap profits, as did MCA in past, with the Par backlog, whereas Par itself might come upon these same profits.

There are no conclusions as yet. But the fact remains that a major film company such as Par, which has been so enmeshed in show business for so many years, in past farmed out important (fiscally-important) properties to non-allied interests for the benefit of both (MCA and Par) and perhaps, now, there's no need to farm out.

An angle is that Par already has the nucleus for distribution and sale of pictures to tv with established offices in all key cities. Further, this company was among the first to benefit from tv such as in its operation of station KTLA in Los Angeles.

Meanwhile, it must be considered that Par is in a healthy financial position, doesn't need any more ready cash, and can afford to wait and see.

Another point of major significance is that Par is willing to unload the pictures made after August, 1949, in the first place. (This date, incidentally, is significant because it entails additional compensations to the American Federation of Musicians and other organized personnel; there were no such obligations with the pre-August, 1948 pictures).

Think U.S. Vidfilm Prices Too Low? Some Brit. Outlets Pay $8.50 Per Hr.

London, Oct. 23.

There's a sad, sad tale unwinding hereabouts re the Yank vidfilm distributor who, on a sales-visit to one of the newly-formed independent tv stations, bought a round of drinks and thus spent all the profit he had just made on sale of an hour program to the outlet.

Yarn is not so absurd, either, when it's realized the current rate at some of the smaller regional indies is less than $8.50 per hour. For this amount, one or two of the out-of-town newies can plug into the commercial network for an hour (although they also have to cough up a percentage of their gross ad billings for favor of the network facilities).

At the same time as they offer less than $9 for an hour of program—from wherever it might come — "baby" indies can collect anything up to about $80 a minute in peak time ad billings. With a peak of six minutes advertising allowed in every hour, aforementioned operations stand to coin just under $500 an hour in prime time. To be fair, the little regionals seldom do pull in this much owing to packaging discounts etc., and rates dip steeply out of peak hours.

Foreign film distributors fare a little better from the larger local outfits. Stations the size of a TWW, a Scottish-TV, a Southern-TV, or an Anglia-TV, will all pay $480 a hour, give or take a few dollars. But stations of this size can earn anything up to $1,500 an hour in plug coin.

A distrib who does his homework and figures out whether the deal he makes with a new regional company works out accurately on a percentage-sliderule basis, may feel that the "babes" are being a trifle ungenerous.

While the big-leaguers will pay about 33% of what they are pulling in, their wee counterparts can make 500% more than pay out.

Jerry Lester Wraps Up Two Arrowhead Hours

Comedian Jerry Lester Sunday (14) vidtaped two of his weekend syndicated variety hours for Arrowhead Productions, but the show that will be used to open around the country late this month will not be picked until two more hours are taped.

Guests for the hours already produced are Fran Warren, Bobby Vinton and Rene Taylor and Choo Choo Collins, Tyree Glenn and Jim Pearsal. Upcoming guests include Woody Herman, Vivian Blaine, Nancy Walker, Pat Suzuki and possibly Jane Fonda.

Wershaw-Gould, handling distribution and merchandising, report 15 additional stations—besides the 10 signed for the initialer—have contracts pending screenings of the stanzas now in.

Chi Candidate Forced To Relinquish 'Folksong' Show Until Elections

Chicago, Oct. 23.

Robert C. Cosbey, who has been conducting "This Is Folksong" on WBBM Radio the past four years, has been asked to relinquish his on-the-air work at the station until the November elections are over. Cosbey is a write-in candidate for a congressional seat on the Voters for Peace ticket, and while "Folkson" is an educational entertainment show station manaement felt it might be discreet to give Cosbey the public exposure just in case an equal-time-seeker should read political innuendoes

Cosbey, who is regularly a professor of English at Roosevelt U., continues to write the "Folksong" program for a staff announcer to read.

O'SEAS MARKETS' 23G PER PIC

Profile of a 3-Web Station

Management of KFSA-TV, Fort Smith, Ark., a station that solos its market and presents a three-web program spread, has toted up the production costs of the primetime shows it offers seven nights a week.

Talent and staging costs alone, reports the station, come to $2,333,100 a week. That's exclusive of time and transmission charges. This season, KFSA's lineup offers twice as many comedies as westerns (10 of the former to five of the latter); three variety shows; two quizzers; two dramatic shows; and two mysteries; and one each in the categories of musical drama, musical, adventure and anthology.

CBS, with Saturday night exclusive from Gleason to "Gunsmoke," dominates the station's slate with 16 shows. NBC and ABC have six each.

Off-Web Radio Shows (Real Oldies, Too) Get Syndication Play

There are built-in variances in the sales philosophies of the radio network vs. the reps and syndicators. Now they've split down the middle on a programming concept.

On Sept. 30 CBS Radio dropped its half-hour Sunday drama shows, Suspence," on the web for 20 years, and "Johnny Dollar," on for 13 years.

A couple of weeks ago Charles Michelson Inc. announced syndication of 52 half-hour "Shadow" transcriptions, shelved for well over a decade.

Now Telesynd, the Wrather Corp. syndie division, is hopeful of getting the old "Lone Ranger" shows back on the market. And Prexy Hardie Friedberg and other Telesynd execs are meeting this week to possibly negotiate deals with Macfadden Publications execs for syndicated radio series. Besides the publisher's existing properties, the possibility of new shows based on Saga, Photoplay and True Detective mags will be discussed.

Telesynd is currently distributing the "Lone Ranger" video series and a "Lone Ranger" feature film. In the vaults are more than 2,500 "Lone Ranger" half-hours, enough for a local radio station to strip the show for 10 years. In addition, the company has an hour variety series in production with shows featuring Johnny Green, Steve Allen and Sammy Davis Jr. Screal are cut, with 260 hours in all slated.

Friedberg says that a number of stations have shown interest in the revival of the "Lone Ranger," but a workable deal on residuals must be negotiated with the Detroit union office (show was produced there) on talent and production residuals.

Besides the syndicator interest, a radio exec of a major station rep firm told VARIETY that "any rep will tell you he's delighted with the trend to diversified programming," including new talk formats and revival of the old adventure formats. He said a station man recently asked where he could get a hold of the old radio soap operas.

Station interest is also reflected in the report that the "Shadow" package has been sold in 15, or possibly more, markets.

Transcontinent In 40% Income Hike

Transcontinent Television reports a net income for the nine months ending Sept. 30 of $1,117,862, a 40% increase over the net for the first three quarters of 1961, which was $798,341.

Earnings for the '62 period were equal to 63c per share in 1,766,212 shares of common stock outstanding at the end of September.

This year's statement reflects operations of three stations not included in the income statement of a year ago. The new stations are WNEP-TV, Scranton-Wilkes-Barre, and WDOK-AM-FM, Cleveland, WROC-TV and FM, Rochester, N. Y., sold in September, were included in last year's report and not this year's.

WRIGHT (EX-WPAT) BUYS CALIF. OUTLET

Dickens J. Wright, former owner of WPAT, good music outlet in Paterson, N. J., covering the New York area, reports purchase of radio stations KRE-AM-FM, Berkeley, Calif., by Dickens J. Wright Assoc.'s for $500,000. In a separate deal the group will get the Royal Recording Co., also in Berkeley. Radio sale is subject to FCC approval.

Wright was major stockholder in WPAT, which was bought in '55 for $300,000 and sold last year to Capital Cities for more than $5,000,000.

KRE was licensed in 1922 and recently granted a power increase and now covers the entire Bay Area, including San Francisco and Oakland. Wright said his intentions are to operate the stations under policies he initiated at WPAT.

Latino Combine On Vidpix Buying Stirring Unrest

Some American distributors are reported to be disturbed by the touted formation of a Latino buying combine. The combine, a representative of which is said to be making a tour of U.S. distributors, is said to represent stations in Venezuela, Argentina, Colombia, Peru and Uruguay.

Purpose of the combine, according to the viewpoint of one American exec, is to further deflate American prices in the Latin American market. Puetro Rico, with one station owned by Columbia's Screen Gems and the other stations fat with product secured for dubbing, represents another unrelated problem.

In Argentina, the government has asked American distributors to absorb 50% of the devaluation of the currency there. The proposal is being rejected.

With all these troubles going on, and with the Latino market representing from 5 to 10% of the total foreign biz of CBS Films, that distribution firm, for one, might consider pulling out of the Latino market altogether if the Latino buying combine succeeds as an organization. Under a certain set of conditions, CBS Films topper Ralph Baruch said he "would recommend to my company to forgo the Latin American market."

Okay Chi's 2d UHF

Washington, Oct. 23.

Rulemaking to give Chicago a second UHF channel for educational use was finalized by the FCC. Channel 20 was designated.

Chi's Educational Television Assn., which operates teachvee station WTTW on channel 11 there, had asked for a second channel to meet the area's needs.

SET '62 GROSS AT $55,000,000

In this Telstar year, celluloid remains the key means of the international circulation of U.S. programming. It's a circulation which is pegged on prices (see accompanying rundown in separate story) and which in '62 is expected to gross American exporters about $55,000,000.

Prices, comparing the years '61 and '62, on the whole have remained fairly stable. Continental Europe, still a tough market to sell and still attuned to buy less than a full series, currently brings in more money as a total market. Latin American market, though, has suffered a price dip, comparing the years '61 and '62. Latino markets bringing in less money in '62 are Brazil and Puerto Rico.

Prices secured in Australia are down somewhat, but the Australian market is as bouncy and as healthy as ever, despite internal problems such as country station's coverage areas. Other areas of the world have remained fairly stable in terms of prices.

According to VARIETY's compilation of prices secured for Grade A half-hour vidfilm product in the world market, $23,670 per episode could be secured if every foreign market in the world was sold. That is a theoretical figure for virtually no series has been sold in every tv market of the world. The $23,670 in '62 compares to $22,205 in '61, according to a compilation made by VARIETY in April, '61.

Roughly, hour vidfilm series bring about twice as much as half-hour series, on a per episode basis. Popularity of the hour vidfilm series in the U.S. is reflected abroad. According to one distribution exec, the demand abroad is more for the hour series. It has to be an unusual half-hour series to win immediate popularity abroad. Other quarters, though, insist that the 30 minute form isn't as hard to sell as indicated by some.

The $55,000,000 estimated as the gross of American exporters for '62 encompasses all tv programming product, vidfilms, cartoons, features, pubaffairs, news, etc. It's a record gross, and compared to domestic syndication, the foreign market remains on the incline.

Competition, though, is tougher than ever. More American companies are alert to the potential of the foreign market and are actively pursuing that end of the biz, as domestic syndication remains soft. It's for this reason that for some companies a paradox exists, this paradox being while the total potential gross in the foreign market has grown, competition may slice

ITC Gives Away Shows for Free To Open Up Late Late Station Time; Will Share in Revenue If Sold

ITC's 40% Hike

Independent Television Corp.'s international sales for the first nine months of this year are more than 40% higher than the record-breaking figures for the corresponding period in the preceding year, according to Abe Mandel, ITC's exec v.p.

Mandell's report on sales was issued separately from ITC's proposed plan to open up late night telecasting in the U.S. (see separate story).

In 1961, 43,272 half-hours of 49 different properties were sold in 57 countries throughout the world, representing 35% of the total gross of ITC. On the basis of figures to date, international sales will account for more than 40% of ITC's gross by the end of the year.

In a dramatic move to open up more late night time on stations across the country, Independent Television Corp. is making an offer of free programming. The programming, under the ITC plan, would be free in keeping the station open beyond its normal sign-off time does not attract sponsors.

ITC plan, to which others in the industry are asked to join, calls for the distributor to share in revenues if the late night programming offered garners commercials.

In a letter to stations, ITC says "Everyone talks about the tightening squeeze on air time, but no one does anything about it . . . ITC will supply you—without cost—topflight programming for telecasting in the hours after your normal signoff time.

"For instance, if you ordinarily go off the air at 1 a.m., you can now telecast for 24 hours a day, without added cost. Of course, if you sell spots or sponsors, we expect a reasonable share of your revenue. But as long as the program is on a sustaining basis, you pay nothing.

"We are not in the business of giving away something valuable for nothing. However, we feel the situation demands dramatic and drastic action to break the logjam.

"Our plan is not the complete answer. It is a beginning . . ."

ITC exec v.p. Abe Mandell, who signed the letter, explained that many suggestions for easing the tight time squeeze are offered—more option time; more VHF stations; more UHF channels. "But while the talk continues, air time available to local advertisers and local programming evaporate, until it is now virtually non-existent."

Mandell, in response to questions, said the idea was generated by the few stations which are now telecasting 24 hours a day. He also said his background in opening up foreign markets germinated the idea. Programs would be offered to pioneer stations abroad on a contingency basis until sponsors are attracted, he explained.

Mandell was of the opinion that if 30 or 40 of the key markets in

In Syndication They Also Sell Year in Advance

King Features Syndicate is taking a one-year running head start on the syndication of its new animated cartoon trilogy, "Beetle Bailey," "Barney Google and Snuffy Smith" and "Krazy Kat."

Sales of the package are beginning now, but the deals will call for air debut no sooner than the fall of '63. Al Brodax, director of tv for King Features Syndicate (KFS), explaining the "year-in-advance" approach, said that it allows stations to invest in established cartoon properties and allows KFS to render a polished production job and reduce distribution overhead.

King will produce 50 episodes in each of the three series. It will have a total of 100 episodes completed by debut next fall. The films will be five and one-half minutes each, except for nine longer subjects (eight and one-half minutes) that are getting theatrical exposure over the next year.

Paramount Pictures' cartoon department is doing the animation for the new package, and Paramount handles theatrical distribu-

CBS Films Yanks 'Tongoloa' Series

CBS Films has withdrawn "Tongoloa" as a syndication entry, one of the few first-runners made for this season's market.

"Tongoloa," produced by Colorvision Corp., was withdrawn, according to CBS Films, because of Colorvision's failure to fulfill the program delivery schedule called for in the original contract. The jungle series, footage of which had been shot in Mexico, had been beset by production problems, according to reports from Mexico.

CBS Films unveiled the series at last year's National Assn. of Broadcasters convention in Chicago and wrote some station contracts on the projected color skein. Pilot, according to CBS Films, was supposed to have been available by June 15. CBS Films had a distribution contract with Colorvision. CBS Films now is notifying signed stations of its withdrawal as distributor.

Is It Illegal To Show A Bad Film On Television?

Washington, Oct. 23.

Apparently there's justice in entertainment, although judges of the highest court of the land reserved a fan's cherished right to dissent.

It wasn't that the hallowed halls of the Supreme Court resounded with "boos," but the nine-black robed justices engaged in a light repartee about tv films that kept the capacity audience tittering on the edge of its upholstered seats last week.

The justices, who were still voicing critical restraint after the two-hour hearing, took the evidence home with them to make a ruling in the future.

"Television stations were forced to buy block-bookings of films, each unique copyrighted motion picture," said Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Friedman.

"You mean they were uniquely bad?" asked Justice William J. Brennan.

"Are we to decide whether it's illegal to show a bad film on tv?" asked Chief Justice Earl Warren.

Friedman, in frock coat and striped trousers, did his best to focus the court's attention on Uncle Sam's contention that it was the manner in which the films were sold, "not their age or how good they were" that is bad.

The government brought complaints against six distributors in 1957 alleging they violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by selling only in blocks of "good, average and bad" films.

Defendants in the alleged 17 illegal contracts, valued at more than $3,000,000, are Loew's, Inc., Screen Gems, Inc., Associated Artists, National Telefilm Associates (NTA), United Artists, and the C&C Super Corp.

Friedman told the court the packages were offered in blocks of 26, 50 and 100 films. Television stations, he added, often asked to select only the best of those available and were told to "take the whole lot, or none."

The New York District Court agreed that outright block-booking

THE LAST MAN OUT
With Francis Matthews, Barry Anthony Sagar, Richard Vernon, Jack Melford, Meadows White, Peter Welch, Graham Ashley, David Hargreaves
Producer-Writer: Shaun Sutton
25 Mins., Sat., 5:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

The six-part serial, almost a BBC-TV monopoly over the commercial web, needs to clinch its appeal in the opening segment. "The Last Man Out" had a take-or-leave-it air, competent rather than nerve-stretching, and was noticeably thrifty in its production value.

Time was the war, with the Nazis occupying France. A French scientist had bomb-making secrets, and it was imperative that he should be removed before the Germans forced him to disclose them. Three men were assembled as a kidnapping force, their job to bring the pundit back alive. Chief among them was a sprightly and facetious Lord Tenborough (Francis Matthews), who joined the earnest Captain Stuart (Barry Letts) and the stolid Sergeant Hardacre (Anthony Sagar) in the enterprise.

The initialler was mainly concerned with their training for the job, with a fund of irritating witticisms from the Lord and some minor excitement about the Sergeant, who had no head for heights, and his attempt to climb a cliff.

It was pretty recumbent stuff, and could with advantage have been abbreviated to take in a little of the illicit landing in France to give more impetus to the tale. Also, as indicated, the daredevil nonchalance of Francis Matthews as the leading spirit of the mission didn't quite come off, and the other thesps were reliable rather than scintillating.

Shaun Sutton, who produced his own script, was safe in both departments but could not impart much distinction where none existed on paper. Otta.

WHEN THE KISSING HAD TO STOP
(The Hammer)
With Renee Asherson, Eddie Byrne, Denholm Elliott, Alan Gifford, Philip Latham, Frederick Leister, Patricia Marmont, Barbara Murray, Anthony Nicholls, Martin Sterndale, Peter Vaughan, Alan Wheatley, Douglas Wilmer, Frank Tregear, Louida Vaughan, David Nettheim, Michael Logan, Neville Munroe, Raymond Adamson, Hugh Latimer, Edward Harvey, Richard Williams, Gerald Turner, David Langton, Richard Caldicot, Andrew Lawrence, Peter Elliott, Robert Arden, Walter Glennie
Writers: Constantine Fitzgibbon, Giles Cooper
Director: Bill Hitchock
90 Mins., Tues., 9:15 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

Loud blares on brass instruments preceded this mammoth production, for the commercial web had such confidence in Constantine Fitzgibbon's novel that they decided to adapt it in two parts. This first segment, "The Hammer," is to be followed by "The Sickle" three nights later, making a total of 150 viewing minute.. Fitzgibbon's original certainly lent itself to this lavish treatmeint, for it is densely populated, threads several lives and situations into its plot, and has a powerful theme. The latter predicts a police-state Britain, with armed cops and a suspect government, elected on the ban-the-bomb ticket. These rulers, it was inferred, were wide open to Red bribery and trickery, and the initialler closed with a Russion military contingent occupying a base from which the Americans had been ejected by the British.

The situation was reflected through the lives and amorous affairs of an interlocked group. The orthodox it - couldn't - happen-here viewpoint was represented by Jack Beaulieu (Anthony Nicholls), who shrugged off ideas that Britons could be traitors. His wife, Moyra (Patricia Marmont), was bedding down with Rupert Page-Gorman (Douglas Wilmer), a devious and arrogant politico riding the disarmament movement for his own treasonable ends. And he also canoodled with Antonia May (Renee Asherson), a novelist who was a dedicated campaigner for nuclear disarmament. Also involved were Patrick Clonard (Denholm Elliott), whose on-the-fence attitude to the whole business was resolved when he discovered that Page-Gorman was getting private letters from the Russian secret police chief. And he was in love with Nora (Barbara Murray), whose husband, a Jew, was an establishment figure with confidence in British savoir-faire.

Weaving through the plot and the parties, were O'Malley (Eddie Byrne), a spy in Red pay, and Mark Vernon (Philip Latham), a Foreign Office official who had gone Red and been sent back to Britian by his masters to get information.

Giles Cooper's crisp and confident adaptation kept a firm hold of all these entanglements, and the development, after some initial overcrowding, was easy to follow. Intention was to create a mounting tension of unrest and menace, and, on a superficial level, it succeeded. Bill Hitchcock's direction was first-rate, handling the large resources with skill, although some of the exterior film — of a police raid on Soho vice and a Trafalgar Square rally riot—had a fabricated air.

Treated as a glossy bit of prophesy, without much reality and relevance to current issues, this opener was entertaining, and certainly held its audience for the final part. But, by linking ban-the-bomb believers so consistently with pro-Russian tactics, it roused serious doubts about its honesty. Frederick Leister, for example, played a woolly academic who fell for Russian promises like a ton of bricks, and the character seemed a parody of a famous living British nuclear disarmer. Thus the piece would have offended many local viewers, and was unfair to many men of integrity.

Thus, it was a superficially entertaining occasion, without the horrific content of Orwell's "1984" or a tithe of its imagination—and somewhat cruel and one-sided in its implications. Otta.

WINNING WIDOWS
With Peggy Mount, Avice Landon, Charles Hill, Reginald Green, David Stoll, Edna Petrie, Jeanette Landis, Norman Chappell, Bernard Cribbens
Producer: Alan Tarrant
Writers: Sid Green, Dick Hills
30 Mins., Friday, 9:15 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from Birmingham

Friday night is comedy night on British television with both the commercial web and BBC-TV wading in with two yock shows apiece. "Winning Widows," which has made the change from Saturday to Friday at 9:15 p.m. follows the Lucy-Desi "Comedy Hour" on the indie web and opposes BBC-TV news and an outside broadcast spot.

Despite the considerable audience accruing to the "Widows"—played by Peggy Mount and Avice Landon—as it lays back-to-back with "Comedy Hour" and "TV Playhouse," the show has kept to the format tried out in the last season. It falls somewhere between slapstick and domestic comedy, and, relies almost solely on its star, Peggy Mount. Actress, of no small talent, here used her main comedic asset—a powerful larynx—to just the right point, though there's always the danger of the gimmerick being overworked.

Scripters Dick Hills and Sid Green, came up with a not-very-inspiring situation involving ghosts, vicars and spiritual mediums which proved a tired laughgetter.

Sagging situations could not be saved by the sterling efforts by producer Alan-Tarrant and the cast —especially guestar Bernard Cribbens. Watt.

IT'S A SQUARE WORLD
With Michael Bentine, Dick Emery, Frank Thornton, Leon Thau, Len Lowe, Bob Todd
Producer: John Street
Writers: Bentine, John Law
30 Mins., Thurs., 8:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Breaking away from conventional comic formulas, this enterprising show returned to the fall schedules in so-so form. Its live wire, Michael Bentine, depends on visual gimmicks and absurd situations to build up a string of crazy sketches. Chief drawback of the initialler was that the verbal fireworks rarely went off.

Bentine had plenty of good ideas. He swiped at such targets as a civic function, an expert lecturing about fish, an Equity meeting, and military routine. They all started well, but failed at the finish for lack of an unlifting punch-line. These blackout skits that really blacked out. Upshot was that the remaining yocks generally came from the slapstick, rather than the wit.

Bentine himself has trimmed away many of the bizarre disguises and voices that used to be his forte, and the bare personality in itself wasn't hilarious. He was ably assisted by Dick Emery, who scored in dame's clothes as a Mayoress and elsewhere fizzed to good effect.

John Street's production was ingenious, and the items hurtled along at a fine pace, none outstaying their welcome. If the script can be tightened so that it cracks home the end-lines, the series will continue to win plaudits. As it was, its possibilities amused more than its achievement. Otta.

HERE'S HARRY
With Harry Worth, Deryck Guyler, John Sharp, Geoffrey Denton, Edwin Apps, Jack Woolgar, Joe Gladwin, Doris Gambell, Alick Hayes, Leslie Clark
Producer: John Ammonds
Writers: Vince Powell, Frank Roscoe
30 Mins., Mon., 8 p.m.
BBC-TV, from Manchester

Harry Worth, a bumbling comic with a neat line in non sequitur, returned for another 12 weeks with an opener that was average without splitting any sides. Worth's penchant is to misunderstand every remark that's made to him, and thus bring every situation into a state of utter confusion. Which is not a bad beginning for an idea.

In this one, he was put in charge of a local car-rally, got involved with the organizers of the Monte Carlo affair, who thought he was a participant, and took a driving test to qualify himself, failing miserably. The plot made a fine framework for Worth's inconsequential idiocy, and only faltered when the script forgot that the strength of getting the wrong meaning depends on the error being plausible in the first place. It did not always remember this basic premise, and tended to annoy fitfully on this account.

But the skein should find its fans loyal, and Worth is, in fact, an agreeable comedian, helped by an accomplished team of feeds, of whom Deryck Guyler was the most polished. John Ammonds produced efficiently, and the yocks came at a decent rate. Otta.

RAISE YOUR GLASSES
With Arthur Askey, Alan Melville, Pip Hinton, David Kernan, Molly Weir, Greta Hamby, Josephine Blake, June Smith, Luis Alberto del Parana & Los Paraguayos, Harry Rabinowitz orch
Producer: Bryan Sears
45 Mins., Sun., 7:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

The professional mating of two highly diverse comic talents gave a promise of spice to this new fortnightly skein. Arthur Askey, ebullient and broad in approach, stems straight from the music-hall tradition; he has humor, rather than wit. Alan Melville, revue scribe and deft impersonator, has a sharper vein of satire at his best, although he seems determined to believe that the pun is the highest form of art. The mixture was rather like beer and brandy, and only fitfully appetizing. But there was a constant expectancy about the flavor, and it may easily take hold in later segments.

The show, somewhat scrappily produced by Bryan Sears, kicked off with an establishing sketch, with much mispronouncing of French by Askey and acid corrections by Melville. The latter also revived a familiar item about the patient going to a psychiatrist, accompanied by a near-stripped blonde who was invisible to the medico.

More risible was a takeoff on a tv lecture about the Battle of Hastings, with eruptions from Askey. And Melville scored with a series of bewigged imitations of the panel of BBC-TV's "Juke Box Jury" and other tv personalities.

Occasional ditties were interpolated by the pert Pip Hinton and the able David Kernan, sometimes accompanied by a couple of leggy terpers. Here again, the approach veered uneasily between the straightforward and the parody and wasn't certain enough in its aim.

The opener was thus bitty and, on the whole, unsatisfactory. But the coupling might easily jell, for Askey and Melville worked sympathetically together. More preplanning in Melville's script would bring results. Otta.

Foreign TV Followup

Armchair Theatre

ABC-TV's efficient and enterprising drama skein, "Armchair Theatre," came up with a taut and tantalizing item in Robert Storey's "Dead Letter." Idea was that two married couples gathered for tea, after burying the men's brother. Although they hadn't spared the time to see him in his dying years, they expected to share in his posthumous loot. Thee dead man's housekeeper, Mrs. Kay (Gwen Cherrell), read them a letter he'd written, asking their forgiveness. But it made them suspect that the money might have been left to the housekeeper.

Rest of the ingenious plot showed the quartet trying to do the woman out of the money. She was implacably honest, and confessed that she had married the man on his sick-bed to give him comfort. Christ (Brewster Mason), more grasping of the brothers, tried to persuade Mrs. Kay to sign a document renouncing her interest in the money, but Stan (Laurence Hardy) prevented it; he had discovered that his own waspish spouse had had an affair with the dead brother, and wouldn't touch his money.

Within the hour's compass, "Dead Secret" continued to intrigue and hold the interest. William Kocheff's direction was compelling, its only fault a tendency to exaggerate reactions, so that some of the thesps gave the impression they had strayed from a cornier melodrama. Said thesps were, however, otherwise fine. Gwen Cherrell was moving as the loyal and trusting Mrs. Kay, making a telling contrast with the money-grubbing relations. Brewster Mason impressed as the coarse Chris, and Laurence Hardy, torn between ambition and integrity, finely took his big moment when he discovered his wife's infidelity. Ruth Dunning and Patricia Burke, with less complex characters, took their chances, despite the tendency to over-emphasis is in the director's conception. Otta.

Sunday Night at the Palladium

French disk bigtimer, Johnny Hallyday, was the star guest of this "Sunday Night at the Palladium" segment from Associated TeleVision, and did little to justify his fare. Such leg-shakers are difficult to judge, for their knickerbocker following isn't too demanding. But, even on this level, Hallyday's intense and raucous attempts at beat numbers couldn't stand comparison with the best American or British hollerers, and his billing made his faults even more obvious. After "Bill Bailey," he essayed "I Got a Woman," as a pale copy of the Ray Charles version, went into a spiritual "Shake the Hand" which would have closed a mighty lot of churches in the South, and ended with a twist number in French. The sounds emitted were loud, but vague in intonation, and Hallyday's accompanying group, the Golden Stars, added to the din without giving it much meaning.

Rest of the offerings compensated. Los Machucambos, also first-timers over here, scored with a zippy vocal and instrumental item, preceded by a haunting "Esperanza." The combination of one female to two male voices gave color, and the guitar-twanging had verve and the right exotic impact. The show was launched by the click trampoline act of the Schaller Brothers, who brought some good comic touches to the somersaults, and Mike & Bernie Winters purveyed slick double-talk comedy, proving that they are one of the best acts of their kind in the land.

Pamela Devis directed the line in lively routines, and Norman Vaughan began to overplay his nervous mannerism as emcee, otherwise garnering his fair share of yocks. Jack Parnell's band backed safely, and "Beat the Clock" deserved another minute, so that two prizes can be won at a sitting. Alan Tarrant produced without much enterprise; he might try and dispose his cameras for the odd unusual shot. Otta.

WHN

ing unanimously for union representation by WGA."

WGA has also charged that Storer "offers $75 per week which is less than half that paid union newswriters at the other radio stations in N.Y.C. It is also unwilling to pay customary shift and program differentials or a full day's pay for working on holiday or days off."

Union offers as "absolute proof" of Storer's alleged attempt to destroy unionism within WHN's walls another Storer demand: Lunch-hours be eliminated, forcing writers to work at least seven and one-half straight hours. Union did say WHN was willing to let the writers eat at their desks.

After hearing that Storer was, for all intents and purposes, being charged with trying to cut away at unionism, WHN's Moler said: "We have absolutely no intention of undermining unions and their purpose . . . I don't think it's right to talk in detail about our proposals to the engineers, but I'm sure they are not unhappy. We are simply asking for more flexibility in our contract but we intend to guarantee job security."

IBEW seeks to retain the job security provisions in the old contract. "I suppose they'd like the contract the way it is now," Moler admitted.

Some obervers believe that even if IBEW follows WGA onto the street, WHN is banking for aid on its new affiliate contract with Mutual Broadcasting. News via MBS, which has separate studios and its own personnel, could conceivably relieve the strain caused by an extended strike by at least two unions. It is understood that the AFTRA announcers who are crossing the picket line refuse, however, to "tear" their own news copy from the wire service machines. They'll read it, "because they have a contract in force with WHN," said one man, "but somebody else has to pull it off the machine."

In short, it looks like the unions, fearing that the various "acts" of Storer compromise an attack on union jurisdiction in general, are beginning to seek each other for comfort and possibly concerted action in the near future.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Bell Telephone Hour

The ominous tones of the Cuban crisis played obbligato to a melodious "Bell Telephone Hour" on NBC-TV Monday night (22). Twice during the show, NBC correspondent Edward Newman cut in with bulletins about the cold war front. These break-ins had, and will increasingly have, a chilling character.

But there was time enough for the completion of this superb stanza, the second of eight "Bell" specials due this season. It was a production marked by excellent taste in decor and repertory and showcasing a crackerjack roster of performers in the pop and long-hair idioms. It was fashioned into a four-act offering, each with a distinctive style.

Robert Goulet, who also hosted, and Barbara Cook opened the hour with a bright rundown of Broadway showtunes, including "What Kind of A Fool Am I," "In Our Hideaway," "Nobody Told Me," and others with support from a large troupe of dancers and singers. Pianist Claudio Arrau changed the pace sharply with a rendition of the third movement from Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto."

The second half of the show was made up of two brilliant sequences. Carla Fracci and Erik Bruhn starred in a moving adaptation of the "La Sylphide" ballet while Cyril Ritchard and Martyn Green closed the hour with excerpts from Gilbert & Sullivan, highlighted by Green's tongue-twisting "A Modern Major General" and a Ritchard song from "The Mikado."

Du Pont Show of the Week

The Berlin wall—that dramatic monstrosity separating the east and west—was revisited as a tv theme in Sunday's (21) outing of the "Du Pont Show of the Week." More than a wall, no matter how dramatic, is needed for a drama to come alive, though.

Title of the outing was "The Betrayal," a teleplay by Ernest Pendrell, announced as being based on Joseph Conrad's 1911 novel, "Under Western Eyes." Judged as a separate entity, "The Betraval" was a mixture of melodramatics, spying, police state skullduggery, and cardboard people.

A fine cast was assembled for the NBC-TV hour, done in color. Franchot Tone played the relentless, suspicious top East German police inspector, Maureen Stapleton, an ex-Communist, turned anti-Communist and leader of the East German underground through the wall. There also was Margaret O'Brien, John Abbott and Blanche Yurka.

The biggest role went to Burt Brinckerhoff, who portrayed a non-political student in East Germany, a young man who was pulled by fate into playing an active political role despite his wishes. He flip-flops in character development from informer to anti-Communist.

The plot was there; so were the elements of suspense. There was even an attempt to introduce a lively beatnik atmoshpere in an East German student cafe, with singing and twist dancers, snapping their fingers as in "West Side Story." The whole thing, though, was derivative rather than original and the characters never had the magic of theatre blowing life into them.

Jack Smight as the director and Lewis Freedman as the producer share in this abortive attempt.

Horo.

Jack Paar Show

Jack Paar came up with an amusing stanza last Friday night (19) on NBC-TV, gambling heavily on some unpredictable verbal capers by Jayne Mansfield and Zsa Zsa Gabor, two wellknown symbols of intellectual femininity. This sector of the show was a direct throwback to Paar's "Tonight" outings in which the gab flowed without let or hindrance, and if there were laughs, that was so much velvet. In this case, the cup runneth over and a young comic, Woody Allen, who was billed to appear, was axed from the show accompanied by Paar's profuse apologies.

Paar buttressed this session with the booking of Gordon & Sheila MacRae, a couple of slick pros with a surefire song and comedy routine. This long tv turn skillfully interlaced some balladeering with some clever takeoffs on the present White House occupants and a solo parody of Dinah Shore by Shiela MacRae.

After a film clip of the Harlem Magicians, a zany basketball combo at work, Paar brought on Miss Mansfield with an accompaniment of gags which she inescapably inspires. Paar, for instance, commented that Miss Mansfield's attempt to build a new new nonsexpot image was like "trying to hide a parachute." With the entrance of Miss Gabor, Paar enjoined both gals "not to inhale at the same time" and then let them go at each other in a sharp-tongued hen-fight about men, money, marriage, etc.

At the windup, Paar said that the following week's show would be suitable for the kiddies to look at.

Jackie Gleason Show

At this point Jackie Gleason's "American Scene Magazine" needs a tough editor. The edition on CBS-TV last Saturday (20) rolled off with a load of predictable blackouts, old jokes and tired sketch ideas that a more discriminating editor would have sent back for rewrite or rejection-slipped completely.

Even Art Carney, Gleason's stalwart second banana, couldn't help him pull through the "Honeymooners" sketch. It was pegged on the couple's first tv set and the subsequent destruction of same by their "Mr. Fix-it" neighbor, played broadly by Carney. It was an idea that should have been left in the tv graveyard and the Gleason-Carney tandem (Sue Ann Langdon had little to do in this one) was lost from the start. The other major sketch based on Gleason's "Joe The Bartender" characterization was silly and not helped at all by Frank Fontaine's mugging up of an imbecilic character called "Crazy." The vignettes in "The American Scene Magazine's" news roundup was wrapped up in a series of blackouts that lacked originality, but at elast they passed quickly.

The show started off briskly enough with a June Taylor choreographic bit out of Busby Berkely's old Warner Bros. musical and a snappy demonstration of the teeners' current clack-stick craze but it was downhill after that except for a midway song interim by Tony Bennett who gave the hour its only lift with renditions of "From This Moment On" and "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

Dialogue

Moderator Brian O'Doherty asked the right questions on tipping, but to the wrong people because restaurateurs Toots Shor, Vincent Sardi Jr., Danny Stradella (Danny's Hideaway) and Max Asnas (Stage Delicatessen) are no authorities since, perforce, they overtip. That goes for celebrities—again O'Doherty couldn't get any invidious information—because the names are also marked men. Shor pointed that up in quoting Jack Dempsey with whom he shared a 45c cab ride and the champ gave the driver $1, later observing to Shor, "See, how much money I'd save by not being a celebrity."

The bonifaces generally conceded that bum service should be "stiffed" but that 15-20% is a "good" tip. The banter was light but not particularly informative since the hosts were nice-Nellie about "good" tables although Stradella admitted he solves that by having a special "Cub Room" in his establishment. Sardi was the realistic restaurateur on the paucity of good culinary technicians because either (1) the Europeans now get paid well overseas, so coming to the U.S. is no longer the lure, and (2) accenting a pitch for a tradeschool curriculum in the metropolitan N.Y. educational system on which the Mayor has been approached, but which is still in the do-nothing stage. Shor accented that "more and more American boys are going in for pro cooking," and cited Irish-American (a name like Scanlan) being the head chef at the Waldorf.

"Around New York With Knife and Fork" was a pleasant Sunday-at-4 half-hour via WNBC-TV, with English-brogued O'Doherty a good-

LEGACY OF LIGHT
With Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath, Myron McCormick, Hurd Hatfield, others
Exec Producer: Michael R. Santangelo
Producer-Director: Charles Friedman
30 Mins., Sun., 11 a.m.
WOR-TV, N.Y.

This Westinghouse Broadcasting series, vidtaped at KYW-TV, Cleveland, opened in New York on WOR-TV with a stanza that had an excellent dramatic segment from the prolog of Goethe's "Faust."

Each of the 10 half hours relates one of the 10 Commandments to a classic work of literature ("Faust" and the first). In the scene where Faust makes his contract with the Devil, the late actor Myron McCormick, in his last role, turned in a most effective portrayal of Mephistopheles—a subtle and knowing interpretation of the highly dramatic scene. He was ably supported by Hurd Hatfield as Faust. Direction was deft with eerie stage effects that worked well and a sparsely dramatic setting (tv directors are Dominick Ortuso and John Potter.)

Rabbi Maurice Eisendrath, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, with guest Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld of Fairmount Temple, Cleveland, delved the meanings of the Goethe classic for a good wrap-around of the dramatic seg.

Other stanzas in the series, most of which were adapted by producer-director Charles Friedman, include "Oedipus Rex," "Anna Karenina," "Kings of the Dove," "Everyman" and "Hedda Gabler."

CULLIGAN WATER CONDITIONER
WCCO-TV, Minneapolis (tape)

Newspapers, television and radio have devoted much attention to the recently ended National Farmers Organization's strike which had members and some other soil tillers withholding cattle from the markets. Because of its possible effect on meat prices and in view of all the current agitation regarding depressed agriculture's plight and the fact that the strike involved farmers' problems and difficulties, the development had added significance.

Therefore, it was very much in order for WCCO-TV, CBS affiliate here, to make this NFO strike and farmers' problems the subject of one of its once-a-month sponsored documentaries. By virtue of each program's excellence, the series has been building an increasingly large audience. This is an agricultural region so that "Voice of the Farmer" was particularly apropos and interesting.

Each of the series' efforts has been timely and engrossing. This was one of the best, because there was so much action and human interest crammed into it. Again all of those having a hand in the production merit praise. That goes for producer-writer Jim Dooley (who also did some of the interviewing), director Bill Matchnek, interviewer Pete Hively, and, in this instance, the three station cameramen—Bob Sjohholm, Gordon Bartusch and Les Solin. Also, Dave Moore performed his usual expert narrating job. As for Dooley, he impresses as topnotch in his present capacity.

This documentary presented the farmers' side of what's deemed to be the economy's injustice toward agriculture. It did this via interviews with former Minnesota Gov. Orville Freeman, NFO president Oren Staley, a number of individual farmers, several of whom didn't approve the NFO strike, and Dooley's own observations as voiced by Moore.

Lively action came from shots of the picketing and near rioting at the South St. Paul stockyards when "strikebreakers" brought in their cattle, farm scenes, Staley gatherings, the business section of orning, Ia., a town of 2,500 population where NFO has its headquarters, and NFO meetings.

Staley said that the NFO's goal is to stabilize the markets and prices for farm products, especially cattle, and that while the strike didn't bring desired results it has started the ball rolling in the right direction.

44th NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE SHOW

Naturally there are millions of people who are interested in seeing the '63 car models for the first time, but NBC News should have been more judicious than to put its stamp on an unadulterated 60-minute plug, no matter how much business the major American automotive companies bring annually to television. Sunday night, from Detroit's new Cobo Hall and in color, NBC-TV carried on a fashion show for which the copy must have been supplied by Ford, General Motors, Chrysler, American Motors and Willys, because, even in the hands of professional newsmen like Red Mueller and Chet Huntley, who normally are allowed to exercise more restraint in editorial judgment than apparently they were able to exercise on Sunday, the "copy" showed a strong bias for the wares of the attendant manufacturers.

There were no disclaimers by NBC News, just kindness; no cautions, just one, long greenlight for the wares of the big three, with a little time allowed for Willys and American Motors, who between them seemed to have fewer new models than any one of the big three makers. Should any tv news department really want to service the curious and the potential car buyers, too, let it do a program on the new model automobiles in the same way it should review any major news story or any technical trend—with objectivity, perspective and the license to criticize intelligently. Perhaps that, in the case of fabulously powerful Detroit, is not politic, but politic or not, perspective remains pertinent for viewers.

The commercials by Reynolds Aluminum, which sponsored the entire program, were in ways better than the show itself, because they had some substance, some visual and verbal importance; they related to the "insides" of the Reynolds product, but all a viewer got when it came to the '63 models was a variation on dress fashion copy, this time prepared by carmakers and not coutourieres.

With the limitations thus imposed on it by the network, the NBC News department had little to do beside finding imaginative ways of focusing live cameras on the visitors. In this it was more successful than not, but more than once the network obviously had to stretch to get a fresh look at the same old car with sleek "new" lines.

Skitch Henderson supplied cheery, serviceable background music, but the socalled jazz piece that he and his assembly did was hardly more than a simpering rehash of standards. The one straight entertainment factor that was good, in two of the three pieces seen on the program, was by Jim & Jane Henson's "Muppets." Possibly, the looks of these hand puppets and the technique of using them lacked, say, the ingenuity of Burr Tillstrom with his Kukla & Oolie, but the "copy" for the Muppets was funny, sometimes hysterical yet, like everything else in the course of this lengthly plug, it was also reverent.

David Wolper, the only "public affairs" producer who thrives outside a station or network, produces "The Story Of . . ." for United Artists Television, and the distributor says it comes in at a record $48,000, which is more than most any syndie dramatic series ever cost. "The Story Of . . ." is a good syndication program, but, as it appeared last Tuesday (16) on WNBC-TV, was not especially noteworthy.

"The Story Of a Jockey" was the first half-hour, and the jockey was Billy Harmatz, a 105-pound package of negotiable currency at any race track in the country. One

Sid Caesar's return was not triumphant. Making his long-awaited comeback in a series of monthly half-hour specials, Sid Caesar stubbed his toe on the initial show, with material which didn't hold up. Premises on the comedian's trio of skits were promising and even ingenious, but along the line the sketches become bogged down in repetition, at times reaching the point of absurdity. The result was Caesar was constantly reaching for laughs that weren't there.

Opening skit saw him playing the "master control" of a brain advising a sailor what to do on his date. This is about as different as you can get, but the skit was overlong and ludicrous for the most part.

Another bit, dealing with background music of pix as applied to other situations, had Caesar and his "wife" (Jane Connell) in a panto domestic squabble, to the music of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. It seemed it would never end.

Final skit, dealing with "true friends," was another burnt toast offering—overdone. It was only mildly amusing.

Material by Marvin Marx, Hugh Wedlock and Marty Roth was good insofar as inventiveness goes, but not on execution. Dutch Master Cigars, who sponsored the late Ernie Kovacs' offbeat comedies, picks up bill for this series.

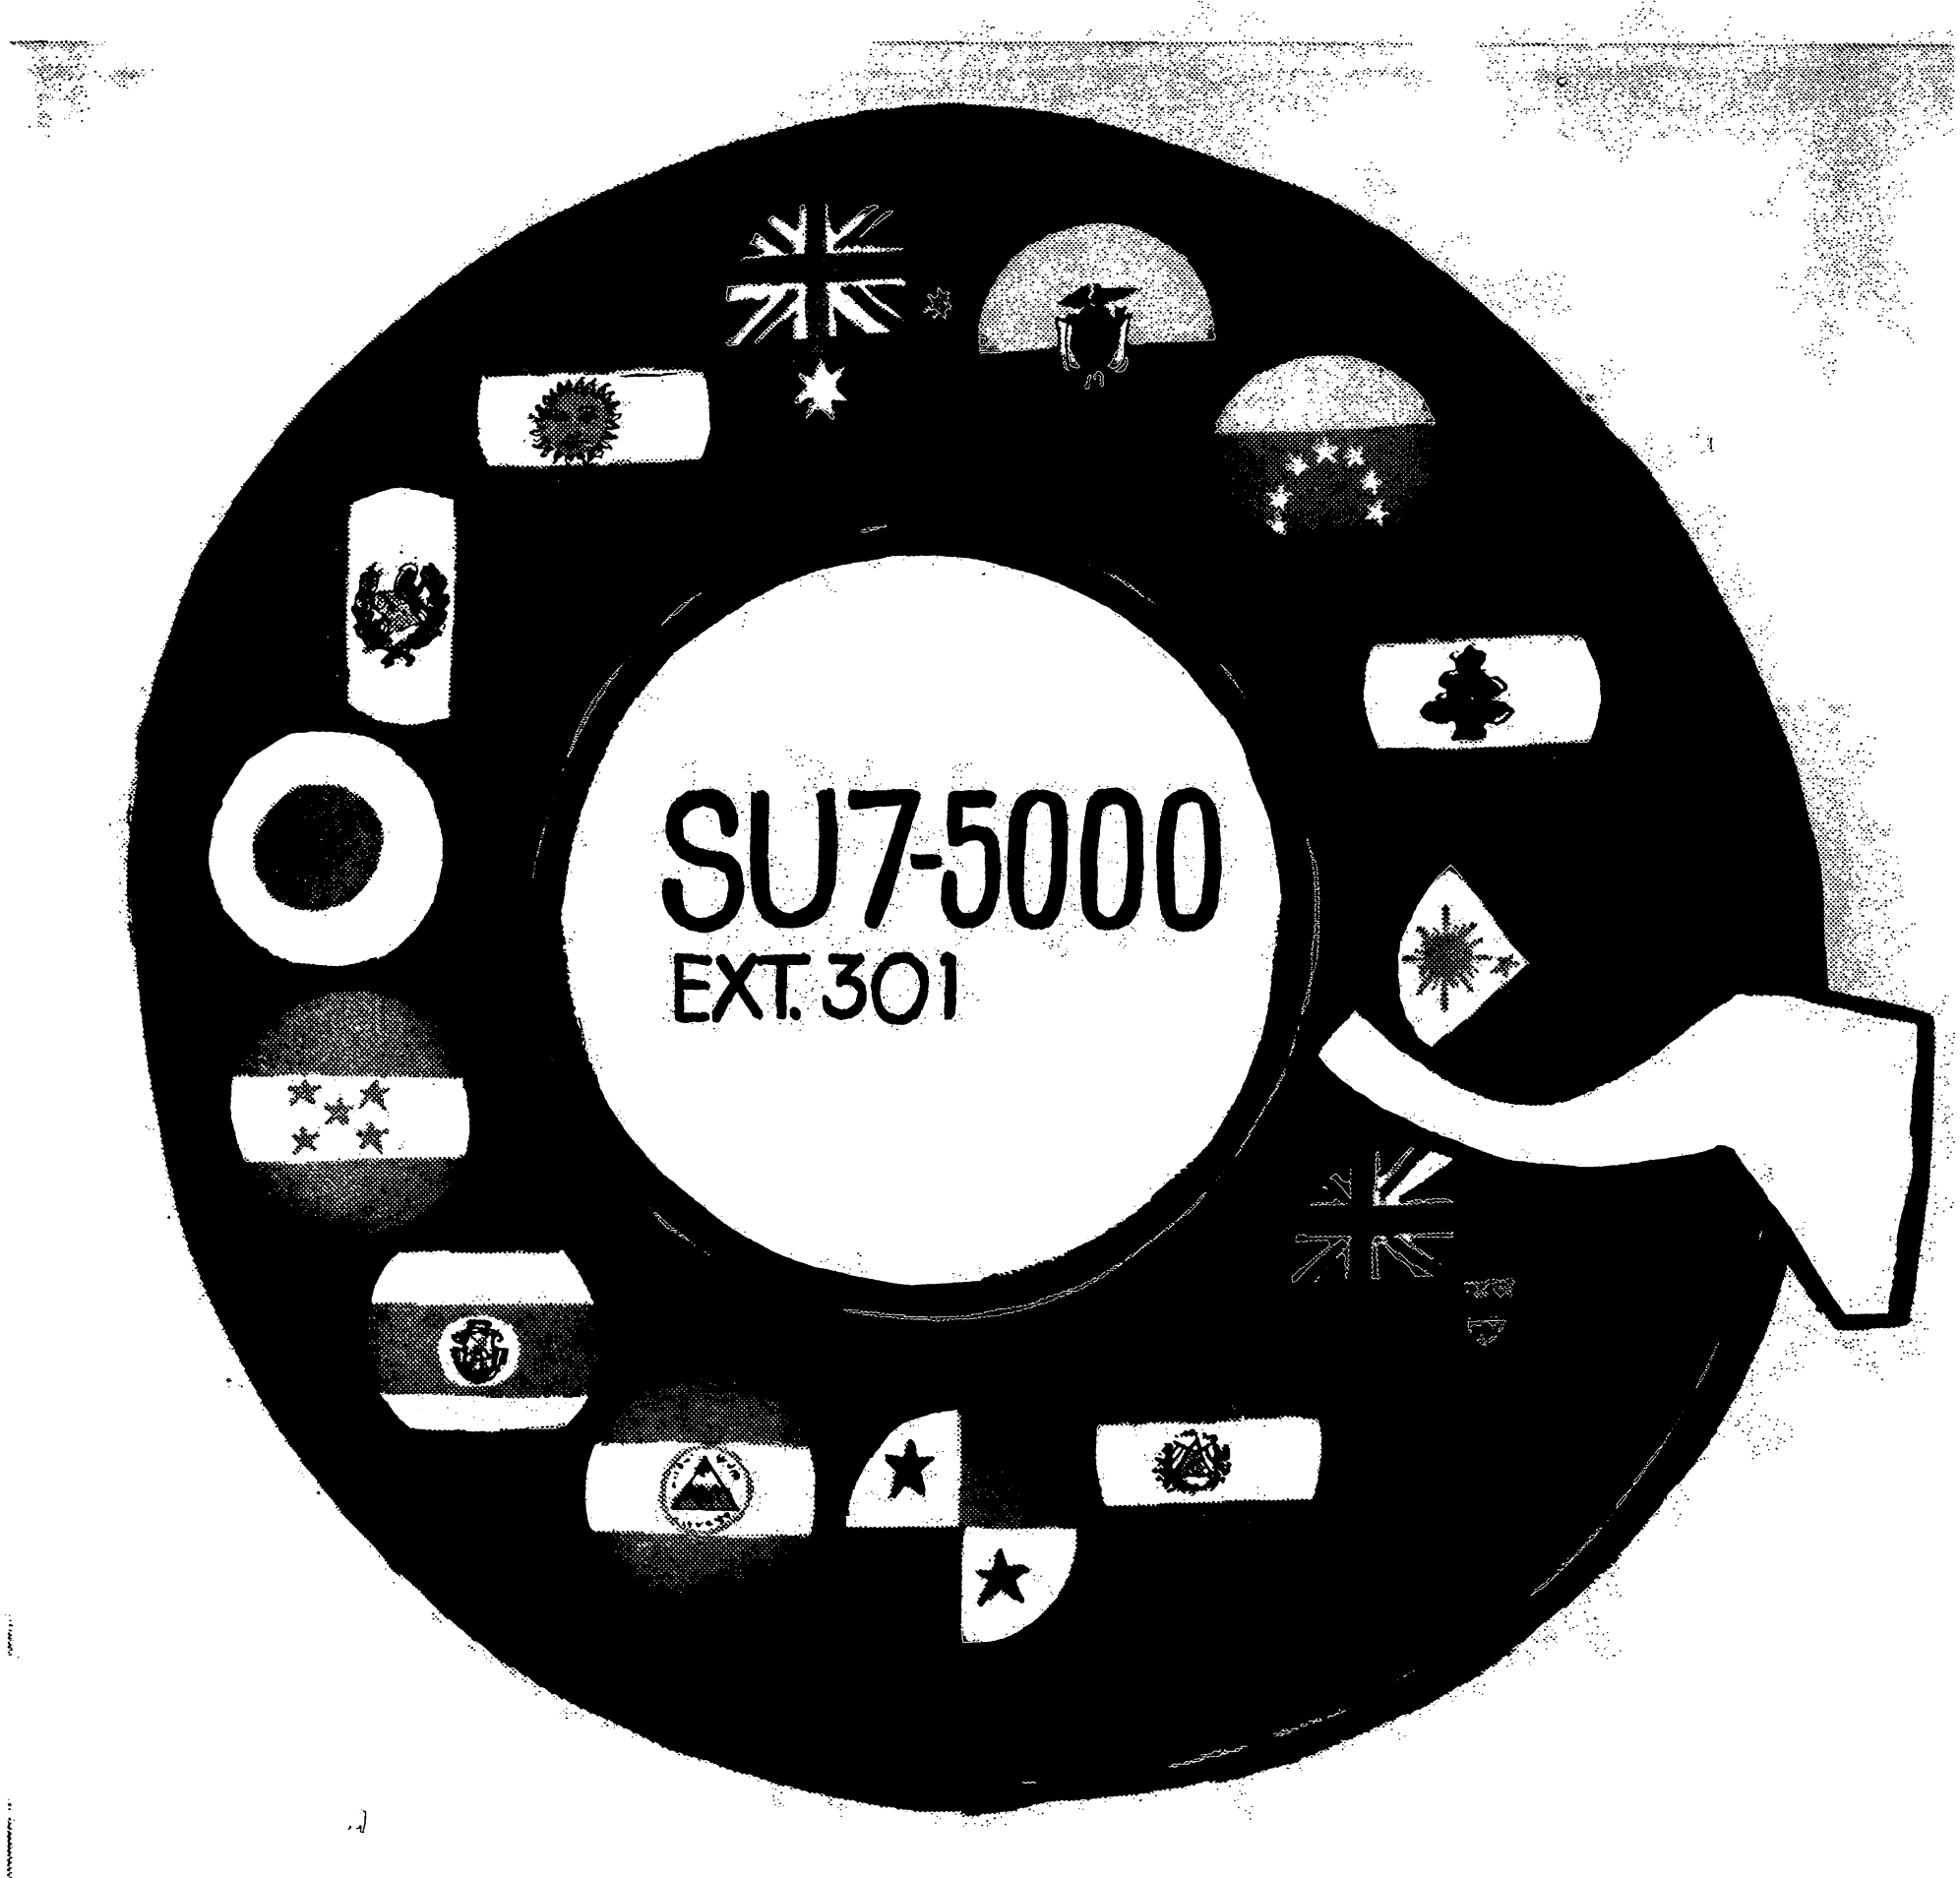
WABC-TV is the first New York station to pick up on the current trend among local stations around the country to hour-long news shows, generally slotted, as this one is, in the early evening.

Although the preem Monday (22) had the bad luck of exactly preceeding the really big news from Washington (Kennedy's pronouncement on Cuba). It still shaped as a show with a potential, although more for news in variety than depth. Opener was extra ambitious in the matter of remotes with several on-location interviews, such as coverage of both Demo and Republican positions in the current campaign and an especially vigorous interview session on New York's "radio row" where long-time merchants are threatened with eviction.



Local anchormen are two young newscasters new to the WABC staff, Bill Beutel and Jim Burnes. They should develop rapidly, and the format of switching back and forth on items and cutaways adds interest, ala the Huntley-Brinkley nightly tet-a-tets.

Howard Cosell, station's sportscaster, opened strongly with an interview of New York football Giant, Sam Huff, and Rosemary Haley combined an interview with a weather expert with the weather news.

At 6:30, show cut to the network news with Ron Chochran's "ABC Evening Report."

Final 15 minutes will be a nightly feature. Opener had slated a debate between young Dems and Republicans, but the latter, who had suggested the match in the first place, withdrew at the last minute (apparently from pressures of the gubenatorial race, said WABC, where Rockefeller has refused to debate the opposition). Filling in was an interview, supported by film clips, on the helicopter port being readied atop the new Pan Am Bldg. over Grand Central which probably was more interesting than the young politicos would have been, anyway.

(We'll put you into 13,000,000 international TV homes. Fast. Profitably.)

Internationally speaking, the term television is getting somewhat confining.

Try Worldvision. For size.

Once you start thinking this way, and these days an advertiser must, consider the following:

Long before Telstar formally ushered in the International Age of Television, we at ABC were thinking—and acting—globally.

We pioneered the first international commercial TV network in 1960—the Central American Television Network.

We also pioneered the first live international telecast in South America, connecting Uruguay with Argentina during last year's Punta del Este Conference.

The first international hookup in the Middle East was effected by ABC's associated station in Beirut, Lebanon, and its station in Damascus, Syria.

At this very moment in time and space, ABC has 21 associated stations operating in 14 different countries, including Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Ecuador, Venezuela, Argentina, Lebanon, Japan, The Philippines, Australia and Canada.

One phone call to our New York headquarters lines up all or any part of this 13,000,000-home international network.

One call brings you knowledgeable help in coordinating your international marketing plans and television campaigns. Aid in selecting the right programs, at the right prices, optimum time periods, proper audiences.

Today, from no other single source can you get anything remotely resembling this kind of global broadcast service.

And this is just the beginning. Year One, you might say, in the new calendar of Worldvision.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week four different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

disputes, but represented another thrust for ABC-TV.

NBC News' enterprose in the Berlin tunnel situation may trigger pro and con arguments, but it is talked about, and it represents another aggressive push to further expand horizons.

It's this expansion of horizons in new , pubaffairs; it's the actuality coverage , from sports to shoots which to date seems to have caused the greatest excitement of the new season.

As for the entertainment shows, the return of tv stars Lucille Ball, Jackie Gleason, Jack Paar, et al., ABC-TV's 90-minute "Virginian" push, and ABC-TV's war shows, created a stir of sorts. The viewing habit is still there, according to the ratings, but the "Hey, did you see what I saw last night?" comparing of notes seems to be of a bygone era. After a decade and more of television, the level of talent and showmanship needed to stir people and the press is higher, indeed.

The bulk of the entertainment series aren't emerging from past molds. At a time when the level of talent and showmanship required is much higher, a good portion of the entertainment shows seem only slightly better, to make a descriptive generalization. The production values are better, many of the stories contain fuller characterization, but the added ingredients, for the most part, don't cause that showmanlike explosion which causes people to applaud the morning after, and the press to pick up the ensuing excitement.

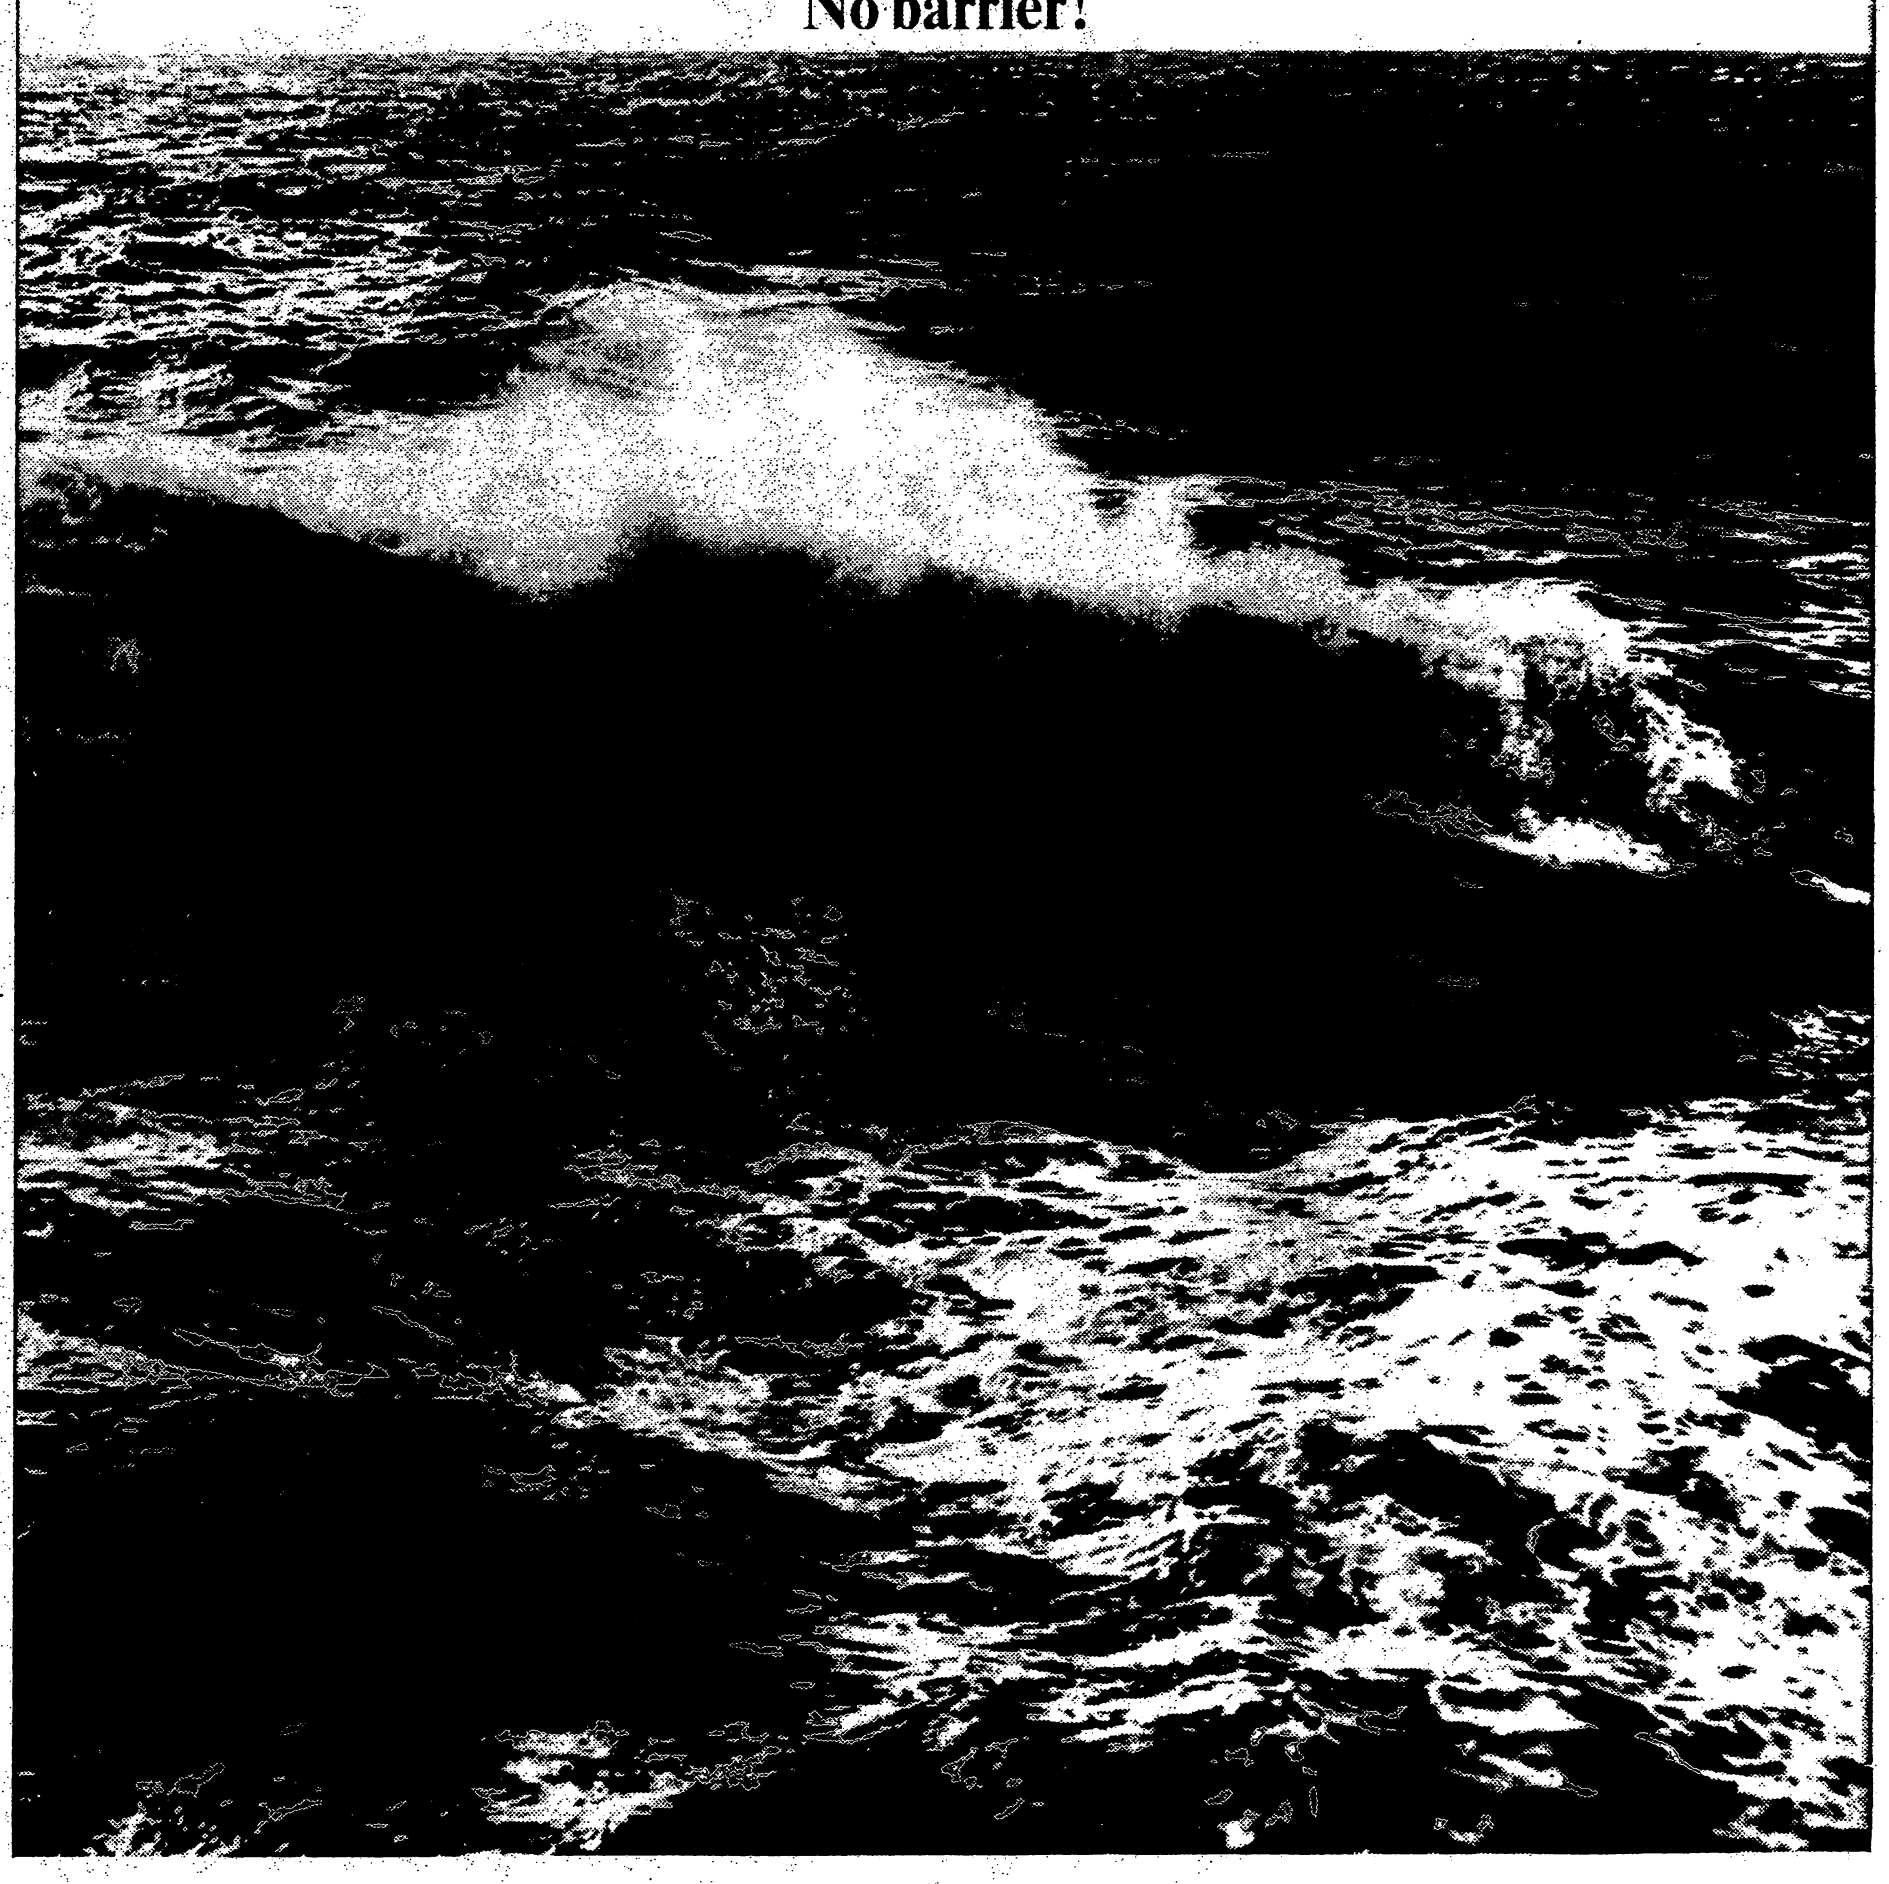
Saturday night hour, "McHale's Navy" "The Jetsons," "I'm Fenster, He's Dickens," "Don't Call Me Charlie," among others, would indicate that, along with the continued popularity of Garry Moore,, Andy Griffith, Danny Thomas, "Hazel," the expanded Red Skelton show, Jack Benny, et al., audiences want to yok it up this season.

Altogether there are some 28 comedy shows on the three tv networks this season, representing an alltime high and somewhat reminiscent of tv's "comedy explosion" back in the early '50s before the move-in of the western and action-adventure.

Obviously such a trend—if trend it is—will invite a whole fresh batch of comedy pilots and personalities projected for the '63-'64 semester. Already two real big ones are on tap—Phil Silvers returning under the General Foods banner and Danny Kaye (see separate story) making himself available for a full hour weekly CBS comedy showcase. In addition Carol Burnett will have her own CBS comedy series next season.

In contrast to the comedy potentials for this season, the straight story shows out of the Hollywood film shops have, for the most part, failed to generate any excitement. Be it a "Going My Way," "Stoney Burke," "Saints and Sinners," or a dozen or so others, they're lacking in distinctive qualities or freshness. Most of them have created as much stir as a summertime rerun.



Tunnelcast

State Department, was up to the network. NBC, in its statement said that "in view of the critical international situation that has developed in the last 24 hours, NBC has concluded in its own judgment that this is not an appropriate time to broadcast its documentary program showing the construction of a tunnel under the Berlin wall and the escape of East German refugees."

CBS, which had a similar documentary project proposed to it, quit the project after the State Department voiced objections.

No barrier!

The achievements of the European Broadcasting Union in international television have been impressive. Surmounting national boundaries and geographic barriers, it has made an immeasurable contribution to the cause of trans-oceanic communication. CBS, an associate member, welcomes the EBU Delegates to New York. We hope that the meetings now in progress will lead to still greater advances in world television—and world understanding.

THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Milwaukee, Oct. 23.

Everyone wants to get into television. That's been the experience of media broker H. W. (Dutch) Cassill, who relates that businessmen in fields far removed from broadcasting are waiting with seemingly unlimited cash for the opportunity to buy tv stations. He tells, for an extreme instance, of receiving a letter on fancy stationery from a man in the junk business who is anxious to own a station because he sees it as an attractive, if not glamorous, business that prospectively fetches a return of 7%.

Cassill, who heads the Chicago office of the Blackburn & Co. brokerage firm, told the Institute of Broadcasting Financial Management here last week that he is very bullish on tv and can see no end to video prosperity. He bases that outlook on the present scarcity of outlets with little likelihood of greater competition in the near future, plus the fact that there is still no limit to the amount a station can charge for spots if it is good enough.

In his view, there is no such thing as a "bad" property—either in radio or tv—in the entire country, because each is a potential money-maker in the hands of astute management. A station recently sold for $1,500,000 despite heavy losses the previous year, Cassill said, because the appraiser was able to prove the value of the facility in the context of today's market.

A station's worth on the market goes beyond earnings, equipment and brick and mortar but takes in a long list of variables, Cassill pointed out. Noting first that no universal formula for determining a sale price is possible because of the variables, he said that a rule-of-thumb for a rough guess might be 10 to 12 times the cash flow of profit for a tv station, and five to six times the cash flow for a radio property. ("Cash flow" is defined by him, in this instance, as the amount of cash the new owner would have available from station operation to make his payments from.) Radio gets the smaller multiplier, he indicated, because of the greater number of radio facilities.

By that rule of thumb, a station with a cash flow of profit of $200,000 would go for a minimum of $2,000,000 on the market, Cassill said, but depending on the variables it might get a price as high as $3,500,000.

The values, above and beyond earnings, depend upon such things as the quality of the market, the quality of management, the local competitive situation, whether expenses at the station are in line or out of line, whether the new owner could cut costs, the union situation, the economic health of the market, the adequacy of personnel, whether the station is suitably equipped, the contracts and agreements to be assumed, whether the accounting books are in order, the public relations and station image, climactic conditions of the area, whether the seller owns the real estate and whether he keeps the plant attractive and well maintained.

The factors, Cassill maintains, can have a bearing on the potential prospective buyer may see in a station. He points out that a station that loses money year after year often sells at a profit simply because the fellow who buys it has confidence in himself and believes he can make it profitable. He recommended that station owners who are constant losers consider selling their stations at a profit, but he made it clear that he wasn't suggesting the greater advisability of buying a losing station than a money making station.

Cassill told of how, between 1944 and 1957, he personally had owned, managed and sold a total of nine stations, in nearly every case having the "dog station" in the market and elevating it to a top spot before selling. He said the FCC accused him of trafficking, "but if it's trafficking to make a successful station out of a dog, I think more people ought to do it."

Despite his earlier remark that there isn't a bad property in the country, he stated in a question and answer period that he would not recommend the purchase of an independent tv station in a middle-sized market. "The only independents worth buying would be in the top 25 markets, and then I'm being charitable in listing that many," he said.

Goodson-Todman Buy Wash. Station

Mark Goodson and Bill Todman, whose interests outside tv show production include ownership of four daily newspapers, have now negotiated purchase of radio station KOL, Seattle, from the Seattle Broadcasting Co. Sale is subject to FCC approval. Price is about $900,000.

Harris Katleman, exec veepee of Goodson-Todman Assoc.'s (firm pacting for purchase of the station), in charge of Coast operations, said that no change in personnel or policy will be made by the new owners if FCC approval is granted. Station is a music and news indie with emphasis on regional news coverage.

IRELAND'S TOP 10: CLEAN U.S. SWEEP

Dublin, Oct. 23.

American-originated syndicated shows took all top 10 places in audience popularity in Ireland for the four weeks ended Sept. 16 last, according to an Irish TAM report. TAM ratings for the period gave the following order of preference:

"Thriller," "Checkmate," "Bat Masterson," "Hollywood Star Playhouse," "Dr. Christian," "Dragnet," "Medic," "Suspicion," "Donna Reed Show," "The Americans" and "Have Gun Will Travel" tied for 10th place.

New programs were excluded from the ratings.

West Indies TV

Ottawa, Oct. 23.

West Indies' first tv station goes on the air next month in Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, with $150,000 worth of equipment made by Canadian General Electric, Toronto.

Station is being built by a new company, Trinidad & Tobago Television, jointly owned by Associated Rediffusion of England, Roy Thomson's Scottish Television, CBS and the Trinidad-Tobago government.

ARTHUR HAILEY ENTRY FOR 'U.S. STEEL HOUR'

Toronto, Oct. 26.

"The Troubled Heart," by Arthur Hailey, has just been sold to the Theatre Guild of New York for showing on the "U.S. Steel Hour," according to Canadian Broadcasting Corp. here.

"Heart," which was carried on the CBC-TV network in the "Playdate" series early this year, will be seen on the "Steel Hour" early in '63. Price was about $20,000.

Hailey's first tv play, "Flight Into Danger," was produced by CBC-TV in 1956 and after in the U.S. and U.K. "Troubled Heart" is his ninth play for the CBC-TV web, with most of his medical jargon researched in Toronto hospitals, including the author's observance of heart surgery.

Covent Garden Show Vs. BBC's Royal Variety

London, Oct. 23.

At the time when, on Sunday, Nov. 4, BBC-TV will be completing its telecast of the previous Monday's (29) Royal Variety Gala from the London Palladium, Associated Television will be mounting one of its most expensive longchair class attractions.

Via an arrangement made with Sandor A. Gorlinsky, the commercial web will be presenting "A Golden Hour" from the Covent Garden Opera House, and already signed for the show, which may run to 75 minutes, are Maria Callas, Giuseppe Di Stefano, Mischa Elman, and Svetlana Beriosova and Donald Macleary. They will be backed by the 85-piece Opera House orch, conducted by George Pretre.

ATV has dropped its "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" in a bid to present an alternative program, and also in the hope that if many encourage BBC-TV to share national events on alternate years, instead of the current practice of having them go out day and date on both webs.

Lew Grade, who next week assumes the managing directorship of ATV, told VARIETY that he felt it was wrong for both webs to be showing the same program at the same time. There was a big audience for such events as the cup final, but it did not make sense for this top sporting event to be shown both on the indie and BBC channels. There should be an alternative, particularly for the women

Don Emilio on Bullfighting

Recently a U. S. visitor to Mexico, after witnessing bullfighting on tv there, addressed a letter to Emilio Azcarraga, "Mr. Television" of Mexico, protesting "sadism and brutality" of bullfights.

In reply Azcarraga puts himself on record thusly:

"We respect your right to express your sentiments against bullfighting and confess that many people share your views.

"However, it has also been our experience here and in Spain that spectators from the United States attend bullfights with a feeling of superior benevolence toward animals at the beginning but once they have captured the spirit of the graceful motions and bravery of the bullfighters as well as the bulls, they not only become converted to the idea that bullfighting is a form of art but actually become immersed in the study of the fine points and eventually are enthusiastic fans.

"We do not dispute the fact that there is bloodshed, not only as far as the bull is concerned but too frequently the toreador suffers serious injuries and is sometimes killed. We would not recommend the program to viewers who feel strongly on the subject but on the other hand, we do not believe that people who understand and appreciate bullfights should be deprived of the opportunity of seeing them.

"While I am on the subject, I should like to mention that when boxing was first introduced into Mexico, the reaction was generally one of horror at the spectacle of two members of the human race pounding and pummeling away at one another which incited the crowds to become bloodthirsty and frenetically shouting for more violence. However, after a time the 'gentlemanly art of fisticuffs' was accepted and although there are dissenters, boxing matches are held throughout the world.

"As a matter of fact, the good clean sport of American football games accounted for some 65 deaths last year according to published statistics, some of which victims were schoolboys eight or nine years old. Outside of this figure, there are untold players who have received permanent injuries.

"In closing, I have often reflected that had it been my fate to be born a bull, I would certainly have preferred to be numbered among the magnificent specimen's found in special breedings for bullfights so that instead of being prodded into a slaughterhouse along with other heads of cattle, I would at least have the opportunity of meeting death after a glorious show of strength and defiance, even to the point of avenging myself by killing the matador, before I succumbed under the thrust of the sword."

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

The 20th anniversary dinner of the Broadcast Pioneers will be held at Biltmore Hotel, N.Y., Nov. 13. Broadcast Pioneers was founded two decades ago by H. V. Kaltenborn. Membership is open to those with 20 or more years in the radio broadcasting or allied fields and 10 or more years in television broadcasting. The New York Chapter has more than 400 members.

Jeff Sparks, station relations officer for United Nations, is president of the New York Chapter. Vice-presidents are May Singhi Breen, Vincent Lopez and Peggy Stone. Lillian Okun, is secretary and Robert J. Higgins is treasurer. The executive board consists of Arthur Simon, chairman; William McDaniel and Frank Pellegrin.

CBS News correspondent Charles Collingwood, who as host of "Person to Person" visited the homes of many people, found his Fire Island retreat invaded by tv cameramen last week. Occasion was the filming of a "Defenders" episode, located at Fire Island. Title of the episode was "Poltergiest," scripted by Reginald Rose. Rose, who also spends summers on Fire Island, is partnered with Herb Brodkin in the production of the series. On hand for the occasion was British feature photographer Roy Commuings, working on a picture layout for London's "Today" mag. Appropriately, director of the Fire Island located segment was British-born director David Greene, CBS Films distributes "Defenders" in Britain.

Christopher Knopf will be chairman of Writers Guild of America West's first tv writers awards and dinner show, to be held Dec. 6 at the BevHilton Hotel. Allan Sherman is producer-director of the event. Awards for best-written scripts in six categories will be presented. Preparing material for the show are Austin Kalish, Danny Simon, Oliver Crawford, Everett Greenbaum, Bruce Howard, Bruce Geller, Paul Mason, William Idelson, Mel Tolkin, Sol Saks, Carl Reiner, Shirley Henry and Aaron Ruben. Jill Parsons is staff coordinator.

Dr. Frances R. Horwich, the lady in charge of the defunct "Ding Dong School," has become director of children's activities of Curtis Publishing. She was hired by Matthew J. (Joe) Culligan, Curtis topper, who met the tv teacher when both worked out of the NBC shop. Culligan said that plans are being made to sell a tv program around the Jack & Jill magazine. Miss Horwich will be charged with handling clients for the magazine itself, since now the book will shoot for underwriters, and, obviously she'll be involved in the proposed tv series.

Harriet Pilpel, of the law firm of Greenbaum, Wolf & Ernst has been appointed chairman of the Radio-TV Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union. She succeeds Thomas Carskadon of the 20th Century Fund who held the chairmanship for 20 consecutive years. Carskadon continues as a member of the committee. ACLU has a new executive director, Jack Pemberton. Previous one, Patrick Mallin, is now president of the American-supported Roberts College in Turkey.

Henry W. Dornseif (WCCO, Minneapolis), last year's prexy of Institute of Broadcasting Financial Management, has been elevated to board chairman of the organization for the coming year. Last week's IBFM convention in Milwaukee elected Thomas E. Carroll (Time-Life Broadcast Inc., Indianapolis) president and Richard S. Stakes (WMAL, Washington, D.C.) viceprez. New secretary-treasurer is Charles A. Hart of WHDH, Boston.

ABC's engineering department, in conjunction with the Machtronics Co., has developed a portable television tape machine that will weigh only 75 pounds, a fraction of current tv tape machine weight, and that will be far cheaper to operate. The new unit, completely transistorized, will use one-inch computor tape, which costs only one-fourth of the two-inch width tv tape now in use. Japanese companies are also introducing miniaturized tv tape machines in the U.S.

There were 437 videoscripters working during last August, the highest figure since October, 1961, when a record 444 was employed.

So reported Writers Guild of America West, in a communique to members. Peak month in employment for pixwriters this year was last May, when 115 were busy at their typewriters. This compares with the monthly peak of 127 for screen, established in February of 1961. Latest figures tabulated, for last August, show there were 99 screenwriters employed during that month.

Entry deadline for the third annual International Broadcasting Awards competition, to pick best tv and radio blurbs, is Dec. 1, with awards to be presented Feb. 6 at the Hollywood Palladium.

The 1962 competition involves 14 tv categories, eight for radio, plus a sweepstakes trophy for best overall blurb, and special IBA trophy awards for technical excellence, best use of color in tv, and of music.

TINT TALK

Unscrambling the Hub Picture On Kennedy-Lodge TV Debate

Not only will the educational tv station in Boston be first to show the debate next Sunday (28) between Senatorial candidates Ted Kennedy and George Lodge but the half-hour program will be the station's first color transmission.

The educational station is WHDH-TV, but the tale requires a little unscrambling. The debate is really a joint meeting on "Meet the Press," which belongs to and is produced by NBC-TV, but the NBC affiliate in Boston, WBZ-TV does not carry "Meet the Press." Instead the CBS-TV affiliate, WGBH-TV, does. But WGBH-TV doesn't carry it until after 11 p.m. on Sundays, while WHDH was more than willing to carry this particular program of local interest when it is done, at 6 p.m.

The CBS affiliate then gave its permission to NBC-TV to give to WHDH to first air the program in Boston. The CBS network doesn't carry color, but its Boston affiliate does so—WGBH is preparing the debate in its studios in color, and WHDH will pick it up the same way. (So will many regular NBC-TV affiliates in other cities.)

WGBH is expected to "repeat" the program it initiated at 11 p.m. Clear?

NBC's 'Virginian' Vote of Confidence

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Revue Studios' 90-min. telefilm series, "The Virginian," received a hefty vote of confidence from NBC-TV program veepee Mort Werner, who indicated the series is not only assured of renewal for the rest of this season, but "we're looking forward to having 'The Virginian' for a long time to come."

Werner, here from N. Y., commented "our experiment in the 7:30-9 p.m. time on a 90-min. series seems to be going along as per schedule." He declined to state precisely how many additional "Virginian" segs have been ordered, but pointed out Revue has already finished the first 13 it had firmed, and is shooting beyond that figure.

Attention has been riveted on this series in the trade, since it's the first weekly 90-min. filmed show ever attempted.

Werner and NBC-TV coast program veepee Felix Jackson also said NBC-TV has exercised its option on Revue's "It's a Man's World," and ordered six more segments beyond the 13 hours originally firmed.

There's a new star in our eye—Danny Kaye will be with us every week for one hour starting next Fall!

WGN-TV's 'Great Music' Dropping 'From Chicago,' Going O'seas for 3 Shows

Chicago, Oct. 23.

WGN-TV is dropping the "From Chicago" in the title of its syndicated "Great Music" series for the reason that henceforth not all the longhair concerts will originate in the Windy City. For this year's skein, the station will send director Dick Doerschuk abroad to vidtape one segment with the Berlin Philharmonic at its home base and two with the Royal Philharmonic of London. With the latter, one program will be taped at Albert Hall, a great old concert hall, and the other at Festival Hall. Facilities used will be those of ATV, which has installations in both halls.

As in the past, most programs in the "Great Music" series will be with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Lineup of conductors this season includes Leopold Stokowski, Paul Hindemith, Fritz Reiner, Aaron Copland, Hans Rosbaud, Charles Munch, Andre Cluytens, Sir John Barbirolli, William Steinberg, Paul Kletske, Josef Krips and Alfred Wallenstein. Maestros for the three European segs have not yet been determined.

Soloists for the season will include William Warfield, Benny Goodman (playing classical), Van Cliburn, Arthur Rubenstein, Andres Segovia, Isaac Stern, Nathan Milstein, Zino Francescatti, Leonard Pennario and Byron Janis. Walter Hendl will conduct the orch for most of the soloists, with WGN music director Robert Trendler wielding the baton for Roberta Peters.

Robert Shaw Corale from Orchestra Hall in Chicago and a chamber concert conducted by Fritz Reiner are listed as special programs.

OFF-WEB 'DRAGNET' STILL A MAGNET

Eight more stations have joined the list of "Dragnet" buyers. MCA TV's list for the off-network Jack Webb starrer includes, WSOC, Charlotte; KFBC, Cheyenne; WISC, Madison; WDBJ, Roanoke; WSBT, South Bend; KXLY, Spokane; and KTTS, Springfield, Mo.

In other recent half-hour off-network sales, "Bachelor Father," just introduced into syndication, has added KPHO, Phoenix, KGW, Portland, Ore., and WDBO, Orlando. Newest purchasers of "M-Squad" include WIS, Columbia, S.C.; WDAY, Fargo; WOOD, Grand Rapids, and KWTX, Waco.

"Love That Bob" has added WEWS, Cleveland, KOTA, Rapid City; and WNDU, South Bend. Newest purchasers of "Restless Gun" are KNTV, San Jose; and KFVS, Cape Girardeau.

MCA's 22-Outlet Sales On 'Thriller,' 'Checkmate'

MCA TV has sold its off-network hourlong series to 22 additional markets.

"Thriller" has added WISN, Milwaukee; KOTA, Rapid City; KARD, Wichita; KLIX, Twin Falls; WKY, Oklahoma City; and WLUC, Marquette, Mich. "Frontier Circus" has recently been sold to WSPA, Spartanburg; WOOD, Grand Rapids; WLKY, Louisville; and WSJV, South Bend-Elkhart.

Newest buyers of "Checkmate" include WLOS, Asheville, N.C.; WSJV, South Bend-Elkhart; WKY, Oklahoma City; KALB, Alexandria; WOOD, Grand Rapids; WXIX, Milwaukee; and WBA, York, Pa. Other newly-reported sales include "Riverboat" to KOTA, Rapid City; WCKT, Miami; KMBC, Kansas City; and "Suspicion" to KOTA, Rapid City; and KLIX, Twin Falls.

WCBS' New School Segs

In an unusual educational tie, WCBS Radio, N.Y., will broadcast a series of 10 lectures from the New School for Social Research, each of the lectures keyed to the Emancipation Proclamation.

First of the original lectures will be tonight (Wed.) at 10:10 p.m., with the speaker being John Hope Franklin, chairman of the history department of Brooklyn College. He will speak on the "Impact of the Emancipation Proclamation."

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots compete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and total area homes is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

No Second Class Syndie Status for Steve Allen On Attracting the Stars

Hollywood.

Editor, VARIETY:

I'm writing to comment on two recent VARIETY pieces—the first in which syndication's "second class status" was the lead, and the second in which mention was made of supposed "revamping" of the Steve Allen Show. As WBC's executive producer for Steve's show and as general manager of WBC Productions, I have more than a passing interest in both articles.

There's no question that all syndicated shows are not alike. Both the shows and the people that produce and distribute them differ enormously, as do newspapers and editors. We're now producing and distributing five 90-minute television shows every week to 24 metropolitan U. S. television stations, with more to be added shortly.

We've had none of the difficulty mentioned in attracting "big name" performers to appear and perform with Steve. To name a few and slight many others — Frankie Avalon, Larry Adler, Roger Williams, Mort Sahl, Betty Hutton, Louis Nye, Jayne Mansfield, Brook Benton, Buddy Hackett, Tony Bennett, Jo Stafford, Andre Previn, Lee Marvin, Jackie Cooper, Mamie Van Doren, Keenan Wynn, Steve Lawrence, Ethel Waters, Bill Dana, Red Norvo, Tab Hunter, Dick Gregory, Gary Crosby, and Lionel Hampton.

We've been working with the stars since we went on the air last June and plan to keep doing so. As for "making some format changes," we'd be foolish to modify the show because it's beating the competition in so many cities. When Kansas City, Des Moines, Phoenix, and the other cities around the country cease to have great success with our show, we'll think about changing. Now, when we're beating both "Tonight" and the movies, we'd be wrong to go in any direction but the one we've found — toward anything in the world that fascinates the viewer, from wild comedy to microscopic views inside a tiny drop of water, and from Steve suspended a hundred feet above Vine Street to an interview with the American Party (ex-Prohibition) candidate for Governor of California. We dig what we're doing, so does the public, and we're not about to change!

VARIETY is correct in saying that we're thinking about taking the show on the road for a couple of weeks. We may go to St. Paul for the Winter Carnival, we may drop in to New York because we miss the town. We may go to Las Vegas, and we're even doodling with the idea of heading for the South Pacific. We may also stay in Hollywood if that seems best for the show.

Joel Chaseman.

CBS O&O's YEN SEVEN ARTS CATALOG

WBBM-TV, Chicago, became the fourth CBS-TV owned & operated station to buy the latest 93 features in the Seven Arts distribution catalog. Including the o&os in N.Y., Philly and St. Louis, that makes 13 CBS-TV stations or affils that have signed for the package of Warners and 20th Fox pictures in the past month.

Other buys this past week were WTIC, Hartford, and WDAU, Scranton, both CBS affils.

NTA's Rank Pix Sales

National Telefilm Associates sold its package of 25 J. Arthur Rank features to seven tv outlets last week, increasing the market coverage to 50 stations.

Scots Would Like To Secede From British Networks

Glasgow, Oct. 23.

It is of top importance that steps be taken now to break the power the British network companies have to impose unwelcome programs on Scottish program companies.

This viewpoint is strongly expressed by the Church & Nation Committee of the Church of Scotland here.

While welcoming the Pilkington Report on the future of broadcasting in the U.K., it stresses the need to provide a BBC Scottish tv program which is, as far as possible, for all Scotland. This, urges the Committee, should take priority over a second channel.

It adds that, if a second channel is to be allocated to the Independent Television Authority, then it should "provide a complementary service of a distinctive character."

Committee urges the British Govt. to ensure that a proper autonomy is given to the Scot committee of the Independent Television Authority when further powers are assumed by it over program companies.

It says that, when new transmitting stations are built, there should be concurrent building so that no area, however distant, is penalized.

AUSSIE TV 'TOP 60' BIGTIME MUSICAL

Sydney, Oct. 23.

In an effort to capture local viewers and added sponsorship, tv commercial ATN, Sydney, is setting a big homebrew musical titled "Top 60." New show will have a cast of 60, mostly local, with imported talent in from time to time.

New show will carry a permanent ballet, a Singalong Choir, plus an orchestra of 24. Philip Berry is producing the new show.

Understood that the reason behind the homebrew show is to arrest squawks of Aussie Actors' Equity that tv is 'mostly American" and that Aussie talent is being sidetracked in favor of "Yankee celluloid."

'Witness' Gets Replay In $2,000,000 Touhy Libel Action Vs. CBS

Chicago, Oct. 23.

A two-year old episode of the defunct CBS-TV "Witness" series was privately screened last Thursday (18) for Chi Federal District Court Judge James B. Parsons as an exhibit in a $2,000,000 libel and invasion of privacy suit pending against the network and sponsors R. J. Reynolds, Nomark, Schick and General Foods. Program was titled "Roger (The Terrible) Touhy Tries To Clear His Name" and was originally telecast on Nov. 3, 1960.

The lawsuit, filed Aug. 9, 1961 by Clara and Thomas Touhy (widow and son), alleges that the "Witness" installment was partly fiction and that as a result of the telecast the Touny family lost esteem in the community and was held up to ridicule. According to the complaint, there was mention in the program that Touhy wanted to clear his name "for the sake of his wife and kids."

Touhy's survivors charge that several purported events in the program were inventions of writer Irv Tunick, and they take issue with the suggestion in the script that Touhy was a swaggering crime boss, a corruptor of police, a killer and an operator of bawdy houses. The fictionalization, they allege, was not done for "good or proper motives" but only for profit, in the respect that it served to hypo viewer interest.

Attorney ofr the plaintiffs is Thomas P. Cernek. CBS and the sponsors are represented by John B. Moser.

'Cinderella' May Get CBS-TV Holiday Reprise

"Cinderella," one of tv's top rated specials done on CBS-TV in 1957, with original music and lyrics by Rodgers & Hammerstein, is being considered as a holiday repeat special for next season. The original, done in color, and prior to the introduction of vidtape, starred Julie Andrews.

CBS-TV is in the process of examining the clearance of rights situation. The property, if secured, would then be freshly produced —this time vidtaped for possible repeat engagements.

Key to Burrud: 'Monkeys Don't Get Residuals'

In these days of stress and woe in syndication, a Coast berthed outfit which goes by the handle of Bill Burrud Productions continues to turn neat profit, remains in the first-run field, and hasn't a worry about residuals.

"You don't pay monkeys residuals. Actors, yes; monkeys no," Gene McCabe explained. McCabe is v.p. of Bill Burrud Productions which, to date, has specialized in travel-adventure - documentary shows. McCabe was in N.Y., stopping over prior to his annual world sales swing.

McCabe, too, acknowledged the tightness of current syndication. His problems, as he related them, looked clearly surmountable, though. McCabe said that first-year production on "True Adventure," now in about 40 markets, will gross about $1,000,000. He said "we're selling for prices" and the number of markets sold sometimes bears no relationship to total gross dollars. Burrud Productions has been in the field since 1952, one of the pioneers whose first show was "The Open Road" on KCOP, Los Angeles.

Since then, Burrud has expanded into syndication. First, the outfit used outside established syndication firms, only to get burned, according to business manager McCabe. It then set up its own sales organization, called Wiljon Corp., which services 11 western states. A sales tie also was made with Teledynamics, a distribution organization which handles the sales for burrud.

All told, McCabe said, "we have a sales force of 11, seven in domestic and four foreign." He said that Burrud believes in servicing accounts, thereby securing followup biz.

"True Adventure," which shortly will go into third year production, has been the most successful venture for Burrud. Reason for its success, according to McCabe, is that it's one of the few first-run syndication properties around, it comes up with ratings, and the field is flooded with reruns. Color also includes "Vagabond," and "Treasure," is in color.

Burrud Productions does its own shooting, as well as buying footage from outside sources for its travel and adventure segments. Cost per episode is estimated at about $12,000.

Big upcoming project for Burrud is "Pacific Revisited," two hour-long specials keyed to network exposure, with one of the specials serving as a possible spinoff for series. Specials would be keyed to revisiting Pacific battlegrounds, highlighting some of the personal stories unfolded there.

UA-TV Projects Series Based on Marie Torre Rap Vs. Judy Garland

Marie Torre, former radio-tv columnist for the N.Y. Herald Tribune, will have her personal history serve as a basis for a story in the projected United Artists Television series, starring George C. Scott. Project is being done in conjunction with CBS-TV, with Jules Bricken producing.

While a columnist Miss Torre was rapped with a jail sentence for failure to divulge the source of one of her stories about Judy Garland. Series has Scott portraying a columnist. Slated for next season, it will be filmed in N.Y. According to some of the stories listed for the project, it looks like the hourlong series will be controversial in the vein of "The Defenders." Bricken listed stories dealing with the effects of automation on mining, unfair laws which do not adequately protect the criminal who is mentally ill, and an attack on the political situation which calls for a ticket based on religious considerations rather than merit.

Watertown, N.Y.—Tony C. Malara has been named sales manager of WWNY here. Malara joined the station four years ago as an announcer working also on WCNY-TV, a sister facility.

Too Many Writers Spoil Laughs

BBC Exec Say Yank Shows 'Too Mechanical' Due To Group Authorship

London, Oct. 23.

Reason American comedy shows are not as successful ratingswise in these parts as, say, cop, medico and lawyer skeins, is because they are "too mechanical," when held up against home-produced fare. This is the considered opinion of Sid Colin, ex-writer and present assistant head of light entertainment at Associated-Rediffusion.

Colin, whose special skill in comedy, feels that one of the main reasons for the "mechanical" impression is the fact that a Yank producer will use a string of writers on one show, which must cue in a certain amount of rigidity. The British method—admittedly brought about more through necessity than choice—is to use, in the main, one or two authors. A show springing from either a solo, or a team of two, is more likely to have a "warmth" unobtainable when a whole line of guys are contributing, opines Colin.

He insists that in the final test —on-the-air competition — the home product will "win every time." This was proved, he says when the domestic "Army Game" comedy beat "Bilko" in a fair fight for the ratings.

In line with this view, Colin introduced on Friday (11) a new yock series, "It's A Living," written by Fred Robinson, and starring Jimmy Jewel and Ben Warriss. Show bowed as the Yank-originated "Comedy Hour" and "Hazel" wind up their run on A-R. ("Father Of The Bride," a recently acquired comedy, continues, however.)

Colin states there are plans to bring back the "Dickie Henderson Show" after "It's A Living" runs out, which won't be until the new year. In the meantime, he's working on at least three new yock projects, likely to see the light of date in 1963.

Reaction to Sarnoff

made no specific mention of a worldwide group but that for anyone who listened closely to him such a suggestion was implicit in what he had said. Furthermore, after hearing American Sarnoff, he noted that Jean d'Arcy, director of Radio & Visual Services for the United Nations p.r. office, had also talked of an international broadcasting body. In his own speech, d'Arey, however, did say that "if a Univision is one day to exist, it is up to you and to your colleagues throughout the world to take the lead." He exempted the United Nations from organizing and controlling any international broadcasting body: "I do not believe that they should be asked to take this initiative on the pretext that this is a world problem."

ABC's EBU 'Commercial'

no promises but they'd take it under advisement.

Naturally, the chief backdrop to the first two days of international meetings was the heightened crisis over Cuba. Yet the delegates overheard in corridors and at lunch seemed entirely to be discussing the happenings of the meetings that day. It is understood that during one morning session yesterday (Tues) some delegates did, however, ask what was happening across the street at the UN, but no one seemed to make any effort on his own to find out. The one pertinent remark heard was by a man who spoke impeccable English and he said: "I hear the stock market has fallen off."

In defense of this seeming calm by Europeans was the observation that perhaps they have lived under the sword and gun so long that they of necessity take such things as a severe Cuban crisis in stride.

After returning tomorrow (Thurs.) from Washington, the EBU delegates will meet at a closed-session and then break for a lunch which CBS will give for them and other guests at the St. Regis. (NBC gave Monday's lunch at the Waldorf and, as pointed out, ABC hosted Tuesday's at the Philharmonic.) Friday will see closed meetings at the U. S. Mission to the UN On Saturday, the EBU delegates who are still here are scheduled to visit the satellite tracking station at Andover, Me. Broadcasters of 25 nations held full membership in the EBU and 21 other countries are EBU associates. Of the total, 19 countries were represented by official EBU delegations.

Evidently, the proposal by NBC's Bob Sarnoff to start a global tv union did not come up in the formal meetings the first day or the early part of the second. One of the reasons given for the seeming sluggishness of the meeting was the "cumbersomeness" of the delegate sessions. However, it was expected that "study groups" would be formed so that decisions could more readily be reached on the issues at hand.

IRISH TV STEPS UP U.S. PROGRAM BUYS

Dublin, Oct. 23.

Telefis Eireann (Irish TV), already a heavy user of American-produced programs, has made a number of new buys for winter schedules.

Established series such as "The Jackie Gleason Show," "The Donna Reed Show," "The Bob Cummings Show," "Checkmate," "Heckle and Jeckle," "You Are There," "Mr. District Attorney," "Our Miss Brooks," "Bachelor Father," "Have Gun Will Travel," "Dragnet" and "The Twilight Zone" are being continued with several dramatic series including "Suspicion," "Thriller," "Cameo Theatre" and "Hollywood Star Playhouse."

The outfit's own drama department is producing some plays but these will be supplemented with purchases from CBS and the BBC. Dramatic presentations from the "Desilu Playhouse" are also on the list.

"The Rough Rider" is another buy, and the light entertainment division is presenting six hour-long variety spectaculars, opening with "An Evening with Fred Astaire" and following on with others starring Jack Benny, Gene Kelly and Donald O'Connor.

Heavy purchases of U.S. programs have come under fire from critics, but TE spokesmen point out that it would be impossible to maintain station's output without them.

Residual Payments Up

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Telescripter residuals climbed last July and August of this year, as compared to the same months last year, writers collecting $306,609 in residuals in July and $359,016 in August.

These figures compare with residuals of $256,175 in July of last year, and $307,884 for August, 1961. Residuals collected by Writers Guild of America West for members through Sept. 21 add up to $2,105,052, as against $1,656,708 for the same period last year.

San Antonio—Edward V. Cheyiot was named veep and station manager of WOAI-TV and Rex Preis veep and station manager of sister WOAI Radio. Upping in titles makes them officers of the parent Southland Industries, headed by Jim Gaines, onetime N.Y. broadcaster.

MEMO

Subject: International Television
To: Weston C. Pullen, Jr., President
From: Sig Mickelson, VP for International Development

It has been slightly more than a year since we announced our first venture in international television. Today, we are involved in South America, Europe, the Middle East and the Far East, as follows:

1. Beirut, Lebanon: operating partners in CLT (Compagnie Libanaise de Télévision), channels 7 and 9.

2. Cologne, Germany: operating partners (with M. DuMont-Schauberg, leading German newspaper and book publishers) in DuMont-Time Fernseh-Programmgesellschaft GmbH, producing filmed television programs primarily for German-speaking countries.

3. Karachi, Pakistan: operating partners (with Philips of Eindhoven, European equipment manufacturers) of a model television station at the Second Annual Pakistan Trade Fair this month and next.

4. Buenos Aires, Argentina: operating partners (with Argentine interests, Goar Mestre & Associados and the Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.) of PROARTEL (Producciones Argentinas de Television). PROARTEL provides programing to television stations in Argentina, Uruguay, Peru and other Spanish-speaking countries.

Before the end of the year, we should be able to announce new alliances which have great potential in the swiftly growing field of worldwide communications.

Video Snubbing Ad Agency People 'Bubbling With Ideas': Edw. H. Weiss

Chicago, Oct. 23.

The board chairman and namesake of the Edward H. Weiss agency believes that television is short-changing itself by snubbing the creative people who work in advertising agencies and treating them as commercial hacks. He submits that many of them are "serious talents" who are "bubbling with ideas"—and ideas, he says, are precisely what television is desperately in need of today.

"Talent is talent wherever it may be found," he told a gathering of the Chicago Broadcast Advertising Club last week, "and with television's insatiable appetite for material around the clock, it is little short of a crime not to avail itself to the best talent at hand." He described the video medium today as "practically a private preserve for those writers and creative people who belong to an in-group and want no interference with their methods." These are people who feel its their perrogative to turn out the same programs each season under different titles, Weiss said.

Reflecting on the thumbs-down reception the critics have given to the new video season, Weiss stated that if the medium does not break out of the routine of formula and stale imitation "it will perish as an influence in our national life." He made it clear that he was not suggesting that agencies create programs for tv but that the advertising industry's creative minds could come up with vital new ideas that the video industry should bend an ear to. Agency people know the medium, the costs involved and the production techniques, he said, and so they at least can present ideas intelligently.

Weiss cited an idea hatched in his own agency which resulted in a multiple award-winning series, "The Purex Specials for Women," to point up the contribution that can be made. To further illustrate his thesis, he listed such highly respected writers as Sherwood Anderson, F. Scott Fitzgerald, William Inge, Patrick Dennis and Sheppard Mead as onetime agency toilers, and noted that it was three New York agency people who produced the film short, "Day of a Painter," that won an Academy Award a year or so ago.

He said of contemporary television: "The technical savvy is there in abundance—in fact, one of the tragedies of the medium is that there is often a vast discrepancy between the technical skills and the substance of the shows themselves. It seems a pity to see done so well what isn't worth doing at all in the first place."

FCC CHANGES WEEK FOR CORPORATE LOG

Wasington, Oct. 23.

Admitting a lulu of a boner, the Federal Communications Commission has cancelled the composite week for log analyses and issued an altogether different one. The previous composite week, announced by FCC last month, included the day of astronaut John Glenn's historical orbital flight when hardly any television or radio programming was normal.

Here is the revised composite week which has been more carefully checked and is binding: Sunday—Aug. 5, 1962; Monday—Sept. 25, 1961; Tuesday—Jan. 23, 1962; Wednesday—Nov. 15, 1961; Thursday—April 26, 1962; Friday—May 11, 1962; Saturday—Feb. 24, 1962.

Ackerman's SG Pact

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Screen Gems veepee-exec producer Harry Ackerman has inked to a new longterm pact which begins when his current ticket expires next July.

Ackerman supervises "Dennis the Menace," "Hazel," "The Donna Reed Show" and "Our Man Higgins," also is currently readying some new properties for the 1963-64 season.

RAI-TV HITCHING TO TELSTAR THIS YEAR

Rome, Oct. 23.

RAI-TV, the Italian television network, expects to effect its first direct Telstar link with the U.S. towards the end of the year. The first section of the receiving antenna arrived in Rome this week by air, and other components are expected the next few days. They will be mounted in already prepared installations in the Plains of Fucino.

Sudanese to Get TV in 6 Weeks

Glasgow, Oct. 23.

The Sudanese Govt. wishes its people to have television inside six weeks!

This challenge has been accepted by Thomson Television International Ltd., the Roy Thomson-controlled outfit that is setting up technical facilities for tv stations and companies in overseas countries, and which has its engineering base here.

According to Alfred Becker, managing-director of TTI, newly in from Khartoum after finalizing details with the Ministry of Labor and Information, the reason for the extreme short notice is that the fourth anniversary of the Sudan Revolution falls on Nov. 17, and the authorities are therefore eager that the celebrations in Khartoum should have the widest possible coverage in the city and in outlying districts—via the modern medium of television.

Transmissions will now begin a week prior to Revolution Day, equipment being available to transmit films provided by Sudanese Govt. sources and the TTI consortium.

It will largely be community viewing. Frits Phillips Organization in Holland is presently arranging the provision of 40 large receivers for communal viewing, and anticipates that other manufacturers will follow this lead.

TV Scripter Lashes Out at Unfair Raps at Medium; 'Need a Spokesman'

North Hollywood, Cal.

Editor, VARIETY:

The telefilm industry needs an Eric Johnston.

Here's a vast enterprise rivaling the motion picture industry, which has no single industry-wide spokesman or lobby. Numerous organizations like the National Association of Broadcasters do yeoman work for networks, stations, producers, radio, and other special interests, but they are vulnerable to the charge of special pleading. What is needed is a voice for the industry as a whole.

Instead of constantly apologizing or explaining defensively under attacks by critics and investigators, this great film medium should proclaim its accomplishments. In the past 10 years it has grown big enough to change family habits and popular entertainment throughout America, and increasingly throughout the world. It is too big and successful to grovel before every self-appointed or publicity-seeking critic.

We should particularly protest the continuing barrage of pressure group and Washington charges of excessive violence, dullness, and even, ridiculously, sex in telefilms. Undocumented and unproved charges cast an unfair stigma on a great American industry. Without plugging my own scripts, I would boldly maintain the past and present seasons offer more good hour entertainments than in any previous year, including the critic-lauded heyday of live, arty anthologies.

As several network executives have said, tv should stop making excuses or apologies. We should publicly and officially take a proud and positive attitude, as befits an important and highly creative American industry.

We need an industry-wide spokesman with stature and persuasiveness in Washington and nationally, such as motion pictures have in Eric Johnston and the MPAA organization. Public officials and private critics must be consistently presented with an authoritative image of telefilm entertainment, matching its proven public popularity.

Donald S. Sanford.

BRITISH COM'L TV DROPS AD MAGS

London, Oct. 23.

Eleven commercial television contractors including three majors, have decided to drop advertising magazines programs from next March. This follows the suggestion by the Pilkington Committee, endorsed by the government, that ad mags "blur the meaning of the TV Act," which does not allow sponsored television, etc.

However, Associated - Rediffusion, weekday major serving the London area, has decided to retain it's "Jim's Inn," "By George" and "In View" ad mags until instructed to drop them from higher authority.

Nix KSON Power Boost

Washington, Oct. 23.

The FCC rejected and returned an application from KSON, San Diego, asking a daytime power boost from 250 watts to 1 KW.

FCC said the proposal "is clearly in contravention" of the rule forbidding stations to operate with more than 250 watts within 62 miles of the Mexican border.

FCC said the international agreement with Mexico is "not legally subject to waiver by the Commission."

men who were mistaken for some of Darryl F. Zanuck's own French cameramen, filmed Zanuck filming "The Longest Day" on the beach at Normandy.

Actually, some of the stories filmed in Asia director Freedland sent back to Brinkley several months ago, and they were used last season. Brinkley showed studies of the Indian elections and of the Baird Bil and Cora puppets appearing in India.

Coming up are stories by Freedland on the Indian caste system, the Maharajah of Jaipur, prohibition in India, dope in Hong Kong and Macao, the "commuter train" from Hong Kong to the Red border and "Hiroshima Today" (i.e., "The Souvenir Business").

Freedland started with four and a half months in India. In speaking of the forthcoming tv study on "Brinkley's Journal" of the caste system, he reminisced: "There are still wells untouchables cannot approach to get water. At certain times of the day, touchables pour some well water into pitchers the untouchables carry."

Still on the same subject, the director said that in order to interview an Indian holy man, "I had, literally, to go to my knees, forehead to the ground before I was accommodated." The religious man defended the caste system. He thought, said Freedland, "that caste separation was God given."

In passing, Freedland mentioned that two high-caste Indians he met, who had once been to the United States, complained of the treatment they had received in the south.

The "very cooperative" Hong Kong police, who helped Freedland get his "dope story," did actually go out of their way to make sure the director from American NBC got all the pictures he needed, even if one of them had to be recreated. The director pointed this out, but quickly added that he did "get shots of real opium smoking, without police cooperation." He said he got far more of those than of the rehearsed variety.

Before turning to tv documentaries at NBC-TV, Freeland had produced two dozen or more films for USIA, among them "Let's Be Childish," "Royal Nights," "Music In the Forest" and another, on Pablo Cassals. Proudly he pointed out that all of them had been film festival choices. Less proudly but with a note of amusement, Freedland said that he once did two feature films, one in France and one in Germany.

Both films made money, but the director, who also wrote them (he writes in French and German as well as in English), was less than satisfied with their artistic merit.

"I did a feature called 'Neuf Garcons et Coeur' — 'Nine Boys, One Heart'—and fishing around for a final song for Edith Piaf to sing I uncovered 'La Vie En Rose.' She was unknown in 1947, but then she came to the U.S. and became famous. Because she was in it, the French producer stored the picture until she came home, and then released it. It made money." The German film, Freedland said, came 10 years later, because some producer owned shots of real wolves. He asked Freedland to build a story about the footage. Out came a spooky science fiction picture "which had sputnik in it."

"How do you suppose Broadway or Hollywood would react to delayed reviews and bunching them together into a single critique?"

Another Herzberg innovation that apparently doesn't sit too well with some industryites has been the utilization of byliners (unfamiliar to the trade) for review purposes in a reaching out to other departments for expertise. Thus a tv show on longhair music, on the dance, or on poetry, will get the "specialist treatment" by men from those departments. From the standpoint of the networks they dig a Jack Gould, whatever the content of the show. They'd rather read him—but they want to read him the morning after the show.

And finally, to hear the commercial boys talk about it, the way the Times has been hopping aboard the Channel 13 educational bandwagon, item for item, "you'd think it was the second coming of tv."

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots complete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and average share of audience is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

CANADA NETWORK LOPS OFF ITS FM

Ottawa, Oct. 23.

The austerity program of Canada's federal government chopped a $5,000,000 hunk out of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s budget, and one of the items to be axed will be CBC's three-city FM network.

CBC asked permission from the Board of Broadcast Governors, meeting in Ottawa, to kill its FM web and thus save $1,000,000 of the required $5,000,000 to be cut. The corporation expects to reinstate the Ottawa-Toronto-Montreal web when it becomes financially possible.

NAB's Collins Raps Minow's Knuckles For Overplaying 'Wasteland' Hand

Atlanta, Oct. 23.

LeRoy Collins, president of National Assn. of Broadcasters, here to address the Fall Conference of that group, told newsmen prior to opening of parley at Dinkler Plaza Hotel that FCC Chairman Newton Minow's steady flow of attacks on television was "overreaching and more extreme than necessary."

Former governor of Florida referred, in particular, to Minow's "vast wasteland" descriptive. "Television was not all a wasteland then and it isn't so now," he said. "Certainly there is a degree of waste at present, but there also is much to be said in behalf of television.

"We in broadcasting recognize our shortcomings and certainly no effort is made to hide this situation. There is a great need for more quality writing and production and progress is being made along these lines."

Collins blamed "overcrowding" in the radio field as the chief cause of the poor programming he admitted is abundant in that industry.

He said FCC has issued too many radio broadcasting licenses, "resulting in extreme competition that has brought the price of advertising down considerably."

"As a result," he said, "these stations sell more and more commercials in order to survive. This also explains why many of our radio stations operate without staff newsmen, hurting the quality of their programming."

And, he added, in many cases the intelligence of the American public is underestimated in broadcasting.

"We recognize these problems and expect that they will be greatly reduced and possibly eliminated before too long."

Collins expressed great hope for the potential of Telstar.

"Telstar still is experimental, but we expect that the system will be greatly expanded in a very short time. This will mean much in the way of progressive programming. At this point, Telstar's prime contribution is as a form of stimulation to broadcasters throughout the entire world."

Collins sees the time approaching when bans against broadcasting and news photog coverage of court proceedings will be completely lifted.

"When the people have the right to attend a public hearing then the news media should have the right to record this event for the people."

NAB conference, which assembled members of radio and tv industry throughout the Southeast, participated in "grass roots" discussions of industry affairs and problems, including presentation of editorials by stations. Consensus was that editorials serve a vital purpose and permits radio and tv stations to participate more fully in community affairs.

Panelsts were Daniel W. Kops, president of WAVZ, New Haven, and WTRY-TV, Troy, N.Y., A. Louis Read, WDSU, New Orleans; and Douglas Anello, general counsel for NAB.

Bad Films Illegal?

was a violation of the Sherman Act but permitted its use as a temporary expedient while offering whole packages to competing tv stations.

The defendants disagreed with the first ruling and the government disliked the second. Both appealed to the high court.

Attorney Louis Nizer, representing Loew's, Associated and United Artists, contended that there was no foundation for charges of holding tv stations to mass contracts.

"The FBI went through thousands of documents in television stations to find evidence of a violation," said Nizer, "and, you know, tv stations are sensitive and do what the government asks them.

"But among 21,000 documents, they only found 17 they say are illegal.

"It's true some of them were vintage films, but they were shown on the late shows, the late-late and even some late-late-late shows. There is no evidence that the stations were prevented from shopping around to buy from other distributors. There was no domination of the market."

On this latter claims, Nizer were joined by Myles J. Lane for Screen Gems, Inc., Marvin C. Pollak for C&C Super Corp., and Justin M. Goldenbock for NTA.

They contended there were 900 to 1,000 distributors competing to sell films to stations.

Any More Questions?

A new, revised and updated question-answer rundown on Sec. 315 situations involving political candidates has been issued by the Federal Communications Commission.

Mex TV Unfolds New Tint System

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

Guillermo Gonzalez Camarena, Televicentro executive and inventor, unfurled a new color system over closed circuit telecast last week. Press and technicians were invited for telecast of a color videotape.

Color came through live and brilliant, similar to color effect achieved by Technicolor in motion pictures. Camarena will continue perfecting system but he stated that his latest development brings color closer for Mexican television.

Camarena has invented various color systems, some offshoots of standard color systems in other areas of the world. Also his kalaediscopic color principle which gives effect of color via black-and-white receivers needing no adaptor.

In the new system, Camarena said sets will cost less than double current standard black & white receivers. Also sets can capture both color and black-and-white signals. Camarena claimed that his system has less imperfections than that current in the U. S. and that failures will be reduced to a minimum.

Allegedly Emilio Azcarraga is sold on the new color system. A selling drive is being planned for next year to push distribution of a sufficient number of receivers to make color telecasts feasible.

Waynesville, N. C.—Radio Station WHCC, Waynesville, has received its license from FCC to operate on increased power of 1,000 watts during the daytime, and to continue on 250 watts at night. The station has been owned and operated since 1953 by Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Fry.

who may not be interested in football. The same applied to other national events, and he regarded the Royal Command Variety Show in that category. An arrangement was made last year, whereby the telecast of this gala would be taken by each web on alternate years.

The Covent Garden show is estimated to cost a minimum of $70,000, and it will be a live transmission from the Opera House, with an invited audience. It was timed to begin at, or close to the point, when the BBC show would be ending, and in any event, viewers would not miss more than a few minutes of one or the other.

As a result of the change in the Sunday night schedule, ATV is also dropping its weekly episode of "The Saint" skein, and, starting at 7:30 and running through to 9:45 p.m., the commercial outlet will be screening John Ford's "The Quiet Man," made by Republic some 10 years back, with John Wayne and Victor McLaglen starred.

For the Covent Garden presentation, Maria Callas, Di Stefano and Mischa Elman will be making special journeys to London. Beriosova and Macleary are, of course, members of the Royal Ballet Co. at Covent Garden. Additional names for this show are still being negotiated.

ITC's Giveaway

the U. S. would extend their late night telecasting, a sizeable market for syndicated product could be opened. As to whether such a time would find sponsorship, Mandell pointed to the spots bought on late night radio which broadcasts 24 hours daily.

The ITC plan, the exec v.p. stated, calls for the availability of unsold ITC product on a market-by-market basis. ITC has about 35 shows in its catalog. Affected by the plan is rerun product, in the main. There may be some exceptions on unsold first-run product. Each market will be studied separately, Mandell stated. Factors such as the backlog of unsold product, rerun payments, if any, and other problems, will be considered.

ITC's backlog includes such series as "Hawkeye, the Last of the Mohigans," "Ramar," "Count of Monte Cristo," "New York Confidential," "Tugboat Annie," and "Halls of Ivy."

Mandell urged other distributors and producers to adopt similar plans as ITC, in an effort to open up late night telecasting.

Rattigan Play

"was to find a subject that could have a universal appeal in 14 different languages. Obviously television sprang to mind. Also a play that could be tackled by tv services that might not have the same technical or financial advantages as each other." Money side for "Heart To Heart" is, anyway, taken care of for Rattigan since Ray Stark of Seven Arts has bought the screen rights.

Next entries in this periodic series will be launched by Italy and Austria, from plays specially written by Diego Fabbri and Fritz Hochwalder respectively.

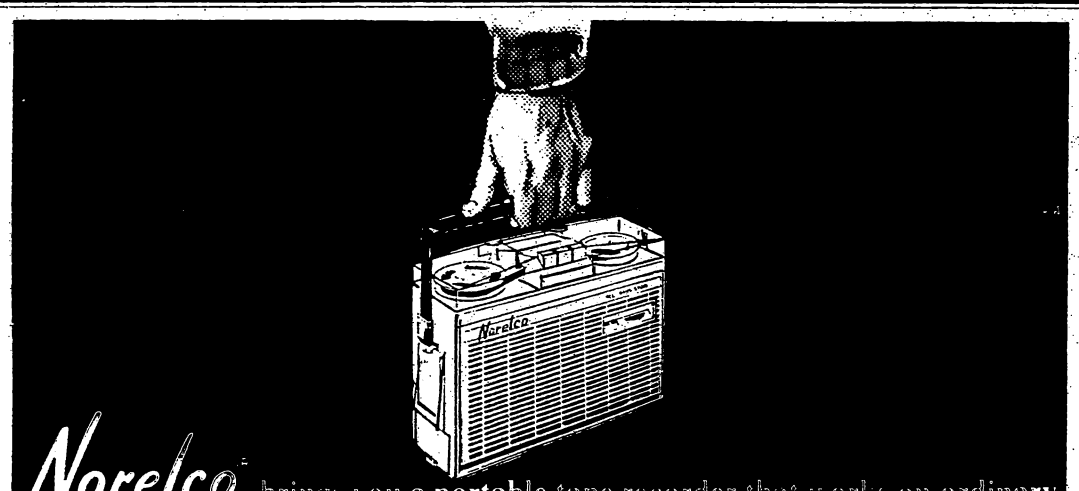
French TV: Not Much Change In '62-'63 Schedule

Paris, Oct. 23.

According to Albert Ollivier, program head of the one channel tv setup under the governmental Radiodiffusion - Television Francaise, there will not be much change in general programming during the '62-'63 season except for more emphasis on live dramatic shows, more moppet slanted entries, and a few new news essay and newscasting shows.

So variety, quiz, scientific and general cultural aspects will remain the same. It seems there will be no move to give variance to the shows till the second channel comes in circa Spring '64. Ollivier appears to be putting stress on legit, live or taped, either right from the boards or conceived especially for tv.

Every Wed. nite at 10:30 from now on, an important offbeat or classic play will be given, with Samuel Beckett and Eugene Ionesco works pencilled in as well as dramatic adaptations of noted literary works and shows by the three state houses, the Comedie-Francaise, Theatre De France and the Theatre National Populaire.



Then there will be specially written shows, historical plays, a skein on secret service and attempts to get better older and newer film features. Eurovision showings will also be increased and Saturdays and Thursdays will be more for moppets with many 15 minute or half-hour adventure segs. And coming up are homages to noted pic directors with a selection of their films.

Kids will also get more instructive programs as well as escapist fare, and adults may also be given more gray matter shows on science, medicine, general culture etc. So it looks like Ollivier intends keeping the one web more public service than out and out distraction. This may be the forte of the next channel.

of the two obvious problems confronting Wolper was whether to treat Harmatz as a typical jock—which clearly he is not—or as Billy Harmatz, the star. His solution, it seemed, was to treat him not quite as either. There was no real history of Harmatz's origins in racing, or any but the most superficial treatment of his character. And to reiterate, Harmatz is not typical.

The other large problem was how to bring excitement into this documentary recitation. Wolper did not rely on a natural evolution of the Harmatz story. Instead he imposed a hokey climax, in which Harmatz rides to victory—he would, since the point had been telegraphed at the beginning like a tired roundhouse—on a horse which otherwise was destined for something akin to the glue factory. If the horse really had problems, he didn't show them, so his sudden resurgence wasn't convincing.

Still and all, the editing—an exceptionally important factor in pubaffairs on any level of tv—and the sound for this seemingly inexpensive (despite claims to the contrary) show were excellent. Mel Stuart, who did the directing and his editors, had, technically, a good deal on which to congratulate themselves. Music by Ruby Raksin was intrusive and satisfying in contradictory, but fairly equal parts.

Despite the imposition of arbitrary and ostensibly phony drama on a documentary, signs of worth on this series of half-hours read better than for most preceding syndie telefilms. Art.

BALLAD OF CHICAGO

CHICAGO TITLE & TRUST
WGN-TV, Chicago (film, b&w, color)

(Marsteller)

"Ballad of Chicago" is a big fat creampuff of a birthday present to the Windy City on its 125th anniversary. Part history and part chamber of commerce propaganda, it's a model of the rose-colored glasses documentary, dwelling on the cultural and industrial glories of the city with only the briefest acknowledgement of the mediocre and depressing aspects.

Typical of its objectivity, the film has a lengthy segment devoted to Col. Robert R. McCormick, late publisher of the Tribune and founder of WGN Inc. (and certainly a notable influence in the city's development), while Al Capone & Co.—who made an indelible contribution—receive only passing mention. Granted a birthday present ought to flatter, but flattery becomes fatuous when it makes you ask, "Hey, who's kidding whom?"

There are really two parts to the film, a good half and an unfortunate one. The first is a lively recounting of historical and memorable events, made fascinating by the stills-in-motion technique and the use of old footage from the Library of Congress and National Archives. It's interesting to see Billy Sunday do his stuff, and Al Jolson, Clarence Darrow, Carrie Nation and the fan dancers at the 1933 World's Fair. In this segment the "heavy" characters in the Chicago gallery, who no longer threaten the image because they're safely in the past, are countenanced as colorful; in the second half, which depicts the city as great today and greater tomorrow, they're written out of the script.

Skid Row and Maxwell Street are noted momentarily as eyesores, but the film would have the viewer believe that Chicago "is" mostly symphony concerts, ballet, football, society functions, the Pump Room and department stores, with a little Stock Yards mixed in for practicality. That may be the way the Assn. of Commerce & Industry likes to think of it, but WGN will have a hard time convincing the fellow who lives in a flat on the west side and rides the subway to work.

There are other distortions of real conditions, for instance the cute dramatization of the population explosion with white kids to point up the city's promising future. But it's well known that the Negro population is growing at least twice as fast, posing obvious social problems and giving headaches to the city planners.

Actually what caused the documentary to deteriorate in the latter part was not the half-truth, but the platitude. The onward-and-upward cliches grew wearisome, and in a sense, for all its good intentions, the WGN special damned the city with too extravagant praise.

In all visual respects the film is excellent, except for a sometimes choppy movement from sequence to sequence. Voice narration is good and the commercials for Chicago Title & Trust are so skillfully woven into the fabric of the documentary that it takes fully 30 seconds to realize they're blurbs. Les.

PROUST AS I KNEW HIM
With Jean Negroni, narrator
Producers: Roger Stephane, Roland Darbois
Directors: Gerald Herzog, Roger Dormoy
75 Mins.; Thurs. (18), 10:30 p.m.
WNDT, N. Y.

WNDT is not wavering on its highbrow course. Again tapping overseas sources for programming material, New York's educational outlet came up with this rarefied show about the late Marcel Proust produced by the French Television Center. Uncompromisingly, WNDT presented this offering with the original French soundtrack, but a simultaneous English translation was available on FM through the facilities of WRVR, the Riverside Church outlet which has entered into a working relationship with WNDT on these foreign language shows.

The profile of Proust was drawn through interviews with various literary associates, friends and his secretary who contributed a deeply moving description of the author's last days. Some old film clips of French society before World War I were supplemented by still photos and some readings from Proust's massive novel, "Remembrance of Things Past." While the personality of Proust was at stage center, this show was most valuable for the non-literary specialist in bringing to the American screen such figures as Francois Mauriac, Jean Cocteau, Daniel Halevy and Mme. Andre Maurois, all of whom were part of Proust's circle.

The show moved with a leisurely rhythm, akin to Proust's own style, in elaborating aspects of the author's background, life and work. Herm.

DEBUT
With Elmer Bernstein, host; Dudley Manlove, announcer
Director: Jack Shepard
60 Mins., Mon., 8:30 p.m.
KRCA, H'wood.

"Saints and Sinners" gave up its regular Monday timeslot on KRCA for special presentation of the eighth annual "Harmony Award" winners of the Young Musicians Foundation and the Los Angeles Junior Chamber of Commerce. Program was very much like a special community service offering rather than an entertainment presentation, its chief aim a showcase of talents selected for individual $1,000 scholarship awards in fields of classical music.

Serious purpose behind the competitions involved was shown by host Elmer Bernstein, president of YMF, who announced usual fourth award for composition was not being given this year because judges felt applications had not been sufficiently high in standard to warrant an award in this field.

Three artists presented were soprano Grace De La Cruz, who sang arias "A Fors E Lui" from Verdi's "La Traviata" and "Suidicio" from Ponchielli's "La Giaconda"; violinist Austin F. Reller who performed Sibelius' Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D Minor, Opus 47, first movement Allegro Moderato, and pianist William Phemister who presented probably the most generally known of the program's works, Rackmaninoff's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra Number 2 in C Minor, Opus 18, third movement Allegro Scherzando.

Youthful "Debut" orchestra played Brahms' "Academic Festival Overture," directed by 21-year-old Lawrence Foster.

humored conferencier albeit unable to elicit any cogent info. Dialectic delicatessen impresario Asnas tried for laughs and scored with a couple. Open End

David Susskind got himself into a two-hour trap in the vidtape interview with Brazilian president Joao Goulart presented on the Sunday (21) "Open End" over WNEW-TV. There was just about enough text for a fairly interesting half-hour.

Vidtaped in Brazil recently, the interview was labored with technical problems, mainly the matter of interpreters on both sides of the conversation. The method, similar to the one used for United Nations Assembly coverage, called for innumerable repeats of questions and a like number of misunderstandings.

Aside from displaying the Brazilian leader as a man of great charm, intelligence and sincerity, the clumsy session had little to offer. Extensive editing with expository inserts between short takes of Goulart would have been far more effective.

It was a brave try, however, and a miss now and again is in the nature of this outing. Goulart's wife appeared at the end of the long haul. The SA beauty, often called the Brazilian Jackie Kennedy,, was a sight as refreshing as a sparkling fountain at the end of a long desert trek.

Interviews was followed by an hour with ranking Brazilians discussing the country's problems and the president's comments. Bill.

Camera Three

CBS-TV's "Camera Three" Sunday morning half-hour turned to jazz last Sunday (21), showcasing the Bill Evans Trio. It proved an interesting segment of music and little talk, nicely showcasing the group's work and display some clever camera techniques.

The Evans Trio has a quiet power in its stylings, paced by the leader at the piano and backed by Paul Montian an drums and Chuck Israels on bass. A tight unit, each individual's playing is interwoven with that of the other men, thus creating a total performance on each piece.

Under director Nick Havinga's guidance, some fine camera work was used to pick up the expressions of the musicians and some of the physical emotion of their playing. Montage shots and cross blending of angles and closeups made for an interesting visual presentational accompaniment to the music. James Macandrew hosted the show with his usual effectiveness offering some info on the group, its work and its audience reception.

In addition to pieces by Evans, the unit also played a Miles Davis tune and a piece by Dave Brubeck, all adding up to a solidly-produced closeup of a talented jazz group in action. Joseph Hurley scripted the show clearly and with a minimum of words and production values, under the eye of producer Clair Roskam, were simple and strong. Kali.

NBC Station Swap

discussions, Huggins said Westinghouse agreed to take NBC's Cleveland station and $3,000,000 in cash for its Philadelphia station.

This was done, he said, because Westinghouse feared that it was vulnerable in Philadelphia. It thought it could lose the NBC affiliation to another channel there with a resulting greater loss than if it moved to Cleveland. However, he added, Westinghouse was determined to stay in Boston.

While negotiations dragged on, Huggins said Sarnoff held off any assurances that Westinghouse would get the NBC outlet in Pittsburgh until the Philadelphia-Cleveland switch was in writing.

"Westinghouse would never have made the switch if the network affiliation was not involved," Huggins went on.

Chris J. Witting, President of Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp. also appeared as a first day witness before the FCC's chief hearing officeer James Cunningham. The hearing is due to continue for several weeks.

NBC was represented by attorney Irving Segal, while Ted Pierson was counsel for RKO and Ernest Nash for the FCC.

British Songwriters Blast Pilkington's Failure to Urge Quotas on Radio-TV

London, Oct. 23.

In a bitter attack on the Pilkington Committee for failing to recommend native music quotas on radio and television, the Songwriters Guild of Great Britain has urged its members to make strong representations to Members. The Pilkington Committee has been probing the broadcasting industry.

Linked to the attack on Pilkington is the BBC, which, claims the Guild has been acting, in its popular music broadcasts, as the "Voice of America." Although the BBC is charged to act as trustees for the national interest, the Guild says it knows from bitter experience that the Corporation interprets this trusteeship on quite other lines. Over the four years from 1958 to 1961 its popular music departments have consistently broadcast on average, 59% American and 9% other foreign material.

Raps Imported Material

Together with the Radio and Television Safeguards Committee, the SWG drew the attention of the Pilkington Committee to the tendency to swamp British radio and television sereens with imported material.

These representations, the Guild notes, had little apparent effect upon the Committee, which gave unqualified praise to the BBC and moral lectures to the ITA companies, concluding by propounding a "starry-eyed scheme for making the ITA as nearly as possible a copy of the BBC. It also strongly recommended that both should be protected from any interference from anyone in the matter of program content."

Charging Pilkington with falling back on the exasperating phrase "art should have no frontiers," the Guild avers that that pious expression is completely meaningless in connection with entertainment as almost no art can reach the public without commercial intervention.

Therefore to make such an observation, the Guild contends, was tantamount to saying that the longest purse must be allowed to win, and that the richest and most ruthless entrepreneurs should be free to dump their products on all markets. It was that sort of confused and ill-informed idealism which had contributed so much to the difficulties of the British entertainment industry.

'Remiss in its Duty'

The Pilkington Committee, the Guild suggests, could have done a great service by exposing some of the forces which have been employed to thrust upon British—"at great dollar expense"—quantities

Cocktail Pianist Fogarty Finds Cafes 'Dead-End Street' for a Composer

Alex Fogarty is giving up his cafe keyboarding to concentrate on composing. Longtime cocktail pianist at such New York spots as the Blue Angel and the Waldorf-Astoria's Peacock Alley, he feels that the the in-person Steinway bit in intime niteries is a "dead-end street" if your ambitions are directed at composing.

As a performing pianist, Fogarty found that the cafe customers had an image of him as just an ivory-tinkler and not as the composer of such songs, which they requested, as "Will I Find My Love Today" and "The Lovely Things You Do." (Both were recorded by Johnny Mathis.)

First up on Fogarty's new composing agenda is a rhapsody entitled "Chandelier On Third Ave." It's being scored by Robert Russell Bennett and several top symphs are auditioning it for its preem performance. As yet, Fogarty has made no deal for the publication of the symphony.

"Working as a cocktail pianist is not a bad life," Fogarty summed up, "but you can't be a composer at the same time."

Concert Tour Wins Draft Delay for Milw. Pianist, 23

Milwaukee, Oct. 23.

Ralph Votapek, 23, award winning Milwaukee pianist, has been granted one year's deferment from induction in the U.S. Army. Early this month he won the $10,000 Van Cliburn international piano competition at Fort Worth. He sought the deferment to fulfill concert tours (also part of the prize.)

Votapek, who has inked a nine-month recording contract with RCA Victor, also has a western hemisphere tour pending under the banner of Sol Hurok.

'Variety Music Cavalcade' Back In Print, at $15

The "VARIETY Music Cavalcade (Musical-Historical Review 1620-1961)" (Prentice-Hall; $15) is a rara avis in publishing circles—a genuine "by insistent demand" reprinting, and at an upped price of $15 from the original $10. The updating includes musicologist Julius Mattfeld's addition of the decade post the 1950 milestone where his original book ended. Now it is complete through 1961, both as to historical newsnotes and the cavalcade of pops and standards.

After the original edition went into the rare book "finds" of dealers, and subsequently even the $20-$35 costs for secondhand editions became scarce, the motion picture studios, broadcasters, programmers, bandleaders, musicologists and kindred users of this type of information had to restort to photostats of the desired years and segments, as they plotted programs or reprises of songs and events of certain periods. Eventually Prentice-Hall which, from a hard-nosed publishing viewpoint, had felt that it did all right selling out the full initial 5,000 copies of the first (and only) edition at $10, recognized from mailorders and demands that an updating was necessary.

Dr. Mattfeld, the former director of the music library of CBS, who originally serialized the "VARIETY Music Cavalcade" in these columns, has not only expanded on the final 1951-1961 segment but has also made corrections and inclusions on previous years. The nature of the music business being what it is, many a "surprise" standard has asserted itself in recent years, brought about by a combination of circumstances—nostalgic and otherwise—so that certain omissions are now included.

The book remains the most complete chronology extant of music published in the U.S., listing title, authors, publishers, year of copyright, source (film, legit). The song events are matched to the year's historical events, and is the answer to why so many deejays, radio-tv programmers, maestros, Hollywood and broadcasting studios, newspapers, magazines and others have recoursed to it as a handy reference. It's a kingsize book (over 700 pp). The editor of VARIETY also rewrote and updated his foreword, "The Music Biz."

LICENSE POSER FOR MUSIC BIZ

By MIKE GROSS

The mushrooming of educational tv stations around the country is presenting new problems to the music industry.

The big poser, of course, is the matter of collections: Should the educational tv stations be given a free ride on a song performance or should they be charged a fee for the licensing like commercial tv?

There has been no definite industry policy established yet and producers of educational tv shows have been getting into jams by working along the lines that one publisher's policy holds for another. Some charge and some don't. Some charge a little and some a lot.

So far, the two music societies, ASCAP and BMI, have resorted to the cuffo stand towards educational tv but the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers is reviewing its policy and the Broadcast Music Inc. agreements with the educational tv stations run only until March 11, 1964.

Protest 'Giveaway'

ASCAP's decision to review its cuffo policy stems from squawks received from several writers against the "giveaway." Herman Finkelstein, ASCAP attorney, revealed that some meetings have been scheduled to discuss the matter and swap thoughts on a common policy.

BMI, on the other hand, is going ahead with its free-licensing program—at least until the '64 expiration date. BMI has a standard agreement applying to non-commercial educational television stations which carry FCC licenses that reads: "We hereby grant you a gratuitous non-exclusive non-assignable license to perform by broadcasting over said station the

VICTOR'S BOB YORKE NEW NARAS PREXY

Bob Yorke, veepee of the creation department at RCA Victor, is the new national president of the National Assn. of Recording Arts & Sciences.

He was elected last week at the org's two-day meeting at New York's Plaza Hotel. At the same time, outgoing president Paul Weston, was voted 1st vicepresident; Bernie Clapper of Chicago became 2d veepee; Michael Kapp, national secretary, and John Scott Trotter, national treasurer.

Discussed and developed by the trustees at the conclaves were creation of a bi-monthly publication to be co-edited by Dave Dexter and George Simon; establishment of a national liaison committee which will work closely with other groups; a possible life and medical insurance program for members; creation and bestowing of special merit awards for outstanding contributions to the creative forces within the industry, and a review and clarification of nominating and voting procedures for the Academy's annual Grammy awards.

Bandleaders Win Federal Court Writ Blocking Certain AFM & 802 Taxes

Two decisions were handed down in N.Y. Federal Court last week in suits involving certain orchestra leaders and their struggle to knock off the American Federation of Musicians' 10% traveling surcharge and Local 802's 1½% jurisdictional tax.

In one action, Judge Richard H. Levet granted the bandleader plaintiffs a preliminary injunction, restraining the union from collecting the imposts by mandate. In the other ruling Judge Levet granted batoners Charles Peterson, Joe Carroll and Charles Turecamo relief by restraining the union from interfering with their work as leaders and/or musicians despite the fact that Peterson and Carroll are expelled from the AFM.

Plaintiffs in the tax case include Ben Cutler, Dan Terry, Ralph Flanagan, Marty Levitt, Vic Ash, Claude Garreau and Angie Bond plus some 54 intervenors. Among them are Ralph Marterie, Kai Winding, Quincy Jones, Eddie Wittstein, Skitch Henderson, Horace Silver and Chuck Wayne. A new wrinkle to the intervener participation was added in the injunction by Levet's ruling that each plaintiff must put up a $1,000 bond in order to qualify. This may remove some hinterland leaders from participation.

Applies Only to Plaintiffs

The court's order applies only to the plaintiffs, is restricted to the single engagement field. Both of these points are being appealed by the plaintiffs and, indeed, the entire order is being appealed by the union.

In addition to enjoining mandatory collection of the 10% and 1½% imposts, the court also restrained the union from interfering with the plaintiffs' businesses for refusal to pay the taxes and from threatening customers or sidemen against working with leaders in question.

In the matter of 802's tax, the order states that leaders can still pay the charge upon obtaining written authorization to do so but that the Local must place any such monies collected from plaintiffs into an escrow fund pending the outcome of the case.

It is no longer mandatory, however, and no such escrow provision has been made for the 10% traveling surcharge, the payment of which is no longer required of the plaintiffs.

In the Carroll-Peterson-Turecamo case, Judge Levet has restrained the union temporarily from preventing or attempting to prevent union members from working with or for the plaintiffs even though Peterson and Carroll aren't union members. The union is restrained from threatening directly or indirectly any sideman, customer or potential customer because of the

Col's Foglesong Taking On Show Album Chores

Jim Foglesong is spreading into the show area at Columbia Records. In addition to his pop artists & repertoire chores, he'll now be producer of Col's re-creation of Broadway show albums as well as Epic's Footlight series.

In the show album field, Foglesong will be responsible to Schuyler Chapin, director of Masterworks a&r. He'll continue to report to David Kapralik, director of Col's pop a&r for new recordings by Robert Goulet, Les Paul & Mary Ford, The Ames Bros., pianist Ronnie Brown, Julie Andrews and Lester Lanin.

Yanks Can Alter Bossa Nova As They Wish: Frey

Sidney Frey, president of Audio Fidelity and a Brazilian buff from way back, takes exception to certain remarks made in last week's VARIETY by Brazilian publisher Enrique Lebendinger that the bossa nova was in danger of being corrupted by Yankee distortion. Says Frey, "Americans have the right to take Brazilian music and interpret it as they see fit."

"Since bossa nova is only a distillation of Brazilian music and American jazz," he adds, "it is quite valid that American music men give it their own interpretation." Frey, however, points out that there are opportunists in the music biz who are now peddling quickly concocted material as bossa nova to hop on the gravy train—and it is these men and these songs that the recording company artists & repertoire execs should watch out for.

"But," he stresses, "it is categorically incorrect to say that the only authentic bossa nova must be written by Brazilians and performed by Brazilians." He indicates that the Brazilian publishing fraternity is making the charges of American "corruption" and "distortion" only to protect their own interests and their own copyrights. Quick to cash in on a vogue, he points out, the Brazilin publishers are now asking as much as $2,000 for a song when only six months ago they were happy to get $200.

Meantime, Frey is readying a bossa nova concert for New York's Carnegie Hall on Nov. 21 and is also working on over 100 bossa nova songs that he brought back to the U.S. from a recent trip to Brazil. While in Brazil he arranged for Joao Gilberto, one of the founders of bossa nova, to appear at the concert along with the Oscar Neves Quartet, Jose Paulo, Brazilian guitarist; Carmen Costa rhythm instrumentalist-singer, and Bolasete, bossa nova guitarist.

Representing the Yankee side of bossa nova will be Stan Getz, Gary McFarland and Leonard Feather who will emcee.

Cerami Exits Riverside, Buys Potter Distributing

Joe Cerami, for the past year-and-a-half Riverside Records sales exec, has exited the diskery to go into the disk distribution field. He has purchased Potter Distributing in Chicago from Curt Potter and has taken over as prexy.

Under the new setup, former owner Potter is vice prez of the five-year-old operation. Cerami is no stranger to distribution or Chi, having been with Capitol Distributing there for nine and a half years. He later became district sales manager for Cap in the midwest.

Cap Wrapping 3 B'way Shows of Alex Cohen Into One Disk Package

Capitol Records is putting three of Alexander Cohen's Broadway productions into one disk package. The overall heading will be "The Best Of The Nine O'Clock Theatre," an extension of the tag which Cohen uses for his presentation.

Included in the package are highlights from "At The Drop Of A Hat," "An Evening With Mike Nichols & Elaine May" and the Nine O'Clock Theatre presentation, "Beyond The Fringe."

"At The Drop Of Hat," with Flanders & Swann, was released by Cap's disk affil, Angel Records. The original Broadway cast album of "Fringe" was released by Cap several weeks ago. The Nichols & May package was originally released by Mercury but Cap has received the greenlight to use excerpts for its upcoming package. Nichols & May are now signed to the Columbia label.

Sinatra's 'Alone,' Baez's 'Concert,' Sherman's 'My Son' Top New LPs

FRANK SINATRA: "ALL ALONE" (Reprise). The mood in this new Sinatra package is set along torchy ballad lines. And, like a true troubadour, he makes the blue mood a penetrating and warm experience. With the help of Gordon Jenkins, who arranged and conducted the session, Sinatra builds an enchanting glow as he works through such standards as "All Alone," "Remember," "What'll I Do," "Charmaine" and "Are You Lonesome Tonight" and others of similar nature. It's a handsome two-fol l package that will attract plenty of retail action.

"JOAN BAEZ IN CONCERT" (Vanguard). The new darling of the folksinging set, Joan Baez displays lucid piping here in another superlative sheaf of folktunes. Recorded live before a concert audience, which does not produce the best acoustical results, this set contains some standout numbers, including a sing-along "Kumbaya," "Babe, I'm Gonna Leave You," "Black Is the Color" and a resurrection of the "Matty Groves" ballad which John Jacob Niles introduced many years ago.

ALLAN SHERMAN: "MY SON, THE FOLK SINGER" (Warner Bros.). Folk music may never be the same. Because of Allan Sherman, it will be virtually impossible now to listen to a serious rendition of "Greensleeves," "Frere Jacques," "Matilda" or "The Streets of Laredo" without recalling his "Sir Greenbaum's Madrigal," "Sarah Jackman," "My Zelda" or "The Streets of Miami." In that respective order. Sherman, a tv writer-producer, has taken a flock of items from the standard folk-song repertoire and given them a lox-and-bagel flavoring that's quite hilarious in concept and wide-range in appreciation. It will be enjoyed mostly along the Myron-Catskill axis, but anyone who's been exposed to the New York-Yiddish intonation and expression will dig his attack with relish. He gets a major assist from Christine Johnson on the vocal end and from Lou Busch's brisk arrangements but it's Sherman who rates the biggest bow for conceiving and putting across this funny package.

"RUSTY WARREN IN ORBIT" (Jubilee). Probably the most consistent LP seller in the comedy disk sweepstakes in recent years, Rusty Warren is back with another set of stories, gags and songs about sex and related subjects. Much of the material is funny in this groove as recorded in a California nitery, the Chariot Club. The album draws its title from a lengthy bit on astronauts and sex in space. The formula is the same as her previously-successful sessions, and the space-age material is a further extension of this plan. Like the others, this Rusty Warren LP should register in the clicko category.

ANDRE KOSTELANETZ ORCH: "MR. PRESIDENT" (Columbia). The score for Irving Berlin's new Broadway musical, "Mr. President," is loaded with simple melodic lines that have long-lasting quality and Andre Kostelanetz helps point up their potential. The maestro has dressed up the tunes with sharp arrangements for the rhythm items and shimmering orchestrations for the ballad entries. He's given the package pace and listening excitment that makes it a natural for program spotlighting and home turntable action.

AL HIRT: "TRUMPET & STRINGS" (RCA Victor). Al Hirt, the New Orleans Dixielander with the virtuoso horn technique, has now been put through the standard paces with violin accompaniment in a highly attractive roundup of ballads. Hirt's trumpet gets a clean showcasing in lush arrangements played by Marty Paich's orchestra on such standards as "As Time Goes By," "Poor Butterfly," "How Deep Is the Ocean," "Sleepy Lagoon" and "Stranger in Paradise," among others.

JONI JAMES: "I'M YOUR GIRL" (MGM). Joni James digs deep into the catalog of great standards which showcases her in a somewhat different light than the pop and folk tunes that have been her usual pop fare. She uses her voice within her given range with good effect on ballads like "Baby, Won't You Say You Love Me," "It's Magic," "You're My Girl," "Dream A Little Dream of Me" and "I'll Walk Alone." A sophisticated tune like "Manhattan," however, doesn't jibe with her vocal attack.

"GIGOT" (Capitol). The similarity between Jackie Gleason, as star of "Gigot," and Chaplin has been noted by the film critics. The parallel also carries over into the music which Gleason, as Chaplin did for many of his own films, wrote. It's a highly tuneful score with several excellent themes, notably the title song, "Allo, Allo, Allo" and "Un Jour." It's a bittersweet concoction of melody sentimentality with a dominant accordion sound in a Parisian setting.

JANE MORGAN: "WHAT NOW MY LOVE" (Kapp). This set features Jane Morgan in a ballad mood, essaying an array of love songs. Already noted for her rich vocal style, the session pays off nicely for her as she scores with a round of tunes of the hard times of romance. She exudes lotsa feeling here and builds to strong finales on many numbers for solid effect. Her torchy touch is nicely applied to such songs as "Guess I'll Hang My Teardrops Out To Dry," "Black Coffee," "I'm a Fool To Want You," "Love Look Away," "Goodby" and others.

TOMMY ROE: "SHEILA" (ABC-Paramount). Having scored heavily with his "Sheila," disclisk, young singer Tommy Roe is now represented with this LP pegged to the hit tune. The pace is mixed, but mostly in the uptempo groove and all the tunes bear that distinctive Nashville touch. Roe has written some of the songs and his performance is sure and effective, backed by the Jordanaires. His ballads have a solid teen flavor. The uptempo sides rock well and all mark this session for chart contention.

RICHARD HAYMAN: "SONGS OF WONDERFUL GIRLS" (Mercury). Here is a pleasant array of tunes, all of which are pegged to the names of femmes. Richard Hayman has arranged the session with rich, full orchestrations, spotlighting himself on harmonica, piano and organ. A soft and easy sound prevails throughout, some tunes getting a smooth yet bouncy treatment and others receiving a more velvet approach. It all adds up to a set which makes for nice listening and terping. Among the ladies in the LP are "Ruby," "Mona Lisa," "Tammy," "Patricia," "Laura" and "Charmaine."

BURL IVES: "SUNSHINE IN MY SOUL" (Decca). For this waxing, Burl Ives turns to the inspirational groove. Having recently found new success on the pop disk market, the balladeer reached for a change of pace and has come up with a strong entry in the religioso sweepstakes. His rich vocal treatment works well for this type of material. He's backed strongly by an orchestra and chorus conducted by Owen Bradley, Decca's Nashville a&r chief. Before Ives scored in the pop field as a balladeer, he was a church singer. This return to a style of many years ago works well for him and could make a dent in the market for disks of this genre.

FRANK PARKER: "GOLDEN FAVORITES OF BROADWAY" (Liberty). Frank Parker and his tenor stylings have been gracing the public's ears for several years on radio, tv and disks. On this latest platter outing, the Irishman lends his approach to an array of Broadway melodies with general effectiveness. Although he isn't the strongest he's ever been, Parker gets off some nice treatments, particularly on the ballad side. His uptempo tries aren't the best but the slower tunes give him a chance to score with his tenor. Included are "You'll Never Walk Alone," "Stranger in Paradise," "Some Enchanted Evening," "Hey There," "Tonight," "Fanny," "I Believe In You" and others.

"THE SOUND OF THE TRIO" (Verve). Oscar Peterson on piano, Ray Brown on bass and Ed Thigpen on drums comprise the trio which recorded this jazz set at a Chicago nightclub. It's a demonstration of driving modern jazz propelled chiefly by Peterson's prodigious power on the piano. The trio really moves on such numbers as "Tricrotism," "On Green Dolphin Street," "Thig's Dance," "Ill Wind" and "Kadota's Blues."

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

GEORGE MAHARIS . . . . . BABY HAS GONE BYE BYE
(Epic) . . . . . After One Kiss

George Maharis' "Baby Has Gone Bye Bye" (Dymor) sets up an extremely pleasant ballad mood that is enhanced by a warm vocal and some whistling interludes to give it an added glow. "After One Kiss" (Famous*) blows up a nice ballad feel into a side that will find favor with lots of programmers.*

NAT KING COLE . . . . . DEAR LONELY HEARTS
(Capitol) . . . . . Who's Next In Line

Nat King Cole's "Dear Lonely Hearts" (Sweco-Cetra†) has a clicko ballad beat set in a standout arrangement that follows the "Ramblin Rose" pattern and will do as well on all spinning levels. "Who's Next In Line" (Sweco-Edent) steps along at a neat lilt that helps project the smooth balladeering style.

STEVE LAWRENCE . . . . . GO AWAY LITTLE GIRL
(Columbia) . . . . . If You Love Her Tell Her So

Steve Lawrence's "Go Away Little Girl" (Aldon†) will make teenagers' fave once again via this romantic ballad blending of a meaningful lyric and understanding vocal that they'll find hard to resist. "If You Love Her Tell Her So" (Westside†) has a show but warming ballad approach that's good for spins.

THE EXCITORS . . . . . TELL HIM
(United Artists) . . . . . Hard Way To Go

The Excitors' "Tell Him" (Mellin†) tells a good story with a catchy rocking beat and a powerhouse vocal lead that will grab teen interest and give this new group a top bracket slotting. "Hard Way To Go" (Trio†) sends out a blues ballad message with a vocal force that will give this side a fine spinning shake, too.

PAUL PETERSON . . . . . MY DAD
(Colpix) . . . . . Little Boy Sad

Paul Peterson's "My Dad" (Aldon†) is a sentimental salute to the "old man" that the young folks will probably find to their liking and a relief from the constant song tributes to "mom." "Little Boy Sad" (Cedarwood†) comes over with a zingy beat.

JACK JONES . . . . . I'VE GOT MY PRIDE
(Kapp) . . . . . That's Her Little Way

Jack Jones' "I've Got My Pride" (Aldon†) uses big ballad effects to advantage and in a way that will punch up deejay programming to payoff proportions. "That's Her Little Way" (Regent†) plays around with a neat bal[illegible]timent.

DINAH WASHINGTON . . . . . YOU'RE A SWEETHEART
(Roulette) . . . . . It's A Mean Old Man's World

Dinah Washington's "You're A Sweetheart" (Robbins) wraps up the oldie with a solid vocal approach to bring it back on the spinning circuit for a big payoff. "It's A Mean Old Man's World" (Figure†) spins out a blues with a vocal attack that gives it long-lasting values.*

DION . . . . . LITTLE GIRL
(Laurie) . . . . . Love Came To Me

Dion's "Little Girl" (Just-Mubon†) works along a slow ballad groove but it packs a lot of spinning impact for the teen trade. "Love Came To Me" (Schwartz-Disal) snaps along rhythmic ballad lines and it, too, will grab lots of deejay time.*

SERGIO FRANCHI . . . . . ONCE
(RCA Victor) . . . . . I Mustn't Say I Love Her

Sergio Franchi's "Once" (Walt Disney) serves as a strong showcasing for this new tenor who will pick up a good following in the singles market with this lush ballad. "I Mustn't Say I Love Her" (Mills*) has a romantic Neapolitan flavor that's excellently suited to his tenor piping in Italian and English.*

VALJEAN . . . . . MR. MOZART'S MASH
(Carlton) . . . . . Mewsette

Valjean's "Mr. Mozart's Mash" (David Jones†) follows the trend started by "Monster Mash" with a takeoff on Mozartian melodies that make it a topnotch instrumental slice for strong spinning action. "Mewsette" (Harwin) is a tidy melodic item out of Harold Arlen's score for the UPA pic, "Gay Purr-ee," and the programmers should take to it because of its instrumental lilt.*

GENE McDANIELS . . . . . SPANISH LACE
(Liberty) . . . . . Somebody's Waiting

Gene McDaniels' "Spanish Lace" (St. Louis†) is veiled with peppery Latino phrases and a sharp vocal beat to give it added pep for spinners' appreciation. "Somebody's Waiting" (Metric†) takes a big ballad for a big-voiced vocal ride.

THE CLEFTONES . . . . . LOVER COME BACK TO ME
(Gee) . . . . . There She Goes

The Cleftones' "Lover Come Back To Me" (Harms) pushes the Romberg-Hammerstein standard for a tricky harmony ride that's suited to current teen tastes for strong jock and juke play. "There She Goes" (Frost-Jon Ware†) is an average ballad entry but it gives the group a chance to work over some intricate harmony techniques.*

MILT PATRICK . . . . . TEENAGE MONSTER
(Everest) . . . . . I Don't Think I Wanna Do It

Milt Patrick's "Teenage Monster" (Two Minute-Arrowhead†) hops on the teeners' "monster" vogue with a highflying rhythmic item that's sure to get a big jock and juke pull. "I Don't Think I Wanna Do It" (Two Minute-Arrowhead†) has the kind of driving beat that gets some coin action for an okay response.

STAN JONES . . . . . DROWNING IN THE SURF
(Reprise) . . . . . Ahab The Arab

Stan Jones' "Drowning In The Surf" (Pine Hollow) follows along the lines set by the clicko "Surfin' Safari" with a novelty twist that's slightly on the morbed side but with plenty of appeal for the teeners' offbeat tastes. "Ahab The Arab (Ten Years Later On)" (Lowery†) takes off after another hot single and has some fun with it for teener giggles.* — Gros.

Leningrad Philharmonic's N.Y. Click

Schang, Doulens & Wright Division of Columbia Concerts brings over in the Leningrad Philharmonic a far better orchestra than Sol Hurok had two years ago with the Moscow State Symphony. Its debut performance Sunday (21) at Philharmonic Hall (another performance tonight (Wed.) at Carnegie) was a big hit with the audience, though some reservations on the Bach Fourth (first half) were felt.

There is no doubt that the ensemble is well rehearsed, but some doubt about the horns, which seem to give many symphonies trouble. However, ordinary music buffs will be aroused to enthusiasm. Tchaikovsky's Fifth, that melody-soaked, somewhat-too-familiar, frequently-pirated-for-pop-use work has what it takes to please. And please it did. The ovation at the end was fulsome. It's music for enjoyment of the moment, not education in musicology.

Eugene Mravinsky is a tall, concentrated conductor who barely bothers to make motions. He has the score in front of him, but seemingly never looks at it. He obviously knows what he can expect from his 100-odd stalwarts, including six women. The strings are his crowning glory, and the basic strength of the symphony. When are they not? Land.

'Hound Dog's Old Gold,' Endorsed By A Monsignor, Aiding Buff Boys' Town

"Hound Dog's Old Gold" might sound like an odd LP title to be endorsed by a monsignor but the plug is on Atlantic Records. The platter is just what its title implies too, a collection of rock 'n' roll goldies pegged to deejay Hound Dog.

The cleric involved is Msgr. Kelliher and he has endorsed the disk as a fundraiser for a new Buffalo Boys' Town for which he's campaigning. A structure now in use is over 90 years old and dangerous. It's primarily a rehabilitation home for boys, most of whom have had brushes with law and some already there by court order.

All proceeds from the disk's sales go to the building of the new Boys' Town, which has $115,000 in its fund and needs $400,000. The platter was prepared by George Lorenz originally for the profit of those involved in its release. Deejay Hound Dog (Lorenz's radio handle) later thought of the fundraising idea.

Msgr. Kelliher, who directs the activities of the Buffalo institution, says he brought the idea to his boys and their interest was keen. Asked about the complaints of some about the moral values of rock 'n' roll, he sums up his opinion of the music by remarking "rock 'n' roll records are what young people want; it's the music of youth."

The music is used at dances at the home, the Monsignor relates.

Decca Ltd. Hikes Net to $4,149,600

London, Oct. 23.

Aided by expanding domestic sales, improved exports and higher net profit, Decca Ltd. has raised its dividend from 23⅓% to 25%. The report for the year ended last March 31, disclosed last week, shows that sales increased 13% to $77,280,000, trading profit is 17% better at $13,104,000 and pre-tax earnings jumped 27% to $8,204,000.

Gross sales of the Decca group, including exports at $23,044,000, were $8,680,000 higher than the previous year. In the previous 12-month period, exports amounted to $20,132,000.

Taxation trimmed $4,054,400 from the profit, leaving a net of $4,149,600 against $3,497,200 in the previous year.

The disk side of the group had a good year, with manufacturers' sales increasing from $42,280,000 to $45,920,000, although the sales impetus appears to have slowed down in the four subsequent months up to the end of last July.

Pickwick Int'l Moves Into Pre-Recorded Tape Biz As Mkt. Steadily Grows

The market for pre-recorded tape is growing rapidly and the development of this field is already working its way into disk distribution, rack jobbing and discounting. Latest to enter the area is Pickwick International, operator of several budget-priced disk lines, which is producing a line of four-track stereo tapes designed to sell for the price of an undiscounted mono LP.

The series is recorded on RCA Victor magnetic tape and the first release contains 25 pieces. A followup release of eight more packages will be issued later this month and includes two Christmas tapes. Pickwick plans regular monthly releases of this economy-priced line.

Cy Leslie, Pickwick prexy, says that a survey of the tape market reveals that there are approximately 2,500,000 tape recorders in operation. Almost 500,000 recorders were sold during 1961 and this year's sales are expected to be around 600,000, he notes.

Some 40% of pre-recorded tapes are sold in photographic supply stores, another 40% by electronic jobbers and hi fi outlets and 20% by a wide variety or retailers including record stores. Another potent sales source is the scholastic market, where purchase of tape recorders is subsidized under a Government program.

Leslie feels that rack jobbers who service big volume operators such as discount stores and supermarkets should become an important sales avenue for economy-priced tapes. Disk distribs are also a growing outlet for pre-recorded tapes, he opines, as the volume of sales in music stores continues to rise.

SELMER EARNS 372G IN 1ST 9 MOS. OF '62

H&A Selmer, band instrument manufacturer, last week reported a 24% increase in sales and a 77% increase in earnings after taxes for the nine months ending Sept. 30.

Sales for the first nine months of 1962 were $6,181,302 compared to $4,967,640 for the same period last year. Net earnings applicable to common stock were $372,367 or $1.20 a share for the first nine months of '62 as compared with $200,374 or 66c per share for the same period last year. The 1962 figures include sales and earnings of the Vincent Bach Corp., acquired by Selmer as a wholly-owned subsid in September, 1961.

Company officials stated that orders on hand on Sept. 30, scheduled for shipment during the remainder of 1962, were nearly double those on file for the same period last year. Selmer products are sold mostly to educational institutions and the rise in sales this year is attributed to the fact that more students are joining grade and secondary school bands.

Scherer Rejoins Kaye

Bernie Scherer has rejoined the Sammy Kaye publishing enterprises as professional manager. He'll also oversee the management operation of the Kaye office with respect to recordings, etc.

The music firms in the Kaye group are Republic and World.

Cap's 1st Qtr. Domestic Sales Up 39%; Singles Rocket 51%, Angel 73%

Capitol Records is reporting a first quarter domestic sales increase of 39% over the same fiscal period the preceding year. According to Alan W. Livingston, newly-elected president of the company, Cap's pop-album sales showed an increase of more than 41%. Singles-record sales increased 51% while sales of its Angel line shot up 73%. The quarter ended Sept. 30.

Assisting in the LP jump were packages by Nat King Cole ("Ramblin' Rose"), The Kingston Trio ("Something Special"), Ray Anthony ("Worried Mind"), Judy Garland ("The Garland Touch") and Vic Damone ("The Lively Ones"), among others.

Prominent in the singles build-up were Cole's "Ramblin' Rose," Nelson Riddle's "Route 66," The Lettermen's "Silly Boy" and The Beach Boys' "Surfin' Safari." Standout items in the Angel catalog were the Otto Klemperer recordings of Beethoven's "Fidelio" and the "St. Matthew Passion."

3 MORE ORIG. CASTERS IN COL'S GOLD CIRCLE

Three more original Broadway cast albums are entering Columbia Records' gold disk circle. The shows that have sold more than the qualifying 500,000 copies are "Camelot," "Flower Drum Song" and "West Side Story." Already gold-disked in the Col hopper are "My Fair Lady," "South Pacific" and "Sound Of Music."

Goddard Lieberson, Col president, will host a luncheon next Thurs. (1) at New York's Four Seasons honoring his gold troika. Guests of honor will be Mrs. Oscar Hammerstein 2d, Leonard Bernstein, Alan Jay Lerner, Frederick Loewe, Richard Rodgers and Stephen Soundheim.

Jon Vickers Must Rest· Vienna's Liebel as Sub

Toronto, Oct. 23.

Karl Lieble, dramatic tenor of Vienna Staatoper, replaced Jon Vickers in tonight's (23) performance of "Die Walkure" and sings the Siegmund role at the O'Keefe Centre on Thursday (25) and Saturday (27) nights.

Vickers, Canadian tenor, who was previously skedded to appear in the 14th season of the Canadian Opera Co. in "Die Walkure" was stricken with gastric infection after recent Mexican tour. He has been advised by medicos to cancel at least the next six weeks of engagements.

Lieble, who has appeared formerly in the Met, New York, and Covent Garden, London, planed to Toronto from Vienna for rehearsals under Walter Susskind, conductor of Toronto Symphony.

Previous long distance phone call to Set Svanholm, top Wagnerian tenor of Swedish State Opera at Stockholm, found him unable to take the role as he was preparing for the birthday observance of King Gastav of Sweden.

Cap Draws New Sales Blueprint

Capitol Records Distributing Corp. is establishing a new marketing organization which calls for merging sales and merchandising activities. According to Stanley M. Gortikov, CRDC veepee-general manager, "Beginning Nov. 1 album merchandising will become a direct and integral part of sales. We no longer will have a 'sales function' and a 'merchandising function' working more or less independent of each other. Instead there will be one sales-merchandising activity."

Under the new setup, basic merchandising policy will be set by Gortikov. Album merchandising manager Paul Russell will now work directly with album sales manager George Gerken. The latter continues to report to CRDC veepee-national sales manager Bill Tallant.

Bob Bates, merchandising services manager, and Jack Wagner, national radio services manager will now report directly to Gortikov. National merchandising manager Perry Mayer has been appointed manager of the international department. Mayer succeeds Dick Rising.

Rising has been ill for several weeks and is not expected to return to work until after the first of the year. At that time, said Gordon R. Frazer, head of Cap's international department, Rising will be assigned new responsibilities within the diskery's international operation.

BOURNE ADDS OAKLAND & PART OF HUB MUSIC

Bourne Music has added a couple more acquisitions to its growing roster of catalogs with the pickup of Ben Oakland Music and the Oakland interest in Hub Music. Involved in the deal are the works of such writers as Ben Oakland, L. Wolfe Gilbert, Mort Greene, George Jessel, Art & Dottie Todd, Herb Magidson and others. Bourne already publishes "I'll Take Romance," which Oakland wrote with Oscar Hammerstein 2d.

On another front, Bourne-Rank Music, which reps both Bourne and the J. Arthur Rank music affairs in England, is publishing Acker Bilk and Norrie Paramor's "Lonely," from Bilk's latest pic, "Band of Thieves." The tune is released in the U.S. on a single by the clarinetist on the Atco imprint.

Hill & Range's 500G Buy Of Progressive Music

Hill & Range Songs has purchased Progressive Music, the Atlantic Records publishing subsid, for a sum reportedly in excess of $500,000. The buy marks the first sizable jazz acquisition by Hill & Range.

Progressive was started in 1950 as an Atlantic affiliate. It contains an extensive jazz catalog beside the tunes of such talent as Bobby Darin and Ray Charles. Atlantic's other pub interests aren't affected by the deal. The diskery retains its remaining firms which include Walden Music, an ASCAP firm.

Although the sale of sheet music has fallen to a mere fraction of what it used to be, there is still a market for printed pop tunes. They just aren't being sold properly, in the opinion of Jack Mills, prexy of Mills Music.

The longtime music publisher points out that "there has been no falling off in the piano business." The difference today is that pianos are now "showpieces" instead of functional musical outlets in the home as they used to be.

Mills feels that the reduction of the home instrument to an ornament and the resultant drop in sheet music sales stem from several factors including high costs, poor salesmanship and a different approach to music from the days when sheet music and home instruments were strong

'Music Costs Too Much'

For one thing, Mills says, "music costs too much. You can buy a magazine for 15c or 25c but it costs 50c or 60c for a two-page piece of sheet music." However, there are many factors that enter here, he feels, one being that "the songwriter wants too much royalty." It also costs more to produce sheet music and with sales off so badly, prices have to be high to make anything at all.

Salesmanship is also lacking in this electronic era of the disk instead of the sheet, Mills points out. He still favors some of the older methods of music selling. "We should go back to playing behind music counters. In the days when music was sold this way the first thing people heard was someone singing a song the way they liked it and they didn't need the record. There just isn't enough being done to make someone want a piece of music in the home."

Of course, much of today's pop chart material isn't much on paper and is effective more for its rendition than the music itself in many cases. "People don't want the music anymore," Mills asserts. The

Hurok-RCA's Franchi At Carnegie; Pops Mostly, But Flirts With Opera

By ELMER WIENER

Papa Hurok's international talent supermarket today has new merchandise to offer—delicious imported prosciutto. This prosciutto —and it is very choice—comes in the guise of a handsome, personable six-feet-one tenor yclept Sergio Franchi, who made his New York debut Sunday night (22) in Carnegie Hall under the world-impresario's Midas aegis.

Franchi's bow was preceded by a heavy barrage of press space and display advertising. In this, the Hurok forces, generalled by Martin Feinstein, were abetted by RCA Victor's cohorts, commanded by Herb Helman. The Victor interest, of course, was generated by Franchi's simultaneous debut on wax, a long-playing disk of romantic Italian songs which already has made an impact on the nation's record buyers. Added also, was a showcasing on the Ed Sullivan show of a week ago Sunday. Another shot is coming up this weekend.

Franchi is a switch hitter, having gifts in the pops field and in opera. The voice is robust, and he has excellent diction in Italian, Spanish and English, too. He has the personality that wins an audience quickly and he holds that audience with his performance. He can swell a tone to a rafter-shaking intensity and then fade it to an unsupported soft sound, a trick he uses too often. But it pleases the crowd, and Franchi, is, after all, an entertainer, rather than an art-song stylist.

The Tuckers, Bergonzis and Del Monacos of the operatic orbit are unchallenged but here is an entertainer who doubtless will make an impression in class night spots, on television, on records (a "Franchi at Carnegie Hall" disk is in the making), and perhaps in filmusicals. He might also be in demand with minor opera companies, but it is in the popular fields that he will enjoy his greatest triumphs. He has a voice, style and showmanship, good looks and a boyish, engaging smile—a combination hard to equal.

Paris, 1961, Tops Pre-War Concerts

Paris, Oct. 23.

According to Paris Concert Guide the number of longhair symphonic musical concerts last year surpassed the top pre-war figures for the first time since the last war. In 1961 there were 297 concerts to the 282 in 1938. The lowest figure was hit in 1955 with 180.

Even chamber music was on the rise with 341 sessions in 1961 to 192 annually before the war.

plaintiffs' refusal to comply with union regulations.

In regard to sidemen, the court order states that the union is to advise its members that they are not required or expected to avoid or refuse employment with Carroll and Peterson because of their expulsion.

The union quickly filed an appeal. The Court of Appeals denied a motion to vacate the order but added the proviso that union wage scales must be maintained by the plaintiffs while the injunction is in force. A further appeal by the union is planned.

Meanwhile, an appeal is also pending by Carroll and Peterson on a tax case they lost because they were found by Levet not to be proper plaintiffs. An antitrust case against the AFM has now been put off by the court until this appeal and others by the union on the tax and Carroll and Peterson cases are decided.

Br. Songwriters

of anti-social musical trash, bearing no relation whatever to art.

The old slander that British songwriters are no good was exposed and destroyed when the Guild obtained from the then Director-General of the BBC, Sir Ian Jacob, a substantial increase in the output of new British items. Last August, 24 British records were among the bestsellers in 14 foreign countries.

Moreover, 2,000 American disk jockeys recently voted a British item as the top instrumental single. It almost seems, the Guild laments, that one would have to go abroad to hear British song broadcast. To Pittsburgh, for example, where a deejay is said to be planning a weekly program of all-British records.

Songwriting, the Guild points out, is an export industry capable of earning large quantities of foreign currency for Britain. At present, thanks mainly to BBC policy, Britain imports, quite unnecessarily, more pop music than it exports, losing heavily in the process. This point, too, the Pilkington committee failed to appreciate.

Decca Chronicling Music of Ages In Eight LPs, With More To Come

Decca Records has produced a new line via its educational research division. Called the Chronicle of Music, the series which so far consists of eight albums, covers music history from the music of the middle ages to that of the 20th century in separate LPs that exemplify various eras.

The series is designed under the editorship of Ben Deutschman, Decca's educational research division director. A staff of consultants comprising several w.k. scholars in the fields of musicology and music education has worked with Deutschman in its preparation. The eight ages in the series were selected by this group to include the Middle ages, Renaissance, Baroque, Baroque to Classic, Classicism, Romanticism, jazz and 20th century music.

The group researched these eras and prepared a set of liner notes based on the times and their music. The music itself has been culled from Decca's catalog. Each disk in the series contains a full composition as originally released and is accompanied by written material about each disk, the composer, the composition and its period.

Every disk in the series is registered with the Library of Congress. A copy of each is on file there and the number appears on the platter jacket. The insert cards are set up in such a way as to permit removal of a file card portion with the reminder suitable for notebook inclusion.

The series will be aimed at the consumer market as well as the scholastic area. Further additions are planned to expand on the coverage of the initial periods and areas included in the first eight releases.

Time Marches On—Sets New Sales Mgr., Moves Into C&W, R 'n' R Fields

Time Records will soon be spreading into several new areas. To implement the move, Phil Picone has been named national sales manager to enable Bob Shad, Time prexy, to devote his full time to artist & repertoire work.

In the a&r area, Time will be branching into the country & western, rock 'n' roll and rhythm & blues fields. The label is also gearing a singles push, with a program of around 12 releases planned per month. The singles drive will be in the rock and folk groove primarily, but will also involve some of Time's LP artists like Hugo Montenegro and Jerry Fielding.

Emphasis on singles won't affect the label's album program in that the diskery still plans to release an average of six LPs per month. The company has signed some new album artists recently, including trumpeter Mel Davis, pianist Derek Smith and horn man Ray Crisars. Also in the album groove, Time will soon release a new Maurice Chevalier album, cut recently in France.

British Songwriters Guild, EMI Slate Tune Contest

London, Oct. 23.

Under an arrangement made by the Songwriters Guild of Great Britain with Sir Joseph Lockwood, chairman of Electrical and Musical Industries, a songwriting competition is to be held, with a guarantee that at least one of the entries will be recorded. The contest is open only to associate members of the Guild, and the tunes submitted may be either solo efforts or written in tandem with another associate member.

All songs will be considered by a selection committee set up by the Guild's council. The best 20 will be submitted to a panel of a&r managers and promotion and marketing execs set up by EMI, which will then be granted a short option on them.

At least one of the 20 will be recorded commercially by a company in the EMI group, which includes HMV, Parlophone and Columbia labels. The song or songs selected for waxing will also published.

Scott Orch Pacts Gobbi

Glasgow, Oct. 23.

Baritone Tito Gobbi has been pacted to sing with the Scottish National Orchestra at a special concert here May 1.

Guest conductors during the orch's season will include Karl Rankl, Georges Tzipine and John Pritchard. Soloists will be Ann Schein, American pianist, and Tibor Varga, Hungarian violinist.

Bossa Nova With Hometown Touch

The bossa nova craza is sending everyone from musician to publisher to diskery scurrying for material. Last week jazz flutist Herbie Mann and Atlantic Records v.p. Nesuhi Ertegun planed to Brazil to cut several LPs for the label, mostly in the bossa nova groove.

Brazil is credited with being the home of the music. Mann, who was one of the early importers of the vogue, will record in that country with several of the musicians who developed the music including Joao Gilberto, Tom Joblin and Luiz Bonfa. Ertegun will supervise the sessions. In addition to waxing with the above threesome, Mann also plans to record with many of the newer Brazilian tooters who have become bossa nova exponents.

Another bossa nova ace who is taking to the road, but not in search of material or a record, is Charlie Byrd. The guitarist will tour Europe and Scandinavia with Les McCann under diskery topper Bill Grauer's overseas concert promotion outfit, Jazz USA. Grauer's Riverside Records, incidentally, is prepping a new Byrd bossa nova LP to be called "Bossa Nova O Passaro."

LIMELITERS' SOCK 20G IN 2 OHIO CONCERTS

The Limeliters racked up over a sock $20,000 in two dates over the past weekend. The folk-singing group pulled in $9,672 in Cincinnati's Music Hall on Friday (19) and $11,164 at Veteran's Memorial Hall in Columbus on Saturday (20).

The folksters are vacationing during the week and will resume their concertizing Friday (26) at Massey Hall in Toronto. Take there already has topped $11,000 since the concert was sold out two weeks ago.

Chi Sheet Music Pirates Lose Plea; Trial Nov. 14

Chicago, Oct. 23.

Two Chicago men accused of "bootlegging" copyrighted songs lost their first legal test before Judge Richard Austin in Federal Court here last week. The two, Erwin S. Rosenberg and Melvin A. Gershun, attempted to plead no contest, but were denied following objections by the U.S. attorney. Trial was set for Nov. 14.

Had the "nolo contendre" pleas been accepted by the court, the defendants would be criminally liable, but damage suits arising out of the case would have been difficult to prosecute.

The pair were indicted last June on charges of printing 61,000 copies of six sheet music books, each containing 100 songs. The books were sold for as much as $20, but still much under the price of legally printed books.

Bratel Joins Atlantic

Jack Bratel has been added to the promotion staff of Atlantic Records. Based in Cleveland, he'll rep the company and its affiliated labels in that city, Pittsburgh and Detroit. He reports to Bob Kernheiser, the company's national sales manager and promotional director.

A freelance promotion man, Bratel formerly was branch manager of M. S. Distributing in Cleveland.

FOR KENNEDY THEY PLAY

L. A. Philharmonic Otherwise Refrain From Tooting

Los Angeles, Oct. 23.

L.A. Philharmonic Orchestra will play during President John F. Kennedy's visit to the new $25,000,000 L.A. Music Center when the Chief Executive dedicates facility Oct. 27, despite labor troubles between American Federation of Musicians Local 47 and Southern California Symphony Assn. which have killed upcoming 1962-63 season.

This is promised by John Tranchitella, prexy of Local 47, who said regardless of the status of negotiations on a new contract "we definitely will play" during the civic event.

Official stated that the Music Performance Trust Fund had approved an expenditure to make possible the concert for the President.

Union earlier rejected a two-year contract with SCSA, which sponsors the orch, by a 74-5 vote. Philharmonic season was to have started yesterday (Mon).

Vogel's Busy Legal Wk.: Sues Octave Records & Files Over 'Ball Game'

Jerry Vogel Music filed two complaints last week in N.Y. Federal Court, one against Octave Records and the other against the catering firm of Harry M. Stevens Inc. and the Sealright Co. In its suit against Erroll Garner's Octave Records, Vogel is seeking six cents per usage plus an injunction against use of the tune "Some of These Days."

The action contends that on or about March 29, 1962, Octave gave Vogel an unsworn statement covering a three-month period ending Dec. 31, 1961, for use of the tune. Vogel, however, demanded a sworn statement and claimed that Octave had undertaken to pay royalties on disks sold instead of disks manufactured.

The complaint charges that Octave later filed sworn statements regarding the song's use after December, but has still failed to send a sworn statement of usage prior to Dec. 31.

In the other action, Vogel alleges that in 1961, Stevens and Sealright devised a container for the sale of popcorn and, without consent, printed across the container a portion of the lyrics of "Take Me Out To the Ball Game." The suit claims that the use was made without approval or payment of royalties for commercial usage. An injunction covering damages sustained and an accounting is sought.

CAP SHUFFLES SALES STAFF IN FOUR CITIES

Capitol Records Distributing Corp. shuffled its field staff last week.

Tom Beckwith, Kansas City sales manager, takes over as sales chief of CRDC's Chicago branch, succeeding Bruce Masterson, who becomes operations manager at the L.A. branch. Richard Ware, just returned from a year of active duty with the Army reserves, returns to his old job as K.C. sales manager.

Elbert Allsup, formerly CRDC sales representative in Alabama and Mississippi, has been promoted to sales manager of the New Orleans branch replacing Charles Gilbert, deceased.

All report to Bill Tallant, CRDC veepee and national sales manager.

Sarah Vaughan Springs Spouse After Jailing Him

Philadelphia, Oct. 23.

Sarah Vaughan had her husband Clyde Atkins, 34, tenor saxophonist, locked up last week on charges of threats to kill her. But the singer later withdrew the complaint at a magistrate's court hearing and walked out with her husband verging on tears.

Atkins was picked up at the Uptown Theatre here, where Miss Vaughan is starring. She charged that he had threatened her over the telephone and in person. The musician was warned by the magistrate that he would "be brought in again in the event of any further threats." Atkin and Miss Vaughan have been married five years.

Riverside Gets Art Blakey, Decca Renews Earl Grant; Other Deals

Friedlander to UA

Buddy Friedlander has been named national promotion director of United Artists Records. He will direct all promotion for the diskery at the national, regional and local levels. He succeeds Herb Linsky, resigned.

Friedlander has been associated with Mercury and Epic Records and also worked in the music publishing field with E. B. Marks and Mills Music. He has recently had his own national promotion and management office in New York.

Nippon Symph & New York Batoner

Tokyo, Oct. 23.

Making its bow here was the Yomiuri Nippon Symphony at the Tokyo Bunka Kaikan under the baton of Yank Willis Page, formerly conductor of the Nashville Symphony.

Launching the debut with eight concerts in as many cities, the orch will give a number of additional concerts in the fall in Tokyo, including some especially for youth groups, and will begin a regular series of concerts over NTV and YTV. In January, it will start a series of subscription concerts. An overseas tour is planned within four years.

In addition to conductor Page, who speaks no Japanese, there are four foreigners in the orch. They are concert master Wolfgang Stavenhagen and oboe player Otto Winter, both from West Germany; harpist Joseph Molnar, Austria; and William John Brain, trumpet, U.S.

Sponsored by the Yomiuri Newspapers, the orch will also have the cooperation of the papers' sister companies, Nippon Television Network (NTV) and Yomiuri Television Corp. (YTV-Osaka).

ATE LABEL CHANGING ITS TAG TO ALGON RECORDS

The ATE disk label is going through a name change. Beginning Nov. 1, it will be known as Algon Records. ATE is a subsidiary of Algon Theatrical Enterprises which represents international artists and books overseas tours.

According to Michael Golan, ATE president, the tag switch is the first in a series of moves to increase sales and distribution throughout the U.S. As of Jan. 10, the firm will have a Coast office under the direction of Issac Armony who is currently the N.Y. production manager.

The ATE label was launched two years ago by Golan who came to the U.S. from Europe in 1959. The diskery has distribution setups in England, Italy, Holland, France, Israel, South Africa and South America.

ITA Picking Up Musical Acts in Expansion Move

International Talent Associates has been beefing up its roster of musical acts as part of an expansion plan that now brings the agency into the jazz and dance areas, in addition to its concentration in the folk market.

In the jazz groove, ITA is now repping Gerry Mulligan and the Newport Jazz Festival All-Stars. Mulligan is among the top-rated sax men. The All-Stars are a group formed by musician-promoter George Wein, who produced last year's Newport Jazz Fest.

Ralph Flanagan Orch has also joined the ITA fold to work mostly dance dates. On the folk scene, the agency picked up the Phoenix Singers, the Folksters, the Guela Gill Trio and the newly reunited duo of Bud & Travis.

These additions to the ITA talent roster are part of an overall expansion plan through which the agency intends to move with greater emphasis into various musical areas it had been less concerned with in the past.

Riverside Records has pacted jazz drummer Art Blakey. A leading jazz purveyor for several years, he was most recently affiliated with the Blue Note label. Blakey and his Jazz Messengers group are cutting their first Riverside session next week. A big band date is also being planned around the group.

Decca: Earl Grant

Decca Records has extended its pact with singer-pianist Earl Grant with the re-signing of the artist to a new longterm contract. Their association began in 1956. His most recent LP is "Earl Grant at Basin Street East." He's also represented by a single called "Sweet Sixteen Bars."

UA: Oliver Nelson, Others

United Artists Records continues its push into the jazz field with the signing of three new artists in this genre. They are instrumentalists Oliver Nelson and King Pleasure, and vocalist Danny Small. The move is part of an overall expansion of this phase of UA's disk activities which are under the direction of Alan Douglas. Nelson has completed an LP of music from the film 'Phaedra." A waxing by Small was issued a few weeks ago.

Coral: Ginger Gordon

Coral Records has inked thrush Ginger Gordon. The singer recently returned from an around-the-world tour for the State Dept. and also completed a feature role in the upcoming pic version of "Arms and the Man." Her first session with Coral was cut last week.

Octave: Tiny Grimes

Octave Records has signed jazz guitarist Tiny Grimes. Label has also set a deal with United Artists Records whereby the latter will handle international distribution of all Grimes' product. The guitarist has completed his first LP for pianist Erroll Garner's Octave imprint and a single by the jazzster will also be in release shortly.

Duchess: The Chuck-A-Lucks

Duchess Records inked The Chuck-A-Lucks, comedy - singing male trio (Reuben Noel, Charlie Dickerson and Adrian Keith). Al Klein, label's v.p.-a&r director, waxed the first platter last week at Pams Studio, Dallas. Sides are "Dingbat Diller," novelty by Noel, and "Yes, Little Children," a pseudo-spiritual written by the trio. It's for January release. Klein plans to etch a Chuck-A-Lucks album in December.

Crosby-Hope Cuffo Disk To Bally Minn. Vacations Has Political Overtones

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

As result of their compliance with a request of Tom Swain, state business development commissioner, to donate their vocal services for a phonograph record to help promote Minnesota as a summer vacation playground, Bob Hope and Bing Crosby are figuring in the current gubernatorial election campaign. It's giving the two stars newspaper, television and radio publicity.

Hope and Crosby didn't receive any monetary stipend. But the record's manufacture, advertising and distribution have involved an expenditure of $43,000 of the $50,000 appropriated to lure outstate vacationers to Minnesota. And the Democratic Farmer Labor gubernatorial candidate, Lieut.-Gov. Karl Rolvaag, is attacking reelection seeking Gov. Elmer Andersen on account of this.

Rolvaag charges that the governor is responsible for "this squandering" of state funds. On their part, Andersen and Swain declare that the money was "very well spent." What's more, they declare, it's being recouped from the record's sale, now around $20,000, which is larger than was anticipated.

individual compositions in which BMI owns or has the right to grant performing rights by broadcasting during the term hereof."

On the individual publisher level, the attitudes are varied and confused. One publisher said, "We have no policy on educational tv. It's too new. We might give free licenses if the showcasing is important enough." Another said, "We give free licenses but we don't want it generally known." And still another said, "We're giving free licenses now because it still is in the experimental stage and we feel educational tv will be good for the industry."

Some Pubs Urge Curbs

On the other side of the coin, though, there are publishers who feel that some producers of educational tv programs are a free-wheeling lot who have to have some restrictions put upon them. "We'll work with them," these pubs pointed out, "if they tell us their problems and what they plan to do, but they can't take our songs carte-blanche and expect us to be quiet about it." Then, there are some publishers who just ask for a "token" fee for the use of their copyrights. This fee is, in all cases, much less than the fee paid by commercial tv.

Without having any frame of reference, the publisher seems to be guided in his decision of whether or not to charge for a licensing on how important he considers the plug values of a shot on educational tv and how he wants to work his catalog. The educational tv'ers are pleading for the free license. Their pitch is, "We're non-commercial, non-profit making and we serve as an excellent exploitation outlet for songs."

The music industry is weighing both sides of the arguments. There is no precedent in the biz for this situation and the publishers seem to be waiting for somebody to establish one.

'Hound Dog's'

"If I let these kids have things that appeal to them, I have a happier group of boys to handle," he points out. "I counsel the use of more sedate music but the kids just don't go for it. Why knock your head against a wall, it's what the kids want. As long as it's supervised properly, as long as the kids are morally well-behaved, there's no use in insisting on a different type of music."

"Rock 'n' roll as orginally presented by some of its early innovators was morally offensive," the Monsignor opines. "The enjoyment of this type of music is possible without the contortions of some early innovators."

"Hound Dog's Old Gold" contains performances by Clyde McPhatter, the Shirelles, the Coasters, the Spaniels, Chuck Willis, the Fiestas, Wilbert Harrison, the Mello-Kings, Jack Scott, Al Brown & the Typhoons and others. "But please don't call me 'the rock 'n' roll priest'," Monsignor Keliher added.

Inside Stuff—Music

An arranger's general function in the musical theatre is to take over where the composer leaves off. That was the peg of Sid Ramin's address at the sixth session of the ASCAP Seminar on the Musical Theatre held last week at New York's Judson Hall. Ramin, whose Broadway credits have included "West Side Story," "Gypsy" and "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," added, "Since no composer today, except for Leonard Bernstein, can orchestrate his own songs, it's my job to decide what combinations of instruments should be used.

"I also have to be an arranger," he pointed out, "in order to add certain musical coloration to a score to bring out the true flavor of the songs. Because my work combines these two functions, I like to think of it as 'scoring' rather than 'orchestrating' or 'arranging.'" The ASCAP podium was shared by conductor Frederick Dvonch, who said, "Conducting a show never gets dull because every audience is different, and because there are constant changes in the cast and in the orchestra. It's my job to see that the intentions of the composer are carried through as if it were opening night."

RCA Victor is moving into "Phase 2" of its buildup on Sergio Franchi, company's new Italian tenor. The diskery has made Franchi a pivotal factor in a Red Seal sales-promotion-ad contest for distributors which will run until Dec. 10. Simultaneously, Victor is pushing Franchi into the singles market with a coupling of "Once" and "I Mustn't Say I Love You." This is the first single that Victor has released by a Red Seal artist in five years.

The first phase of the Franchi drive included a deejay tour promoting his debut album, a concert at New York's Carnegie Hall (21) and a shot on Ed Sullivan's CBS-TV show (14). As a result of the tv appearance, Franchi has been booked for three additional appearances on Oct. 28, Jan. 6, and March 31 with option for more appearances. On the concert end, Franchi has been set for Boston's Music Hall (Nov. 1-4) and Washington (Nov. 11). Philadelphia, Chicago and Cleveland are all planning concert bookings in 1963.

"Land Ho!", a musical revue written by Jack O'Brien and Robert James, won the second annual Broadcast Music Inc. (BMI) Varsity Show Competition. Checks for $500 each will be presented to O'Brien and James as creators of the winning production and to the MUSKET (Michigan Union Show, Ko-Eds, Too) organization of the U. of Michigan which sponsored the show. "Land Ho!" was selected from 34 entries which were produced during the 1961-62 school year. First honorable mention awards were made to "The Wildbirds," with book, music and lyrics by Gordon Richmond, presented by the Juilliard School of Music. Two second honorable mention awards went to: "Lute, Flute, Lyre and Sackbutt" by Arthur Morey, presented by the Harvard Musical Theatre Group, and "Tour de Farce," by John Simon, presented by Princeton U.'s Triangle Club.

The Twist hasn't made it as far as the New Oxford Dictionary is concerned. According to a dispatch from Reuters the Twist will not be included in the NOD because it has yet to stand the test of time. The dictionary, however, will include the Tango and the Charleston. Despite the criticism voiced against the new Webster's Unabridged Dictionary for including words that have not been around long enough, the Twist didn't make Webster's, either. Webster's recognizes the Tango, the Charleston and even the Merengue.

MGM Records has switched the Pat Thomas release of "Desafinado" from the Verve label to the MGM banner in order to concentrate its promotional push on the Ella Fitzgerald single release of "Desafinado" and "Stardust Bossa Nova." Lenny Scheer, singles sales manager, has altered all MGM distributors to get behind the Pat Thomas disk which was released three weeks ago under the Verve banner.

Jack Mills

music no longer is the focal point. For one thing, it now takes a back seat to the artist or the treatment and in many pop tunes it's the rhythm that's the key and not the melody.

Fewer Sales Media

Another element of the picture, Mills adds, is that "bands don't introduce anything anymore." They play mostly medleys today and don't relate as directly to the public as they used to as far as the presentation of new material is concerned.

The same goes for many artists, he believes. Performers concentrate on hits and don't pick material for themselves any more. Mills feels that if artists chose material with more care, they would give their careers more longevity and would also, in the process, give music itself a big boost. "Artists aren't singing songs for themselves anymore but for the record," he opines, and this is damaging both for the singers, the music concerned and the music business as a whole.

There are other factors too, such as the decline in the number of cafes around the country and the fact that live music in general has taken a big dip in recent years. Mills notes that a return to some of the older tune plugging practices that concentrated on the music itself and not so many other angles would not only help sheet music sales but would also give music in general a big boost.

Meantime, Mills Music recently acquired the exclusive selling rights in the U.S. for the complete catalog of H. Freeman & Co. of England. This catalog contains 800 separate items including classics, piano pieces and books, standards, vocal and choral works, instrumental solos and instructional books. The pubbery has also acquired the Yank selling rights for "Serenata Sincera" from Carisch, music publishers of Milan, Italy.

RCA VICTOR
The most trusted name in sound

Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y.

Shelley Berman, Milt Shaw and Lenny Herman Orchs; $3 and $4 cover

Of the three nitery openings in Gotham Thursday night (19)—and the town's jumping plenty these days—Shelley Berman quite obviously got the cream of the crop. The professional and avocational publicity has later caught up with Julius Monk's Plaza 9 revue, inceptng the Rendez-Vous Room of the Plaza into the intime league, at the 11 p.m. bow, and the Nat King Cole preem at the Copa for the post-midnight festivities.

This is a return for Berman, a solid standup comic (excepting that he and Perry Como both made this stool a popular show biz prop, humorously and vocally) who erred only with some dubious tee-off comedy ("wrong jokes for the dinner show?"—and he was right), but he got rolling and wound up a sound 45-minute click. His batting average was well over the .500 league which, in terms of comedy purveying, is plenty big league.

Berman sought to introduce "new" stuff where seemingly even the hip firstnighters would have been well satisfied with the staples, such as those he purveyed on tv and on vinylite. Result was that, when he got into the "two aspirins" routine, he was on firmer ground.

Berman is essentially an intimate room comedian—in person—which should be accented in that, so far as mass appreciation, he is paradoxically very effective in video guest shots. But back to the in person impact, his metier is dominantly Blue Angel rather than the Empire Room, so it is to his considerable credit that he projected to the far reaches of the Waldorf's 500-600 capacity. And SRO it was—plus. Not since the Eddie Fisher date last year (with Liz then the unofficial guest star) did the Empire Room have supplementary ringside tables on the floor as for Berman.

His cranial comedy is not too esoteric for mass appreciation. He does not need, however, those Protestant-Lutheran-Reformed Jewish nonsequitors, and he certainly should retire the jokes about "regularity" and Scotissue. The satire on tv commercials is effective without these.

He is a sensitive comedian who, despite his authority and aplomb, knew he had misfired on occasion. Those lapses are easily plugged up right out of his Verve LP, which was a souvenir giveaway to VIPs and press at the premiere—not to mention his own savvy on material and projection. That's a matter of editing.

Milt Shaw's dansapators are spelled by a new combo, the sprightly Lenny Herman quintet which has been around.

Biz looks strong. Take it from bossman Clyde J. Harris, maitre d'hotel Louis Siccardi and the waiters—the latter always the best barometer—the preceding Sheilah & Gordon MacRae were boffo b.o. Pearl Bailey follows Berman. Harris then does the unusual of laying off two weeks before Xmas rather than suffer indifferent business, reopening for the boffo Eve trade (attraction still to come), and then Lena Horne comes in with her horn of plenty boxoffice.

Walldorfkeller

The Hilton flagship's Walldorfkeller again has Greta Keller as its lodestone. The nomenclature is a fortuitous mating of diseuse and boite. Its stolid Teutonic decor is a fitting background for the versatile international song stylist who mixes up the pops and the Cole Porters plus excerpts from the Prater and Champs-Elysees hit parade, including some newies on her own.

Miss Keller, too, is a standard on disks—her newest ABC-Par platter is an excellent sampling of her multilingual vocal wares. She makes the Walldorfkeller an ideal setting for her personality and her obviously faithful personal following. From 10 p.m. until midnight she does three, sometimes four routines, with capable assist of Leo Pleskow on violin, Paul Mann at the Steinway, and Ernest Hirsch doubling strong bass and accordion. They're a knowledgeable musical crew who lend strong support. This bear out Miss Keller's recent interview with the Variety man in Tokyo that no singer, particularly one with an international catalog, should essay a Far East booking sans own personal pianist-conductor.

When John Jacob Astor in 1783 first journeyed to America from the hamlet in Heidelberg Forest known as Walldorf he founded one of the great dynasties and fortunes in America whose fief and fealty eventually was to become known as the Waldorf-Astoria. Hence the Walldorffkeller billing for this stylized Germanic tavern over which John Fontaine presides expertly. There is a $1.50 and $2 convert, latter on Friday-Saturday.

Incidentally, the hotel's convention biz, its hotel room and public entertainment boites' traffic would indicate that the Waldorf's still the Waldorf. Which of course is an observation in face of the overall stimulus that comes from the new Americana, and will be reprised next spring from within its own organization when the New York Hilton debuts. Abel.

Troubadour, L. A.

Lenny Bruce, Charlotte Daniels & Pat Webb; $1.50 admission.

Lenny Bruce, who had his day in court Friday (19) on narcotics and battery charges, is at this coffeehouse nitery through Oct. 28. Notoriety is boxoffice, and Bruce's extra-curricular scrapes, plus his reputation for bold, uninhibited crusading, should keep the Troubadour, a place that attracts young people of limited means and anti-conformist dispositions, jumping. There are to be no dark nights in the course of his engagement.

As part of his 45-minute monolog, Bruce slips in occasional references to his various run-ins with the law ("who'd go to see a dirty talking dope fiend?"), and these remarks currently are extracting the biggest roars from the aware and expectant audience. Otherwise, crux of Bruce's act remains stable: his point that society is less concerned with censoring violence than sex expression, though the latter is innate human nature, the former an undesirable by-product.

Bruce is bound to offend many—his vocabulary and choice of subject matter sees to that. But those willing to go along, and to wade through almost incomprehensible thinking-aloud stretches, will be rewarded periodically with spurts of penetrating observation.

Balladeer Hoyt Axton, who was to have been the supporting performer on the bill, had to bow out owing to a throat infection. He has been replaced by Charlotte Daniels and Pat Webb, a folk song duo. Miss Daniels, who has a pleasant, mature voice, does the singing, and both strum guitars. Their accompanying patter leaves a lot to be desired. The repertoire, which ranges from honky tonk items to revolutionary tunes to square dances, is a bit too obscure and variable in nature to sustain attention or build momentum. Tube.

Berns, Stockholm

Stockholm, Oct. 17.

Takeuchi & Imperial Japanese Dancers (8), Julius Jasobsen, Berns Orchestra conducted by Mario Weber; lighting, Anders Lindroth; $2 minimum.

Booked here for the month of October is this Japanese dance troupe which has played a number of American niteries and appeared in Barcelona before opening at Berns last week. It's the initial date for a Nipponese terp company in a Swedish restaurant and they score easily.

Particularly effective is the unit's interpretation of "Frankie and Johnny" which they do in a blend of old Japanese dancing art combined with modern western style. Takaoka Kiyoko as Frankie repped ancient Japanese art. Kataura Lee Miiko portrayed the western influence and displayed more nudity than Berns customers are accustomed to.

Troupe dishes up a brilliant show and reaps solid applause. Soloist in the company is Tonooka Hatsue who clicks in an interpretation of a Spanish dance. Show is briskly directed by William Lloyd and props by Jio Han add an extra lustre.

Danish-born pianist Julius Jacobsen served up 15 minutes of Chopin prior to the Japanese unit's routines. His pianistics are excellent, but Chopin at a restaurant may not be everyone's cup of tea. Berns Orchestra, batoned by Mario Weber, backs the show with class. Wing.

GALE SHERWOOD

With Nelson Eddy, just finished their third run at Danny Deeds' Maramor in Columbus, Ohio, before going to Australia. Raymond McBride said in the Milwaukee Journal: "She can match voices with Eddy, who still has those great bellows, and she is a first-rate clown, too!"

Plaza 9-Room, N. Y.

Julius Monk production, "Dime A Dozen," with Ceil Cabot, Gerry Matthews, Jack Fletcher, Mary Louise Wilson, Rex Robbins, Susan Browning, William Roy & Robert Colston. Staged & choreographed by Frank Wagner; costumes, Donald Brooks; lighting, Don Lamb; music & lyrics, William Roy, William F. Brown, Bruce Williamson, Tom Whedon, Sam Pottle June Reizner, Bart Howard, Lesley Davison, Bud McCreary, William Engrick, Alec Wilder, Allison Roulston, Jay Foote, Maxwell Edward Siegel, Seymour Zogott, Claire Richardson, Jack Holmes. Sketches, Bruce Williamson, William F. Brown, Dee Caruso, Bill Levine, Rory Harrity, Richard Craven, Robert Elliott. Opened at Plaza 9-Room, Plaza Hotel, N. Y. Oct. 18, '62. $5-$6 minimum.

The intimate revue has exceedingly strong competition. Now that Julius Monk has unveiled his "Dime a Dozen" at the Plaza 9-Room of the Plaza Hotel, there are two excellent vestpocket shows in New York. The other is, of course, at Monk's former bailiwick, Upstairs at the Downstairs.

The new display makes this section of midtown an exceptionally lively place. It's now the stronghold of cerebral cafe entertainment where those who originally discovered off-Broadway have a choice of some of the sprightliest nitery divertissement around.

Monk's new revue has many moments of wit, gaiety and charm plus a talented cast, most of whom have been in service at his previous establishment. He has also recruited some of the writers with whom he has previously been associated. Thus there's a continuity with his past despite the new surroundings in the Plaza.

The room is a bright red, done in an Edwardian theatrical motif. The setting is gay and charming, and the design of the room (nee RendezVous) makes a pleasant spot for a show lasting about two hours with intermission.

The show's top moments come with a quartet of numbers. Barry's Boys, a spoof of Goldwater followers, is bright and brittle. Writer June Reizner has endowed it with a lot of wit. The accompanying choreography is imaginative plus its projection by the males in the cast. Gerry Matthews, Jack Fletcher and Rex Robbins give this show a hot spot near the top of the first act. It takes the proceedings through some numbers that aren't as strong.

There is also the rib of stamp collection (the S&H and Plaid Stamp type) with the entire cast in kilties paying tribute to Huntington Hartford for this merchandising gimmick. Among other sketches are "Slow Down Moses," a warning to the former Park Commissioner to stop messing with Fire Island, and a sequence spoofing Tennessee Williams within the framework of "Night of the Iguana." All these have high literacy content. But more important is the excellent staging that highlights laughs subtly and sharply.

There are other items of varying degree of quality. Former Vice President Richard M. Nixon gets his'n in a barbershop sketch. Like any other topical show, "Dime a Dozen" has discovered America's royal family, the Kennedys, particularly Caroline. There's a tragedy item in a dissertation on ratings, folksong style by Ceil Cabot, and a satire on the peace marchers.

One number, "Le Spot Hot," concerns Monaco. Because of its extreme topicality, it seems like a last minute insertion. Aside from its headline value, it doesn't come off. Its major fun-line is "It's grim, grim, grim for the Grimaldi's," repeated four times and it got three bellies. The opening night audience, by that time, seemed conditioned to laugh at anything.

The players are all firstrate, particularly the boys. And Miss Cabot knows how to handle laugh lines with maximum effectiveness. Also an asset is Mary Louise Wilson. Susan Browning is more effective in the show's quieter moments.

There are several hidden assets in this show including staging and choreography by Frank Wagner, and the stage design by Ed Wittstein and Robert Miller. Giving drive to the show are the plural pianos of William Roy and Robert Colston, and of course, the overall concept of the show by Julius Monk.

One of the question marks of this operation is whether the Plaza 9-Room will be in competition with the Hotel Plaza's older and statelier Persian Room. Time and attractions will tell. Jose.

Colony, London

London, Oct. 19.

Lionel Blair Dancers (5), George Birch and Ken Penny Orchs; $6.50 minimum.

If the days of the Twist are numbered—and that's a matter of some speculation—there's doubt that there will be other frenetic routines to catch public imagination. Though the Twist still dominates the scene, the Madison and the Mashed Potato are emerging. This new interest in the latest terping styles makes for a lively background for Lionel Blair's show at this swank Berkeley Square restaurant.

Blair, who is one of Britain's top dancers, has lined up a quintet of striking looking gals, who are also no slouches when it comes to making with the fancy steps. For the best part of half an hour they dish up a breezy mixture of song and dance, with a special plug for the Madison and a brief glimpse of the Mashed Potato. The Twist is in, of course, but oddly enough it's the soft-shoe routine which pleases most.

However, it's all pleasant visual entertainment. One cute gimmick is Blair's demonstration of the Twist to the music of commercial jingles. Such an act, of course, is a natural for audience participation, and there's little difficulty in attracting diners on the floor. Myro.

Copa Lounge, N. Y.

Newton Bros. (4), Five Catalinas.

This big and bright barrom adjunct to the Copacabana is bringing in before-and-after show trade and probably customers just off the street, with a steady round of upbeat noise that ranges from minstrel stylings to rock and roll.

Newton Bros. are four youngsters out of the west who provide their own instrumental backing to vocalizing on a book of standards mostly out of the vaudeville past. Eighteen-year-old Wayne Newton is lead singer with a unique upper-register voice that comes across in a belting, colorful style that suits the catalog. Turn as a whole seems highly appropriate for the Copa's fun-loving adult followers.

Five Catalinas, on the other hand, blow hard at the r&r chart hits to less effect than the groups that waxed the tunes to begin with, and to virtually no effect on the noisy Lounge aud, despite the r&r whamming guitar accomp and general boom-chucking.

Newton Bros. are in for an extended run. Catalinas launched a couple of weeks last Thursday (18). Bill.

Copacabana, N.Y.

Nat King Cole, Gary Morton, Tina Robin, Jimmy Dalli, Peggy Cutshaw, Copa Girls (8), Joseph Mele and Frank Marti bands; staged by Douglas Coudy; songs, Joe & Noel Sherman; $6-$7 minimum.

Nat King Cole is back at the Copacabana and, as usual, telling audiences via a special material song that "Cole Won't Sing Rock & Roll." He has added another special number, "Cole Won't Twist."

Cole is not above a country-western rendition, however, and he caps a fine one-hour turn of slick, tasteful ballading with his first hit disk in five years, "Rambling Rose," a melodic and simple number clearly in the hillbilly idiom.

This veteran and superprofessional talent who started off as a jazz pianist with instrumental trioing for the old radio transcription services and personals in the midwest honkytonks and stagebar boites, captivates the Copa audiences with a carefully edited book. It contains evergreens which are notable for harmonic clarity and simplicity without any sacrifices in class. Arrangements, for which the Copa house band is augmented by a half-dozen or so shivvering fiddles, are clean with a lot of dramatic punch.

For the record, Cole takes a brief turn at the piano to prove he can still sit down with most any modern jazz group for a swinging gig.

Comedian Gary Morton is back with his blustery voice and up projection slightly remindful of Milton Berle. Some of Morton's material has been tried on Copa audiences in the past, and it comes through again for good returns. His best bits seem to be the ones that involve the orch like a Greek chorus, and the capping voices that don't fit the occupation—an accent that sounds like it should go with a gay hairdresser turns out to be a state trooper, etc.

One sagging moment in the Morton routine comes with a series of gags aimed at television. Buffoonery is slanted at Drs. Casey and Kildare and the humor had one year's mould on it as per the life of the shows. Nothing on the new video scene, apparently, that has managed to reach a stature for parody.

Copa's eight-line chicks terp lively along with sock vocals by Tina Robin and Jimmy Dalli in a continuance of previous production numbers. Joseph Mele and Frank Marti bands provide the bounce for business men and their partners. Bill.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas Oct. 19.

The Mello-Larks (with Adele Castle), Johnnie (Scat) Davis Orch (7); $2.50-$3 cover.

This is a second local stand for The Mello-Larks, slick songstyling foursome, and the two-year absence has added impact to the handsome quartet's vibrant vocal showcasing and choregography. Adele Castle, featured femme, is a well stacked looker with pipes to match and she gets a fine assist from the males, Charlie Dobson, Stewart Vannerson and Don Ranney, in the animated 35-minute stint.

They start fast with a rousing "Good Man is Hard to Find," accent precision piping with a sultry "Jealousie" and reap mitting with risible lyrics to "Read That Gideon Bible." Material selection is smartly varied with an old English madrigal, "One Finger, One Thumb," the surefire standard, "Stardust," and a handclapping spiritual, "Up Above My Head" for good results.

Miss Castle's costume change finds her as "Tempus Fugit," a bumping, gyrating exotic dancer in skinfight gown with red boa, as the lads croon "Blues in the Night" for lotsa laughs. Begoff is a tribute to Al Jolson with a belting "Rockaby Your Baby."

Per usual, the Johnnie Davis crew gives top showbacking. The singing maestro teams with the band's thrush, Anita Grant, and bassist Murray Horn to open the show with a lusty vocal of "Hey, Look Me Over." Horn offers a sock solo of "What Kind of Fool Am I?" and a band instrumental, "Fanny," features Davis' trumpet solo.

Show runs two frames, with The Goofers (6) and Teddy Phillips' orch due Nov. 1. Bark.

NITERY OPS' 'PROTECTIVE' ASSN.

Max Gordon Finds Comedy Disks, TV Stiff Competish for Today's Intimery

By MIKE GROSS

Comedy records, tv, the greater showcase availabilities for new talent and an increased sophistication on the part of audiences are some of the contributing factors in today's small nightclub bind. That's the appraisal of Max Gordon, the longtime owner (26 years) of New York's Village Vanguard and till recently, when he bought the club outright, partner for 19 years with Herbert Jacoby in the operation of eastside bistro, the Blue Angel.

Gordon points to Jackie Mason as a prime example of the power of records and tv to skyrocket a talent to the top earning brackets. A year ago Mason played the Angel for $850 a week. Since then, a few Jack Paar and Ed Sullivan appearances and an MGM album have shot him into such prominence that his agents are now offering him to Gordon for $7,500 a week.

"In the past," says Gordon, "I'd have been able to book him at the Blue Angel over a period of years before he reached the point where his popularity would price him out of my reach. Years ago there wasn't the blanket coverage and impact that tv affords an entertainer; it took time before people knew about the performer and put him in a position where he could pick his spots."

Eyes New Faces

Since top talent commands top prices that a small-sized room usually cannot afford, Gordon was forced to look, right from the start, for new talent to hold down the cost of his shows. Two decades ago, he presented a revue at the Village Vanguard which featured among others, Judy Holliday, Betty Comden and Adolph Green. In those days, there weren't many locations in which such a group could appear. Today, clubs like Gordon's must compete with the innumerable off-Broadway theatres and/or the plusher coffee houses.

This greater availability of showcases, according to Gordon, also means that the young performer becomes wary of committing himself with an option for return performances at a club.

"Bob Newhart is a good example of that," says Gordon. "When he was just starting out, his managers offered him to the Blue Angel for a very reasonable salary. The only hitch was that they would allow no options for the Angel to re-engage his services at a pre-fixed fee." Thus, rather than feature an act that would require at least two or three engagements before he became an audience draw, Gordon and Jacoby decided to pass up Newhart.

TED LEWIS' BOFFO B.O. IN BROADWAY DANCERY

Ted Lewis and his traveling vaude unit have been racking up strong business at Roseland Dance City, N.Y. The unique aggregation in this era of disappearing bands and almost extinct vaudeshows has been doing SRO weekend biz at the dancery and running near to capacity during the week.

Lewis & Co. began their fourth and last week at Roseland yesterday (Tues.). The unit shifts Nov. 13 at the new Nugget Casino, Sparks, Nev., a short distance from Reno. On Dec. 3 he opens for three weeks in Chicago for the Electrical Workers Union and begins a two-week stand at the Roosevelt Hotel, New Orleans, Dec. 20.

DODD'S MANCHESTER DATE

Manchester, Eng., Oct. 23.

Ken Dodd, a comedian who has had recent exposure via BBC-TV spectaculars and disks, is set to open at the Opera House here Dec. 13. Show will again be presented by Stewart Cruikshank, head of the Howard & Wyndham chain.

Rosemary Squires is pacted as featured girl singer in the layout.

Jessel's 20G for 6-Nite Vegas Showboat Stand

Las Vegas, Oct. 23.

George Jessel will get $20,000 for his six-night stand at Showboat Hotel, Dec. 26-31, engagement calling for three shows nightly. Deal includes four one-week options for 1963 at same rate.

First two performances will be called "George Jessel's Broadway Revue," third will be of ad lib type, tabbed "George Jessel's Late Show," and go on at three a.m.

Folk Club Owners Heroes at ANCA Annual Conclave

Chicago, Oct. 23.

If at times the talent agents seemed to appear as villains at last week's second annual convention of the Associated Night Clubs of America, then the folk club owners were the heroes. For if anything troubles the owners of the standard niteries it is the high cost of name talent and where to find new (and less costly) acts.

Almost without being noticed during the two and a half day conference, the operators began turning to the folk club owners when the subject of new talent came up. Indicative of the nitery ops' concern with this problem was the election of folk club ops to three of the seven ANCA officerships for the upcoming year.

At a separate meeting to discuss their own unique problems, the seven folk club owners present were philosophical about the fact that they spot and develop new talent only to have it move into the plusher clubs. "There are more than enough good acts to replace those who graduate," said Art D'Lugoff of the Village Gate in New York. "Besides, if the act is promising we can take options that will guarantee their return even if they have become popular."

Several of the folk ops expressed pride that they had spotted acts that had gone on to greener pastures. For instance, the only two albums currently high on the charts that were taped in nightclubs are from folk spots—"Herbie Mann At The Village Gate" and the Chad Mitchell Trio at the Bitter End, both in New York. More than 25 records have been cut in these clubs alone, and both of them have special recording facilities.

Other folk club ops at the convention were Allan Ribback of the Gate of Horn in Chicago, Manny Rubin of the Second Fret in Philadelphia, Elizabeth Neustaedter of the Exodus in Denver, Enrico Banducci of San Francisco's hungry i, and Bob Cavallo of the Shadows in Washington, D.C.

Con Man, Posing as Rep Of Brigitte Bardot, Strips Latino Nitery Ops of $$

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

An unidentified confidence man has been having a financial ball in Latin America, offering services of Brigitte Bardot to night club impresarios. Apparently scores of club owners have been bilked by an amiable, well-dressed, persuasive "agent" who used a number of phoney names.

According to reports trickling in (and one or two Mexican club owners also were taken although they won't admit it) from Argentina, Chile, Brazil, Uruguay and other Latin countries, the con man's modus operandi went something like this:

He would show up in a major

STIFF POLICY VS. AGENTS, UNIONS

By MORY ROTH

Chicago, Oct. 23.

One clear point evolved from last week's convention of the Associated Night Clubs of America in Chi: Traditional "divide and conquer" techniques used by many agents and entertainment unions in dealing with the nitery owners are going to get their first organized resistance in the months to come.

The 30 ops, representing a cross-section of the top clubs, are willing to forget their many differences to do this and, perhaps more radical, to exchange information, a virtual heresy among nitery operators to date.

The ANCA members are setting up an information network that will let each of the members know the others' bookings on a month-to-month basis. Members can then phone one another to find out how well the act did and how much the performer was paid. (This is somewhat more tentative than the National Ballroom Operators Assn., which collects and mails all of this information to all of its members.)

The club owners emphasized that they weren't trying to set a single price for an act, but were just trying to hobble that minority of agents who tell prospective customers that an act received more money and did better biz than was actually the case.

Agent's 'Shady' Deal

A case in point was a folk act that was sold to a Las Vegas lounge because it was "breaking it up in the folk clubs." The act was a flop. The folk club owners at the convention to a man said they would never have touted the act

Portugal's 'Fado' Hit Via Orfeon

Boston, Oct. 23.

Orfeon Chorus of Portugal has turned out to be one of the outstanding novelties of the new concert season. Comprising 80 male students of the University of Coimbra, near Lisbon, troupe is billed as "The Troubadors of the Black Cloaks." Boston booking by Richard Rocco, new local promoter (Sevens Productions) grossed almost $10,000 in Symphony Hall (11) with New York bow scheduled for November 19 in Philharmonic Hall, "Voice of Firestone" has engaged special ensemble of 26 from big group for television showing Dec. 2.

"Fado" numbers on programs, similar to Spanish flamenco singing, have made special hit.

Bill Judd and Carl Dahlgren of Columbia Artists Management booked attraction.

Jersey Shore Resorts' $1,680,000,000 Season

Atlantic City, Oct. 23.

New Jersey's seashore resorts grossed $1,680,000,000 in summer business this year, about 2½% more than the summer of 1961, according to figures released here by the State Department of Conservation and Econmic Development. H. Matt Adams, department commissioner, calls the figures "spectacular" in light of a storm last March that caused severe damage to the entire New Jersey shore.

"Immediately following the storm," said Adams, "resort operators and renting agents along the shore estimated that summer business would be off as much as 15 to 20% and from our aerial surveys we were inclined to agree." A $50,000,000 program, carried out over the next five years, he added, will be necessary for long-range protection of the shore area.

AGVA Nat'l Board, in Stormy Meet, Fires Bright & Suspends L.A. Local

The national board of the American Guild of Variety Artists ended one of its stormiest meetings in years Friday (19) after a record five-day powwow at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel, N. Y., which threatens to envelop the union in more litigation.

Among actions taken were:

1. Dismissal of Jackie Bright as national administrative secretary. He had been under suspension for several months without pay.
2. Elevation of acting national administrative secretary Bobby Faye to Bright's post.
3. Suspension of the Los Angeles local.
4. Airing of charges by Bright against Coast regional director Irwin Mazzei, and levelling of counter charges against Bright by board member Jay Lester.

Bright notified the board by telegram that he threatens to drag the matter through the courts on the ground that its action in dismissing him was illegal and unconstitutional. He claims that the board failed to inform him of any charges against him and refused to give him a copy of the minutes of the meeting which dismissed him.

The most hectic session came with debate on suspension of the Los Angeles local on the basis that its continued existence under present conditions could lead to dual unionism. The charges against the local stem from a recent meeting in L. A. which was addressed by Faye, then acting national administrative secretary.

The conclave, attended by former president Penny Singleton, among others, resulted in introduction of a resolution asking for a cleanup of the national office and dismissal of Bright, Faye and the union's counsel, Harold Berg. Faye stalked out of the meeting.

At last week's board meeting, Faye took the position that the L. A. session should have ended officially with his exit. He said that adoption of the resolution, with its implied threat of seceding from the parent, could result in dual unionism.

Action by the board parallels a similar step taken two years ago when the Philly local was suspended for taking action against the national office.

One of the major arguments presented on the floor was the claim that the L. A. local's suspension would be a violation of the Landrum-Griffin Act, particularly since a recent ruling by the U. S. Dept. of Labor decrees that all branches of AGVA are to be construed as locals and can take actions independent of the national office.

It was also revealed at the board meeting that three dismissed AGVA officials have filed complaints against the union with the National Labor Relations Board. Ernie Fast, former midwest regional director, claimed that his dismissal was unconstitutional and illegal. He was fired for "insubordination." Al Fast, branch manager in Tampa, and Smiley Hart, Sarasota manager, were dismissed for refusal to divulge what they had told the probers of the Senate Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations headed by Sen. John McClellan (D.-Ark.).

AGVA Removes Joe Campo From Executive Board

Joe Campo was removed from his seat on the American Guild of Variety Artists' executive board by the national board at latter's meeting last week in the Hotel Barbizon-Plaza, N.Y. While no charges have been filed against Campo, Bobby Faye, AGVA national administrative secretary, said that the union would consider trying him for dual unionism.

Campo, now employed by the Teamsters Union in Philadelphia, was one of the officials of the Seafarers' Union which brought the Philly local of the latter into the Teamsters' fold. An earlier attempt to bring Campo up on charges was blocked by the administration.

The ousting of Campo, plus the defeat of two other members of the national board, Dick Bain and Wally Lane, in the recent elections, paved the way for two members of the anti-administration bloc to get on the board. Paul Valentine, of New York, and Ann O'Connor, of Chicago, who have been highly vocal opponents of the administration, were named to the national board in a close election. Other successful candidates for the board is Eddie Barton, also of New York.

Fisher Show's Stronger B.O. Cues Possible Switch To Another B'way House

Possibility that Eddie Fisher may move from the Winter Garden, N.Y., to the Music Box increased with last week's take of $56,000 for the third week of his stand. It was approximately the same as the previous stanza with Fisher hitting $45,000 for his opening session.

Monte Proser, coproducer of the show with Milton Blackstone and Ranrod Productions, Fisher's personal firm, said that he is dickering with the Shuberts for continuation in a new house.

Proser also said that Juliet Prowse, who was to have left the show on Monday (22) in order to start at the Latin Casino, near Camden, N.J., tomorrow (Thurs.), will continue with the show until its completion. Proser pointed out that the run has been stretched to from four to five weeks, and unless they get a new house the show will close Nov. 5.

Borge Boff 27G, Denver

Denver, Oct. 23.

Victor Borge's one-man show, "Comedy in Music," pulled a lively $27,000 at the Auditorium Theatre in three performances, Thursday (18) through Saturday (20).

The 2,200-seat house was scaled to a $5.50 top.

N.C. CAFE OP WINS 10G RUTH BROWN'S NO-SHOW

Greensboro, N.C., Oct. 23.

A. G. Faucette, operator of El Rocco Club here, has won a default judgment of $10,000 against singer Ruth Brown in Guilford County Superior Court. A jury ruled that she damaged the nitery by failing to fill a Nov. 4-5, 1961, booking at the club.

Faucette's suit, brought against the vocalist last May, was never answered. His action asked $14,065 for alleged breach of contract, loss of good will, money spent on promotion and a $250 deposit he sent to her agent.

MEMO FROM:

DAVE DUSHOFF, Latin Casino, Phila.

Eddie Fisher
Winter Garden Theatre, New York

Dear Eddie: Congratulations. I don't like "I told you so" guys and here's a for instance. Before you sang a note at the Latin Casino some of your very best friends in Philadelphia told me I was out of my mind opening the season with Eddie Fisher for three weeks in a 2,000 seat house, 2 shows a night, seven days a week for three weeks. Where will you get all those people? but you did so fabulously and filled the place twice nightly the result players told me I had no foresight because I should have booked you for a few months. So, I really laughed when I heard the same committee say: "This crazy guy! THE WINTER-GARDEN! BROADWAY! NEW YORK!" Well, you've done it again . . . Holding over your four week engagement another week! When you closed at the Latin I told you I would say in print what I told you personally-"You are one of the world's greatest entertainment personalities and attractions and that's for everywhere and anywhere" I know it's foolish to be doing this because I'm talking like an agent rather than an operator . . . but you've shown not only talent but the kind of guts I thought only nite club operators had. Besides I thought when you make all those big plans for the future the Latin stage is yours.

You've got to come back because those "I told you so" guys will scream at me Dave, you mean you ain't got an Eddie Fisher option for 20 years?" Go please everybody.

Dave Dushoff,
Latin Casino

P.S.—Two days after you opened and I read Frank Brookhouser and Jerry Gaghan I knew you were "In." Reviews really don't thrill me like they do actors—but people sitting in seats is a joy to behold.

Dave

Man About Town

By Frank Brookhouser

THE ONCE POOR singer boy from South Philly who won and lost the rich movie queen came home last night.

And if ever a local boy made good, it was a definitely older, presumably wiser and still amazingly young-looking fellow named Fisher—Eddie.

He could do no wrong in the warm, mellow and exciting show which inaugurated his three-week engagement at the spacious Latin Casino and ushered in the third season for that theater-restaurant at its popular site just out the road a stretch from the Delaware.

And what was more important to the eager, enthusiastic crowd which made the short jaunt to Jersey and the future of his own career is that—he didn't!

He had been up there sailing crazily on a sea of headlines and now he was back on land, back home, as he suggested in his second tune, "Back in Your Own Backyard," once more wooing and winning an old and almost forgotten love—singing.

Eddie Fisher

This was no new Fisher. It was a changed Fisher.

Eddie has always been a good singer, ever since he was offering the production numbers at the old Latin Casino years before Eddie Cantor discovered him at Grossinger's and gave him the big push that led to record hits and television success

From the start, he came equipped with a solid voice and a sense of feeling for the lyrics of a tune, no gimmicks, no fancy stuff. A singer boy.

THE DIFFERENCE—and it is all the difference for the career he has begun again—is that, perhaps out of experience, certainly out of a batch of realization, he has become a knowing man of style on stage.

It is no longer simply a solid voice from a pleasant face out there singing. There can be no mistaking now. It is Eddie Fisher, phrasing with class, tossing off the effective intonations, giving a dramatic treatment where the tune suggests it—and, most of all, ad libbing, sending up those telling sound waves with his audience.

"We want more, Eddie," somebody far back in the big room shouted out last night after he had already offered maybe a dozen tunes—just to show the variety of his presentation, "Mack the Knife" in German, "Never on Sunday" in Greek and "Moon River" with a simple piano accompaniment.

"You're gonna get it," Eddie replied—and there were a dozen more tunes, a medley of his record hits, a tribute Al Jolson medley, each number given an individual touch, establishing a different mood. And that is the new Fisher touch, the new singer, the new singing artist.

Eddie's Back —With Gusto

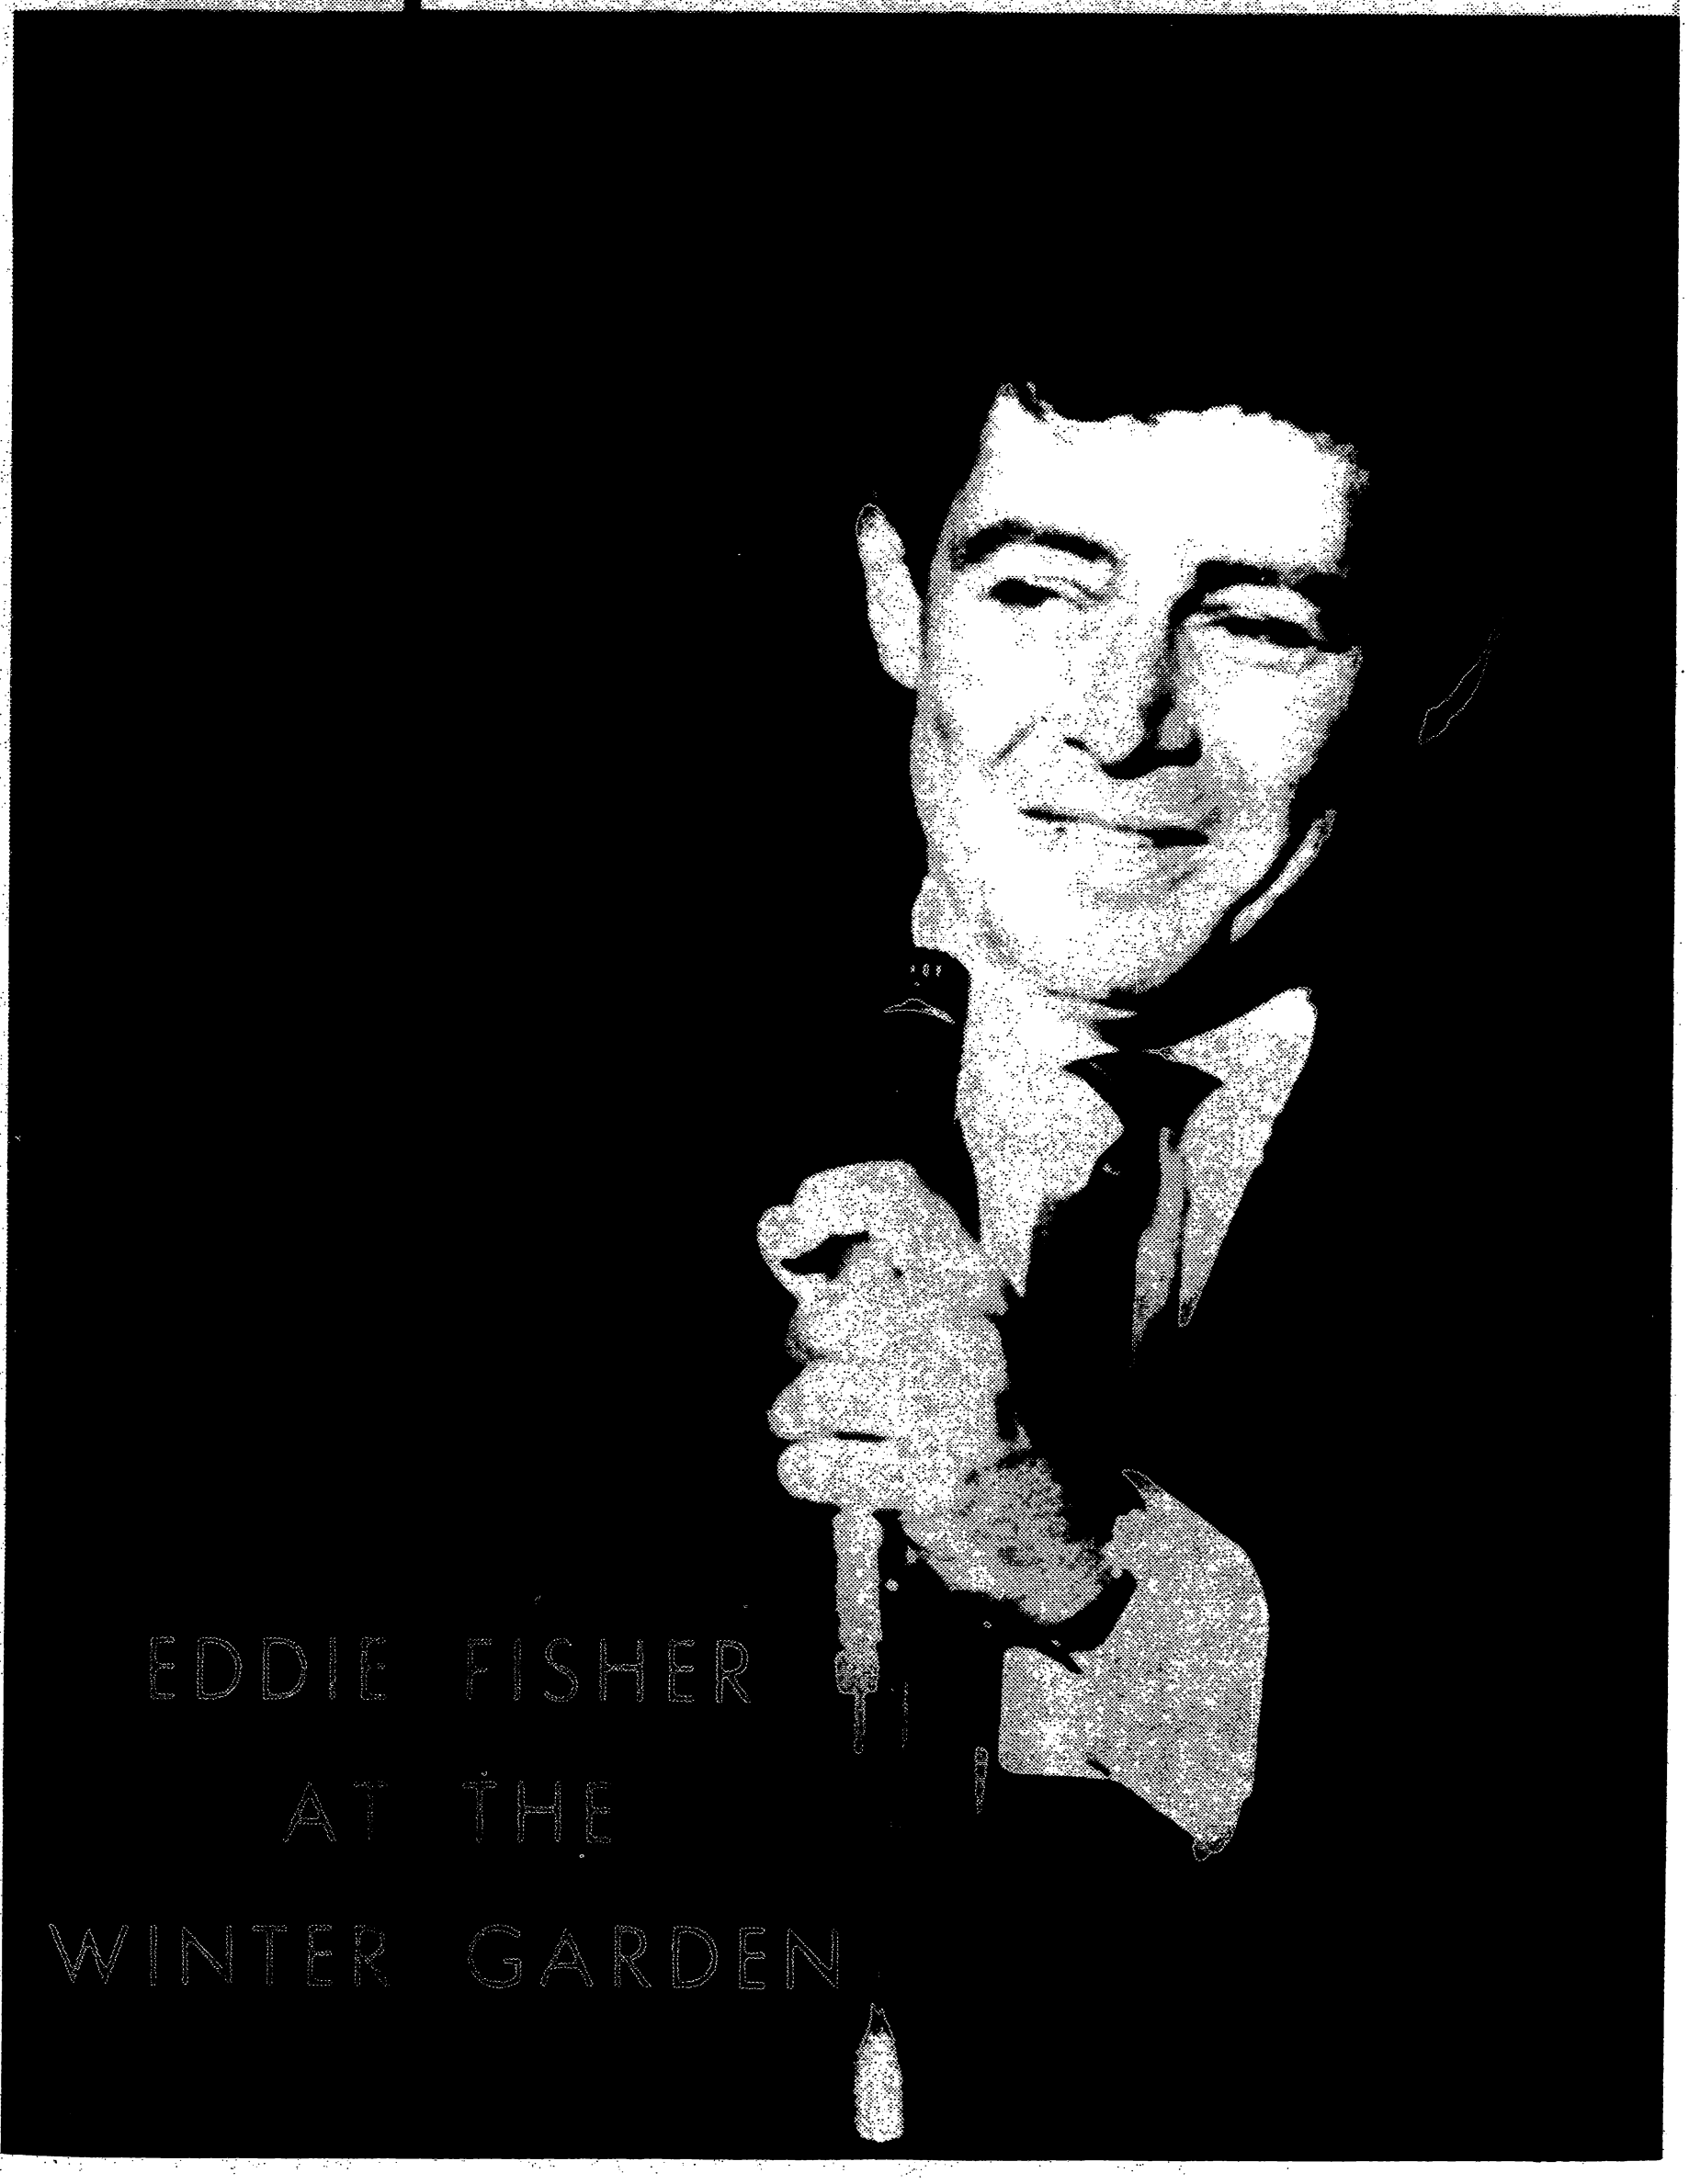
. crowd pleaser

RETURN OF THE NATIVE: There was the sentiment of homecoming and the feeling of friends for a performer who has received his bumps on the world stage; but even so. The thing that impresses most about Eddie Fisher is his command over the audience. There were some 1,200 early diners in the Latin Casino last night and they gave him a solid minute ovation, when he took the mike. Eddie let the audience quiet down and the vast dining room went into a concert hall stillness. Like a concert hall in Vienna. There wasn't even a cough. He opened with "Don't Let it Get You Down" and followed to a salvo of applause with "Back in Your Own Backyard."



The singer was on 70 minutes and did at least 25 songs. His voice was noticeably tight at first (he confessed to nervousness), but it became more flexible as he went along. The first real workout comes with a medley from "West Side Story," which is followed by an international group, "Never on Sunday" in Greek; "Mack the Knife," in German, and "Have Nagilah," the Israeli harvest song. He reaches maximum effectiveness with the Jolson medley ("Swanee," "Toot Toot, Tootsie," "Rockabye My Baby," et al) going out into the auditorium with a handmike and barrage of spots playing on him. The crowd won't let him off until he reprises the hits of his boy singer days —"Any Time," "Wish You Were Here," "Oh, My Papa." Fisher is a much more assured performer, but there is nothing brash about him. He is likable, obviously wants to please and does. "I've only worked seven weeks in the last two years," he says, "I'm just about the most available singer in the whole world."

Max Gordon—Comedy Disks

the country combined with tv, Gordon feels, have raised the tastes and expectations of the nitery audience to an unprecedented high. It has been much more powerful in this area than radio or the films because, Gordon says, it is able to present a reasonably close approximation of a nightclub show. Thus, the new talent offered at a club must be much more polished than would have been necessary a few years ago.

Since 1957 the Village Vanguard has also been regularly featuring a brand of entertainment that's tailor-made for a room of its physical limitations. Jazz, particularly of the modern type, is almost non-existent on tv and the performers themselves, since they deal so much with spontaneity, seem to prefer, like the comedians of the Lenny Bruce and Irwin Corey stripe, the informal air that typifies an intime club.

Other ways in which a small club can compete, according to Gordon, is try the offbeat. Thus, in recent months, the Vanguard and Angel have featured such acts as Clara Ward & The Ward Gospel Singers, The Smothers Bros. and Inman & Ira, folk singing duo.

Also, Gordon occasionally gets tips from people who work his clubs and tell him about fresh talent they've come across. Bruce, for instance, sent Gordon a note about four performers with red beards. Bruce didn't say what they did but Gordon plans to follow up the lead.

Harry Morris Sells His Piece of London Colony; Shops for Another Spot

London, Oct. 23.

Harry Morris ended his longtime association with the Colony restaurant last week, having sold the 25% interest which he retained under a deal made earlier in the year. Reportedly, he's now negotiating to take over another West End spot at a reputed cost of $700,000.

Behind the new ownership of the Colony is Thomas W. Parker, a civil engineer. He's primarily the financial backer, and operation of the Berkeley Square restaurant is in the hands of the Gualdi brothers, both of whom are directors of the owning company. They are sons of Andrea Gualdi, who was longtime maitre d' of the Monseigneur restaurant.

As of Jan. 1, George Elrick, of Majestic Entertainments Agency, will handle cabaret bookings. The two resident orchestras at the Colony are batoned by George Birch and Ken Penny.

Under the original sale, Morris was precluded from operating any club or restaurant within a prescribed area for a three-year span. But to his delight, this has now been waived.

HURLEY, WISC., NITERY'S WHITE SLAVERY TRIAL

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

Blonde 21-year old Mary Anderson, a witness in a Federal district court white slavery trial here, testified that at the nearby Hurley, Wis., Club 13, she earned $500 a week pursuing prostitution and soliciting male patrons for drinks. This was more than most of the floorshow acts made.

The nitery's owner paid her half of all the money taken in from her prostitution and drinks solicitations in the bistro, Miss Anderson testified. And business was very good, she said.

The defendants, including the spot's owner, are charged with transporting Miss Anderson from Minneapolis to Hurley for prostitution purposes.

'Holiday on Ice' Hits Hot $112,263 in Nashville Aud

Nashville, Oct. 23.

"Holiday on Ice of 1963," the first theatrical presentation to open Nashville's new $5,000,000 Municipal Auditorium, grossed a socko $112,263 in nine performances over a six-day run last week.

Show pulled total attendance of $45,000, an alltime Nashville record. Ice production scored solidly despite "inadequate" dressing room facilities.

ACOUSTICS K.O. DETROIT AUTO SHOW'S REVUE

By FRED TEW

Detroit, Oct. 23.

Granted that there were some insurmountable built-in obstacles, it is still a fact that the National Automobile Show's original musical revue, "America Drives Ahead," starring Meg Myles and Dick Williams, creates obstacles of its own and does not nearly come up to its potential. The John Wray production is barely passable as professional entertainment.

Producer-director Wray, a vet of the "Ed Sullivan Show," and his executive producer, Tom DeHuff, were struck with a three-level, circular arena which is 315 feet in diameter and seats 9,500. Its public address system has defeated other showmen who have attempted productions here. Sounds bounce and reverberate around the beautiful new arena and no one yet has been able to control them. Still, the producer-director must adapt to the conditions with which he must work.

"America Drives Ahead" is lacking in theme, originality, and warmth. It emerges as a minor-league spectacle without cohesion. Blame for this must be shared by Wray-DeHuff with Quincy Jones who wrote the lacklustre score. The only bright spots in the revue are the work of Bill Foster, choreographer, and Grover Cole who was responsible for the costumes.

The half-hour show opens with a recorded overture, followed by another recording to provide the marching rhythm of the dancing ensemble of 23 girls and nine boys, along with a marching band. The bandsmen obviously are not playing their instruments and the dancer-chorus is doing a poor job of lip-sync. It was an extremely poor opener. An obvious solution would be to eliminate the fake band and use the 20-piece orch to provide the tempos for the ensemble.

Next, an antique auto rolls into the arena and its quartet of passengers, three boys and a girl, sing what is supposed to be an introduction for Meg Myles. Only no one can understand the words. Miss Myles comes on in a tight, gold lame gown and sings something about being an "Obsolete Girl." Apparently the antique auto was supposed to be a prop, so why wasn't Miss Myles dressed in a duster and goggles, circa 1900? Her skin-tight gown certainly made her appear anything but "obsolete." Maybe it didn't matter anyway because her words could not be understood so the audience didn't know what was supposed to be going on.

The orch wound up into "The Big Wheel," to provide good sound with a beat. Here again, though, someone goofed, because the orch stand was white, the men were dressed in white and the sound seemed to be coming from disembodied instruments which flashed in the light from time to time. It was an eerie ghost orchestra.

The finale had Miss Myles and Williams singing "Something for Everybody," which apparently was meant to mean that the car makers had produced automobiles to fit everyone's taste or pocketbook. The words, again, could not be understood. A representative sampling of the new 1963 cars were driven onto the arena floor at this point and that closed the show.

The revue is performed four times daily during the nine-day run of the 44th National Automobile Show being held in the adjacent Cobo Hall through Oct. 28.

Nitery 'Protective' Assn.

because it had bombed in their clubs. It's this sort of sleight-of-hand on the part of some agents that the operators want to squelch.

The discussion of the relationship of ANCA to the entertainment unions was more complex than the talks about the agents because of differences in local situations. However, for many of the owners it was the first time that they had discussed their working arrangements with AGVA, AFM, Equity, ASCAP and BMI, and some of the owners were startled to hear of the different treatment they received in comparable situations. An exchange of information on union problems is also being set up.

A vociferous minority of the club owners at the confab plugged for initiating action to change the status of variety acts from independent contractors to employees in order that club disputes with AGVA might be brought before the National Labor Relations Board. Several Chi operators expressed the fear that a recent unilateral increase in AGVA welfare payments sans negotiations might be the herald of a series of such increases.

However, ANCA prexy Gene Norman of the Crescendo in Los Angeles expressed the opinion of the majority that the cost of the increased bookkeeping under an employee arrangement would not justify the change at this time. The matter was tabled. But retiring secretary Bill Newkirk (Tidelands, Houston) was asked to look into the legal aspects of negotiating with AGVA under the present setup.

In other business, the Hal Neustaedter Award was given to comic Bob Charles for his performance during four hours of auditions before the operators Monday (15) night at the Happy Medium cabaret theatre. (Even better than the plaque, Charles picked up nine prime bookings as a result of his socko show.) Neustaedter was the first prexy of ANCA and owned the Exodus in Denver. He was killed in a private plane accident last year.

It was also agreed that candidates for auditions at next year's confab, which will take place at Harrah's in Lake Tahoe in September, will be screened in order to provide a broader spectrum of talent. This session's talent showcase was considered overly-loaded with folk acts.

There's little doubt that there will be great pressure to get on next year's audition bill, since the handful of appropriate acts that tried out this year all picked up bookings. It appeared that acts and agents had failed to realize that this was the only time during the year that so many club owners are in one spot.

Norman was reelected ANCA president, Jay Landesman (Crystal Palace, St. Louis) was named first vice president, Allan Ribback (Gate of Horn, Chi) was tapped for second veepee, Art D'Lugoff (Village Gate, N. Y.) was chosen secretary, and Bill Martin (Montagu Club, Houston) was elected treasurer. Named directors were Bob Vincent (Harrah's) and Manny Rubin (Second Fret, Philadelhia).

VARIETY figures twice in the proceedings at "Eddie Fisher at the Winter Garden," once in a special "VARIETY Says," done by Miss Prowse's male sextet, which sets the motif for the musicomedy reprise; and again in the back-of-the-program biog notes wherein a review, Oct. 9, 1946, of Fisher's debut at the Copacabana, N.Y., concludes, "okay-looking lad, too, he'll be a good bet for a Broadway musical when experience gives him greater presence and a knowledge of selling, which he now lacks." Sixteen years later Fisher is starring on Broadway and none will gainsay his experience, presence or knowledge of selling.

Tieups between top restaurants and entertainment events are becoming a trend in Minneapolis. On Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra concert nights, the Hotel Dyckman's swank French cafe, Chateau de Paris, has what it calls a $3.95 "symphony dinner" during which Arnold Walker, a local authority on music, discusses the orchestra's impending program. While there's a legit road attraction at the Orpheum the same establishment has special stage show dinners. Another restaurant, the White House, furnishes free bus service to and from the theatre for its diners, averting traffic and parking problems for the latter.

Latin Casino, N.J., Shifts Dates as Juliet Prowse Stays in Fisher Show

Cherry Hill, N.J., Oct. 23.

Original three-week booking of Juliet Prowse at the Latin Casino, scheduled to begin Thursday night (25) has been set back to Nov. 6-14. Club management declared that curtailment of the dancer's engagement was not due to adverse notices received on her Winter Garden appearance in the Eddie Fisher show.

Switch necessitated a fast reshuffle at the big Jersey club. Johnny Mathis extended his stay four days through Oct. 28. Bobby Darin cancelled an engagement at the Music Hall, Toronto, to fill in for Miss Prowse the week of Oct. 29 through Nov. 4.

London, Oct. 23.

Sydney Grace, a director of the Grade Organization, left for Hollywood Thursday (18), and will stop in Las Vegas and New York before returning to London early next month.

Grace will confer with GAC execs, both in Hollywood and New York, particularly in relation to the 25-odd acts which the British agency has booked for the Ed Sullivan Show this fall. Grace is due in New York Thursday (25), and will stay for about a week.

Latin American capital, headquarter in the best hotel, contact nightclub owners and indicate that he was representing Miss Bardot in setting up engagements for a world tour. She would do a skit, dance and sing a song or two.

Club owners, who balked at the stiff terms, were told that a "better" price could be arranged. However, as his commission was minimum (with aside remarks on the money shrewdness of la Bardot), the "agent" asked prospects to pony up something for his trouble. This "something" apparently ranged from $200 to $300 per club.

After the deal was arranged and the money changed hands, the agent promised signed contracts would be forthcoming. Naturally, these never showed up. The deception came to light when some club owners, tiring of waiting for contracts, went to police. It was then discovered that competitors in the same city had also been bilked.

One-Man Show

Marcel Amont

Paris, Oct. 15.

At Bobino, Paris; $2.50 top.

Marcel Amont is a personable young singer-impressionist with a pleasing, piping voice. He can dance, do acrobatics and also add clever mime to his songalog. A difficult one-man show seems a bit early for him, but he is getting fine attendance at this nabe vaudery and reviews were good.

Amont, who has lotsa energy, is not above breaking into a Twist, a can-can or enacting a sea-sick man on his honeymoon. He does takeoffs on flamenco numbers, recites a fable and croons gentle songs of love. But about midway things get a bit forced and repetitive.

Canny showman that he is, Amont still does not have the depth and variety to keep his appeal spiraling upward for three hours. He does show that with a good vaude selection and an hour of singing he has the projection, material and solidity for star impact. He also looks a solid boite or tv entry for the U. S. He is well backed by Claude Romat Orch (7).

MANY BUY, DON'T SHOW G.O.P. PROFIT, $10,000

Des Moines, Oct. 23.

Polk County Republicans have disclosed a profit of "at least $10,000 from their show at the KRNT Theatre here on the evenings of Oct. 11 and 12, with tickets at $25 and $10 for the first night and a special "student" price of $3 for the second night. Attendance at the first night's show was 1,400 and on the second night 1,200 . . . but many Iowa Republicans bought tickets who did not attend the show.

Stars for the show (budget for talent for the two nights was said to be $8,000) included Pearl Bailey, Edgar Bergen, Jackie Mason, Rhythm Kings and orchestra by Manny Harmon. Geo. Murphy was producer of the show and also emcee.

Party leaders have announced they liked the idea of staging such a show rather than a $25-a-plate dinner for money-raising purposes, and also "had gained a lot of experience in promoting the 1962 show."

Scotland's Vaude Fading Fast Under Impact of Bowling, Bingo and Casinos

By GORDON IRVING

Glasgow, Oct. 23.

Bingo, bowling alleys—and now casinos. These are the new leisure-time pursuits that are helping to oust vaude and other forms of live theatre from the show biz scene here. The once busy Empire vaudery at Edinburgh will become a casino as of Nov. 16 and will stage bingo sessions six nights a week, including Sundays.

In Glasgow and the West of Scotland, the Brunswick Corp. is setting up two major ten-pin bowling alleys, one of them in the Mount Florida suburb of Glasgow, adjoining the Hampden football stadium. It will cost over $900,000 and is due to open next March. The other is in the northern side of the city.

Benjamin Bensinger, president of Brunswick, who planed here with several execs, said: "There is a great potential in Scotland, and we are building these bowling centres just to show the way and create an interest in ten-pin bowling."

Currently, the only major bowling centre near Glasgow is the Olympia Bowl, a five-pin operation, controlled by tv and newspaper magnate Roy Thomson, at East Kilbride, Lanarkshire. Another is at Blantyre, a mining town, near Glasgow.

Sunday night bingo is planned for the former Empire Theatre in Edinburgh, according to its new owners, Mecca Dancing. Eric Morley, joint assistant managing-director, said games won't start until 6 p.m. so that people who want to go to church can do so and "not be tempted away." Nearly $150,000 is being spent on re-decorating and modernizing the Empire.

First Casino Preems

Scotland's first casino, with gambling on a modest scale, started Saturday 20 at the Carntyne dog-racing track, on East side of Glasgow. Ten-pin bowling alleys are planned for Aberdeen, Dundee, Falkirk and the Jordanhill area of Glasgow.

Meanwhile, bingo is still the big rage in former cinemas throughout Scotland, and the gambling fever has really caught on with the normally conservative Scots. Vauderies find it hard to counter the trend, and even star singers have been pacted to entertain during bingo games.

The Glasgow Empire, Glasgow Pavilion, Edinburgh Palladium, Dundee Palace and Aberdeen Tivoli are gallantly carrying-on against the odds, while the Metropole vaudery is set to reopen on the site of the old Empress Theatre on the west-centre side of Glasgow, a gala opening being planned for Nov. 15.

But it's not an easy battle against the lure of easy coin and the thrills of games of chance. The live comics are going down before the casinos and the bowling pins. Just how long the craze will last is the only bright spot for those who favor human talent.

Break Ground for New Anaheim, Cal., Auditorium

Anaheim, Cal., Oct. 23.

Sammy Lewis and Danny Dare have broken ground on Melodyland, new $1,200,000 auditorium to be constructed here which will have a 3,000-seat capacity and designed particularly for musical attractions. Trade, sports shows and conventions also will be wooed.

Lewis and Dare, who will be managing directors and operators of new facility, plan a May 15 opening, with 12 Broadway musicals to be set for first season.

Dear Fellows:

We certainly want to express our thanks to you for proving that the "a la carte" business is not dead.

Over the weekend of October 5 through 7 you set up a new house record for us here. Naturally, we thought this was great, but when you turned right around and topped it the following weekend it was just too much for us.

All of us are looking forward to your return here in December.

In the meantime, our good wishes for your continued success.

Thanks again.

E. M. Loew & Ed Risman presentation of "The Venus Touch," with Barbara Heller, Carsonys (3), Gino Donati (2), Francois Szony & Nancy Claire, Art Johnson, Janine Adare, Glenda Leigh, Erin Adair, Art Johnson, Line, Jo Lombardi & Irving Fields Orchs. Produced & staged by Donn Arden; costumes, Bill Campbell; lyrics, Lenny Adelson; music, Irav Lans; sets, Motley. $8 minimum.

E. M. Loew and Eddie Risman have a difficult assignment in this room, mainly because of the high standards they have built over the years of production. It doesn't seem enough anymore just to keep pace with the standards that they've shown a generation of tourists as well as natives. They have to go beyond that.

For this presentation Donn Arden has been retained as producer. Arden, who did one of the LQ shows previously and who designs floorshows on an international scale, is one of the livelier minds in this field. Yet, he seems to have made a wise switch. The accent is on acts. There are a lot of them and good ones too.

Not that the production has been sloughed off. It hasn't. The show has a look that gives the impression that Loew didn't care about the budget. There is an air of opulence with the trappings of sets and lavish costumes on the girls. There also seems to be more than the normal amount of parading and prancing.

The ladies of the ensemble are lookers, tastefully routined. The degree of taste that has gone into their selection is seen by the fact that their measurements interest the femmes as well.

The choreography is broadly based so that a wide variety of talent can be sustained. The acts are diversified and the show is well paced.

Opening night had a major mishap. Gino Donati and his unbilled assistant could only do a partial act. The piano, a major tool in their endeavors, lost a leg and their aero work, customarily done on top of the instrument, had to be dropped.

But other top items included the local unveiling of a new dance turn, Francois Szony & Nancy Claire (New Acts). Szony's former partner, Gisele, his sister, is now working with Nick Darvas (ex-& Julia).

The major comedy is by Barbara Heller, who has a generally funny mien. She weaves in and out of the show with many bits, most of which are laugh productive. Her highpoint is a burlesque of a stripper, done in a number which satiries the burlycue era. There's also a rib of Roberta Sherwood singing her trade-marked "Lazy River." Her efforts spice up the proceedings.

Normally, the inclusion of the Carsonys (3) on the bill with Gino Donati would be what the old vaude bookers call a confliction. There are two different aero acts on the same session. But in this instance it works out well. Both are good acts. The Carsonys are balancers and hand-to-handers who score with a good trick catalog. Their one-hand balancing on canes and bottles brings on the applause.

The production aides were substituted on opening night. Lesley Stewart prima-donnaed in place of Janine Adare while Erin Adair did the dances in place of Glenda Leigh. Miss Stewart seems a particularly competent soprano, but the baritone did her vocals [illegible] Erin Adair. She could [illegible] in the dance unit.

The musical backing and dance [illegible] by Jo Lombardi [illegible] Irving Fields does [illegible] and Gini provides the pace. Jose.

Chicago, Oct. 16.

Irwin Corey, Dona Sherrill, Joe Frisco Jr. $2.50 cover.

A couple big conventions are packing Windy City clubs these weeks, and Irwin Corey is nabbing a sizeable share of the conveners at Mister Kelly's. Add the con fabbers to Corey's local following and it should have the cash register jingling for the next three weeks.

Another plus factor is the curiosity value of Joya Sherill, the thrush who kicked up a controversy with Benny Goodman in Russia recently.

The conventioneers proved a mixed blessing for Corey — although they're an appreciative crowd, they are also raucously out on the town. On several occasions, particularly a couple of panto routines, they jarred Corey's timing with their out-loud editorializing. Comic played the interruptions for some of his best laughs, and dampened the noisy ones with a Gatling gun burst of squelches.

Connoiseurs of vintage Corey were well paid off with his burnished excursions into meck culture. Still one of the most redoubtable sight artists around, he has the ability to make big yocks out of little ones with his acute timing and movie screen face.

Miss Sherill is a songstress to watch as a contender for honors among the top femme jazz stylists. Shapely and tune-savvy, she owes her style to no one, and brings a beat to her ballads that will please the hipsters and followers of the Top 20.

She adds new shadings to such familiar numbers as "When The World Was Young" and "The Thrill Is Gone." She clicks with a swinging rendition of "Gonna Build A Mountain" and draws a hefty mitt with "Katyusha," the number that caused all the fuss in the U.S.S.R. Mor.

Peppermint Lounge, N. Y.

Epics (7), Peppermint Loungers (10), Four Fables; $3 cover.

There's still plenty of activity at the Peppermint Lounge, N. Y. the nitery which helped put the Twist into adult orbit. Although there aren't many of the "400" making the scene, the joint's audience still contains a fair percentage of well-dressed adults. But the crowd has also thinned to more of a younger set, seemingly sans society members and long lines at the gate.

The spa, which is getting a $3 cover these days, decided that maybe it ought to provide some entertainment for the tab. Tom Roba was hired as show packager and he has instituted several changes in the club's operation that now make it more of a nitery than a hangout operation. For one thing, Roba has assembled a 55-minute show, replete with dancers, costumes, lighting effects and the works — all in the Twist groove.

This is teenage show biz. Nobody in the show is over 21 years old and many have never worked on a nitery floor before. Roba has whipped this fresh talent into a lively and imaginative Twist show called "Twisting 'Round the World." Its dancers (seven girls and three boys) depict people from various countries around the world in native dress, ending each segment with some hip-swiveling Twisting.

No one could ever accuse the gals and guys of a lack of exuberance. They work harder in 55 minutes of Twisting than the average person does in a week. Femmes are all pretty and good dancers, while lads score well in the looks and terping departments too. Roba's choreography and stage direction is quickly-paced and effective. He's also designed an array of costume and lighting effects, all of which add up to a solid terp display.

Backing the show and mixing in some bits of its own in the comedy groove are the Epics. These seven musician-singers keep things moving rhythmically [illegible] harmonically. A little less [illegible] fender (electric) bass would keep audience heads from throbbing, but the group does a fine rocking job on some fave Twist tunes and other show material.

For an hour between shows the Fables turn up the rocking for audience Twisters. It's a driving vocal-instrumental unit that provides solid backing for the dancers. Combo also gets lotsa kids in motion with its attack on a variety of rock tunes.

Although the Twist is generally considered to be on the ebb, the Peppermint Lounge appears to be picking up momentum again with this slick show. Evidently there are still plenty of customers around with loot to spend on the big beat. Kali.

Hotel Drake, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 20.

Myron Cohen, Jimmy Blade Orch (6); $3 cover Fri.-Sat., $2.50 weeknights.

When Myron Cohen first played the tony Camellia House, where normally a Continental chanteuse holds forth, there was something witty about the incongruity of it. But as he repeats the novelty wears thinner and thinner and it becomes increasingly clear that this should not be allowed to become "his room" in Chicago. There is still an extra shot of comedy in hearing tales of matzo ball soup in Bookbinder territory, but the atmosphere is not conducive to the inherent best of Myron Cohen.

While he scored well before a responsive opening night turnout this stand, it was evident through his 35-minute turn that both the room and the company were inhibiting him, compromising his style and material.

Playing to a predominantly alien audience, he eschews the Yiddish stories and dialogs that might be considered "inside" and concentrates on short jokes in a variety of inflections, but mainly Yiddish. Cohen seems to work with too much caution not to reflect ridicule on the immigrant generations.

The shorties on psychiatry, the quarrels of business partners, the vacationers in Palm Springs, Lord Mayor Briscoe of Dublin, the Stage Delicatessen and Red China ("looking beautiful on a yellow tablecloth") all brought forth a healthy volley of laughs. But his performance was a far cry from those he used to give at the old Chez Paree, where the audience was hip by his standard and where he used to fracture 'em.

There may never again be a room in Chi as suitable for his brand of raconteuring as was the Chez, but there must be a better compromise for Cohen than the Drake. The room continues to benefit from the inviting dance tempos set down by Jimmy Blade's orch.

Louise O'Brien follows Cohen Nov. 2 for three weeks. Les.

Living Room, N. Y.

Jackie Kannon, Cindy Lord, Bobby Milano, Bob Ferro Trio; $4.50 minimum.

The Living Room seems to have invaded the Copacabana precincts in more ways than one with this bill. Not only has boniface Danny Siegel retained Jackie Kannon as the headliner for this occasion, but Kannon, in turn, has appropriated the mannerisms of the Copa boss, Jules Podell. Comic does an inside-impresh of Podell singing a gay song. Of course, it's great fun for a few initiates, but presumably he'll have to drop it after the first night. After all, how many nitery patrons come in contact with Podell, or stage delicatessen operator Max Asnas, whom he also apes.

Kannon, in recent months, has become more widely known as a book publisher and author. His "JFK Coloring Book" has hit the bestseller listings. With his present eminence, cafe work should be a profitable sideline with him.

Before hitting with his tradey items, Kannon indulges in a well-designed and hep group of gags. He has a zany and original bent and is armed with sufficient original material to give his turn a fresh facade. Apparently he's abandoned his pseudo-magic bit, but it's been replaced with sufficiently good material to make him a valued asset here.

Other acts on the bill are Cindy Lord and Bobby Milano, both New Acts. Bob Ferro Trio provides the expert showbacking. Jose.

Crescendo, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 19.

Jonah Jones, Tommy Noonan, Oscar Brown Jr. $2.50 cover plus two-drink minimum.

Jonah Jones Quartet and comic Tommy Noonan headlined Wednesday's (17) opening, but it was "extra added attraction" Oscar Brown Jr. who, living up to his billing, came through with the punch. Brown, often thought of in the folk pop vein, is actually a jazz singer with a concentration of folk or message material, most of it his own. He scores with a performance indicating stardom.

Youngster maintains black pants, striped sport shirt and ascot informal attire characteristic of folksters, but his delivery has considerably more versatility. Jazz beat begins to show on Nat Adderley's "Work Song," while intense, well-controlled style is displayed strongly on "Rags and Old Iron."

Brown hits universal identification in his own "Hazel's Hips," using expert physical movements for comedy; "Mr. Kicks" and "World Full of Grey," trio from his illfated show "Kicks and Company," that are solid. "But I Was Cool" has similar comedy values. Timing is great. Singer gets unusually strong aid from Floyd Morris' piano, along with Holly Oliver, drums, and Bob Bates, bass.

Jones, in show caught, was playing it cool for most part, trumpeting at his best only in the wild, hot sessions on some unidentified pieces. Standards, like "Misty" and "From This Moment On," are little more than easy jazz without a great deal of sock.

Jones loses much when he starts to sing, particularly when he does bad change of lyrics on "Basin Street." "Saints Go Marchin' In" is solid. He gets great assist from bassist John Brown and drummer Daniel Farrar, latter doing a unique fingering bit. Pianist Andre Persiani completes quartet.

Noonan, caught in unfortunately sparse second show, struggles valiantly with number of bits now closely identified with him. He hits best in the rubberfaced accent stuff, but needs some new material. "Intoxicated Chef," now a classic, still has plenty of laughs, while drunk in bar, cockney bus driver and two French women are well done. Poignant "One Rose" (originally written more than 50 years ago by Emil Kuper for George Beban) is delivered with tense emotion.

Joe E. Lewis follows on Oct. 31. Dale.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, Cal., Oct. 20.

Margarita Sierra, Don Sherman, Birk Twins, Bill Alexander Orch (7); $2 cover.

Don Sherman, a lumbering conversational comic, came down from Frisco's hungry i and is stealing the show at Chi Chi's Starlite Room from Margarita Sierra, the headliner, billed as "Cha-Cha O'Brien from Surfside 6."

Sherman has material as fresh as a news bulletin. Much of it approximates Mort Sahl, Joe E. Lewis and Alan King, but he has a frustrated way of presenting it and some observations are as peculiarly his own as were those of Will Rogers—and lots more daring. He couldn't say he never met a man he didn't like. In fact he made a running gag of hating Windsor, N.C., and his reasons for hating the people of that town were sound, funny and true.

But he confided that he really doesn't hate anybody. In fact he is so at peace with the world he wrote to Washington, D.C., saying he knew he had to hate somebody, but who? He asked who would they suggest, since at one time he loved the Russians and the Chinese and hated the Japs and the Germans, and now he's supposed to love the Japs and the Germans, and would they in Washington send him a card every six months telling him who he should hate? He went on in this frustrated funny vein for an hour.

Miss Sierra found Sherman a hard man to follow. For all of her flashing five feet of hot cha-cha and fine range of voice, her Iberian self-confidence in her s.a. and choice of songs, her act lacks clarity of diction even when singing such standards as "The Trolley Song," "Pretty Baby" and "Hallelujah."

She does a "Carmen" number that showed opera does not faze her and her style is not Bizet's but Miss Sierra's. Nevertheless, the act needs polishing. Tony Costa, who directed from the piano, made her arrangements.

Bill opens with a brace of acrobats who perform in dinner jackets. Named the Birk Twins, they do the toughest routines in superb style and reap heavy mitting.

Bill Alexander's band, in their 10th year at the Chi Chi, gives Miss Sierra fine support.

Bill holds through Oct. 24. Scul.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 16.

Alan King, Kitty Kallen, Moro-Landis Dancers (18), Louis Basil Orch (12); produced by Stan Irwin; choreography, George Moro; $4 minimum.

Other commitments have kept Alan King and Kitty Kallen away from the Strip for several seasons; both are welcome returnees with offerings that are better than ever, and it makes for a firstrate double bill.

King's razor-sharp wit is showcased with mostly fresh material; he's re-gauged and updated some of his classic lines to make him one of the ace standup comedians. Opening on the final day of the World Series, he tossed some very funny, up-to-the-hour dialog, along with his hilarious attacks on the telephone company, doctors, insurance companies, and tv's Ben Casey.

Miss Kallen combines warmth, animation, and charm into her pleasant songalog. She's a looker, vocally socking confidence and flamboyant authority into each number. They include "Little Things Mean A Lot," "My Romance," "Look To The Rainbow," "Hey, Look Me Over," "Begin The Beguine," "Rain Or Shine," and an amusing singalong which registers friendly intimacy with her audience.

A new Metro-Landis production number saluting George Gershwin initials the 90-minute show. It features Marcia Rogers, Judith Panzer, Scott Leeds, Avin Harum, the 18 "Most American Girls In the World," and Mafalda at the 88.

Louis Basil's orch (12) provides fine backing for the Stan Irwin bash, in until Nov. 6 when Connie Francis returns. Duke.

Nugget, Sparks, Nev.

Sparks, Oct. 13.

Dennis Day, Kane Sisters (3), Bertini Troupe (6), Moro-Landis Singers and Dancers (17), Foster Edwards Orch (10); produced and staged by George Moro; $4 minimum.

Dennis Day in this local outing is showing added dimensions to his vocal talents, i.e., impressive story telling, imitations, standup comic routines. And he's showing no trace of throat problems he's had before from the Reno-Tahoe altitude.

He opens with "Give 'Em All You Got" and does just that. Titles are nicely spaced among the patter and comedics, and he proves as close to auditors in the 600-seater as he does on the living-room television screen. His stories are topical, the telling is expertly done. And his talent as a dialectician is unquestioned. Title selections include "I Left My Heart In San Francisco," couple of Irish numbers and imitations in various languages.

The Kane Sisters (triplets) have previously made the local scene behind the McGuire Sisters, but in this session take the spot alone for the first time. At 14, they're physically in that "in between" stage, but continue to show strongly in the vocal department. Girls, natch, do carbons of the McGuires, Andrews, Lennons, and Roberta Sherwood, which come across for good reaction.

"Goody, Goody," "Ragtime Cowboy" and "Hucklebuck" are also in the girls' repertoire. Two numbers the trio essays, "Dear Mr. Kennedy" and "Dear Lord," may be okay selections for records, but in a saloon they could just as well be dropped.

The Bertini Troupe, three males, three femmes, work with unicycles on routines that leave tablers limp from thrills. Spectacular bit has one cyclist jump from bike to teeterboard, flipping distaffer onto shoulders of male partner atop high one-wheeler. It's an act that rates the superlatives.

George Moro production for this session is built around George M. Cohan cavalcade with singer David Swain providing the vocal theme for dancers. Continuing hit in the opener is the work of Little Bertha, the Nugget elephant, with trainer Jenda Smaha. Pachyderm for this show plays a tubaphone, tambourine, modified trumpet, harmonica, drums, and also does a Twist.

Foster Edwards and band do the usual firstrate job of backstopping entire show.

Bill changes Oct. 25. Long.

Barclay Hotel, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 9.

"Casbah Revue," with Habeeba, Afet and Emelia Greca; Jane Forrest, Starlet Dancers (14); Larry Day, Percy Curtis Orch (7); $1 cover.

As director of the "Casbah Revue" in the Oasis Rooom of the Barclay Hotel, Fred Maddalena, longtime maitre d', has taken over the selection of acts. In a swift-paced, 75-minute twice-nightly presentation, he's jamming the customers into this 350-capacity spat.

Maddalena's show comprises a trio of bellydancers, a femme singer, male comedian and his Starlets dance line. He has attracted a new audience and, manifestly, what the customers want despite the 10% government hospital tax on all diners' and drinkers' checks, and a maximum tax of $1 per person after the entertainment commences. Well-heeled customers are taking advantage of the Maddalena motif.

The audience draw, in the navel and hip-tossing revue, is a blending of the "straight" dancing of the Starlets, the femme's singing and antics of the male comedian, plus the between dance seshes of Percy Curtis and his seven sidemen.

In the "Casbah Revue," the three bellydancers, with Habeeba (a Levantine) sharing honors with two Turks — Afet and Greca — initially do their manipulations to slowtime. But they work up to a high tempo gyration finale, with lots of percussion from the on-stage band.

Jane Forrest, former fronter for the Ted Heath band, handles numbers in an alternate husky voice and deep tones. She also belts out pop tunes besides singing the backgrounds to the cross-staging of the Starlets in two of their numbers.

Larry Day, as the emcee, proves himself a very funny fellow in his progressive "drunk" bit, in which his rapid-fire delivery is intentionalky slowed down to throwaway lines. He does, however, an energetic twist with a ringsider who obviously is not a plant.

Maddalena presents a gay and sparkling show that is enhanced by the bellydancers, the richly-costumed ensembles, the femme singer and male comedian. But the bellydancers, each on for some 10 minutes, are what the customers want as eye-popping lure.

Shamrock, Houston

Houston, Oct. 18.

Lilo, Jack Durant, K. Bert Sloan-Dick Krueger Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

French chanteuse Lilo and comic Jack Durant combine to give a pleasing if not overpowering show with no real high or low spots. Lilo is shapely in her three-way gown which has both long and short skirt and also strips down to show well-turned gams.

At beginning she appears to labor somewhat with vocals, but pipes improve as show progresses, and she ends after 30 minutes to good mitting for begoff, "I Love Paris." Most of act is about same as her last appearance here, and it is her champagne personality that carries most of the turn.

Comic Durant also sells his act, timed at 22 minutes, with personality and his rapid, restless delivery which serves to patch well-worn material. He still does excellent impression of Clark Gable, but the former prattfalls are missing from act for reasons of health. Both Lilo and Durant play to ringside auditors, getting a few into show.

K. Bert Sloan-Dick Krueger Orch returns to the Shamrock Hilton's International Club bandstand, and band cuts good show as Krueger is in fine voice for interim dancing and listening.

Show plays for two frames, with Marguerite Piazza due Nov. 1.

Palumbo's, Philly

Philadelphia, Oct. 19.

Al Martino, Ronnie Martin, Terrace & DuBrey, Bob London, Carmen Dee Orch (9); no cover or minimum.

South Philly club makes a natural setting for former area resident Al Martino, who has been out of the country some eight years, as a ballad singer fleeing rock 'n' roll. Although his delivery is on the formal side with such numbers as "Be Mine Tonight," "Loveliest Night of the Year" and a nicely delivered "West Side Story" medley topped by an affectingly sung "Moon River," Martino's ad libs are light enough.

The Italian hour begins in 10 minutes," he tells the Palumbo patrons. A number of his songs are delivered bilingually. A highlight of this section is Leoncavallo's "Matinata" (circa 1903), which became popular a half-century later as "You're Breaking My Heart."

Martino's baritone is assured throughout his 35-minute recital and reaches maximum effectiveness with "Granada" and his trademark tune "I Can't Get You Out of My Heart," recently reprised by his new waxery, Capitol.

In the warmup spot are the ballroom duo, Terrace & DuBrey, who run through a number of terping gambits in a couple of fast routines. Ronnie Martin is the comedian and he has a collection of one-liners to limber up listeners. But his quick impreshes of such people as Horace Heidt, Edmund Lowe and Marlon Brando as Stan Kowalski show a dire need of updating. Bob London, the house emcee, tactfully refrains from vocalizing and Carmen Dee's orchestra furnishes the suitable accompaniment.

Detroit Athletic Club

Detroit, Oct. 16.

Sue Carson, Sims & Rodriquez, Seymour Hoffman orch (6); no cover, no minimum; private club.

Comedienne Sue Carson is an accomplished singer, mimic dancer, actress, and general all-around zany. A one-woman show, she nugs outrageously and can evoke sharp images of a sophisticate or a country bumpkin.

She parodies singing commercials in a chuckle-filled special material number which scores solidly with the audience. Following amusing caricatures of Dinah Shore, Teresa Brewer, Pearl Bailey and Lena Horne, she warbles, "Seven Lively Arts," which tells saucily how men seduce women.

Her encore is another special material song, "I Believe in You," which is the only weak spot in the show. She would do well to discard it. The table sitters bring her back for a second encore, "African Native," which sends her off strongly. This is Miss Carson's second visit to this exclusive club and the aud reaction made it obvious that she rates another return.

Ed Sims & Phyllis Rodriquez are a young, good-looking and graceful dance team. They register with effortless lifts and twirls.

Seymour Hoffman and his orchestra provide strong backing, missing only on Miss Carson's final number which requires special support from the drummer.

Padded Cell, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Oct. 19.

Gene Farmer, Clark Maffit; $1 admission weekends.

Since starting as a new act here last January, comic folksinger Gene Farmer has been touring folk haunts from Canada to Texas. Something of a sick folknik, the pixyish comedian has altered his format since his first Padded Cell outing. He's now relying more on political and social satire and less on folk numbers. Farmer's appearance at New York's Blue Angel, where he was on the bill with Dick Gregory, may have encouraged the change.

Transformation has been only partially successful. Farmer's original material is uneven. Some of his commentary is not funny enough to titilate more sophisticated niterygoers. His best efforts continue to be parodies of current pop faves and country-western tunes such as "Wolverton Mountain" and "Streets of Laredo" which he ribs furiously. Routine, however, requires judicious pruning with considerable blue penciling of pat references to news developments.

Bearded minstrel Clark Maffit, who alternates here with Farmer, is too similar to the latter to give bill the variety it needs. Maffit also shows questionable taste in following a spiritual, "I've Been 'Buked," with a slightly blue version of "M-o-t-h-e-r."

Farmer is in through Oct. 28. Folksinger Walt Conley follows.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 19.

"Gotta Get to Vegas," An original musical conceived, staged, and choreographed by Selma Marlowe; music and lyrics, Ernie Held; scenery, Peter Wolf; musical arrangements, Jerry Fielding; assistant choreographer, Jimmie Huntley; dialog and sketches, David Panich; Bill Reddie Orch (17); stage direction, Edward Lynch; lighting, Freddie Tabor; talent coordinator, Simone Fenner; based on an idea by Helen Marshak; $4 minimum.

An original musical "spectacular" with the rather uninspired title "Gotta Get To Vegas" opened here Friday (19). The revue consists of a mixture of finales and opening acts, but it does have its excellent, exciting moments. The music and lyrics by Ernie Held, the dialog and sketches by David Panich, the musical arrangements by Jerry Fielding, and the scenery by Peter Wolf are for the most part fresh, original, and stimulating. Maestro Bill Reddie's orchestra (17) does a superb job of backing.

But Selma Marlowe, who has conceived staging and choreographing for the bash, will have to whack 20 to 30 minutes from the show to please the casino bosses. With this production, the Dunes re-enters the nudie field . . . which it started in Vegas . . . and it will possibly help keep the show on the boards beyond its skedded four weeks plus options. There are 33 gorgeous girls on display, including six bra-less babes, and they are gorgeously gowned.

Outstanding principals are comedians Jerry Collins and Robert Vanselow, straightman Tom Raskin and comedienne Terri Haven . . . all performing like vet pros and sparking the activity.

Unlike all the production numbers, the three vaudeville-type acts in the show have absolutely nothing to do with the theme: "Las Vegas." They are good, servicable turns . . . Puppeteer Barclay Shaw, comely juggler Bobby Winters and the tumbling Seven Sons of Morocco . . . all of which could be replaced from time to time if the show has an extensive run.

Weakest part of the revue is the session of celeb impreshes, some of which were unrecognizable to firstnighters. There's stirring choreography involving all cast members for the grand finale.

At the conclusion of the opening show $7,500 in real paper money, including 50 $100 bills, fluttered from the ceiling on a greedily grasping audience, but it is questionable if this gimmick will continue nightly . . . even with lesser amounts of loot, because the hotel management feels it may be "undignified."

Village Vanguard, N. Y.

Joe Williams, Junior Mance Trio, Ted Curson Quartet; $3 minimum.

This jazz cellar is swinging smoothly with its current card headlined by Joe Williams and featuring the Junior Mance Trio and the Ted Curson Quartet.

Williams has styled his vocal presentation nicely for backing by the Mance Trio, with which he's been working since August. His tune array hits several grooves, from ballad to swinger to his trademark blues. His hip phrasing and deep-throated tones score consistently.

He gives an especially fine treatment to "Summertime" and does a clever specialty turn on a rock-type tune called "A Little Bit of Dis and a Little Bit of Dat." His "Honeysuckle Rose" has the special Williams blues touch and he throws in a bunch of others including "Man Ain't Supposed to Cry" and "Our Love Is Here To Stay."

He's effectively backed by the Mance unit, and the Trio swings out on its own for a brief set before Williams comes on. Mance has a light piano touch which displays a smooth swinging flavor. There's also nice work by his bass and drums supporters. The group gets off a good swinging sound.

The Curson Quartet is paced by the leader's fine trumpet and baby cornet playing. Curson delivers muted tones with his horns which are always melodic and often percussive. Don Freeman supplies solid piano touches, also marked by a pleasant melodic quality and bright sound. Bill Lee, who appears to be one of the most active bassists in town between his folk and jazz work, handles this instrument with his usual competence. Al Foster rounds out the group with some driving drum work.

Chardas, N.Y.

Lily France, Jacqueline Rew, Elemar Horrath orch, Tibor Rakossy, Dick Marta; $3-$5 minimum.

The Yorkville sector continues to grow importantly in the Manhattan nitery pattern. It has become one of the neighborhoods where acts are developed and which is also hatching its own group of names. The area is now a centre of huge new and expensive apartment houses.

Many of the new residents regard the niteries as neighborhood restaurants with entertainment and if the bill pleases, it seems a sufficient reason for a repeat of the same show.

Thus, it's easy to ascertain which acts are building in this neighborhood. The Chardas, with its present layout, has a standby performer plus a newcomer. The combination is productive of entertainment as well as excellent business.

Lily France is a repeater here. Her voice and repertoire seem quite comfortable in this spot. She projects a graceful blend of songs en Francaise which includes a medley by her compatriate Charles Trenet. Miss France also chantooseys a few in English as well and walks off a huge winner with this mixed catalog.

Also in the song sector, Tibor Rakossy, the Hungarian baritone, belts out a soulful Magyar air with fast and slow cadences that provide a splash of color.

Aside from Jacqueline Rew (New Acts) the rest of the entertainment is instrumental. Elemar Horvath, in flamboyant gypsy costume, does songs of Hungary as well as classics. Dick Marta supplies cymbalom interludes.

Riverside, Ottawa

Ottawa, Oct. 18.

Carlos Ramirez & His Latin Revue (7), Pete Porteous Orch (5); $1.25 minimum.

The 350-seat Rib Room of the Riverside hotel is in its preem week and getting big business. Formerly w.k. as one of this capital's top eateries, steakhouse Rib Room has been expanded by boniface Rene Gagne into a posh nitery with two shows nightly except Sunday.

Opening show is the Carlos Ramirez Latin Revue in which the onetime film name-chanter surrounds himself with juggle and terp stints. But it's the still-socko piping of Ramirez the customers pay to hear and he doesn't let them down. Staying with familiar tunes ("Granada," for example), he exhibits top showmanship and piping ability throughout to solid returns, holding the floor for more than half the 60-minute stanza.

With him, doing adequate chores, are The Robertos (2), juggling; The Gordons (2) with Devora, two males and femme in terp routines, and three instrumentalists from South America billed as The Istenos. Backing the shows and playing for dancing is the Rib Room house band under Pete Porteous.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, Oct. 15.

Earl Grant, Don Cannon Orch (8); $2 cover.

Of all the top nitery entertainers to play this city, Earl Grant has built perhaps the most solid following as he makes his fourth appearance at the Tidelands Motor Inn nitery. Don Cannon has beefed up his six-piece combo for this show, with Grant's brother Bill taking over the skins and aceing as musical director.

Grant remains a top versatile entertainer, highlighting work at organ and 88s, but also drawing good palming for vocals and terping. Showmanship is still superb, and if any criticism can be made it is that Grant is a bit loud for an intimate room such as boniface Bill Newkirk's.

Grant has a little something for everybody, and tunes include "Learning the Blues," "Autumn Leaves," "Beyond the Reef," "Bill Bailey," "Mack the Knife," "House of Bamboo," "Ebb Tide," and a tune he wrote himself, "Swinging Gently." Entertainer also does own version of the Twist.

Jefferson, St. L.

St. Louis, Oct. 15.

"Gypsy," starring Margaret Whiting, Norwood Smith and Judy Cannon; James Duncan orch (8); $6.25 minimum including dinner and show.

The Sheraton-Jefferson Dinner Theatre, which had a highly successful first season last semester, is losing no ground at all with its first entry of this season. "Gypsy," with Margaret Whiting as the dedicated stage mama, is a bouncing, fast-paced treat.

The Dinner Theatre stage has been moved out into the centre of the room, and the theater-in-the-round effect heightens the rapport between cast and audience. Last season's budget policy continues, with dinners starting at $6.25. The one price includes both dinner and complete show.

Miss Whiting, although not as raucous a type as Ethel Merman, brings an engaging warmth to her characterization of the mother who's determined to get her kids into the bigtime. Along with her exciting warbling of ballads like "Small World," she gives a fine lilt to the uptempo chants and does a darb of a job of emoting.

Singer-actor Norwood Smith makes crackling good work of a comparatively small role as Herbie, Mama's long-suffering boy friend. He doesn't have too many opportunities to raise his voice in song, but when he does, he scores back to the lobby.

As the young Louise and June, Candy Butler and Anita Colombo, a pair of cuties, are fetching. And as the grownup girls, Judy Cannon does a superb portrayal as Louise, and ditto for Linda Rae Hager as June.

Standouts in supporting roles are Ann Barbara Lang as a bombastic, gum-chewing stripper; Joseph Cusanelli as a harried theatre manager, and Suzanne Werner and Jari Lynn, who share the strip-tease hi-jinks with Miss Lang.

"Gypsy" is in for three weeks, to be followed by "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," with Marie Wilson and Norwood Smith.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, Oct. 15.

Polly Bergen, Charlie Manna, Fabulous Ashton Girls (18), Leighton Noble Orch (22); presented by Bob Vincent; produced by Art Barkow; $3 minimum.

Current bill at Harrah's Tahoe marks three firsts for the South Shore Room: Polly Bergen's debut in this area, ditto for Charlie Manna, and Barry Ashton is helming the production numbers beginning with this show. Three combine for a class hourplus of entertainment.

Miss Bergen, a dark-haired looker in sheath gown, offers a diversified catalog of titles ranging from ballads to spirituals, and scores effectively in all areas. From opener "Wild Rose" to exit tune, "Party's Over," she gets much attention. Working much of the time with mike in hand, and from all parts of the stage, she exudes much personality on such as "I Left My Heart in San Francisco," "If the Devil Answers," "Love is A Many Splendored Thing" and "Moon River."

There's some tonal thinness in the extreme ranges, but singer knows her way around in all tempi, and gives tablers full measure. Winning top reception are her special lyrics to unused title songs for "Splendor in the Grass" and "Nuremberg." She also wins approval in allowing audience participation in a "revival" session. For some of the songalog she's vocally backed by the four Jones Boys. House band, under the baton of Hal Borne while Miss Bergen is on, has been augmented to 22 pieces.

Manna, an easy but authoritative worker, takes a few minutes to reach full command but holds for rest of the turn. He includes, natch, his famed astronaut "crayon" routine, and embellishes with an impresh of "Barber of Seville" (with English translations), and a relief pitcher. He also get lots of mileage using a handkerchief to illustrate song titles.

The Ashton opening production, based on the Boy and Dolphin theme, is impressive for color and staging. Scrim is effectively used as curtain parts to accent on underwater scene, futher enhanced by troupe's costuming and stage props, including broken ship's hull, shells concealing dancers, a diver descending from drops high above stage and other pelagic flora and fauna. New show in Oct. 25.

Unit Review

Recreation Show, K.C.

Kansas City, Oct. 18.

Stage presentation at first Kansas City indoor Recreation Show in Municipal Auditorium with the Lennon Sisters (3) Dakota Gloggers (8), Cal Claude, Jay Ross, Ann & Jack Clark, Happy Davis, Tommy Bartlett, m.c. Shows at 3:30 and 9 p.m. 75 mins. Music, Don Gil Torres Orch (12). Admission $1.25, reserved seats $1 additional.

Recreation show is a new entry on the list of expositions in the downtown Municipal Auditorium, and follows somewhat the pattern of other indoor exhibits that spark attendance with a live stage show. Vernon Banks, who heads up the Rec Show, has put together a creditable list of talent for this one, topped by the Lennon Sisters first four days of the show, Oct. 16-19. Joan Castle supplanted them last two days.

The 75 minutes of entertainment follows a 15 minute fashion show by Kline's downtown department store. Vaude includes a type seldom seen anymore, and Banks has seen to it that there is a wide variety on the bill. Emcee Tommy Bartlett has had previous experience in handling this type of show, and does creditably. He has the Dakota Cloggers open with a session of square dancing. Balancing act by Cal Claude has him standing on one hand atop a 10-ft. tripod while he passes rings over his body and otherwise shows a skilled turn.

Jay Ross, who makes cute little figures out of balloons, is midway for a lighter moment, albeit strong with the kids. Roller skating is forte of Gaynor & Ross on a compact stand, and Jack Clark shoots away balloon targets with his bow and arrow as Ann Clark does the commentary. Clown Happy Davis turns out to be a trampoline specialist, winding with the expected triple twist and somersault.

The three Lennons have the last 25 minutes of the show for their soft and sweet music, rolling out a near dozen of their tunes, some of them versions of their Dot recordings. They follow it up with personal appearances at the Dot booth in the show, a double blast for the customers. Trio's vocals are quite acceptable as long proven on tv. They snap it up on a tune now and then to vary the pace, but generally theirs is pretty much on the light, smooth side. Quin.

New Acts

LONNIE DONEGAN (4)
Songs, Comedy
30 Mins.
Village Gate, N.Y.

Britisher Lonnie Donegan is recently familiar to U.S. ears via a couple of international disclicks ("Rock Island Line" and "Don't Stick the Chewing Gum on the Bedpost Overnight"). He deserves to be widely seen as well as heard here, as attested by his current U.S. nitery bow at Art D'Lugoff's Village Gate.

Noted as a skiffle-band jazzman and folksinger in England, Donegan besides the impressive pipes for a slight fellow has a stacatto comedy patter that's an absolute delight out of the fine, old music hall tradition. Small matter that the jokes often also are traditional, or telegraphed, or disguised for American auds by Anglo slant or cockney accenting. A great sense of timing and gusto projection carry it all off. The rubbery-faced leer and roll of the Donegan well-oiled eyeballs back any punchline that's less than fracturing.

Add to the above benefits an incredible ear which allows this versatile vaude performer to mimic U.S. hill and country talk with an accent that could fool a Mississippi deputy. And the talent carries over to his vocal phrasing on American folk songs.

Besides the self-accomp on guitar and banjo, Donegan is backed by countryman Denny Wright, who plays straight man in the chatter segs and fine slambang gutiar in backing. Filling out the group excellently are two Americans, Bill Smith on drums, and Hal Gaylor, bass.

Interesting to note that Donegan's hip-cornball antics succeeds easily in really warming up the cool audience that comes primarily to dig jazz saxman Stan Getz. Act should go anywhere. Bill.

FRANCOIS SZONY & NANCY CLAIRE Dance
10 Mins.
Latin Quarter, New York

Francois Szony long partnered with sister Gisele in one of the top ballet-ballroom teams in the nitery orbit, has a new partner in Nancy Claire, while Gisele will be twained with Nicolas Darvas (& Julia). While Miss Claire's style is betimes reminiscent of Gisele, there are essential differences. The new femme is a sleeker and more sophisticated personality.

Duo perform in well-disciplined manner as if they have had considerable seasoning in their past year's European and Middle East bookings. They complement each other. Szony has changed his style only slightly and both, in tandem, still impress as one of the best ballet ballroom teams on the cafe circuit.

Their routine to a Chopin etude is both a delicate as well as a dramatic performance. The overall blend is potent, further insured by the male pard's fast spins which constantly elicit hand-to-hand acclaim. Abel.

JACQUELINE REW
Songs
12 Mins.
Chardas, N.Y.

Jacqueline Rew is a well-trained soprano who seems to have been brought up on classics. She has adapted herself to cafe work admirably with a group of evergreens that go well in this Continental-styled nitery. She is a pleasant looker with auburn hair and is coutoured nicely.

In her present state of development, Miss Rew fails to take advantage of a tune assortment that would show more facets to her voice. Her self-limitations, while good at showing her commercial adaptablity, fails to give her the added plus that would create further excitement. Miss Rew, with additional songs would be eligible for a wider assortment of spots. She seems to have the other necessary equipment. Jose.

HI-LITES (3)
Songs
38 Mins.
Club 70, Ottawa

The Hi-Lites played the old Gatineau Club four years ago but the Hi-Lites booked into Club 70 has three new chanters, a complete personnel switch. The sound has changed, too, with the current three some striving, with some success, to emulate the Four Lads. Piping is pleasant and the beat is solid but routining leaves a lot to be done to give the Hi-Lites distinction, or to set them apart from many other chant groups. Their gabbed wit lacks slickness in both material and presentation. It's in the lampshade-on-the-head sphere of humor.

Crisper routining and stronger continuity and comedy, added to already okay piping, could lift this group several slots higher for benefit to lounges, niteries, AM and tv. As is, Hi-Lites can do such fields some good but only somewhere in the show. Gorm.

CINDY LORD
Songs
18 Mins.
Living Room, N.Y.

Cindy Lord, once the femme half of Cindy & Lindy who were making some headway on the cafe circuits, has now gone into business for herself. An attractive looker, Miss Lord's pipes show a sense of style and extreme competence. She seems to be as much a musician as she is a singer with showing nuances and patterns that indicate she knows her way around the scales.

Miss Lord delves into a wide variety of tunes. They are delivered meticulously and with charm. Sometimes the perfectionist in her cools down the ardor of her songs, but generally she is an assured and competent singer selecting songs off the beaten path as well as those regularly heard. Her vocal interests are varied and she can keep an audience more than interested in a set of arresting arrangements interestingly delivered. Jose.

BONNIE DOBSON
Songs
28 Mins.
Le Hibou, Ottawa

Toronto canary Bonnie Dobson, folk singer, is a looker and has pleasant pipes when she warbles. Her gab sound is monotonous and should be either eliminated or improved with upped speaking manner and stronger material.

Miss Dobson follows the so-called trend in folk singing towards gruesome lyrics like "She went out and shot her son," or a song about an island where babies grow on trees and there's a bargain day when you get a baby with every six pounds of cheese. "Open the lid and lift out the kid" it goes. This style is sneeringly mournful and drags the customers' spirits down with it to some extent.

Unless she does a lot of work on her routining and staging, Bonnie Dobson is strong only for coffeerooms. Gorm.

BOBBY MILANO
Songs
20 Mins.
Living Room, N.Y.

Bobby Milano is a youngster who indicates he'll get along well in the lounge and intime room environs. At this point, that's where he seems best suited, with an energetic style that calls for a lot of notes in the dilenation of any one tune.

Milano is good at weaving together various songs. He picks up a tune he has previously rendered to establish a continuity and an informality that keeps the customers interested. He frequently shows a tendency to go overboard with unnecessary compliactions but, generally, he has enough gimmicks to keep him going in the smoke-filled rooms. Jose.

San Diego Nitery Pacts 3 More Ashton Revues

Hollywood, Oct. 23.

Barry Ashton has sold three more revues to Art Hirsch's Roaring 20's nitery, San Diego, each to run eight weeks next year. First starts Jan. 17. Deal is same as that for the recent Ashton "Les Girls de Paree," which closed at spot last week. Ashton got flat $4,500 weekly, plus all door admissions ($2) over $6,000 weekly. "Les Girls" went into percentage each week but the last.

Roaring 20's has Mort Sahl current. Then Betty Hutton breaks in her new turn and talks are on for Milton Berle to break in his act (Vegas-booked for holidays) which includes some L.A. Dodgers.

Depression-Born Barter Theatre Marks 30th Year With 130G Fund

The Barter Theatre, Abingdon, Va., has received an Old Dominion Foundation grant of $100,000, which was contingent on the outfit raising at least $25,000 in matching funds from local supporters. The local fund-raising campaign brought in a little more than $30,000, which means the Barter now has over $130,000 to consolidate its real and personal property and establish a basis for longrange continuation of the theatre and its activities in Abingdon.

The Barter, founded by Robert Porterfield, celebrated its 30th anniversary of summer productions this year and is now presenting its first winter season of resident productions in Abingdon. The theatre, which became the first such operation to be state supported when the Virginia Legislature designated it "The Theatre of the Commonwealth of Virginia" in 1946, has now incorporated as The Barter Foundation Inc.

An ironic aspect of the Barter's present, comparitive affluence, is the fact that it was organized by Porterfield in 1932 as a Depression project. Enlisting other out-of-work actors, Porterfield went to his native Virginia to start the theatre, which actually operated on a barter basis with local residents, collecting articles of food in payment for admission.

Officers of the corporation are Porterfield, president; Charles J. Harkrader, vice-president; W. A. Stuart, vice-president; Andrew P. Miller, secretary-treasurer, and Pearl E. Price, assistant treasurer. The Foundation has appointed Benjamin B. Warfield as executive vice-president to undertake the planning phase of the operation.

SEZ ROAD 'WHOLESALE' WILL COST ONLY 45G

Manny Davis, who's putting together a touring edition of the Broadway musical, "I Can Get It For You Wholesale," says the venture is budgeted at around $45,000. The producer leased the road rights from the authors and David Merrick, producer of the Main Stem presentation.

The original production, which moved recently from the Shubert Theater to the Broadway Theatre, was financed at $275,000. It is in its 32d week in New York. Larry Kert will star in the Davis presentation in the male lead played on Broadway by Elliott Gould. He subbed for Gould several times in New York.

The road presentation of the Jerome Weidman adaptation of his own novel of the same title with music and lyrics by Harold Rome is scheduled to begin touring Nov. 1 at the Auditorium, Rochester.

Spanish Screen Players Make Legit Appearance

Madrid, Oct. 23.

Legit opening recently of "Micaela," starring Emma Penella and directed by Adolfo Marsillach, strongly accented the shift of Spanish acting talent from the screen to the stage. "Micaela" marks La Penella's legit debut in a play written by Calvo Sotelo. Though the preem highlighted a growing swing from screen to stage, the trend has been in process during the past season.

Another striking example, is the scheduled appearance of local screen favorite Paquita Rico in the Jose Tamayo production of Lorca's "Blood Wedding," at the Teatro de Bellas Artes later this month.

One of the legit forerunners this year, "Those Who Must Serve," the first of the many Alfonso Paso plays to go into theatrical production, was staged by film director Saenz de Heredia with screen star Conchita Valasco in the lead. Another film prominent, Francisco Rabal, has been signed by Tamayo to appear later in the season in the Albert Camus play, "Caligula."

Other film figures promised for legit appearances before the year ends are: Imperio Argentina, Jose Rubio, Susana Campos, Carlos Larranaga and Analia Gade.

"Blood Wedding" will open the season tomorrow night (Thurs.) at the Loeb Drama Center of Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass.

Theatre in Education Entering No. Carolina

Lyn Ely's Theatre in Education Inc. is expanding its high school assembly programs of Shakespearean scenes from the Connecticut and New York City area to North Carolina. There will be 60 free-admission performances of a 50-minute program presented in North Carolina schools starting Jan. 15 and continuing through Feb. 21.

The southern venture is budgeted at $25,000 with the cost to be split equally between the state of North Carolina and the Old Dominion Foundation. The North Carolina outing will precede Theatre in Education's annual spring tour of high schools in Connecticut and the New York metropolitan area. The 1963 program, which Ernestine Perrie will direct, will consist of scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," "Twelfth Night" and "Julius Caesar." Special introductory and bridging material will be written by Marchette Chute.

Theatre in Education, a nonprofit organization, was formed by Miss Ely in 1956.

Chi's Lyric 90% Advance Sellout

Chicago, Oct. 23.

Lyric Opera of Chicago is entering its current season with 90% of its tickets sold in advance, its largest pre-season sale. However, the opera company is expected to end up $400,000 in the red, a sum which will be made up by fund-raising campaign. An opera spokesman said that the fund campaign is ahead of schedule, apparently as a result of the general enthusiasm for the season. The Lyric will also try to raise an additional $600,000 to pay back debts and to provide a financial cushion for next year.

As part of its financial campaign the Lyric is installing three bronze plaques on the south wall of the main foyer of the Opera House. One will be called "Benefactors of Lyric Opera" for those who gave $50,000 or more, a second will list memorial gifts, and a third special plaque will honor a quartet of philanthropists who financed the physical production and setting for "Prince Igor," this year's opener.

SLIM NEGRO TURNOUT FOR ELT PRODUCTIONS

Actors Equity is finding it difficult to set an example in the use of integrated casts through its Equity Library Theatre operation. In its first production of the new season, ELT cast Earle Hyman, a Negro, in the title role of "Mister Roberts" (played on Broadway by Henry Fonda). However, a release sent out recently by ELT stated:

"Equity Library Theatre has become concerned with the small number of non-Caucasians who have come to ELT's open casting calls, and with that in mind, would like to reiterate that open casting at ELT means precisely that all casting will be done according to talent, and without regard to race, creed or color."

Booking Touring Shows Into Sombrero, Pheonix

Phoenix, Oct. 23.

The Sombrero Playhouse, expanding from straight stock fare to the booking of regular road productions, is also extending its season this year to 20 weeks. Past semesters have usually run 10 weeks.

The spot, the starting point for the current break-in tour of "The Perfect Setup," was the initial booking last week on the touring route of "The Caretaker." The staff at the Playhouse, which Richard Charlton has been operating for 15 years, includes Martin Egen, general manager; Margo James, executive assistant; Zilpha Morgan, business manager; Jack Welles, stage manager, and Tommy Brent, pressagent.

Berlin's Credo

With "Mr. President" finally making its Broadway bow Saturday night (21) to a $2,600,000 advance sale and mixed notices, Irving Berlin is going on a holiday.

"But not for long," says he, "I'm going right back on another show. Too much rest makes me restless. I tried it for 10 years and found out how much of a tough job 'doing nothing' can be."

Bridge to B'way For 5 Projects

London, Oct. 23.

Peter Bridge planes next Monday (29) for New York with five major assignments. He will attend the opening at the Ambassador Theatre, N.Y., next Wednesday (31) of "Caluclated Risk," which is being presented by Howard Erskine, Roger L. Stevens and Joseph Hayes, by arrangement with him.

George Ross, who, with Campbell Singer wrote "Any Other Business," from which "Calculated Risk" has been adapted by Joseph Hayes, sailed for New York on the Queen Elizabeth last Thursday (18).

During his Manhattan stay, Bridge will also discuss a possible Broadway deal for "Guilty Party," also by Ross and Singer, which recently concluded a profitable run at the St. Martin's Theatre, London. He is also hoping to interest New York managements in his current London hit, "Breaking Point," which opened early September at the Lyric Theatre, Shaftesbury Avenue.

There has also reportedly been some New York interest in "Stephen D," a dramatization from James Joyce's early writing, which was the hit of the Dublin Festival. Bridge aims to bring this to London early in the New Year, and will be presenting it in association with Peter Katz and Greville Poke.

Another item on Bridge's agenda for Manhattan is a discussion with Gerard Ostreicher about a possible London edition of the latter's musical production, "Milk and Honey," currently in its 54th week at the Martin Beck Theatre, N.Y. He plans to remain in the U.S. about two weeks.

'YANKEE DOODLE' TUNER SLATES BRITISH TOUR

London, Oct. 23.

A new American musical is to open in London, and will probably play most of the European capitals, as well as Moscow, before it reaches Broadway. The show is "Yankee Doodle Comes To Town," which is being jointly presented this side by Stephen Mitchell and Herman Blank.

The production, which went into rehearsal last Wednesday (17), is to start its tryout Nov. 20 in Bristol and a week later will play a two-weeks' run in Glasgow before opening Dec. 19 for a six-week engagement in Liverpool. It's expected to hit the West End in early February, at a theatre to be booked.

Ruth Blank, wife of the American partner, is staging the production, and their daughter, Lori, is her assistant. The two stars are Billie Worth and Bill Shirley, but the remainder of the cast is British. The show will cost an estimated $85,000.

The book has been written by Robert Bernstein, but the entire score, apart from one original number, is taken from American standards up to, and including, the World War I period.

Fred Kelly has been named choreographer, Pearl Somner is doing costume designs. Sylvia Rekoon is choral director and Edward Berri is responsible for orchestrations. Richard Nelson has credit as electrical designer.

Billie Worth last played in London as the star of "Call Me Madam," but it will be the first time here for her costar Bill Shirley.

Jas. Mitchell to London

James Mitchell, who originated the role of Marco in the Broadway production of "Carnival," will repeat the assignment as the only American in the upcoming London version of the musical.

He's been succeeded in the New York company by dancer-choreographer-teacher Matt Mattox.

Ontario Bard Fest 94% Capacity; Connecticut Drew Only About 57%

A contrast in business is reflected in the total grosses registered this past summer by the Shakespearean festivals in Stratford, Ont., and Stratford, Conn. The Ontario operation, with receipts running ahead of the previous semester, played to nearly 94% of capacity. In Connecticut, the situation was almost the reverse, with business dropping substantially below the 1961 tally to about 57% of capacity.

The repertory program in Ontario took in 13 weeks of regular performances, plus two weeks in which most performances were on student discounts. The 15-week take was $917,100 on a potential capacity gross of $976,938. Included in the Ontario repertory were "Macbeth," "The Taming of the Shrew," "The Tempest" and the non-Shakespearean "Cyrano de Bergerac."

A 13-week repertory season was played in Connecticut by the American Shakespearean Festival Theatre, with the gross for the semester running around $420,000 on a potential capacity of $737,100. The play program comprised "Richard II," with Richard Basehart and Hal Holbrook costarred; "Henry IV, Part One," with Holbrook and Eric Berry costarred, and "Shakespeare Revisited," a program of Bard bits performed by Helen Hayes and Maurice Evans.

The Connecticut operation, which last week got a grant of $503,000 from the Ford Foundation, ended its season in mid-September with the cancellation of a scheduled month-long fall program for students. It was the eighth semester for ASFT which at a $6.25 top was geared for a weekly capacity take of $56,700 in its 1,449-seat showcase.

The Ontario season was the 10th for the festival there. Tickets for the Canadian repertory were scaled to a top of $5 and the weekly potential capacity take at the 2,258 seat Festival Theatre was $67,176. That figure was reduced to $51,955 for the student sessions.

'Times' Ups Arthur Gelb To Cultural News Post

Arthur Gelb, coauthor with his wife, Barbara, of "O'Neill," a biography of Eugene O'Neill, has been boosted by the N. Y. Times from chief cultural reporter to the post of assistant director of cultural news.

The paper's cultural news department is headed by Joseph G. Herzberg.

Propose Razing The Belasco, D.C.

Washington, Oct. 23.

The Federal government's latest architectural plan for Lafayette Square includes a provision for demolition of the Belasco Theatre, the old legit, vaude and opera house. With the blessings of the President and Mrs. John F. Kennedy, every other historic house and building on the square will be preserved.

John Warnecke, a San Francisco architect hired by the U. S. General Services Administration to balance the counter demands, said, "The Belasco is not a good example of the architecture of its time and is inappropriate." The design has been approved by Fine Arts Commission, but may face rough sledding in Congress, which has approved new buildings but not restorations of old ones.

A bill to preserve the Belasco died in the adjournment rush. So as of the moment, the plan is to replace the theatre with a lobby to the court building.

MET'S 'FALSTAFF' WITH LEONARD BERNSTEIN

Leonard Bernstein goes into the pit of the Metropolitan Opera next fall to conduct the revival of "Falstaff," a Verdi work last heard in 1948. Franco Zeffirelli will stage a new production along lines of his interpretation of the work in London, Amsterdam, Brussels and Tel Aviv.

Already set for the title role is Anselmo Colzani. Gabriella Tucci will sing Mistress Ford; Judith Raskin, Ann; Regina Resnik, Dame Quickly; Mario Serni, Ford.

Report Shanberge Quit As M'w'kee IA Biz Agent

Milwaukee, Oct. 23.

John Shanberge, business agent of the International Assn. of Theatrical Employees, Local 18, has sent a written resignation. He now lives at Tuscon, according to an official of the union. Burnet J. McDiarmid has been serving as business agent but officers and the membership of the local must pass on Shanberge's resignation and vote on a successor.

Clair Richardson, operator of the Original Skylight Theatre and Skylight-on-the-Square Theatre, reported to the U. S. Labor Dept. last April on alleged irregularities in paying stagehand wages to Shanberge rather than to the men, as required by Federal law.

Book 4 Bus-Truck Shows Into Springfield, Mass.

Wally Beach, producer of the Storrowtown Music Fair, West Springfield, Mass., has formed a corporation to book touring legit productions into the Paramount Theatre, Springfield. The first of four one-niters scheduled for the current semester was played last Monday night 22) by the bus-and-truck company of "Carnival." The musical is being toured by Lee Guber, Frank Ford and Shelly Gross, who are also associated with Beach in his summer tent theatre operation.

Other shows slated for the 2,700-seat Paramount, which has been playing legit productions for the last three years, include the bus-and-truck editions of "A Shot in the Dark," in February; "Mary, Mary," in March, and "The Sound of Music," in April.

GLENVILLE TO STAGE 'DYLAN' NEXT SEASON

London, Oct. 23.

Peter Glenville will stage "Dylan" on Broadway next season for George W. George and Frank Granat. The Sidney Michaels play deals with the American experiences of the Welsh poet, Dylan Thomas. Glenville has staged Michaels' version of "Tchin-Tchin," opening on Broadway Thursday night (25).

Following "Dylan," he is to write and direct the film edition of "Becket" for Hal Wallis and Paramount. It will star Peter O'Toole and Richard Burton.

Episcopal Priest Acting Anew in Negro Skits

Detroit, Oct. 23.

Three new one-act plays on the theme of race relations, written by the Rev. Malcolm Boyd, Episcopal Chaplain to Wayne State University in Detroit, will be presented for eight performance during the first three weekends in November at the Will-O-Way Apprentice Theatre in Bloomfield Hills, Mich.

Boyd will appear as an actor in the plays along with two Negro actors, Cliff Frazier and Woodie King Jr. Proceeds of the performances will be presented to the Michigan Chapter of the Episcopal Society for Cultural and Racial Unity.

The three plays are entitled: "They Aren't Real To Me," "The Job" and "Study in Color."

'Becket' Opening Season, Alley Theatre, Houston

Houston, Oct. 23

The Alley Theatre here, which has been given a grant of $2,100,000 by the Ford Foundation, begins its 1962-63 season tomorrow night (Wed.) with "Becket," staged by the managing director, Nina Vance.

The resident company at the spot includes Virginia Payne, Peter Duryea, Len Wylan, Moultrie Patten, Max William Jacobs, Robert Van Hooten, Jonathan Moore, Michael Miller, Kay Chevalier, Bettye Fitzpatrick and John Wylie, Singers, dancers: Kellie Bivit, Marian Bradshaw, Carol Lee Jensen, Mary Rose, Donna Monroe, Laspet Nelson, Jeri Sheard, Maggie Wafth, John Aman, Anthony Falco, Jack McMann, Jack Mette, Carl Nicholas, Jack Rains, Van Stevens, Beau Tilden, Conniee Burnett, Barrick Lee, Lynn Gay Lorino, Anna Marie Moyer, Barbara Newman, Lynn Ross, Mari Ellen, Arline Woods, Don Atkinson, Jo Bikard, Carlos Bas, Sterling Clark, Irene French, Louis Kosman, Bob Krosse, Lowell Purvis, Dan Sheila.

Musical numbers: "Let's Go Back to the Waltz," "In Our Hide-Away," "The First Gal," "Meat and Potatoes," "I've Got To Be Around," "The Secret Service," "It Gets Lonely in the White House," "You're the Only Man in the World," "Don't Love Me," "Pigtails and Freckles," "Don't Be Afraid of Romance," "Laugh With Us," "Empty Pockets Filled With Love," "Glad to Be Home," "You Need Hobby," "The Washington Twist," "The Only Dance I Know," "I'm Gonna Get Him," "This Is a Great Country."

There are no miracles. "Mr. President," which finally arrived at Saturday night (29) at the St. James Theatre, is substantially what the advance tidings from Boston and Washington indicated—a routine musical comedy.

It would be a thrill if the array of big names—Irving Berlin, Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, Joshua Logan, Leland Hayward, Jo Mielziner and Robert Ryan and Nanette Fabray, had somehow rallied the production together and brought in a big, fat hit. But there's no ducking the truth—"Mr. President" is an undistinguished show by distinguished people.

Contrary to some of the extreme predictions by head-shaking tryout spouts, however, this is not a terrible show, except as it is unworthy of the talents of its eminent sponsors. The trouble is that "Mr. President" is just ordinary, another of those run-of-the-mill Broadway musicals without any big, galvanizing numbers or moments.

The fabulous Irving Berlin, whose song hits go back more than half a century and whose tunes have brightened such musical washes as "Call Me Madam," "Annie Get Your Gun," "This Is the Army," "As Thousands Cheer" and "Yip, Yip, Yaphank," has provided several catchy and appealing numbers in this return to Broadway. A couple are already getting a play from disk jockeys, but it remains to be seen whether there's anything in this new show with the stature or durable appeal of past top Berlin pops.

Lindsay and Crouse, whose musical books have included "Call Me Madam" and "Anything Goes" and among whose plays have been "Life With Father" and "State of the Union," have done a workmanlike job this time, but only that. It may be that in taking this basic premise of a retiring President, we were fooled by what may have seemed a natural and was in reality a baby-step.

Logan's staging stacks up as competent but somewhat obvious, and Mielziner's scenery and lighting are acceptably handsome and appropriate, as well as commendably tasteful, but lacking his characteristic extra touch of style. It's a parable of Broadway that when the basic elements of a musical are right, everything tends to fall into place. In the case of "Mr. President," things were apparently assembled into place—and it shows.

"Mr. President" is about a fictitious Chief Executive and his family in the last month or so in the White House and the first month or so as private citizens back in the small hometown. There's a suggestion of the aggravating problems and exasperating details of the Presidency, and a sequence about an international goodwill tour, including an unbelievable visit to Moscow. The second act has some concocted events about the ex-President's restlessness out of office and his refusal to make a partisan political compromise in order to obtain a desired Senatorial appointment.

Despite, or possibly because of, the subject matter, the book seems synthetic and curiously humdrum, with little of the adroitness and canny humor characteristic of Lindsay and Crouse. The Berlin songs are generally good, but lack the sock impact commonly associated with one of the great composers of theatrical history.

"Let's Go Back to the Waltz" is acceptably schmaltz, and "In Our Hide-Away" has a nice lilt that should be just the thing for soft-shoe dancing, perhaps as an alternate of the Vincent Youman's oldie, "Tea for Two." Other likely numbers are "The Secret Service," mostly because of its lyrics, and "Don't Be Afraid of Romance," as a ballad, plus a vigorous plot song, "I'm Gonna Get Him," and a rousing rhythm tune, "Glad to Be Home." There's apt to be difference of opinion about the finale, "This Is a Great Country." Ardent patriots will probably be stirred by it, while sophisticates may think it dragged in and chauvenistic.

Under Logan's forthright direction, the cast seems to play everything at face value, accenting the positive, and there is what has come to be a virtual Logan trademark, a hammer-and-tongs sexy dance, in this instance another hellydance a la "Fanny," as distinct from the strip-tease in "All American."

Ryan is personable and relaxed as the title character, though lacking the authority and magnetism of a man who's twice been elected President. He has a good singing voice. Miss Fabray, apparently handicapped opening night by hoarseness, is a vivacious and charming first lady, with beguiling directness. She's an expert performer, as actress, singer and dancer, but neither she nor Ryan has the miraculous gift of being able to take charge of a show, of commanding the stage and the audience.

Anita Gillette, as cute as a button if buttons were actually that cute, is a dazzler as the President's vivacious daughter. She's a talented singer and comedienne, and has the potential of stardom if she can learn to use subtlety and underplaying—in short, change of pace, particularly in comedy.

Jack Haskell is agreeable as a romantic Secret Service man, Jerry Strickler is acceptable as an uninhibited Presidential son, Jack Washburn is passably oily as a foreign diplomat on the make, and Wisa D'Oro is emphatic as the apparently inevitable cooch dancer. Peter Gennaro has staged a couple of dance numbers that add little to the total effect.

Because of its huge advance sale, including scads of theatre party bookings and reportedly totalling about $2,600,000, "Mr. President" should have a respectable run, meanwhile satisfying a sizable public that doesn't insist on top quality song and dance shows. Its topical subject matter may be an asset for stock one of these days, and there may be a picture in the material. But there's no getting away from the conclusion that for such celebrated artists and craftsmen, it's a disappointing show.

Step on a Crack

Roger L. Stevens & Herbert Swope Jr. presentation of drama in three acts (five scenes), by Bernard Eisler. Staged by Herbert Swope Jr.; scenery and lighting, George Kenkins; costumes, Patricia Zipprodt; original music, Bobby Scott; incidental choreography, Buddy Schwab. Features Gary Merrill, Donald Madden, features Margaret Hayes, Maggie McNamara, Pauline Flanagan, William Hickey, Barbara Mattes, Ronnie Harris. Opened Oct. 17, '62, at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre, N. Y.; $4.90 top weeknights, $5.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

You have to hand it to the producers of "Step on a Crack," which opened last Wednesday night (17) at the Ethel Barrymore Theatre—they chose to take their lumps. They must have known the play is terrible, that it didn't have a chance. They could have closed it out of town, or even in rehearsal. But no, they decided to see it through, and brought the production to Broadway.

"Step on a Crack," or as an appalled first-nighter was heard to retitle it, "Fall In a Hole," or he might have added, "Jump In a Lake," is an embarrassingly pretentious hokum melodrama in what the author, Bernard Evslin, must have fancied is poetic prose. It's a maudlin tearjerker about an overimaginative youth with a fixation for a self-pitying mother who's taken to booze because her doctor-husband plays around.

The self-dramatizing lad is portrayed by Donald Madden, who did a somewhat unrestrained Hamlet a couple of seasons ago off-Broadway at the Phoenix Theatre, and is now elaborating on the same performance. He is second-starred with Gary Merrill, who walks through the role of the philandering father—perhaps the sensible way to play it, under the circumstances.

Mother, a former vaudeville performer with a do-it-yourself Irish accent and un unfortunate urge for reminiscence along with her thirst, is acted with lip-quivering earnestness by Pauline Flanagan, who took over when Nancy Kelly withdrew during the tryouts tour, having succeeded Rita Hayworth, who withdrew during rehearsals—and how right they both were!

That leaves Maggie McNamara as the somewhat cryptic menace, the doctor's current assistant and presumably future inamorata; Barbara Mattes as the pert and understandably confused daughter who sees through mama and is perhaps too fond of papa (and should wear leg makeup over bruises when in a bathing suit), and William Hickey as a curious sort of character juvenile like that beatnik pal of Dobie Gillis, the what's-his-name with the goatee.

Herbert Swope Jr., former CBS radio and 20th-Fox producer, partnered with Roger L. Stevens in the presentation, has doubled as director, and he should go stand in the corner on both counts. As for Stephens, he can find solace in his two other current ventures, "Mary, Mary," which is still prospering as it approaches the two-year mark on Broadway, with a regular road company, a bus-and-truck troupe and a London edition imminent, and "A Man for All Seasons," also a durable New York smash.

Hints to First-Nighters

The Showbill, program for off-Broadway productions, was a conversation piece at the opening night of the recent flop, "Angels of Anadarko," at the York Theatre, N. Y. Part of the copy of a display ad had been inked out, and no amount of erasing, scraping or holding-up-to-the-light would reveal the deleted message.

A phone call next day to the embarrassed ad manager of the publication cleared up the mystery, however. The eliminated copy had read, "Things you need when trapped at a dull play:

"1. A loud cough.
"2. A soft seat.
"3. A good grip on yourself.
"4. A nearby tavern that serves John Begg scotch."

The ad was yanked from subsequent editions of the program.

Christopher Fry's first play in several years is a disappointment. He has taken a familiar historical subject and, surprisingly for a writer with such a command of language and gift for brilliant dialog, has developed it in slow and painstaking fashion, thereby denuding it of much of its potential dramatic excitement. It's not a failure by any means, but a letdown when measured against the author's previous work.

To compound the difficulty, the author is hardly helped by the slow, if thoughtful, staging by Stuart Burge. The dramatic potential of many of the scenes is frittered away, notably the vigorous clashes between Henry II and Becket which dominate much of the rather ugly all-purpose set designed by Abd'elkader Farrah.

Fry's canvas is the reign of King Henry from 1158 until his death in 1189. That was the time when the monarch was setting the foundation for Britain's common laws. It was an exciting historical period, yet only a little of this comes through.

That is due in some measure to the author's failure to explain the reason for the king's feud with Queen Eleanor and his own children. These gaps in the plot development hinder appreciation of much of the incident, especially when the sons take up arms against their own father.

Some of the ground covered in "Curtmantle" (Henry II's nickname derived from the plain short cloak he wore) was covered in Jean Anouih's "Becket," but Fry's subject is far wider and carries more historical authenticity. The author himself describes it as a play about a man, and his relationships with his wife, his children, his friends and his enemies. Its greatest failing is that it does not delve adequately into those relationships.

Although there is a big cast, only three roles are of real substance. Derek Godfrey plays the king with authority and captures the mood of the monarch from his time of triumph to his ultimate doom. Alan Dobie's sincere and vigorous interpretation of Becket is consistently impressive.

Maxine Audley makes a delightful showing as the queen. Roger Croucher as young Henry, Paul Dawkins as the Earl of Leicester, Peter McEnery as Philip of France and Roy Dotrice as William Marshall head an able supporting cast.

The production was staged at the recent Edinburgh festival, and is now in the winter repertory season at the Royal Shakespeare group's London home at the Aldwych.

There are few British writers who would have the nerve to contemplate a musical about a British politician, let alone the mayor of a city. Ever since "Fiorello" opened on Broadway just under three years ago, the question has been asked whether West End audiences would accept a show based on the political career of a New York politician.

The London critics appear to have given the answer in fairly categorical terms. On the basis of the reviews it seems a questionable prospect, but, with its low operating costs, the show may conceivably stand up for a moderate run.

The Donald Albery-Oscar Lewenstein presentation of the Jerome Weidman-George Abbott-Jerry Bock-Sheldon Harnick musical has a big, but a comparatively inexpensive, cast. It's estimated to have cost around $40,000 to bring into town, and could break even at about $8,400 weekly.

With that modest nut and with "patience and fortitude" by the management, "Fiorello" might eventually make the grade, although there's not much hope of lush financial returns. The production would have needed a more upbeat critical appraisal to have transformed it into a more profitable investment.

To make the subject matter more acceptable to audiences unfamiliar with American politics, the action is explained in advance by a narrator, seated in a front corner of the stage, and though the advice may be helpful so some, it hurts the pace, and inevitably has a slowing-up effect. That's especially harmful for such an episodic tale, in which speed and vitality should be the essence.

In general terms, this is a

Business was satisfactory for most road shows last week. There were four additions to the touring list, "Caretaker," which played to meagre business in Phoenix; the bus-and-truck company of "Carnival," which fared well in Hartford; "A Program for Two Players," which was strong in Detroit, and the prime time touring company of "A Shot in the Dark," which did okay in Wilmington.

The top-grosser again last week, was the Civic Light Opera Assn. revival of "Kismet" in Los Angeles. Trailing that musical's take with a hefty haul in the final frame of a two-and-a-half-week stand in Dallas was the production of "Carnival" playing major city dates.

"The Hostage," which began touring last Sept. 24, folded Oct. 13 in Cleveland, and "Playboy of the Western World," which opened on the road Oct. 5, is calling it quits next Saturday (27) in Toronto.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also prices on touring shows include 10% Federal tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Where subscription is mentioned the gross is the net after the deduction of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

Richard Rodgers will head a new unit for musical comedy and operetta at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, N. Y. The Broadway composer-lyricist-producer will serve without compensation in the dual capacity of president and producing director of the operation, to be the sixth of the center's constituent organizations.

A non-profit membership corporation is being formed for the enterprise, which will be called the N. Y. Music Theatre. Its permanent home for the presentation of two productions annually from July to September will be the 2,735-seat N. Y. State Theatre. The first of the summer musical programs is scheduled for 1964. The productions, which will include recognized classics and possibly new works, are to be toured following their Manhattan outings.

Any profits earned by the shows will go to the center and will provide financing for future musical comedy and operetta productions. Rodgers, currently represented on Broadway by "Sound of Music" and "No Strings" and on the road by two touring companies of "Music," is in the process of writing a new musical with Alan Jay Lerner for production this season.

The N. Y. State Theatre, originally designated as the Theatre for Dance & Operetta, had been considered a possible home for the City Center. However, the establishment of the N. Y. Music Theatre presumably eliminates the prospect of Lincoln Center taking in the N. Y. City Center Light Opera Co., which revives Broadway musicals. There's still a possibility that the N. Y. City Ballet, which headquarters at the Center, will open the N. Y. State Theatre.

The b. o. scale for the musical comedy and operetta series at the Lincoln Center hasn't been set, but the admission tab is to be less than charged for Broadway tuners. The N. Y. State Theatre is being financed largely by $15,000,000 made available by the State as part of its participation in the 1964-65 N. Y. World's Fair. The city will provide another $4,383,000 to cover certain special features of construction and land costs.

The constituent units at Lincoln Center, besides the Music Theatre, are the Metropolitan Opera Assn., the Philharmonic-Symphony Society of N. Y., the Lincoln Repertory Co., the Juilliard School of Music, and the N. Y. Public Library, which will operate the Library-Museum of the Performing Arts. The Music Theatre is the second constituent to be created by Lincoln Center, the first being the Lincoln Repertory Co.

Broadway continued lively last week, with a number of shows again registering substantial increases. Holding at capacity were "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off" and "No Strings."

There was one closing last week, "Step on a Crack," which called it quits after one performance. This week's rash of five preems will increase the current show list to 23. "Fun Couple," which was to have opened last Monday night (22) at the Lyceum Theatre, postponed its debut to next Friday night (26).

Met's Third Night 'Aida' Shimmers With Fine Cast; Rita Gorr's Wow Debut

Opening night a slow-to-weary "Andrea Chenier"; then for seconds a routine "Butterfly" with an incompletely envigorated, recently-sick soprano; finally, on the third night of repertory the Metropolitan Opera came smashing home with a stunning performance of the most-produced-opera-in-the-archives, "Aida." These are the great nights for which the buffs yearn.

The occasion was exciting partly because Leontyne Price sang the title role superbly and partly because of a newcomer to the roster, Belgian mezz Rita Gorr, whose professionalism, experience and splendid stage presence triumphed over occasional uncertainties, miscues and stridencies. When she came to Amneris' classic lament in the first part of Act IV, it was one long roar for Gorr, further delaying the performance which did not finish, resultantly, until nearly midnight.

The shimmer of the Negro artist, the contrasting brilliance of the lady from the Paris Opera was matched by the males. Carlo Bergonzi was the typically Italianate version of the military hero, somewhat light of voice but accurate and sweet most of the way and at least as good an actor as the average opera tenor. Anselmo Colzani was powerful in voice and phrase as the Ethiopian captive king, flawed only by his, or somebody's laziness in not making up his bare arms the same color as his face. Louis Sgarro's Pharoh and Bonaldo Giaiotti's High Priest were in keeping with the prevailing excellence—the sort of cast which the Met uniquely can muster.

The Met, having suffered from satirical commentary last season, had obviously given the ballet a good talking to and a lot more rehearsing with commendable improvement in theatrical effectiveness, notably in the Triumphal Return scene, choreographed by Matt lyn Gavers and led by Lolita San Miguel, Thomas Andrew and Hubert Farrington. Land.

Inside Stuff—Legit

N.Y. Daily News' Inquiring Fotographer last week queried six showman, "If high ticket prices are keeping young people from seeing good Broadway shows, should concessions be made to them?" In order named, Huntington Hartford replied, "Not for top productions, because production cost is stupendous. There are some good Broadway shows reasonably priced and not sold out. As for the top hits, it might be possible for them to take turns and stage a Sunday show at reduced prices for young people."

John Shubert: "Yes. Some concessions are already made. Seats are sold to high schools through the Board of Education at a low rate. The two-for-one exchange tickets are available to youngsters. Hit shows at the end of their runs issue them. No youngster missed 'My Fair Lady' because of the price."

Richard Rodgers opined, "No. High prices are keeping young people, as well as their parents, from buying many things today. How can you make concessions when costs are at an all-time high? The supermarkets don't. It's true that tickets cost twice as much. So does everything else. Subway fare is triple."

Jean Dalrymple: "No. Actually, the most expensive seats at the City Center sell first at $4.35. The $1.95 seats are always the last to go. The same is true on Broadway. The least expensive seats in the second balcony for most shows are always available."

Dick Maney: "No. Young people are status seekers. The last tickets to go are always in the second balcony, even with hit shows. Production costs have outstripped the rise in prices. 'Oklahoma,' with a top price of $4.80, cost $83,000. 'Camelot' charges $9.60, but it cost $680,000."

Arthur Miller concluded the Q. & A.: "Definitely. Young people are the future of the theatre and they should not be left out in the cold. This is recognized. I think we'll see one day week set aside for high school and college students to attend for $1. It's practical."

Nanette Fabray, costar of "Mr. President," which opened last Saturday night (20) at the St. James, N.Y., has corrected a story in last week's issue, under Washington dateline, about her impaired hearing. Although she is deaf in the "conversational area" and wears a hearing aid, the actress-singer says that she can hear an orchestra perfectly to sing and dance. "I can hear all the notes," she adds.

The story involved Miss Fabray's appearance at Galludet College, Washington, during the "Mr. President" tryout engagement in the Capital, to give an inspiration talk to students at the institution for the deaf.

Fiorello!

replica of the original New York production, with one major difference. The cast of the West End version is second league. There's no single name of marquee value, and the title "Fiorello" is not going to mean a great deal to the average London ducat buyer, who in all probability may recognize the name of the U.S. president, but would hardly be familiar with the Christian name of a one-time, though famous, mayor of New York.

Without the more obvious lures, the production has to rely on its reputation as a top Broadway import, and in this case there's a distinct feeling of letdown. "Fiorello" has several lively passages, a couple of standout songs and one or two hit production numbers, but overall it's developed as a conventional story of an American political hero, and this commentary of Tammany Hall graft and corruption won't make much impression on London theatregoers.

Derek Smith, as La Guardia, gives a lively and ebullient portrayal, but at times he looks more like a young Mussolini than the famous mayor of New York. He gives the impression of being over-enthusiastic and over-energetic, thereby robbing the character of any subtlety intended by the authors.

Nicolette Roeg and Marion Grimaldi are pleasant as the two women in his life, but there's little emotion from either in response to his powerhouse personality. Bridget Armstrong, on the other hand, makes a captivating showing as the dizzy blonde girl striker subsequently involved in the Manhattan political intrigue.

From the distaff side, the most appealing contribution is made by Pat Michael, who walks away with her one scene with the "Yoo-Hoo Yah-Hoo" girls, and with her sole number, "Gentleman Jimmy." Bryan Blackburn and Peter Reeves, teamed together locally as a cabaret act, extract fun from their respective parts as precinct political leaders, and have the good fortune to be represented in the show's two hit tunes, "Little Tin Box," and "Politics and Poker."

David Lander, as La Guardia's right hand in the law office, and Simon Oates, as the innocent cop who moves up in the political hierarchy via sewers and garbage, make a pleasant showing in undemanding roles. For the rest, the big cast rally around and respond to Val May's straightforward, though not inspired, direction.

There's an economical look to the decor, and one basic set is adroitly adapted for the varying scenes. It works well enough, but robs the production of the color and pace which are usually expected from Broadway importations. The costumes suitably match the period, Ian Albery has done a professional lighting job, and Eric Rogers and Bert Rhodes handle the orchestrations admirably.

There's not much chance of "Fiorello" repeating its Broadway success, but the Albery and Lewenstein might just get by. Myro.

La Venus de Milo

Paris, Oct. 6.

Marie Bell presentation two-act (five scenes) comedy by Jacques Deval. Staged by Pierre Mondy; setting, Roger Pellerl. Opened Oct. 1, '62, at the Theatre Gymnase, Paris; $3.50 top.

Laurence	Nicole Courcel
Alix	Madeleine Lambert
Couronne	Luce Fabiole
Monique	Regine Lovi
Valax	Bernard Lavalette
Aubin	Jacques Marin
General	Maxime Fabert
Paul	Claude Pieplu
Milo	Jean Juillard

Jacques Deval contributes an old fashioned, well-made play in "La Venus de Milo." It's about a good-natured prostitute who hides out in the home of a rich old lady to avoid being sold to a foreign syndicate. The humor stems from the contrast of her job as a maid and her former status. It is glib piece, probably too pat for more than local acceptance.

The girl loves her new work and becomes fond of the old lady. But she's not sure of her duties and becomes involved with four men who come to the house for weekly card games. When her ex-procurer discovers her whereabouts the men pay him off to keep her. The old lady thinks they are doing this as a good deed, and gives a big sum, too. So the girl is set to stay on and everybody's happy.

Nicole Courcel has the proper sentimental bite and the rest of the cast are okay in stereotyped roles.

Thomas Wolfe's "Welcome To Our City," as presented by the Zurich Schauspielhaus, is almost a world premiere. Its only public performance so far took place in 1923 at George Pierce Baker's "47 Workshop," then of Harvard. The author's hope to see it performed on Broadway never materialized.

Several factors presumably caused this cold-shoulder attitude towards a dramatic work by one of America's literary giants: (1) a ticklish subject; (2) a cast of over 30 speaking roles; (3) a physically complicated production; and, last not least, (4) Wolfe's familiar insistence on almost photograph-like details which sometimes endangers the main story thread, a style which can get by in the fat novel but may be disastrous in the Skeletol theatre.

These handicaps notwithstanding, to see this play almost four decades after it was written, sharply points up the timeliness of the subject and the validity of Wolfe's ideas and convictions. For today, as in the 1920s, man is drunk with "progress" and materialistic values, and the race problem is just as topical, as witnessed by the recent Oxford, Miss., events. The poetic beauty of the language almost makes up for the uncertain dramatic continuity. Characterizations, although occasionally bordering on caricature, are compassionate.

Locale is Altamont, N.C., a fictitious boom town, easily identifiable with Wolfe's hometown, Asheville, N.C. Speculation, expansion, progress, industrialization and—in the author's own words—"greed, greed and more greed" pervade. The only holdout is the Negro quarter and, especially, a stately mansion overlooking the town, now belonging to an upstart Negro doctor, but once the property of the town's oldest white family now fighting to get it back. The clash between the heads of these two families leads to disaster, with the doctor killed during a brief Negro revolt. Other central characters include hypocritical politicians, opportunists, businessmen, feather-brained ladies, Negro agitators, bootlickers and—possibly a projection of the author—a fatally ill writer.

Schauspielhaus production, based on Susanna Rademacher's excellent German adaptation, is a director's triumph. Leopold Lindtberg's staging is bursting with vitality, with a sure flair for atmosphere and characterization down to the last bit part and a firm hand in keeping the often scattered proceedings from falling apart. Teo Otto's brilliantly evocative sets, with the frequent use of slides and projections in the Brecht manner, as well as Anne Abegglen's costumes are important assets.

Performances are of high calibre throughout. Of the many memorable portrayals by the large cast, those by Mathias Wieman and Wolfgang Reichmann as the rivals, Kurt Heintel and Kurt Beck as a couple of permanently smiling, ruthless businessmen, Peter Arens as the doomed poet and Peter Ehrlich as a hypocritical governor deserve special plaudits. Mezo.

Jeremias

Berlin, Oct. 4.

Berlin Festival presentation of Walter Wicclair production, of verse drama by Stefan Zweig. Staged by Wicclair; music, Hugh Mullins; settings, Warner Schwenke; choreography, Carola Krauskopf; costumes, Mechthild Senghov. Opened Sept. 27, '62, at the Theatre am Kreuzberg, Berlin; $2 top.

Speaker	Erhart Stettner
Jeremias	Karl Fr. Spanner
His Mother	Edith Hildebrandt
Baruch	Alfred Wittstock
Sebulon	Henry Georgy
Achab	Hellmut Karli
Jochebed	Iv. Marker
King Zedekia	Juergen v. Alten

Walter Wicclair, a Berlin-born American director, staged and produced Stefan Zweig's "Jeremias" for the 1962 Berlin Festwochen (Arts Fair) and therewith saw a cherished wish come true. Forced to leave his native town in 1933, he had been working on this project for several years. He was one of the late author's closest friends and thought that Berlin would be the natural place for this production.

The stage version of the poetic "Jeremias" may be regarded as one of the Berlin Festival's most unusual presentations. Although the importance of the offering is undisputed, its formal outcome has not been crowned by success.

Zweig was a master of the German language and wrote distinguished novels and biographies, but he was no dramatist. In this instance good book drama has not furnished the basis for an impressive stage drama.

It is not a question of content. The drama is about how the old prophet Jeremias who warns his people of war. But they want war, and despise and scoff at Jeremias.

The parallels are inescapable today, 20 centuries later. Zweig's "Jeremias" was published in 1917, so the author obviously foresaw the gruesome events to come.

Wicclair's sincerity is evident, but the dramatization doesn't sustain interest, especially as the style of language sounds overly declamatory in the mouth of modern actors. Hans.

Scherman's New Concert Opera Assn.: 'Gourmet Music' With Fancy Staging

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

The growing public for "gourmet music" has elicited a managerial response in recent years, or vice versa. In any event a pioneer in digging 'em up and dusting 'em off, Thomas Scherman, has now expanded his concepts. The first of the new Concert Opera Assn. "special experience packages" was heard Oct. 22 by a near-capacity subscription-and-single sale audience at Philharmonic Hall. It was larger in scope and more chic in implication than Scherman's still-continuing Little Orchestra, also under the management of Herbert Barrett.

In this inaugural the extremely slow-tempo works themselves were less arresting than the manner of their presentation in a darkened auditorium which put emphasis, for once, not upon Philharmonic's acoustics but its lighting. The concert was lighted by Donald Oenslager, a contemporary name in legitimate. On the whole this was mood-creating and successful, though the reading lamps for the musicians were on the blinding side for viewers who had spent the day slaving over a hot typewriter.

A performance given in almost total auditorium blackout, something new at the new hall, drew attention to a curious omission in so modern a structure: there are no row-letter lights. Nor are the ushers equipped with flashlights. Hence latecomers simply could not find their seats and in some instances settled for empty locations elsewhere.

It does seem a stunner that Philharmonic Hall's designers have forgotten the aisle illumination factor, one of the most annoying things to show-goers. It may only prove again the point that architects are never consumers, apropos the truism that none ever has lived in an apartment, or attended a theatre in ordinary guise.

Incidentally, it's almost impossible to decipher the names of the "donors" of certain orchestra chairs at Philharmonic Hall. The printing is faint and the angle difficult.)

Monteverdi's 17th Century "Il Ballo delle Ingrate" and modern Stravinsky's "Persephone" are not-quite-operas and hence not quite concert operas. But they qualify as the sort of offbeat musical experiences in which chaps like Scherman, A. S. Oxenburg and Newell Jenkins have specialized. Plainly, much thought and preparation had been invested to give this event that "semi-production" which is of the essence of concert platform novelty.

Edwin Levy was brought east from Denver for the staging. There are definite limits, given the convention of evening dress and the absence of props (though the American Opera Society uses them on occasion) and it was theatrically clever of Levy to give James Wainner, Jennie Tourel and Ara Berberian such stylized (and stylish) gestures, slow motion crosses, stagy deferences, and so on. Everything had been meticulously rehearsed, including the bows.

The staging was the more noticeable, perhaps, in "Persephone" where the title role is a narrator, not a singer. Here Vera Zorina's experienced stage presence enabled her to give a fine French reading of the Andre Gide text while floating hither and yon, sometimes freezing on a stool, left or right, for long periods. It hardly needs suggesting that if not artfully timed and smoothly patterned all this bodily movement in the narrator could succumb to artsy-craftsy in one big hurry. It is an enormous compliment to say that dignity was unmarred by any invitation to giggle. Richard Robinson sang the one solo role very well. He was, as was Wainner in the first half, a belated substitution for an ailing Canadian.

Scherman, making his own maiden appearance at Philharmonic, had faced not only illness, but death. His longtime cellist and contractor died last Friday and in his honor Scherman added a short Mozart memorial piece.

During the inaugural week, the Met Opera itself presented a concert opera, "Atlantida," but "Persephone" was notable for its touch of dance. 10 long-skirted girls imaginatively choreographed by Matlyn Gavers of the Met Opera.

"Gourmet music" remains the necessary labelling for the Opera Concert Assn. This kind of diversion would bore the average entertainment-seeker. It's for the buffs. But lovingly and well executed.

Vocally the verdict is fine for all the soloists. Having emphasized the lighting, it is necessary for the record to say that the acoustics were suffering, in the final half, from acute gastritis. In fact it was near to scandal to have the mechanics intrude so frequently.

Russian Reaction to N.Y. Ballet

Translation below of a Moscow review of the N. Y. City Ballet was written by Anna Ilupina, ballet critic of the Novosti Press Agency. Copy was forwarded to VARIETY in New York by Press Attache of the Soviet Embassy in Washington. It is published verbatim for its general interest. There has been great curiosity among Manhattan balletomanes as to the reception by the Russians of the avant-garde choreography of this troupe. The N. Y. Times sent its critic-emeritus, John Martin, to the Russian capital to cover the opening. Separately, an Associated Press report was filed. VARIETY*'s own correspondent in Moscow has so far filed only the brief general item, printed in an accompanying column. Herewith the report of Anna Ilupina:*

"The premiere performances of the New York City Ballet at the Bolshoi Theatre on Oct. 9, and at the Kremlin Palace of Congresses on Oct. 10, were festive highlights of the current concert season in Moscow.

"Soviet balletomanes received the first ballet, 'Serenade,' to Tchaikovsky music, with great warmth. The Russian School of Classical Dance, upon which Balanchine's ballet is based, he received his training at the Ballet School in Petrograd) is the very core of 'Serenade.' True, the technique of the American dancers differs from that of ours. It is more energetic, dashing, and, at the same time, uneven. The Soviet audiences appreciated the fact that in his 'Serenade' Balanchine followed his great predecessor Mikhail Fokine, renowned for his immortal 'Sylphides,' rollickingly funny 'Bluebeard' and heroic 'Russian Soldier.'

"The independent, mature and sweeping qualities of Balanchine's talent is especially manifest in the classical pieces in which he is true to Fokine's principles. Poetic groupings and compositions of 'Serenade,' its ensembles, duets and small solo variations, and the dynamic and pliant supports, all point to the high gifts of the ballet master, the wealth of his choreographic imagination and professional ingenuity.

"Moscow's newspapers have called the technique of Balanchine's ballet company brilliant. We agree with that. It is especially good in 'The Games' because Jerome Robbins based his charming small ballet on the peculiarities of the American manner of dancing. It bubbles with buoyancy, optimism and humor. His dance vocabulary is clear in spite of its complexities. Besides, the high pleasure derived by the artists when performing their 'acrobatics' is immediately communicated to the audience.

"Compared with the cleverly staged and spiritually refined 'Serenade' and the expressive 'Games' so close to us in mood, 'Agon' and 'Symphony of the Far West' indubitably lost out. For an explanation of this I cite People's Artist of the USSR Raisa Struchkova, a prima-ballerina of the Bolshoi Theatre, who told me after the premiere: 'I watched a rehearsal of 'Agon' three years ago while I was in the United States. Even then I could not help noting George Balanchine's remarkable ingenuity. His choreographic imagination is overwhelming. His combinations of movements are always interesting and frequently sudden. But then, as today, after seeing the premiere of 'Agon' the ballet left a chilling feeling in me, as though the original and often beautiful pas were done not by people for people, for their joy, but by frozen creatures.'

"But while 'Agon' impressed the Soviet audiences less than 'The Games' because of their studied intricacy, the 'Symphony of the Far West' appeared somewhat oversimplified. Nonetheless the Symphony, concluding the first program of the New York City Ballet, was given a big hand by the audiences who are looking forward to seeing many more interesting dances in following programs."

Much Yankee Culture In USSR's Women's Summer

By GEORGE KATZNELSON

Moscow, Oct. 23.

Moscow has U. S. culture aplenty these days of fine Indian summer known in Russia as "Women's summer." Robert Frost, Igor Stravinsky, Lincoln Kerstein-George Balanchine's New York City Ballet and Robert Shaw's Chorale are the recent arrivals. With Stravinsky gone after a homecoming tour during which a lot of his music was heard not only in concert halls and conservatories where he, personally, conducted several of his own works but on radio and tv as well, the ballet and choir are still playing.

Russo composer Aram Khachaturyan, writing in government mag Izvestia, praises the U. S. ballet troupe, the second to visit Moscow in the past couple of years, for "its immaculate classical technique, brilliant mastery and George Balanchine's creative imagination and originality." However, he finds fault with it for too motley a program. Cowboys and girls in "Western Symphony" he considered a bit surprising. The no-star system, in composer's view was "worthwhile."

Olga Lepeshinskaya, writing in Pravada, expressed her admiration of the U. S. company and, though she did not like all of the numbers, concluded by saying that "the two of us have much to learn from each other."

Pete Martin & SEP

Pete Martin's nix on moving from Philadelphia to New York when the Satevepost editoral staff switched base is blamed by the longtime "as-told-to" ghoster for his severance from that Curtis flagship. The mag's recent three-parter on Rosalind Russell is his swansong, but without billing; but after 30 years with the Post, Martin states he's doing "better financially on my own than I ever did while I was a member of the Post staff."

The piece on Miss Russell, originally intended to run four episodes, was later cut to three, much of it representing an unusual rewrite by his former boss, Ben Hibbs. These decisions are allusively pinned on present Post topper Robert Sherrod, who instituted a "rewrite department" through which, says Martin, all Post fiction now filters. Also trimmed from the Russell yarn was an editor's note repriseing Martin's extensive background as a celeb interviewer, and containing his reasons for "Roz's durability and remaining a star long after most of her contemporaries had departed."

Martin indicates the star and her husband, Freddie Brisson, were dismayed by the rewrite, and in turn "rewrote . . . . for several days while my secretary kept up with them by day and working nights with an electric typewriter." After all the refinements, the series is still "more than 50% the way I had collaborated on Roz's thoughts and sentences."

Decision to delete Martin's signature was a last-moment one, but unspecified by Martin as to origin. He states he had "proudly" looked forward to the three-parter "as being a Post curtain call I could be proud of. After all, I had never failed to beat my brains out for over 30 years to make a deadline whenever the editor asked me to, and some of the newsstand figures I had something to do with were no less than phenomenal. I leave it to you whether my name would have been left on the series if I had followed the Post editorial staff to New York or not."

'Kup's (Breezy) Chicago'

"Kup's Chicago" (World; $4.95) is a highly anecdotal, prosy ode to the Windy City by the town's most qualified Boswell, its foremost apologist and No. 1 resident celebrity. Irv Kupcinet, whose daily column in the Sun-Times is a miniature newspaper within a newspaper, has based his book largely on his ubiquitousness as a gleaner of items, interceptor of celebrity traffic, moderator of a hot tv conversation show, football expert on radio, toastmaster, emcee, fund-raiser, and benefit-organizer. If there is no revelation of the inner Kup in the dizzying account of his schedule, it's undoubtedly because he spends so much of his life outside himself.

There are, in fact, few revelations in the book, but then it's not intended to expose anything and this doesn't make it any the less readable. Lively and informal, it devotes itself largely to people in the celebrity fields, dropping names thick and fast—some 2,000 of them, going by the index. Kup has few unkind words for any of them and many an amusing or perceptive personal note. Places too, especially those along a professional nightlifer's beat, come in for a mention, giving the opus a certain guidebook value.

Like most Chicagoans, Kup betrays the second city inferiority complex in making a case for the town's greatness, past and present. It's a matter of protesting too much, of too heavy reliance on noting the prominent persons who came from Chi, or got their start there, but that's "Chicago style" these days and fittin' for the book. It just wouldn't be honest to take the Windy City's greatness for granted and proceed from there.

Hearst Snares John Denson

Within seven days of his resignation from the N.Y. Herald-Tribune, it became clear that John Denson had found a home at Hearst. That chain snapped him up, even before its management had clearly decided how to use him.

One thing seemed sure, according to reliable sources within Hearst, and that was that Denson was considered too valuable to leave on the loose. Another thing that seemed fairly certain was that wherever he went for Hearst it would be with either the title of managing editor or executive editor, which would undoubtedly make him top dog for the chain in whatever locale chosen.

After Denson was inked, it was revealed that Hearst toppers favored one of three chain papers. Chances were that Denson (who quit the Trib after a budget feud with its president, Walter Thayer) would end up with Hearst in L.A. or San Francisco, but Hearst did not—and still has not—ruled out the possibility of giving him a permanent spot at the N.Y. Journal-American.

Seems that for the first two weeks or so—and it'll probably be that long before a clearcut decision is made—Denson will shakedown at the Journal in N.Y.

Karsh's Photomemoirs

"In Search of Greatness" by Yousuf Karsh (Knopf; $5.95) is the autobiography of one of the world's top photographers, an Armenian immigrant who came to fame in Ottawa by way of Quebec and Boston, where he studied with John Garo.

Since 1932, Karsh has had his own studio in Canada's capital. With his wife, he has traveled the world, making distinctive portraits of outstanding contemporaries.

Karsh's most famous single study is doubtless his portrait of Winston Churchill. Show biz readers will enjoy his recollections of photographing Shaw, Sibelius, Casals and Hemingway. In 1946, Life magazine commissioned Karsh to do a Hollywood series. His adventures included meeting the 14-year-old Elizabeth Taylor. Karsh found Greer Garson one of the most alluring actresses of the era; and he describes his attempt to photograph Alfred Hitchcock as "hazardous." Tome is handsomely illustrated from author's portfolio.

With reflections of Einstein and Schweitzer, book moves into areas of greater importance. An interesting, if not a major work. Rodo.

Hypochondriac's Gag Book

Herbert Klauber, an account director at North Advertising in Chicago, has authored and illustrated a 64-page leaflet titled "Hypochondriac's Kook Book" (Metro; $2.95) which is in the leatherette-bound "Coloring Book" trend. A hobbyist sculptor, Klauber has made cartoon drawings of oddball abstract sculpture pieces and tagged them with comic captions on the hypochondria theme, many of them based on familiar advertising slogans.

It's fairly humorous but limited as a gift item to the hypochondriac who has everything. Les.

4th Estater-Politicos

M. Grattan O'Leary, president of the Ottawa Journal and more than half a century in the newspaper business, starting as reporter, named to The Senate in Canada. O'Leary has always been an active supporter of the in-power Progressive Conservative party and won national acclaim for his editorial writing in The Journal, Ottawa daily.

Also appointed to The Senate was Allister Grosart, former Toronto advertising executive (v.p. of McKim Adv. Ltd.), who was given most of the credit for Prime Minister Diefenbaker's landslide election in 1957, and Edgar Fournier, Halifax politician w.k. on television via his airers in support of traffic safety.

Schneider's Memphis Post

Charles Schneider, erstwhile amusement editor of the Scripps-Howard Cleveland Press, was named editor-in-chief of the p.m. daily Memphis Press-Scimitar by exec editor and general manager Jack Howard of S-H. Schneider supplants Edward Meeman who had edited the P-S for more than three decades. He will remain as editor emeritus and consultant. Schneider, who hails from nearby Miller, Miss., was also onetime promotion chief of Scripps-Howard and prior to moving in the Memphis slot was editor of the San Francisco News.

Peace Corps' Inroads

President Jack Kennedy's Peace Corps has made deep inroads into staff of Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

First Douglas Kiker, Journal's Washington correspondent, was plucked off to head up Corps' Office of Public Information. Next to be tapped was Norman Shavin, Journal-Constitution Sunday editor and Journal's former radio-television editor. Shavin will be Peace Corps' radio-tv director.

Shavin came to Journal as radio-television editor in 1956 and was upped to Sunday ed in 1960. He also originated and was coeditor, with Mike Edwards, of The Atlanta Century, a weekly recreation of events of 100 years ago, which appears in the Sunday-Journal-Constitution.

Durwood McAlister, Journal news editor, has been moved into slot vacated by Shavin. Since coming to Journal in 1954 he has been book editor, assistant Sunday ed, and director of Women's News department.

Teenage Bestsellers

Prentice-Hall's editor-in-chief Stuart L. Daniels is heartened by the 25,000 advance orders on Connie Francis' book, "For Every Young Heart (Connie Francis Talks to Teenagers)" and has upped the initial print order to 50,000, which is unusually high for a first edition. Pat Boone's "Betwixt 12 and 20" was a similar runaway bestseller (500,000 copies), also via P-H, and he is now authoring "The Young Defenders (Americanism vs. Communism)", also aimed at the same young audiences, which Daniels will bring out next spring or summer.

Also from tv will be Tennessee Ernie Ford's "Favorite Hymns" under the Prentice-Hall imprint.

P-H teed off the ballyhoo for Miss Francis with a posh "literati" cocktailery (including deejays, music biz invitees along with the book set) at the Hotel Americana in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.).

Don Dinwiddie Moves Up

Joseph R. Buell Jr., publisher of Popular Mechanics, appointed Don Dinwiddie editor of the magazine, which recently relocated in New York from Chicago. Dinwiddie, formerly managing editor, succeeds Clifford B. Hicks who chose to remain in Chicago as midwest editor.

The new editor announced a series of promotions and additions to the staff. Richard F. Dempewolff, eastern editor, has been named executive editor. John A. Linkletter, former assistant managing editor, becomes m.e., and Wayne C. Leckey moves from shops & crafts editor to asst. m.e. Kevin V. Brown, assistant editor and aviation editor, becomes associate editor and Arthur M. Mikesell, former assistant editor (crafts) to associate editor in same department.

Jack House's M.P. Pitch

Jack House, w.k. literateur, broadcaster and longtime drama critic of evening sheets in Glasgow, Scotland, is named as prospective Liberal Party parliamentary candidate for the Woodside division of Glasgow. House, 56, lives in the Woodside area, and was an apprentice chartered accountant before turning to journalism. He is a feature staffer on the Glasgow Evening Time, and has also worked as feature writer on the Glasgow Evening Citizen and the now-defunct Glasgow Evening News.

House regularly writes drama criticisms of new plays and revues in Scotland, and is a regular broadcaster on the Scottish Home Service of the BBC as well as one of the two Auld Land Syne representatives on the BBC's networked radio series "Round Britain Quiz."

Golden & Buchwald

Two of the brightest and wittiest books are the newest Art Buchwald and Harry Golden anthologies. Collections of their columnar writings, both have organized them well. Both are not dissimilar in their folkloric observations albeit Buchwald's "Is It Safe To Drink The Water?" (World; $3.95) might be called more "sophisticated," treating as it does with globetrotters, gadabouts, celebs and just plain tourist moujiks.

Golden's "You're Entitle'" (also under the World imprint, but a nickle more in price, i.e. a straight $4) is in the idiom of his previous smash seller, "Only In America," closeups on Jewish-Americana.

Both have an honest approach and where Buchwald's Champs-Elysees gloss might be considered having more "general" appeal, the impact of Golden's previous best-sellers attest to the sales economics in booksellers circles. Both are bright, light and worthwhile.

Targ's Twain

World Pub's ed-in-chief Bill Targ has Jackson Donahue's novel, "The Confessor," for next spring (Mirisch already bought the screen rights) and Peter S. Feibleman's third novel, "Strangers and Graves," also for early '63. Latter's soon-due play, "A Place Without Twilight," will be directed by Joshua Logan.

Donahue, a Texan now resident in Hollywood, is a Heywood Broun Journalism Award winner and formerly m.e. of the Houston Post and L.A. Mirror. John Frankenheimer will direct the film version of the novel.

Another Coloring Book

Coloring books continue to multiply, a strange combination of childish entertainment with adult malice. Latest published by Dean-Davis Co. is "The Dis-United Nations." Actually it is not too barbed.

Gags by Danny Davis, who writes material for comics, to drawings of K. Sagittarius.

Chekhov's Encore

"Michael Chekhov's to the Director and Playwright, compiled and written by Charles Leonard, which Harper will publish next February, is a sequel to the Russian theatre impresario's "To The Actor" published 10 years ago. Chekhov is the famed associate of Stanislavsky.

Harper will also publish J. B. Priestley's reminiscenses and reflections as an author under the title, "Margin Released"; James Thurber's "Credos and Curios" with foreword by Helen Thurber; and "I Was Cicero," by Elysea Bazna (who claims he was the infamous World War II spy for the Nazis), latter book written in collaboration with Hans Nogly.

CHATTER

Doubleday recalled Tom Wise's book, "The Insiders (A Stockholder's Guide to Wall Street)," because of a possible offense to an individual, and is reissuing it with a substituted page. Wise and the editors of Fortune are the by-liners; Wise also conducts a financial telecast over WNBC-TV, N.Y.

Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, has been awarded the second annul "Outstanding Son of Maine Award" by the Maine branch of the New England Council. Canham, a native of Auburn, and a 1925 graduate of Bates College in Lewiston, Me., has been with the Monitor since graduating from college. In 1942 he was named managing editor and three years later became editor.

Jane Ardmore at work on a novel, "To Love Is To Listen."

Kay Campbell sold series on freighter travel to Suburbia, Today.

Macmillan editor Paula Grace Rivkin married to Ivan Melvin Glickman in N.Y.

Allen Churchill's "The Great White Way" (A Re-Creation of the Golden Era of American Entertainment)" covers the Broadway scene from 1900-1919, capped by the Equity strike. Dutton is publishing.

Marilyn Gold, asst. pub-ad director for Popular Science Pub. Co., engaged to Robert Laurie, director of the Motor Sports Book Club.

Kid-Cents

and Continental is now offering two, consists of eight features, each of which runs just about one hour, plus a serial of eight chapters running from 16 to 18 minutes each. In both the features and the serials, children are the protagonists and the stories are told insofar as possible in visual terms.

6-12 Age Bracket

In Britain the pix were designed for kids from six to 12 years of age, though Sherman feels that American kids may be just a shade more sophisticated and thinks the cut off probably should be about 10 years of age. The fact that the young actors—most of whom are non-pros—speak with English accents bothers only American adults, Sherman says, since experience so far this side shows that kids so identify themselves with the screen players and with the visual action, they hardly stop to think about the voices.

At the moment, Sherman is concentrating his selling campaign on the east coast, because of print limitation, but already has 22 theatres lined up. He admits that a couple of test dates were "not so good," and one particularly, in Brooklyn, was an absolute flop. In that case, the kiddie show was set for an early Saturday morning hour in a lower class neighborhood, and it turned out that the kiddies just hadn't gotten out of bed yet.

Get Out of Lobby!

To insure success of the series, said Sherman, the exhib has got to put on an intensive preselling campaign, backed by the cooperation of local civic groups. In Newton, Mass., he reported, the Paramount Theatre persuaded the Newton Parent-Teachers Council to underwrite the series, so that nearly 10,000 tickets for the eight special showings were sold in advance, with actual ticket sales amounting to about $20,000.

Continental is selling the series at $50 a performance or $400 for each series of eight programs. That's somewhat more than the usual $15 to $20 rental exhibs might pay for an old Abbott & Costello feature (probably already seen by the kids on tv), but Sherman feels it's commensurate with the quality and "uniqueness" offered. It also spurs the exhib to get out and work for the success of the venture.

Whenever possible, Reade and Sherman preview their pix for exhibs with a large kiddie audience. "Adults alone just don't know what they're seeing and are inclined to say the dialog is corny and the plots are obvious," according to Sherman, who adds with some impatience: "They (the adults) seem to expect psychiatric studies."

If Reade can make the series pay off here, he has promised the British producers to initiate production of a similar series of films this side, thus to set up an exchange program in kiddie material.

Youngstein's Tag

shell. This company, listed on the American Exchange, came into existence as successor to the old Matty Fox-influenced C. and C. Corp. Latter, in turn, was a soft drink company which was among the first to engage in acquiring theatrical pictures from a major company (in this case RKO) and peddling them to tv. It seemed at the time like a "corporate non-sequitur."

Anyway, Youngstein is to be president of Entertainment Industries and the board chairman is to be Basis Estreich, incumbent president of Television Industries.

Formal announcements anent Pickman and Simonelli are soon to be forthcoming.

Taking a prominent role on the financial end, reportedly, is David Baird, a Wall Streeter who has for long been identified with film and theatre companies. Baird, key figure in Stanley-Warner's acquisition of International Latex, among other things, is arranging for new financing for the Youngstein company, William Zeckendorf, head of Webb & Knapp, realtors, will participate as a board member.

Simonelli will exit U middle or latter part of November.

that the Needle will become a landmark and continuing tourist lure similar to the Eiffel Tower in Paris.

Biggest single show grosser on the grounds was Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circus, grabbing big $160,000 in a six-day, 12-performance stand in August. Biggest financial success for the Fair's performing arts division was the N.Y. City Ballet, which took $145,000 in two-week stand in the Opera House, July 24-Aug. 4.

Another success for performing arts was the Old Vic Theatre, which hit tremendous $76,800 in one-week stand, May 29-June 3. When accounting is done on performing arts program there may be some interesting facts and figures available.

Culture, as such, didn't draw, although the fine arts exhibit did right well, attracting millions of fairgoers. Surprisingly, as has been noted previously, flesh shows didn't do the biz expected, but perhaps this was partly due to the calibre of the peel presentations.

Good ones, like Gracie Hansen's "Paradise International," with a slick Barry Ashton show, did well and "Les Poupees de Paris," the Krofft's Moulin Rouge-flavored puppet show, was just about the outstanding hit of the fair. There were no names or reputations made, however, similar to Little Egypt, Chicago 1893, or Sally Rand, Chi, 1934.

Only 1 Name Created

Right now, it seems the only show biz name created at the fair was that of Gracie Hansen, former producer of PTA shows in Morton, Wash., (pop. 600). But Miss Hansen got there by fronting the "Paradise International" operation in great fashion, by being a trouper and having a good pressagent (Guy Williams). She may open a nightclub in downtown Seattle; may also manage a Million Dollar Saloon at the New York World's Fair, 1964-65, but her plans aren't definite as yet.

Ironically, biz on Show Street, slow or spotty through most of the Fair's run, boomed into life the last few weeks of the run. "Dancing Waters," which took over space operated by the illfated "Girls of the Galaxy," hit a street record Sunday (15) playing to 11,760 at 42 shows.

Biz at all shows in Show Street were big for the windup. Requests for reservations at Gracie Hansen's and Les Poupees jammed Fair telephone lines so it was almost impossible to get through the switchboard. All shows at Gracie's, which closed Saturday, were sold out for the last three days by Wednesday, with a similar situation at the puppet show, which closed Sunday.

There was a report Saturday [impossible to check] that the Paradise Show and the puppet show may be extended on the fairgrounds for an additional 30 days. The puppet show is set to open a run in the York Theatre, New York, around Dec. 1. Another report was that Miss Hansen would present the puppet theatre in downtown Seattle until time for it to move east.

For coming months and years the fair site will be operated by the city as a civic centre, with some festival definitely in the works for 1963, but not set yet. Many ideas and plans are in the hopper and decisions will be made before the end of the year.

The Federal Science Exhibit will continue without loss of a single day. Reopening ceremonies, under auspices of the Pacific Science Center Foundation, were held Monday (22).

Fair's $62,500,000 Take

Seattle, Oct. 23.

Total take at the Seattle World's Fair is estimated at $62,500,000, an average of $6.59 per customer for 9,500,000 payees. Attendance was over that mark, but averages will hold, say Fair accountants. After admissions ($1.66 per), food was the biggest grosser—$1.65 per.

Show Street garnered 32½c per customer, for around $2,850,000 and the performing arts shows took about $1,500,000 (this for Fair booked attractions, not including shows booked by other promoters).

Bob Hope Show Topped Fair's Performing Arts Area With 203G Gross

Seattle, Oct. 23.

Some accounting is still to be completed to reveal just what the performing arts section of the Seattle World's Fair did during its 184-day run, but boxoffice winners are already apparent.

Top take for any production in Seattle was the Bob Hope show at the Aqua Theatre, with $203,000 in eight performances. This was booked and promoted by Greater Seattle Inc. At the same level was the Lawrence Welk show in the World's Fair Arena, booked by Northwest Releasing Corp., with $93,000 in two-day, four-performance stand.

Biggest single week show for Northwest Releasing was the Sammy Davis show at the Orpheum with a $61,800 gross, followed closely by the George Burns-Carol Channing Show with $58,000, also at the Orpheum.

Biggest single week on the fairgrounds, booked by the performing arts division, was the Old Vic Theatre, $76,800. Longest run award goes to "Pajama Tops," for nine weeks at the downtown Moore, held for that time by top promotion and publicity plus widespread use of twofers.

premises and giving them a fancy casino atmosphere.

It's a Bet, Old Chap

The gaming part of the enterprise is run in connection with Crockfords, one of the leading gaming clubs in the country, and the bar is being managed by Harry's Bar of Paris. Under British law, the "house" cannot take a cut of the gambling stakes, but makes its money by a charge for playing. At the chemin de fer tables, the price per shoe ranges up to some $30, depending on the table stake. Roulette is to come later, but for the moment the moderate punter can play boule for a fee of $2.80 per hour, with a minimum bet of $1.40. There are also two "one armed bandits" installed, at 7c a throw.

Full restaurant facilities are available, both for lunch and dinner, with set meals varying in price from $2.50 to $6.50, exclusive of wines and service. There is also dancing, and a cabaret will be introduced. The Playboy was launched with three successive galas, starting on Thursday (11), at which leading showbiz reps were among the invitees. One exec from the nearby Metro studios suggested that the Playboy should be renamed "Stage Ten" to make it that studio's "local."

The name "Playboy" was chosen because it was felt to fit the enterprise, but has no connection with any of the Playboy ventures in the U.S.

Israeli Press Attack

Tev Aviv, Oct. 23.

A sharp editorial attack in Mariv, Israel's largest daily, has been raised against the question of cultural ties between Israel and Germany. The editorial scolded the Ramat-Gan Chamber Orchestra for accepting invitation to play in Munich and Stuttgart. Ramat-Gan, Tel Aviv's posh suburb, has a fine little orchestra, which repeatedly has toured the West European circuit, but has never before agreed to play in Germany.

Abba Eban, Israeli Minister of Culture, laid down some time ago, in a speech in the Knesseth (the parliament), the official Government policy concerning cultural ties with West Germany (East Germany is out of question: there is no connection whatsoever with the Communist regime). According to Eban, the Israeli Government will discourage any exchange of artists or cultural representatives between the two countries. According to this decision, the Government Committee which has to approve the appearance of foreign performers in Israel, refuses to issue such permits to Germans.

But the government has no authority to prevent Israelis from going to and performing in Germany. The authorities can apply indirect pressure on subsidized institutions, like the Habima Theatre (which was advised not to accept an invitation to the Vienna festival, though Austria is not officially included in the cultural boycott), but is powerless toward independent companies.

However, the Ramat-Gan Chamber Orchestra is sponsored by the Ramat-Gan municipality. The municipality, in turn, is responsible for its deeds to the Ministry of the Interior. The editorial poses the question, why the Ministry of the Interior didn't use its influence through the Ramat-Gan municipality, to prevent the orchestra from accepting the German invitation? It is particularly irking that Israeli musicians will play in Munich, the cradle of the Nazi movement.

Praises Crix

the existence of an excellent group of critics in this town, as well as fine theatres such as this Colonial Theatre, is responsible for Boston continuing to have a theatre season despite the onerous conditions which now prevail. We producers purposely select Boston for our plays and especially the new plays, because we learn from the intelligent reviews of the critics here, what we should do in order to improve our plays.

Also, the reaction of the Boston audiences is not only good for us in relation to the New York audiences, but also in relation to audiences in the rest of the country. Boston audiences are interested in a healthy theatre producing plays for normal healthy theatregoers. And while in the past there have been some censorship troubles such as we encountered with "Strange Interlude," these no longer exist to a troublesome extent.

I have often found that the very excellent reviews which we have sometimes received from our friend here, has resulted in a rewriting of the play which we ourselves could not bring about. I would like to offer as an example one of our plays which came here with many of its artists on the verge of lunacy, who were straightened out by admonitions of one of your psychiatrists, and the same common sense of Elliott Norton.

What is written here about Boston is also true of some other cities such as Philadelphia and Washington, these differing in varying degrees. In several provincial cities which I am too cowardly to mention, the reverse is true, but that is a long story, and not a story to tell when we are expressing our gratitude for the many fine critics throughout the country who are serving the theatre's best interests.

One of the important functions performed by the critics of Boston and other tryout town is the ability of the critics to commend not only upon what they see on the boards, but to be able to prognosticate what will eventually happen to the plan after it has gone through the rough or tender treatment of rewriting, and redirecting as the case may be. This ability to prognosticate is almost a talent in itself, and most of the Boston critics possess it, as does Harold Bone, the VARIETY critics at New Haven, who has been able to forecast the future of some of the most successful plays when tried out in rough form. I take particular pride in the fact that when everyone was extremely worried about the future of "Oklahoma," including the producers, it was Harold Bone who foresaw that it would be a great success. At the same time one of our smarter managers coined the expression, "No girls, no sex, no chance." non-integrated Cape Colony Inn (owned in part by the original seven astronauts) and used their dining facilities without any problem. Also, an ordinance that has existed on the Cocoa Beach law books, apparently since the community's beginning which prohibited Negroes on the Beach after 11 p.m. without specific purpose, was successfully defied. Furthermore, a more incongrous custom that would not allow Negroes to stay overnight in any of the motels on the Beach (despite the fact that all the major missile contractors by law are equal opportunity employers, and that the State Dept. has brought Afro-Asian VIPs to the Cape area on more than a few occasions) was finally relegated to obscurity when Miss Reese and her troupe encamped in the Starlite Motel for their week-long stay.

As regards the Mississippi overtones which VARIETY reported Oct. 3 in a story datelined Miami, the only parallel to that situation was the lack of firm decision manifested by the management of the Starlite. Of course there were vague mutterings by a certain fringe in the Cocoa Beach area; however there is nothing to indicate there was an actual threat against either Miss Reese or the Starlite itself. In fact, it is to the credit of the community which has undergone much change not only in population but in the sense of social attitudes as well that political pressures were not exerted in a negative manner.

There was much ado about nothing that could have festered into something ugly had it not been for Miss Reese's aplomb and the good manners of the majority of both the white and Negro citizens in the area.

NAACP Pickets

A sorry aspect of the whole incident was the fact that the Starlite, perhaps to placate the small racist fringe in the area, advertised Miss Reese's concert at the Monroe High School (Negro) on Monday and Tuesday for "Colored Only." The result? Miss Reese, upon arriving at the high school, found the school picketed by local members of the NAACP. She also discovered there were over 2,000 teenagers (mostly Negro) who had come from as far as Jacksonville, 175 miles away, waiting for her performance. According to Lee Magid, Miss Reese's manager, the picketing had been going on for over two hours and not one ticket had been sold. Miss Reese refused to perform at the segregated high school show.

Taking her adopted daughter Dumpsie (aged four) by the hand, Miss Reese went through the picket line telling her, "You might as well get used to it." After a short conference with the Negro leaders, Miss Reese returned to the Starlite leaving 2,000 teenagers mad at the NAACP people, mad at the system, and wondering what a concert by Miss Della Reese had to do with the progress of integration. Also, pertinent to this demonstration was the fact that the Starlite not only lost two nights of revenue from the cancelled performances, estimated at approximately $7,200, but lost rental and advertising expenses for the Monroe High performances.

As a result of the cancelled segregated performances, Miss Reese was able to insist that the Starlite shows be integrated or she would not go on. The management finally conceded shortly before midnight and Miss Reese performed for a crowd made up of a half-dozen Negroes, the help at the club, and a few whites who happened to drift in.

During the remainder of her engagement Miss Reese performed every night to integrated audiences and no whites seemed unduly upset by the fact. According to the management there were no walkouts, but Starlite did experience over 100 cancellations as result of the integration during Miss Reese's engagement.

According to Stanley Bring, one of the Starlite owners, "The thing got all out of proportion, and a great deal of it was our fault. I've lived here three years and I want to continue living here." While not aiming particularly to become a champion for civil rights, did become one perforce. When some members of the white community complimented him for his actions, he was somewhat surprised at the respect forthcoming, and then almost began to enjoy being a pioneer.

One incident of an ugly nature did occur on her last performance when Miss Reese received a nasty letter. In view of all the ballyhoo surrounding her appearance this bit of racism was a minor chord. That is all the more apparent when one considers not once during the entire engagement were law enforcement officials on the Starlite premises, or for that matter called to the Cocoa Beach area for anything of a racial nature.

Spingold

New York, the building will be approximately 180 to 200 feet in diameter. Circular in shape, it will have a free form, scalloped roof suspended on a system of columns.

Spingold Theatre will also contain workshops, design rooms, costume preparation and storage areas, seminar rooms, classrooms, faculty offices, rehearsal and dressing rooms, a little theatre and a dance studio. There will be three basic stages. Part, suspended on a system of columns, has been locked off for a 1,200-seat concert hall. The two theatre levels will both have projection cameras and booths. There will also be a television setup.

Brandeis, now 14, has an enrollment of 1,400 students.

Some 10 productions a year are envisioned at new Spingold Theatre. Three will be undergraduate productions directed by the staff. Three or four will be graduate student-directed. Brandeis University will grant master's degree in three subjects, acting, directing, and playwrighting, and a doctor's degree in history and criticism.

Construction will be under the direction of David Robbein, director of business administration at Brandeis. Chairman of Theatre Dept. is Edwin Burr Pettet with theatre experience as actor, producer, director at Jasper Deeter's Hedgerow Theatre, near Philadelphia, and at the Amherst Theatre.

This year, the Brandeis productions will be Shaw's "Heartbreak House" and O'Casey's "Shadow of a Gunman."

Serving under Pettet on the faculty will be Louis Kronenburger, Tucker Professor of Dramatic Literature; John F. Matthews, playwriting, theatre literature; Herbert L. Shore, playwriting, dramatic literature, directing; John J. Sommers, acting, directing; James H. Clay, theatre history; stage design.

Kronenberger's play, "The International Set," had its world premiere at Brandeis, with Eric Bentley directing.

'Fringe'

Broadway at around $20,000 weekly, began a series of previews at the Golden last Monday night (22) following conclusion of its hinterland trek the previous Saturday (20) in Boston.

The original British company, consisting of the revue's co-authors, Alan Bennett, Peter Cook, Jonathan Miller and Dudley Moore, was imported by Cohen for the Broadway production which he's presenting in association with Andre Goulston. The four have been replaced in the London presentation at the Fortune Theatre. The Golden, according to Cohen, has chalked up an advance sale thus far of around $250,000 for the offering.

Cohen, who has a busy production schedule for Broadway, will follow "Fringe" with "School for Scandal," which he's also importing from London, and then Jack Richardson's "Lorenzo." In addition, he's planning productions of two musicals, "Baker Street" and "Barnum."

In another area, he's concluded a deal with Capitol Records for a Christmas release of an album titled, "The Best of the Nine O'Clock Theatre."

OBITUARIES

FRANK FREEMAN Jr.

Frank (Pete) Freeman Jr., 46, film producer and son of Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount v.p. and board chairman of Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, died Oct. 16 of a gastro-intestinal hemorrhage in Hollywood. He had returned only the previous evening from a four-month stay in the east, where he was prepping a documentary.

Freeman, graduate of Georgia Tech, joined Paramount in the early '50s. He acted as associate producer on George Pal's "War of the Worlds," "Houdini," "Naked Jungle" and "Conquest of Space," and was full producer on studio's "Omar Khayyam," in 1957. Later, he joined Frank Ross to work on "The Hangman," a Paramount release.

Parents survive.

JACK BOLTON

Alfred J. (Jack) Bolton, 60, agent and former U.S. Navy captain (Annapolis '24), died of cancer in Hollywood Oct. 17. He was with MCA for 20 years until MCA Artists Ltd. dissolved last July, repping such clients as James Stewart, John Ford and Maureen O'Hara.

He had been a senior exec with MCA, and when agency folded joined International Managament Associates, formed by ex-MCAgents. Surviving are his widow, Peggy; their son, Alan, and daughter, Missy, and a son and daughter by a previous marriage.

FRANK O. STARZ

Frank O. Starz, publicity-advertising director emeritus for Interstate-Consolidated Theatres, died Oct. 21 in a Dallas hospital after two and a half years' poor health. He is survived by two daughters.

Born in St. Louis where he worked for UP he came to Texas and shortly thereafter joined Interstate. He has been with the organization since except for the 1930-31 period when RKO took over operation. Although semi-retired he kept his desk and visited the office weekly for consultation.

In lieu of flowers the request is that donations may be made to the Bob O'Donnell Research Laboratories, Will Rogers Memorial Hospital, Saranac Lake, N.Y.

CHARLES R. ALTHOFF

Charles R. Althoff, 72, veteran "rube" comedian, who appeared on major vaudeville circuits as well as on radio and in films, died Oct. 14 in his Irvington, N.J. home.

Althoff was one of the favorite comedians of the Pantages Circuit bookers. He had a standing arrangement whereby he could work in their theatres any time he was open. He also appeared in films with Laurel & Hardy and in westerns with Buck Jones.

CARLEY MILLS

Carley Mills, 65, composer-author, died in New York Oct. 20. He had written a number of pop tunes and had been a member of the American Society of Composers Authors & Publishers.

Among his song credits are "Why Pretend," "No Foolin'," "On The Outside Lookin' In" and "Riding On A Rainbow." A novel he wrote, "A Nearness Of Evil," was published last year. He was co-author with Lorenzo Mills, of a Negro musical comedy, "The World's My Oyster," produced in off-Broadway in 1956.

His son survives.

BARNEY RUDITSKY

Barney Ruditsky, 64, former New York policeman whose exploits on the force inspired a recent television series, died Oct. 18 in Los Angeles. His book, "The Lawless Years" provided the framework of a tv series of the same name. He had been acting as a technical consultant in films.

Ruditsky worked the Broadway area along with Johnny Broderick, one of the lengendary figures in Stem sleuthing. Together, they were known as a pair of tough cops who often beat up wellknown gangsters with their bare fists. He was also credited with the arrest of Abe Reles, one of the leading figures of Murder Inc.

During his Hollywood era, which started in 1948, Ruditsky was part owner of a travel agency with George Jessel and George Raft. He also was a co-owner of Sherry's Restaurant. At one time, he was charged with being a collector for the late gangster, Benjamin "Bugsy" Siegel, an accusation never proved.

Survived by a son.

ISIDOR GUSIKOFF

London Morality Council Deplores Sordid Plays, Assails the Critics

London, Oct. 30.

Out of 45 plays seen this year, the Public Morality Council has decided that 10 were not deemed worthy of classification. Seven were criticized and 28 classified in grades of suitability.

The figures were released last week by George Tomlinson, general secretary of the Council, who said that a list had been drawn up by a committee which classified plays on moral values. He urged that the tabulation should be more widely used.

Speaking at a London meeting of his Council, Tomlinson complained that some of the reports published about sordid, murky and unhealthy plays and films were astonishingly

NAB's TV Code Manager Asks 'Who Needs Sex?' & He Plays It Straight

Washington, Oct. 30.

Take away sex and what have you got?

"Better-than-ever television," declared Edward H. Bronson in a deadpan speech to the National Assn. of Broadcasters fall conference here. Bronson, who doesn't have a gag writer, is manager of NAB's Television Code.

He noted the "great hue and cry" for the past two years over excessive "prurient sex," crime and violence in tv programming and added: "Needless to say, one reason you do not hear the shrill screams of the past about these subjects on tv, is because rarely nowadays are there occasions warranting such complaints.

Sindlinger Check: 1962 Admissions Up $130,000,000

Domestic (U.S.-Canada) film attendance seems a cinch to clock a new gross record this year. It's running 2% (nearly 40,000,000) more than last year, per Sindlinger & Co., market analysts, which puts the cash b.o. at $130,000,000 ahead of 1961 for this date. Partly, this reflects higher average admission (pegged currently at approximately 75c).

Last year's attendance hit 2,007,850,000 and grossed about $1,505,000,000. Top domestic gross was notched in '46 with $1,512,000,000. Steady decline then ensued, reaching a postwar low of $1,134,000,000 in '52.

To keep the resurgent b.o. in perspective, however, fact is that fewer pix have been making off with larger takes, same pattern applying to attendance.

Desegregated Memphis Fair (1st in 106 Yrs.) A Whopper at the B.O.

Memphis, Oct. 30.

Memphis' Mid-South Fair, which maintained a southern tradition of keeping its annual event 100% segregated for 106 years, recently turned its back on this age-old Dixie heritage. For the first time it operated on a wholly integrated basis. The move came on the heels of the Oxford, Miss., crisis—some 70 miles south of here.

The first integrated fair was a whopper at the turnstiles with 541,583 mixed customers attending the nine-day event. "We were proud and happy to open our first fair in 106 years to all races," beamed Bill Wynne, skipper of the expo, "and what's more, this

MCA as Legit Angel Nothing New But Now Will Be Out in Open

Proposed thrust by Music Corp. of America into legit as a financier, for avowed purpose of nailing down important properties for the motion picture and video markets, is a repetition of past MCA experience, but this time with the company agreeable to making its participation visible.

Some years back, when its primary impact was in talent representation, MCA associated itself in a fiscal way with a number of Broadway projects. Its participation then, however, was cloaked in the personage of attorney Morris M. Schrier, MCA v.p.-secretary in New York. All of which was fairly common knowledge in the N.Y. legit community.

The new MCA romance with Broadway is part of the enlarging entanglement of legit and other amusement sectors. The major disk companies (Columbia, RCA Victor, Capitol) are notably prominent in the laying out of coin for musicals, hopefully for profits, but in any case for original cast LP exclusivity. Columbia Broadcasting bankrolled "My Fair Lady," and from the film sphere, Seven Arts has been foremost as an "angel," although not always with an appetite for screen rights.

Stage-to-screen has been traditional evolution in the American showbiz scheme, but only recently did Broadway engage the telefilmers, per Metro's current preparation of a series based on the "Bells Are Ringing" tuner for CBS. Now

Chief Rabbi of Israel Deplores Inbal Ballet's Role in 'Greatest Story'

Tel Aviv, Oct. 30.

Rabbi Jitzhak Nissim, Chief Rabbi of the State of Israel, has officially condemned the Inbal Israeli dance group for its decision to participate in George Stevens' picture, "The Greatest Story Ever Told." Despite the Chief Rabbi's censure, Mrs. Sara Levi-Tanai, founder and director of Inbal, proceeded to Hollywood, with 32 members of her company, to participate in the picture about the life of Jesus. In a statement issued by the Chief Rabbi's office the hope was expressed that Inbal would 'reconsider the decision and cancel their trip."

A similar statement was given to the press by Rabbi Untermann, Chief Rabbi of the City of Tel Aviv: "I have not the slightest doubt that missionaries will use the picture in order to propagate their faith. While I abhor the thought of interfering with anybody's religious belief, I can certainly not agree to the fact that an Israeli dance group intends to play in the hands of the missionaries."

The Inbal company, fearing such reaction, withheld the news about its participation in the picture and prepared for the trip in secret. However when the story leaked out the company had to face the issue only two days before departure. In a hurriedly called press-

JFK & Jackie 'Too Hot' For British Scribes

London, Oct. 30.

President Kennedy and his wife are proving something of a headache to writers in this neck of the showbiz woods. A revue, "See You Inside," which opened at the Royal Court, Liverpool, on Oct. 22 had a sketch in which Moire Lister was to have gently satirized Mrs. Kennedy. It was axed.

The American revue, "The Premise," also tripped up over a Kennedy joshing, though the White House had cabled a "no objection" to the impresario, William Donaldson (see VARIETY 10/24). Now, "What the Public Wants," first tv politically satirical program, has been postponed. It was decided by Associated Rediffusion that the show "was not artistically right." But, significantly, in the postponed show was a joke about the Lord Chamberlain's ban on the Kennedy gag in "The Premise."

In the revue "See You Inside" other items that jolted the Lord Chamberlain were references to Prime Minister Harold Macmillan by name and a sketch which poked fun at the adlibbing in "The Premise."

Miss Farrell Shifts Mgmt.; Paid 20% Commissions

Soprano Eileen Farrell of the Met Opera has quit Columbia Concerts after 20 years and transferred to the Herbert Barrett office. The late Horace Parmalee handled her throughout her long radio buildup on CBS. After his death Miss Farrell was managed by the Judson, O'Neal & Judd division of CAMI.

Dispute involved payment of 20% commissions on reengagements, amounting to about $900 per recital since Miss Farrell is now in the $4,500 fee class.

Jackie's Telepic On Domestic Ice During Tension

Washington, Oct. 30.

A Government decision on commercial exhibition in America of the film on First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy's India and Pakistan trip has been shelved until there is a letup in the Cuban crisis.

The position taken by the U.S. Information Agency previously was that the USIA produced film would not be exhibited in this country unless a resolution sanctioning it were passed by Congress. The Senate approved the resolution, but the House never put it to a vote. There was no known House opposition. The measure was simply lost in the rush for adjournment.

George Stevens Jr., chief of motion pictures for USIA, said no new policy decision has been made in view of the failure of Congress to act finally.

Yank performer climaxing a five-month overseas tour that included Australia and South Africa, registered in wham fashion with her "Saga of Sophie Tucker." She had the sedate Palladium crowd craving more and was the only artist palmed back for an extra bow.

Miss Tucker's turn ignited a sagging show and paved the way for Bob Hope, who followed her in the lineup. Latter, sharing his time with comedienne Edie Adams, lined out a sharp monolog, but the act appeared overstretched and the pair's "Foggy Day" vocal made for only moderate register. Completing Yank contingent, Eartha Kitt clicked with a savvy routine and

CERF SCION DEBUTING AS VOCALIST ON MGM

Chris Cerf, son of book publisher-author-tv panelist Bennett Cerf, has moved into show business via the disk route. He debuts as a singer this week under the MGM Records banner with a coupling of "Cheerleader" and "In The Middle Of The Night."

Young Cerf, an undergrad at Harvard, came to the attention of Arnold Maxin, MGM president, late last year when Cerf was peddling a demo disk he and several friends had put together.

Maxin didn't take the disk but he remembered Cerf's voice, hence the pop disk debut. In addition to singing, young Cerf also plays the piano.

Those Female 'Monsters' at Theatres

Legit theatre managers are getting increasing squawks from partons over those femme wigs and transformations, recently added to the high-style, high-coiffs which themselves harass theatregoers.

It's a losing battle from both ends because the fancy coiffed women can't chop their heads off—although the guy backs of 'em would like to—and, in turn, by the nature of reserved-seats in legit, you just can't hop around and change seats, a la a cinema. What is distressing the managers is the outspoken opinion by longtime theatregoers that "we may just as well stay home because if you're stuck behind one of those tall-in-the-hairdo dames you just can't see the actors for the wigs."

Steinbeck, of H'wood Renown, Another 'Disputed' U.S. Winner of Nobel Prize

John Steinbeck will be in Stockholm come Dec. 10, world conditions permitting, as the sixth American writer ever to receive the Nobel Award for Literature. Previous American winners: Ernest Hemingway, Eugene O'Neill, William Faulkner, Sinclair Lewis, Pearl Buck, of which only the lady is now extant.

Steinbeck gets both the prestige of the win and $49,656 in cash. His designation dramatizes the standing Steinbeck enjoys in Europe compared to a general critical neglect in the United States where his works since World War II have not been ranked as "major."

His reputation stems in large part from the epic of the depression years, "Grapes of Wrath." "Tortilla Flat" and several other novels deal with the fishery coast in northern California, his homeland.

A number of Steinbeck's novels have become films, notably "Wrath," "Wayward Bus" and "East of Eden." A certain tendency to screen popularity has been cited against him by the campus literati and highbrows generally.

Interestingly, the bestowal of the Nobel Prize upon Americans has often been accompanied by disputatious reaction as coming too late, or beyond the recipient's peak, or not for the best reasons. Sinclair Lewis was furious when passed by for Hemingway but later swallowed his pique and was glad to be acclaimed.

Act Combs 'Em In

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

The first nitery act of its kind ever seen here, hair-combing, is credited for helping pack 'em in at the local Inn-Tuition bistro. Haircomber, billed as Dorian, is in his fourth week. To a musical recording, he and his first feminine partner engage in pantomime. She sits on a high-stool and he combs her hair in various fashions.

Three other girls, all of them lookers, also have their hair coiffed by Dorian during the act. Audiences have been going for the hair-do routine in a big way, according to the spot's owner, Frank Seifert. He says that competing cafe owners have been coming in to catch the act and mutter, "What is this nightclub business coming to?"

East Haddam Opera With Scherman's Little Orch: Invite Cyril Ritchard

East Haddam, Oct. 30.

Goodspeed Opera House, wooden structure on the banks of the Connecticut River at East Haddam, population 2,000, expects to launch itself in June of 1963. During the past summer house was open on a tourist fee basis Saturdays only. Contractors collected some $275,000 to put the tiny house into condition.

Creation of parking space, of which the village green has none, is now underway. Only hotel in village, built by the same man after whom the opera house is named, has been closed in recent seasons, so there are no overnight quarters in East Haddam at present.

The 1963 project contemplates a mixed-events, eight-week season. Opener will be three short operas, Wolf Ferrari's "Secret of Susan," Klein Singer's "Archie and Mehitabel" and Georges Bizet's "Djmalieh." These will be staged and conducted under the Little Orchestra of Manhattan, of which

Fred Friendly Tapped For 'Town Meeting of World'

Fred Friendly has been given the assignment of producing an international tv forum via Teltsar, a proposed "Town Meeting of the World" made by CBS prexy Frank Stanton in his address before delegates of the European Broadcasting Union.

CBS News prez Dick Salant, in making the Friendly assignment, said that "Telstar will enable us to create a world forum, which, we hope, will have many of the attributes of the town meeting of early America." Friendly, exec producer of "CBS Reports," participated last July in the first tv programming exchange between Europe and the U.S. via Telstar.

WHO'S GOT THE AA ACTION?

Young N.Y. Filmmaking Trio

Kronick-McCarty-Gaffney Expanding Under Seneca Label—Joe Levine One-Quarter Financier

Everybody must now be aware that New York has a number of young moviemakers at work around the town busily putting their dreams onto film with varying quality results. Now, however, something new has been added: a tyro New York film producing concern that not only has branched out into distribution, but also operates its own studios.

Seneca Productions-Seneca International is the corporate umbrella which covers the diversified activities of Bill Kronick, Bob McCarty and Bob Gaffney, who first came into these columns about 18 months ago via Kronick's irreverent "Bowl of Cherries," a featurette about modern art, and McCarty's lyrical and satiric short, "The Rooftops of New York," the latter distributed by Columbia.

Now that they are winding post-photography chores on their first feature, "The Light Fantastic," the trio revealed last week that Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures had been a major angel on the project, supplying approximately 25% of the $80,000 budget, and that Embassy will be releasing the pic.

At the same time, they reported themselves to be happy with the b.o. returns of Seneca International's first release, Akira Kurosawa's "Yojimbo," now playing its New York preem date at the Carnegie Hall Cinema. They expect to windup negotiations shortly for Seneca's second release, Louis Malle's "Zazie."

This French import was the subject of some controversy in the New York importing trade about a year ago when director-producer Malle decided to bypass indie distribs hereabouts and open the pic himself, sans distrib, for its U.S. preem date at the Paris. Malle's reasoning was that if that date were a success he could get better terms than were offered prior to opening. Since he had alienated distrib affections via his frank pre-opening statements, and since the Paris Theatre run was

Deal is understood imminent to put a first package of 33 Joseph E. Levine features (almost entirely imports) into tv exhibition. Several current releases are included, among them "Two Women," the Sophia Loren starrer.

Embassy Pictures founder-prez has been dickering with both a network and a N.Y. indie telestation. Only previous Embassy deal with tv was for the outright sale of "Godzilla," Japanese sci-fi pic which played off several seasons back.

Make-With-the-Ideas; A Series of Reissues Turns Into 'Festival'

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

Product shortage has local exhibitors brain-straining for ways to sell reissues differently, and more effectively. It's almost a "custom" here now to bundle the reissues into series and to call the latter "festivals." The teeoff in this respect was a five-week "70m Festival" at United Paramount's loop firstrun Century theatre. It comprised a quintette of pictures previously shown both in the loop and uptown.

This was followed by an "Operetta Festival" in a Tedd Mann theatre. That comprised a succession of reissued MGM musicals.

Currently, at another Mann theatre, it's an "Ingmar Bergman Film Festival." There'll be 13 of his Swedish pictures, Janus distributed reissues, presented as twin bills for three days each.

Duals are "Three Strange Loves" and "Illicit Love," "Secrets of Woman"-Naked Night," "Lesson in Love"-"Dreams," "Smiles of Summer Night"-"Seventh Seal," "Wild Strawberries" - "Brink of Life," "Magician"-"Virgin Spring" and "Devil's Eye" - "Three Strange Loves" (latter brought back).

For Reporters: Idyllic Credo Of Howard Minsky

Howard Minsky, new (since last summer) president of International Telemeter, called a press meeting in New York last week to provide a blow-by-blow of what's going on with this home toll tv system owned entirely by Paramount. There's a separate story detailing his report.

Minsky also made plain his attitude toward the trade and lay press reporters. His policy, as he stated, is this—

"My office is always open to you. I will not kid you. I will not answer question if I don't know the answers, but I won't be devious. Want to be helpful and progressive. There may be sometimes when I can't give answers because of the competitive situation. But other than in this area, call me and if I don't have the information you wan't I'll try to get the information you want. Let me know where I can reach you."

Minsky in effect was promising no doubletalk, as has been heard in the trade before. His statement was refreshing—for the time being. He was saying in effect that honesty is the best policy. A veteran reporter, for one, is hopeful that Minsky will continue on the course he himself has charted via public announcement. And along with this goes the reporter's thought, wouldn't it be welcome if all responsible officials of films and show business in general recognized that honesty pays off.

SPERLING AND SMERLING BID

Allied Artists management has been having talks with Milton Sperling, longtime theatrical film producer formerly associated with Warners, and Sheldon Smerling, formerly head of National Telefilm Associates and now an exhibitor on his own, about the possibility of these two execs bringing new capital into the film company. AA, a deficit operation as of the past financial report, indebted to president Steve Broidy and a couple of other execs in the amount of $150,000, and with its studio up for sale, is in need of cash.

Broidy, reached from New York at his office in Los Angeles via telephone, acknowledged that conversations have been going on with Sperling and Smerling. The report around Manhattan was that the two might contribute a stake in the company and, in association with Claude Giraux, presently biggest AA stockholder (88,500 shares), take over control.

Broidy said there's no fight involved over control. Anyone who antes up sufficient capital can take the helm, he strongly indicated. He added: "We never fought anybody who put up the money; there's no bone of contention in this respect."

Broidy related "we are trying to make a film company out of this" (AA) and have all the parts to get going. The corporation, he continued, has proved itself with the distribution of "El Cid," and now has "Billy Budd" and "55 Days at Peking" upcoming. "Budd" already is strong in England.

But an overhaul is called for, this being toward more major productions and away from the lesser-scale entries that had been coming from the coast lot.

Broidy is convinced there's a good future ahead for AA, tied in with the theory that the market is ripe for big features of the type his company has proved itself of being capable of handling.

As a footnote, there's no rhubarb with Giraux. "He has been very cooperative and helpful," said Broidy.

Paris Candy Lulls

Paris, Oct. 30.

Exhibs Sammy and Jo Sritzky, who run a bevy of firstruns, trying out a new policy at various exclusivity houses in the more Parisian districts, namely the Grandes Boulevards. At a couple of hardtops the long candy selling and ad showing intermissions have been cut and midnight shows added for weekends.

Culture-Saddened Press Agents; Films, As TV, Expresses Dismay At N.Y. Times' Policy Shifts

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Impact of the new "Cultural Secretariat-General" at the N.Y. Times is not confined to the television medium. Protests of broadcasters, as detailed in last TV Section of VARIETY has an echo in the film trade, though in differing terms.

Unhappiness of film showmen has this in common with the gripes of their brethren of television: the N. Y. Times is a key news break, and its reviewers are of unique significance, publicity-wise. Hence any shift in policy at the Times touches press agents where they are tender, and their bosses where they are wistful.

Recent emphasis on the Times favors culture in Milwaukee, Dublin, Seattle, San Francisco and Moscow, points to which the Times has dispatched staff writers of late. Film circles in Manhattan complain that a premiere in a faraway spot has a distinctly superior chance to get prominence than anything filmic in the Gotham neighborhood.

"The Times won't go nowadays for a feature interview involving a current release film, but it is captivated by offbeat nitery entertainers who may rate a two-column or better spread," is the way one major spokesman puts it. "The nation's leading prestige daily is immune to the blandishments of film star ballyhoo but an offbeat exponent of cool jazz may come under the new cultural umbrella."

It impresses the N. Y. film trade that the Times is prepared to go great distances, spend plenty of travel money. The daily is alert to new values as perhaps never before. But meanwhile the film merchants

Cowan Confident He'll Coproduce in Soviet; Some Senators Fretful

Indie producer Lester Cowan, who is putting together the first U. The project is film adaptation of Mitchell Wilson's novel, "Journey to A Far Meridian."

Prior to his departure for Washington, Cowan expressed confidence that his project would continue despite the current crisis and would continue unless international relations disintegrate to outright shooting.

Cowan planned to take the opportunity to talk to various members of the Senate who have been skeptical of the cultural exchange pact, especially members of the Senate Appropriations Committee which last week issued a report

Producers Smart To Do Own Sell, Per Bill Castle

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

New niche necessarily occupied by the film producer in present-day marketing of motion pictures is emphasized by producer-director William Castle "We are witnessing the birth of a new business. We can no longer expect the distributor to create the excitement needed to sell tickets. We (the producers) must do it ourselves."

Longtime proponent of the producer's personal touch in ballyhooing product, Castle, who checked into Columbia Pictures last week to start prepping his "Candy Cobweb," cites recent nationwide jaunts of Robert Cohn with his "Interns" and Rod Serling with "Requiem for a Heavyweight" as sign trend is on the upsurge.

"A producer knows his picture better than anyone," Castle points out. "He's able to engender the excitement which prompts people to leave tv and go to a movie. Actors are often neither articulate or enthusiastic enough.

"Previously, a picture was made and advertising was relied on to sell it. It doesn't work that way any more. Ads haven't changed in 30 years—we've run out of superlatives—people just don't believe us any more. Simply saying "This is the best picture ever made doesn't work anymore."

Castle has sold popcorn and taken tickets in houses which harbor his films, and has shaken thousands of hands, made hundreds of speeches from stages and has even baby-sat for people who would otherwise be unable to go out to see his picture.

"I consider myself exactly the same as a candidate for office—

Higginbotham, of Video Antecedents, Takes Over 20th's Newsreel From Reek

William R. Higginbotham, formerly a tv producer for United Press International, has taken over as operating head of Movietonews. He succeeds Edmund Reek who was out last week as 20th-Fox veep in charge of production of Movietonews. It's understood that Higginbotham will be completely reorganizing the theatrical-television news and short subjects arm of 20th.

In addition to Reek, Jack Haney, general manager of newsreel production, has retired, as has Jack Gordon, head of commercial production. Jack Kuhne, top camerman and shorts supervisor, stays on. Movietonews is one of the last three remaining major company newsreels, the others being Universal's newsreel and Metro's News of The Day.

Youngstein further stated the newly-reorganized company would begin operations Nov. 5 with activities primarily in "packaging, production and distribution of theatrical motion pictures," with further plans to operate "in all phases of the entertainment field."

Amusement Stocks Lost in Wall St. Canyons Again; Cuba Didn't Help; 15 Issues Dip $679,387,000 in '62

By GENE ARNEEL

The disturbances set off last week by Krushchev-Kennedy-Castro had show business as a casualty. Amusement stocks fell off. And they did not entirely recover.

It's a case of, "here we go again." Film company, theatre and broadcasting issues for the most part took a drubbing last week. Metro, Paramount, Warners, Disney United Artists and 20th-Fox were among those which hit new lows.

There were some gains Monday (29) and yesterday but these were mainly fractional, and don't obscure the fact that since last Jan. 2 the paper worth of 15 issues has fallen $679,387,000.

Financial men on the film side see some ray of hope for a possible upsurge. Several new epics are upcoming on the release schedules and these could draw new investor interest. (This obviously could work in reverse, too, for an expensive picture not well received could be a depressant.)

In any event, Metro has "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "How the West Was Won." 20th-Fox has "Cleopatra" following the current "Longest Day" and Columbia has "Lawrence of Arabia." The boxoffice impact of these, among others, figures to have a bearing on the Stock Market.

Columbia Pictures closed the week off $1.50 despite the fact that this film-tv corporation just reported the best earnings in years. 20th-Fix was down to $17.25 at the windup of last week's activity and this is particularly enigmatic, for this company maintained the $22 trading-price level throughout the internatl upheaval which saw change in regime and studio closing. Then, suddenly, the drop in price.

The conclusion drawn by experts in the field is that show business is not the place to be positioned, market-wise, in times of national economic or political stress. The various nationally-recognized charts and indices show that most of the big industrial, roads, utilities, bond issues have a way of bouncing back after a general selling wave.

Depressed values in these areas attract investors anew. But the bargain hunters don't seem to go back to the amusements.

As the accompanying chart shows, the values of the theatricals on the Big Board and Amex fell from $1,720,281,000 on Jan. 2, 1962, to $1,262,884 on May 28.

This was a colossal loss of more than $400,000,000. But just about everything listed on that Black Monday of May 28 was in bad shape. And now comes the key point, or, to put it another way, the unexplainable rub. Most of the market recouped—but not show biz. Perhaps the psychologists are correct in saying show biz is just too volatile. In any event, the 15 listed amusement stocks annexed are off another quarter of a billion dollars in paper values.

Also adjacent is the weekly VARIETY chart showing the closing prices and changes as of yesterday (Tues.).

What Price Advice Under the Guns?

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

Because still another boxoffice depressant, the recent Russian war scare, has gloomed up, Martin Lebedoff, president of North Central Allied, the regional unit, has called an "emergency" meeting of his board of directors for this week.

Lebedoff explains that its purpose will be to determine what "advice" to give to NCA members "at this juncture of their worst miseries." The board will be asked to figure out ways to meet present "extremely adverse boxoffice conditions" and what steps should be taken to obtain from the film companies exhibitor relief "that's even more needed now than ever," the NCA president announced.

The Japanese spec film, "Buddha," produced by the Daiei Co., has been acquired for distribution in the U. S. and rest of the western hemisphere by United Artists.

The 70m pic, described as the most expensive film ever made in Japan, has been compared to C. B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments," and like that film has been a big grosser in the Far East though also the subject of a good deal of criticism by religious historians, in this case, Buddhist.

LAST TIME I SAW 'CLEOPATRA'

ZANUCK RAPS HER BULGING BUDGET

Saying that the door "is still open" to director Joe Mankiewicz for consultations on the reediting of "Cleopatra," 20th-Fox prexy Darryl F. Zanuck told the press Friday (26) in New York that he believes Mankiewicz has "absolutely no legal grounds" on which to fight his removal from post-photography chores on the $35,000,000 film. Mankiewicz' contract gives him the right to provide the first cut print of the film, and this Zanuck considers the director delivered when he screened the film for the prexy in Paris 10 days ago.

Zanuck reasons that since the director did not trouble to bring along a number of the out-takes, prepared as "loops" for post-dubbing in Paris, Mankiewicz considered this was the version he wanted to go with. If there are to be any legal fireworks, the question to be resolved is likely to center around the definition of this version which Mank screened for Zanuck.

Friday's press conference, the first Zanuck has had in New York since assuming the 20th presidency, drew an SRO crowd of reporters from both the trade and lay press, national mags and even one newsreel, UPI. Zanuck, armed with copies of his correspondence with Mank during his recent stay in Paris, outlined his side of the dispute, later answered by Mankiewicz.

He felt compelled to take over, he said, when the director had demanded "control," namely the right to cut the final picture, which Zanuck as company president, with his own responsibility to the stockholders could not give him—powers which Zanuck said Mankiewicz had no right to either under any guild agreements or contract.

$7,000 Daily Interest

Zanuck explained the "urgent necessity" to get the picture finished and into the theatres, citing its cost to date of $35,000,000 and the likelihood this would rise to $40,000,000 before finished. The interest alone on the $35,000,000 of bank loans comes to $7,000 per day, for a total of $2,555,000 a year (at rate of about 7%)—which interest will continue until the picture is totally paid off.

Zanuck described the version he saw of "Cleo" as "great and it could be enormous." There is nothing wrong with any of the scenes involving Cleo and Caesar and Cleo and Mark Antony "with the exception of three episodes and part of a fourth," he said. His basic concern is with "the continuity and construction of the story." Much of this can be rectified in the cutting room "but it

Zanuck's Basic Challenge To Films: Chief Who Know Studios, Labs

By VINCENT CANBY

If Darryl F. Zanuck succeeds in pulling 20th-Fox out of the red by the end of next year, he will not only have triumphed against tremendous odds, he also will have vindicated the proposition, which he outlined on assuming the 20th presidency last summer, that now is the time for all good film companies to have filmmaker presidents.

In the wake of last week's bitterness over Zanuck's dismissal of director Joe Mankiewicz from "Cleopatra" (see separate stories), there was much trade speculation on whether top talent indie producer-directors, who haggle over terms relating to "artistic independence" as much as over percentage of the gross details, will now be inclined to sign with a company whose boss is as qualified to sit in the cutting room as he is in the board chamber.

Whether or not Mankiewicz has a case against Zanuck re "Cleopatra," (where Mank was a salaried director), is beside the point of the larger issue, that is, just how artistically independent can today's independent producer-directors expect to be, with somebody else's money? At his press conference in New York last week, Zanuck made a good case for his concern over "Cleo," citing the previously unheard of production investment of $35,000,000 (to date) and his responsibility to 20th stockholders.

Obligations

However, when reporters tried to pin him down on whether or not he would ever grant a director undisputed say-so on a final print, he apparently answered in the negative. "Apparently" is the right word, because his first answer was to point out that he had reworked "Nine Hours to Rama" after producer-director Mark Robson had completed his final print and, in Zanuck's estimation as well as Robson's had improved the picture.

In answering, Zanuck also pointed out that there were certain other obligations, such as to produce film that could get a Code seal as well as receive an acceptable Legion of Decency rating, which meant he could not give complete freedom to his employee-filmmakers. Aside from those considerations, would Zanuck give the producer-director "guaranteed artistic freedom?" He paused, chewed on his cigar, and then said he would rather move back to his "peaceful little apartment in Paris."

Zanuck acknowledged that competition for top filmmaking talent today is so keen that some companies have signed deals with producer-directors which, in effect, guaranteed total artistic freedom. Wasn't it logical to assume, he was asked, that such talent would prefer to go to companies, where, say, an Arthur Krim or an Abe Schneider would not be expected to drop into the cutting room and take charge?

'Artistic Liberty'

In reply, Zanuck stressed his part proven abilities to get along with the industry's top talents: "More people won Oscars when working for me than for any other studio."

Also unstated, but implied, by Zanuck was the idea that there really is no such thing as "complete artistic freedom," since there must always be contractural guarantees protecting a company against runaway budgets, among other things. Nevertheless, as competition has grown sharper, deals approaching such total freedom have been made. Columbia's contract with producer-director Richard Brooks, reportedly, is one such, even excusing him from showing a projected script to Col toppers, if he should feel like it.

Whether or not many indies can make such deals, there was the feeling in the trade that, offered the same type of contract by a company run by a filmmaker or one run by non-filmmaker businessman, the indie might go to the latter. Talent has always been jealous of its prerogatives, but even more so today in this so-called era of the independent filmmaker.

The highly publicized Zanuck-Mankiewicz contretemps, of course, comes at an unfortunate time, just as the 20th prexy is busy lining up new film projects to occupy the Coast studio when it reopens after the first of the year. In this latter connection, Zanuck said he still does not know exactly when he'll be ready to reopen the studio, or with what properties. He did say there are now approximately 250 people on the payroll there, including about 100 lab technicians, and that when he does resume full operations, the total number on the payroll will probably be "somewhat less" than the 600 at the time he suspended operations.

MANKIEWICZ SAD BUT HE'S CAUSTIC

"I've been a cotton picker too long (in the Hollywood fields) not to know that 'Old Marse' can do with the cotton exactly what he wants," director Joseph L. Mankiewicz said yesterday (Tues.) in New York by way of rebutting charges, made by 20th-Fox prexy Darryl F. Zanuck, that Mank had demanded "complete control" over the final print of "Cleopatra."

The film director flatly denied statements made by Zanuck Friday (26) that he had asked for authority which Zanuck could not grant (see separate story). All he had asked, said Mank, was the opportunity to present the prexy with the "first tentative rough cut" of the film. Not only did Zanuck refuse him that, he said, but after their first (and only) meeting in Paris, for Zanuck's first viewing of "Cleo," the prexy had made himself unavailable to the director for face-to-face discussions.

Though his contract gives him the right to present the company with its first "preview cut," Mank does not intend to pursue his legal rights, feeling that it would serve no useful purpose. What would it mean, he asked the press, to get himself an escort of U.S. marshals in order to get into the cutting room, only to have Zanuck do what he wants to do afterwards?

What is important in this case, he continued, is "the moral right." There is a great difference, he said, between a major studio's accepting a craftsman's work in the craftsman's version, and then cutting it, and the major studio's simply taking over of a work in progress and refusing to discuss it with the craftsman. Zanuck's statements to the effect that the door is and has been open to Mank were ridiculed and called simply untrue. Zanuck has been "ill-advised," he added, because "if the major studios are to continue, which I think is unlikely, they cannot continue by behaving in such high-handed fashion."

It was Zanuck's very lack of availability to him which Mank hammered home in his remarks at the press conference, held at his eastside house and attended by about 20 reporters. Mank greeted the reporters by noting that "the human condition being what it is today, I am amazed that the general public gives a damn about who cuts 'Cleopatra'." His only meeting with Zanuck, he said was at the first Paris screening, interrupted at the halfway mark for dinner.

Following the first half, he said, Zanuck told him how beautiful, fine, etc the picture was, and then, during dinner, proceeded to discuss "The Longest Day" and 70m installations in Europe, "subjects which, you may imagine, were uppermost in my thoughts at that time." After the screening of the second half, Zanuck again congratulated him, Mank said, and promised to meet him the next day. The prexy postponed that meeting and was subsequently unavailable. Zanuck relieved Mank of

'As Head of Company I'm Naturally the Villain' Sez Zanuck As to 'Cleo'

Commenting on all the furor in the press, particularly from Hollywood, on his dispute with "Cleopatra" director Joe Mankiewicz, 20th-Fox prexy D. F. Zanuck said Friday (26) that he didn't expect sympathy for his position and probably wouldn't get any.

"I'm the president of the company and I'm the boss," he said. "In a situation like this, the sympathy always goes to the employee or the creative artist. I'm the heavy."

When he was asked whether he and Mankiewicz had ever had any problems back in the days when Zanuck was 20th studio boss and Mankiewicz was a writer-director on the lot, Zanuck said no. Why now? "Maybe I've changed," Zanuck answered. He paused a moment, then added: "Maybe he has. After you've directed Julius Caesar, Mark Antony and Cleopatra for 18 months, perhaps some of the tinsel brushes off—but I don't want to be facetious."

IMPORTER GOLDWURM MUSES ON PRODUCING

Already diversified into conventional exploitation pictures, indie film importer Jean Goldwurm (Times Films) sees the next logical expansionist step as production. This would be for his Victoria Films banner, meaning in the commercial groove. No properties picked as yet, just an expression of the yen, and that the company is poised for financing when the right scripts come along.

Victoria, formed last year, has been existent so far on the momentum of one feature, the British "Wild for Kicks," juve drama which has clocked nearly 1,500 domestic dates and grossed something like $400,000. But four more features recently acquired are slated for release over the next few months. Titles are "Black Autumn," a suspenser shot in Connecticut by newcomer Del Tenney; "Pagan Hellcat," filmed by Italians in Tahiti; "Travelling Light," British nudie documentary; and "The Diving Girls' Island," drama based on the Japanese femmes who dive for fish.

Victoria releases through Times. Both have same exec tier, including Goldwurm as prez, Irving Sochin as sales manager, and Felix Bilgrey as v.p. and counsel.

Netter Still Connected At Astor Though Doing Chore for Columbia

Despite the fact that L. Douglas Netter Jr. is currently working on the sales staff for Sam Spiegel's upcoming Columbia roadshow, "Lawrence of Arabia," he still remains exec veep of Astor Pictures, according to a formal announcement issued by Astor prexy George Foley.

Foley says Netter is not leaving the company, and that he remains under a longterm contract which still has time to run. Before joining Astor, according to Foley, Netter had agreed to handle several outside pix on a "shortterm basis"—apparently a reference to his "Lawrence" chores. Foley said Netter is now also supervising national sales for Astor's "The Trial," for release before the yearend.

ME, DIRECTOR, YOU, UGH!

That's Billy Wilder Memo To Zanuck's Query

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Darryl Zanuck got blistering turndown by Billy Wilder in reply to invitation to join him in production of "Goodbye Charlie." Wilder advised: "Thank you very much for your invitation to do 'Goodbye Charlie' for you. However, you've been too long and too far away to know that a wave of disgust has swept over this town since the brutal and callous dismissal of people even though they hold perfectly legal contract. The 'let them sue' attitude is reprehensible, no self-respecting picture maker would ever want to work for your company. The sooner the bulldozers raze your studio. The better it will be for the industry."

Zanuck's communication to Wilder stated: "I have been told that you like the script of 'Goodbye Charlie' which was written by Issie Diamond. Is it true? If it is, I will read it immediately and get in touch with you. In one way or another, I intend to talk you into working with me."

A BUSIER DAVE LIPTON

Coast Veep Also Promotes Revue Teleshows

With Universal now a member of the Music Corp. of America family, U viceprez-on-the-Coast David Lipton is shouldering additional responsibility of promotion for network teleshows put together by sister subsid Revue Productions. Tihs was in effect, actually, at least three months ago—or before the U-MCA hitching became de jure in the eyes of Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

Lipton's staff is handling the fan puff formerly tossed to independent publicity operators, and to some extent overlaps the purlieu of Eddie Aaronoff, MCA's ad-pub director in New York. Latter continues to function in the promotional sphere for the parent company and for MCA-TV, the distribution arm of Revue, and originates advertising for the network and syndicated programming.

This, at least, is the pro tem situation, with some hints rife that the t.o. and duty guidelines are not yet fixed.

GREEKS LIKE 'SPARTANS'

A Film For Once Which Does Not Betray History

Athens, Oct. 30.

The "300 Spartans" 20th Century Fox release now running in Athens at three first run theatres day and date is regarded here as the first picture about Greece which has not betrayed the history of this country. Patrons and critics have warmly received it and repeatedly applauded during a special screening in a theatre filled to capacity by journalists and other show people.

Producer-director Rudolf Mate and Producer-writed Georges Saint Georges are the foreign film makers involved.

Opening was attended by Crown Prince Constantin, Princess Irene and Princess Sophia with her husband Don Juan Carlos of Spain, members of the Government and the diplomatic Corps as well as by many other officials. Proceedings went to charity.

HITCHCOCK'S NEXT TO U

Did Director Use His Own Money In Financing?

Suspense over where Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds" would land for distribution has ended. Universal has same. Release is tentative for next April.

Actually, the guesswork all but evaporated when Universal's wedding to Music Corp. of America became final. Producer Hitchcock and MCA president Lew Wasserman are close chums of longstanding. Hitch having been an MCA pactee when the company was in talent representation.

Publicity on "Birds" has included mention that the producer was his own financier, whereas some surmise within the trade has MCA figured for at least part of the investment. Cost of the negative, by the way, has never been bruited by Hitch.

What Ever Happened To Baby Jane?

Powerful acting by Bette Davis and Joan Crawford overcomes tedious beginning; word-of-mouth could make it top grosser.

Hollywood, Oct. 20.

Warner Bros. release of Seven Arts-Associates and Aldrich production. Stars Bette Davis, Joan Crawford. Features Victor Buono. Produced and directed by Robert Aldrich. Screenplay by Lukas Heller, based on novel by Henry Farrell; music, Frank DeVol; camera, Ernest Haller; editor, Michael Luciano; sound, Jack Solomon; asst. director, Tom Connors. Reviewed at Pantages Theatre, Los Angeles, Oct. 18. Running time, 132 MINS.

Many of the prime ingredients of a boxoffice smash—notably a suspenseful story, outstanding director, topflight technicians, and topnotch performances by two female "stars," in the truest sense of the word—are present in Seven Arts' "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" The potential is somewhat hampered, however, by a long introduction that creates less suspense than tedium, and needs drastic pruning. Once past the intro and credits, "Baby Jane" becomes an emotional toboggan ride, stopped only by its horribly obvious outcome.

Teaming Bette Davis and Joan Crawford now seems like a veritable prerequisite to putting Henry Farrell's slight tale of terror on the screen. Although the results heavily favor Miss Davis (and she earns the credit), it should be recognized that the plot, of necessity, allows her to run unfettered through all the stages of oncoming insanity, which the uninhibited lady proceeds to do—like a mad organist, warming up to Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," with, eventually, every stop out.

Whisky-voiced, slovenly, wonderfully and hideously gowned and madeup throughout the film, Miss Davis quickly overcomes a viewer's earlier impatience, finally leaving one emotionally exhausted. Her slip-over into total madness is, possibly, less effective than was Gloria Swanson's in "Sunset Boulevard," but only because the viewer knows all along that it is unavoidable.

Miss Crawford gives a quiet, remarkably fine interpretation of the crippled Blanche, held in emotionally by the nature and temperament of the role. Physically confined to a wheelchair and bed throughout the picture, she has to act from the inside and has her best scenes (because she wisely underplays with Davis) with a maid and those she plays alone. In one superb bit, Miss Crawford reacting to herself on television (actually, clips from the 1934 "Sadie McKee"), makes her face fairly glow with the remembrance of fame past. A genuine heartbreaker.

The slight basic tale is of two sisters, complete opposites. As children, Jane is "Baby Jane" (a travesty on the many Mary Pickford-Shirley Temple imitators), a vaudeville star and the idol of the public. Offstage, she's a vicious brat, domineering her plain, inhibited sister and preening parents. Eventually both girls go into films, where the dark, mousey Blanche blossoms into a beauty and fine actress, and becomes Hollywood's top star. Jane, unable to grow beyond her limited child-talent, works only because Blanche forces studios to give her roles.

As the result of an accident, hazily presented, Blanche is permanently crippled. Jane, dependent on her sister for her livelihood, is forced to care for her, her hate growing with the years. So, also, does the "Baby Jane" illusion until, living it daily, she determines to get rid of Blanche and return to vaudeville wherever that is. Advertising for an accompanist, the sole applicant is a huge, unsmiling lout (a superb off-beat performance by Victor Buono), who sizes up the situation's opportunities and goes along, planning to get enough money to enable him to break the tarnished-silver cord binding him to a possessive mother.

The chain of circumstances grow violence creating violence. To detail the plot beyond this point is meaningless. Director Robert Aldrich has generally made good use of Ernest Haller's camera wizardry and Michael Luciano's expert editing although the latter still has work to do. Once the inept, draggy start is passed, the film's pace builds with ever-growing force.

Occasionally, Aldrich oversteps his generally strong power of suggestion. Instance: a carefully-dropped remark by Jane about a rat, seconds after bringing the already-terrorized Blanche her luncheon tray, tells everything (and here a Hitchcock would have stopped). There is no reason for showing the rodent, and it is repulsive. Aldrich immediately recovers, however, by a brilliant overhead shot of Blanche, endlessly circling in her wheelchair, as certainly trapped as a squirrel in a cage.

Some fast takes throughout the film add much to the suspense, including a pan shot of a billboard advertising an undertaker, and one of a drunken Buono, careening about the hallway in Blanche's wheelchair, almost scaring Jane into her wits.

Beyond the two femme stars and their heavy-weighted male backstop, the supporting cast is merely that, Maidie Norman has some effective moments as the maid, but Anna Lee, Julie Allread, Gina Gillespie and Marjorie Bennett are limited in their roles. One fast shot that might escape many viewers is of the child Blanche's face as she utters a single vengeance-promising remark, to be recalled later during the adult Blanche's confession.

Frank DeVol's score, except for an ear-and-taste violating song, "I've Written a Letter to Daddy," which serves as Jane's leit-motif, is routine. Minor plot inconsistencies pop up, but not enough to detract the hypnotized-with-horror average viewer. A film clip, probably from the 1933 "Parachute Jumper," inserted to establish Jane's ineptness as an actress, fails to do so. Despite its shortcomings, however, "Baby Jane" gives the motion picture screen its best "shocker" since "Psycho," and two fine actress worthy roles. Robe.

Un Dia de Diciembre

(One Day in December)
(MEXICAN)

Mexico City, Oct. 30.

Peliculas Nicionales release of Produccion Cinematografica Mexicana Independiente production. Stars Jorge Martinez de Hoyos, Beatriz Aguirre, Emir Angel Dupeyron; features Luis Aragon, Jacqueline Andere. Directed by Fernando Cortez. Screenplay, Alejandro Verbintzky from original by Roberto Gomez Bolanos; camera, Jorge Sthal. At Mariscala Theatre, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

This is one of the independently produced films, of three made under auspices of the Mexican Assn. of Independent Exhibitors. Original plan by these independents had been to turn out 30 films with accent on quality, but the project has been suspended pending reorganization of association plans.

This film is by no means a festival award product but, surprisingly enough, it is sympathetically directed by Fernando Cortes and develops a Christmas story about an average Mexican boy, full of innocence and who wishes to reaffirm the Xmas spirit within his family and in his neighborhood.

There are no monsters, giants, genl or rides on a magic carpet. Director Fernando Cortez develops a simple story intended for children and nabe patrons, with a full share of tear-jerker situations. Youngster Emir Angel Dupeyron is believable as central character. Beatriz Aguirre is effective as the mother as is Jorge Martinez de Hoyos in role of an understanding father.

This depicts a world without malice, replete with love and compassion. This one merits success in Spanish language markets.

Screenplay, Josefina Vicens and Gilberto Gazcon from original by Jesus Mario Valentin Gazcon; camera, Ignacio Torres. At Alameda-Ariel Theatre, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

This is yet another revolutionary tale, but with the accent on a romantic love story. Singer Luis Aguilar debuts in this as coproducer with Valentin Gazcon.

While not an extraordinary effort, story is pleasantly developed and acting is professional by all concerned. Emil.

Period Of Adjustment

(PANAVISION)

Tennessee Williams' serio-comedy about marital mayhem. Uneven film, but more peaks than valleys. Savvy trade and consumer selling could pay off.

Hollywood, Oct. 12.

Metro release of Lawrence Weingarten production. Stars Tony Franciosa, Jane Fonda, Jim Hutton. Directed by George Roy Hill. Screenplay, Isobel Lennart, based on Tennessee Williams' play; camera, Paul C. Vogel; editor, Fredric Steinkamp; music, Lyn Murray; assistant director, Al Jennings. Reviewed at Beverly Theatre, Oct. 12, '62. Running time, 112 MINS.

Ralph Baitz ..... Tony Franciosa
Isabel Haverstick ..... Jane Fonda
George Haverstick ..... Jim Hutton
Dorothea Baitz ..... Lois Nettleton
Stewart P. McGill ..... John McGiver
Mrs. Alice McGill ..... Mabel Albertson
Desk Sergeant ..... Jack Albertson

"Period of Adjustment" is lower case Tennessee Williams, but it also illustrates that lower case Williams is superior to the upper case of most modern playwrights. The lapses, inconsistencies and unlikelihoods of Williams' stage comedy-drama have not been eradicated in Isobel Lennart's screen adaptation for producer Lawrence Weingarten, but neither, happily, have the insights and substance that enable this examination of modern marriage to involve an audience emotionally with the seemingly comical but fundamentally critical experiences of two young couples on the brink of marital disaster.

"Period of Adjustment" is an uneven film, but at least when it hits its dramatic and comedic peaks, it hits them with impact. Very likely—and understandably—the Metro release will be ballyhooed as Tennessee Williams' first comedy, which could be unfortunate in the respect that many customers may be unprepared for and resultantly confused by its more serious dramatic aspects. The film, therefore, should not be described as an out-and-out, open-and-shut case of comedy. A potential audience must not be thus misled. There should be a tipoff that the picture embodies a more substantial and intimate streak. Handled with salesmanship finesse, it could evolve into a very successful attraction for Metro. The relatively youthful and attractive cast pitches in with some sound performances, and these factors will aid the commercial cause.

Jane Fonda-Jim Hutton and Lois Nettleton-Anthony Franciosa are the two teams whose emotional instability is explored. The tetherness of the first couple—newlyweds—is threatened by the insecurity of the afflicted groom, whose periodically severe outbreaks of the shakes are the manifestation of a long-standing complex wherein he feels compelled to hide behind a false he-man facade for fear of being found inadequate or below par at the supreme sexual moment.

Relations of the second pair are impaired by a more routine issue — in-law interference — coupled with the wife's accurate knowledge she was wed for money, not love—an original mercenary motive disolved, however, after six years of marriage. Doesn't sound very funny, but there are spurts and flashes of good fun, both in dialog and situation. And both stories are resolved happily, ultimately tipping the scales in favor of comedy over drama.

The promising Miss Fonda gives an animated performance and makes an impression, but there are times—particularly at the outset—when animation lapses into overanimation, stripping the character of believability. The character, however, tends to be fuzzy and inconsistent as written, and this may be the major part of Miss Fonda's problem. She does have some fine moments, though. Hutton does generally well by the part of the afflicted husband, although here again there are inconsistencies and contradictions in the character's personality, as penned. Franciosa has the meatiest part, and plays it to the hilt, creating an appealing, attractive, masculine person. Miss Nettleton is solid as the gradually more desirable wife. John McGiver is effective as the intrusive father-in-law. Mabel Albertson excellent as his troublemaking spouse. Jack Albertson has a good scene as a desk sergeant.

George Roy Hill's direction has peaks and valleys. He's coaxed and captured some perfectly timed and perceptive reactions from his players, but at other times he's settled for unnecessary exaggeration, and has failed to detect the fact that a pregnant running gag involving some progressively more intoxicated caroleers has been overworked to the point of diminishing returns. All production credits are favorable, including Paul C. Vogel's photography, Fredric Steinkamp's editing, Lyn Murray's score and the George W. Davis-Edward Carfagno art direction. Tube.

Tanze Mit Mir in Den Morgen

(AUSTRIAN—SONGS—COLOR)

Berlin, Oct. 30.

Nora (German) release of Stadthalle Wien production. With Paul Hoerbiger, Guggi Loewinger, Rex Gildo, Oskar Sima, Lotte Lang. Guest singers: Gerhard Wendland, Camela Corren, Danny Mann, Peter Beil, Peter Hinnen, Chris Howland, Ines Taddio, Kurt Grosskurth and George Dimu. Directed by Peter Doerre. Camera, Hanns Matula; choreography, Willi Dirtl; artistic supervision, Paul Loewinger. At Roxy Palast, West Berlin. Running time, 93 MINS.

Stefan Breuer ..... Rex Gildo
Franz Biedermann ..... Oskar Sima
Daisy, his daughter ..... Evi Kent
Amalia Strassmeier ..... Lotte Lang
Wenzel Kainz ..... Rudolf Carl
Max, his son ..... Udo Juergens

The best that can be said about this Nora release is that it will probably please large segments of the German teenage set. Production cashes in on the popularity of several German disk faves including Gerhard Wendland whose current hit, "Tanze mit mir in den Morgen" supplies the title for this thin-plotted musical. Pic will do well in the German-lingo market but there's nothing special about it to give other than limited chances elsewhere.

Film is a routine mixture of a meagre plot, some familiar situations, a bit of sentiment plus a lineup of guest singers. Story concerns a poor theatre director who struggles along to keep his pitiful enterprise alive; there are the authorities that want to tear down the shabby house; there's a young man among the authorities who falls in love with the director's twist - conscious granddaughter; and it goes more of the same. In the end, the theatre burns down but suddenly a rich American woman, a far-distant relative of the theatre director, shows up and gives him money so that he can buy himself a show-boat. There are several song and dance sequences along the line.

Of the various warblers, only a few rate adult attention. This applies in particular to two of foreign nationality: Carmela Corren, young Israeli chirp, proves that she's a win for the German disk market, and British Chris Howland, who has made himself a name via deejaying, disks, pix and tele in this country, clicks with his amusing "piggy bank" song. Of the actors, only the oldtimers such as Paul Hoerbiger (the theatre director), Josef Egger, Rudolf Carl and especially Oskar Sima give evidence that they know their trade.

Nasstia ..... Lioudmila Ovtchinnikova

One of the rare out-and-out commercial, Russo pix finds its way here, dubbed into French. It is a slight romantic story geared to the dances of the all-femme Beriozka Ballet. Somewhat stodgy and sweet, it still has some good humor with some expert dance sequences. But the film is a limited item at best.

A young optician falls for a dancer in the ballet company and gets a job on a boat to follow them on a tour of the Volga factories and countryside. After some misunderstandings the boy finally is well on the way to getting girl. All this is quite good natured. But the pace and flair for a tuner are missing.

The ballet portion is eyecatching entry as the girls seem to float above the stage. Color is acceptable but the players shape stereotyped if competent. It probably will be sock at home but somewhat too facile for untoward foreign chances in the West. Mosk.

The pernicious influence of widespread credit buying, causing wives to get into debt, corruption, distortion of personal views and a cynical "grab what's going while you can" attitude is a valid, timely theme for a picture. But this one wavers too uncertainly between broad comedy, farce and romantic drama. There is also the jarring introduction of the death of a young wife in a road accident which is a contrived plot point but certainly doesn't fit the general atmosphere of the film.

Jack Trevor Story's screenplay has many amusing moments, but overall it is untidy and does not develop the personalities of some of the main characters sufficiently. Extraneous situations are dragged in without helping the plot development overmuch. Jay Lewis has directed with verve. Also there are some very useful performances, okay artwork, satisfactory lensing by Jack Hillyard and a lively enough score by Ron Grainer. Where the film falls down is in its sheer superficiality and that few of the characters can be taken seriously, or beget sympathy.

Ian Hendry plays a smart aleck, philandering, doublecrossing tallyman who, with two illegitimate babies to his discredit, still finds that the easiest way to bluff his femme patrons into getting hocked up to their eyebrows in installment buying is via the boudoir. The character has a certain brash, breezy assurance, but no charm. And that's the way Hendry plays it, to the point of irritation.

In most of the film he is trying to patch up a row that he has had with his steady girl friend. For the remainder, he is cheating his employer (John Gregson), a real estate agent and a string of creditors. He is also not above a little blackmail to further his progress with his boss. It is Hendry's first major film and, on this showing, judgment must be reserved as to his future.

June Ritchie, as the main girl in the case, confirms the promising impression she made in her debut in "A Kind of Loving," but she can do little in this cardboard role of wronged young mistress. Two established players, John Gregson and Geoffrey Keen, confidently handle the roles of Hendry's ambitious, conniving boss and an equally ambitious, scheming and pompous real estate man.

Playing Keen's simple, humiliated wife is Liz Fraser. This film sets up some sort of a record in that Miss Fraser, till now mostly engaged in frothy bosomy, undress roles, keeps her clothes on throughout while most of the other femmes seem to be stripping at the drop of Hendry's hat. Miss Fraser is anxious to break away from pinup roles and this small, but effective performance (she's the woman who gets bumped off) proves that she deserves more significant, worthy roles in the future.

Nyree Dawn Porter and Justine Lord, two of the salesman's willing bedroom victims, are both well equipped for their roles. Judith Furze, Joan Heal, Thelma Ruby and Bridget Armstrong chip in

O'SEAS FESTIVALS' LEFTIST BIAS

Calls '63 Fest a Hollywood Tonic

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Big foreign press attendance of the 1963 International Film Festival, which Screen Producers Guild will sponsor as the first Hollywood-based event, is expected, according to Guild prexy Lawrence Weingarten, who said the proposed fete climaxes five years of recommendations within the SPG.

This in turn should give Hollywood and the American film industry a "much-needed shot in the arm," another producer pointed out. Actually, according to this latter source, the SPG move was triggered by realization that Hollywood has been losing out in public consciousness as the film capital of the world, and such a film festival should help restore colony to its former pinnacle.

Entries and artists from every film producing center in the world will be invited to festival, which will include telepix as well as theatrical motion pictures. Competitions will be conducted and prizes awarded in all creative categories of creative filmmaking, Weingarten reported. Walter M. Mirisch and John Houseman are co-chairmen of the American Film Festival committee.

Producers, Weingarten pointed out, "unlike the weather, to do something about a film festival everybody for years has been talking about."

Time and place will be decided within the next few weeks, as well as duration of event, which probably will run approximately two weeks, corresponding to such recognized fetes as those held in Cannes and Venice. Weingarten noted that it will be held at a time that "won't conflict with the Academy ceremonies," likely in late summer or early fall.

ANICA Refutes Leftist Paper Prophesy Of Woes Ahead for Italo Film Trade

Rome, Oct. 30.

Talk of "recession" and "crisis" in the Italian motion picture industry has been officially denied here by ANICA, the Italo industry association. Replying to a report in a Rome newspaper, ANICA stated that "no economic recession, nor an unfavorable development of programs, activities, and financial conditions of certain companies operating in this (productive sector) existed.

The ANICA statement noted that despite the unfavorable development of the world film business, the initiative and inventiveness of Italian producers, directors, and technicians has helped the Italian film 50% of its local market, as well as cop a sizable rise in export net.

True, says ANICA, that certain "improvised" production initiatives have sprung up marginally in the wake of the Italo development, creating difficulties in the local production setup, but ANICA has already begun "action tending to contain the current production inflation, though guaranteeing full freedom of initiative to those outfits offering sufficient guarantees."

In conclusion, the industry statement denied published reports of crisis, pointing as well to foreign admission of success—artistic and economic—recently achieved by Italian pix.

Detailed report which precipitated the local fracas was run by a leftwing Rome daily, "Pease Sera."

Article named several reasons for "recession" threat. First, it stated that producer Dino DeLaurentiis had returned from the US recently with a "rather disappointed" outlook, and had already cancelled two major projects: "An Italian in America" and "The Bible"—the latter because a small Italian company had already gone ahead and was shooting a film in Sardinia based on the Holy Scriptures.

Titanus, another Italo major, was according to "Pease Sera" biding its time while waiting for returns from two recent investments, "Sodom and Gemorrah" and "The Leopard," and had recently, in an ostensible economy move, dropped directors Elio Petri, Franco Brusati, Franco Rossi,, Carlo Gregoretti, and Alfredo Giannetti from its contract rosters.

Vides Productions, still per the leftwing sheet, had stopped production plans for four pix to be directed by Duccio Tessari, Francesco Maselli, Pietro Germi, and Alfredo Giannetti. Similar cancellations, the paper said, were also in the books for Alfredo Bini's Arco Film, Morris Ergas' Zebra (which it stated had already closed shop), Documento Film, and even for Cineriz, which after recently winding the new Federico Fellini film was stopping further production until spring.

Reasons given by the published report for the "recession" are to be found (1) in Italo overproduction in recent years; (2) in Hollywood's "counteroffensive"; (3) inflation of fly-by-night production firms in Italy which live on IOU's and credit: thus leading, inevitably, to the recent contraction of Bank credit for film ventures. TV and ever-rising admission tabs were given as other reasons for the "recession" since denied by official industry sources here.

Levine-Lightstone In British Talks Re '63 Product

Embassy Pictures president Joseph E. Levine and exec v.p. Leonard Lightstone are in London on diverse matters. They're holding pre-production talks with star Stanley Baker and director Cy Endfield re "Zulu," color epic to film next spring in Africa, and additionally discussing a second project with Baker, nature of which is undisclosed.

Apart from this relationship, the Levine mission may also effect deals on three other British properties, these calling for the American distrib to finance in whole or part.

Also in mind is a Barnum-like campaign, his first in Blighty, which Levine plans to personally conduct for his "Sky Above, Mud Below." (Incidentally, Embassy has since acquired additional territorial rights to this feature documentary.) Per formula, this would embrace exhib "showmanship" luncheons and the rest of the patented razzmatazz.

On the home front, meanwhile, the company appears to have a strong contender in the Italo "Divorce—Italian Style." Initial hardticket engagement for "Long Day's Journey Into Night" at the Tower East, N. Y., is also regarded with cheer, having been launched with one of the heaviest ad splurges ever accorded an arty in Manhattan.

Distrib's "Boccaccio '70," strong in its initial art runs, this week opened its first batch of dubbed dates, some 150. Expectation is for an ultimate 8,000-10,000 dubbed situations domestically, which would be a new high, and additionally impressive in view of pic's condemnation by the Catholic Legion of Decency. Significantly, in this light, the film is getting exceptional booking support from most of the major circuits.

Fred Zinnemann will produce-direct "Killing a Mouse on Sunday" for Columbia Pictures," as joint effort of his Highland Films and Anthony Quinn's (to star) Antone Productions.

MANNHEIM TOUGH IN STANDARDS

By HANS HOEHN

Mannheim, Oct. 30.

The 11th International Mannheim Film Week (Oct. 15-20) boasted an excellent organization but bulk of the entries was of meagre quality. This goes in particular for short subjects. The jury headed by British Thorold Dickinson acted accordingly. Although this is primarily a short film festival (52 shorts and seven full-length pix competed), none of the traditional Mannheim Gold Ducats was given to a short. The trophies went to the full-length features "I Nuovi Angeli" (Italy), "Bad Boys" (Japan), "Dilemma" (Denmark), "Adieu, Philippine" (France) and the French documentary, "The Time of the Ghetto."

Outstanding Polish feature, "Halloween," written and directed by Tadeusz Konwicki, wasn't given a Ducat. Many considered it the artistically best film of the whole festival. The Grand Prix, a cash award ($2,500) donated by the inhabitants of Mannheim, went to Denmark's "Dilemma." This one deals with the racial prejudice in South Africa. Quite obviously, the jury gave pic's theme priority. Artistically, "Dilemma" falls considerably short of Poland's "Halloween."

Only two U.S. shorts were entered at the Mannheim festival, "With Music Ring" (USIS) and "Forget Me Not" (Bert Brown) of which the latter was shown outside competition. The former, a short on the Mormon Tabernacle Choir and its conductor Conchie, was hissed by some segments of the audience. Apparently, they found pic of mediocre quality. Contrastingly, the Cuban short, "People On the Shore," found applause though probably the festival's most primitive entry.

George Wallach, film and tele officer of the American Embassy (Bad Godesberg) who picked "With Music Ring" for Mannheim left no doubt that the attitude of part of the audience disappointed him. He also said this: "The Americans are losing interest in such film festivals. Whatever we exhibit, we face influential prejudiced groups. American films have repeatedly become victims of delegates and juries with leftist leanings. It's certainly possible that we are going to skip this or that festival if this trend continues."

(It's often been remarked of European festivals that a Soviet war film is only a patriotic film but an American film of the same sort is rapped for "glorification of war" or "corny" or whatever.)

Mannheim's biggest booing and hissing, however, came on account of a number of German pix. Ironically enough, the one disliked most was "The Premium," a short on young factory workers for which Kurt J. Fischer, the former (for nine years) head of the festival, had written the script. "A Man Is a Man," a German parody on the French "new wave," also garnered hisses and even "Fie!" calls. Klaus Hebecker, a German film journalist, had written the script for this one while Fischer was film's production manager. Both shorts, may have deserved the negative reaction as they are pretty primitive.

In all, more than 20 German items took part in the Mannheim rodeo. Lineup included around a dozen from the socalled "Group of Young Germans," a bunch of (mostly Munich-based) hopefuls. This group flopped too. It walked off with remarkably poor reviews for efforts.

Two of the better German films were "That Only Happens In California," a short on traffic in Los Angeles made by Hans Juergen Priebe (not a "new-waver") and "Alvorada—Breaking-up in Brazil," a full-length documentary in breathtakingly beautiful colors by Hugo Niebeling.

This report would be incomplete without mention of the cinema enthusiasm of the Mannheim population. Here may be the most film-conscious festival city. Screenings in the Scala (more than 700 seats) were daily sold out. There were daily more than a hundred people who were unable to buy in. The festival management made it possible that Mannheim pupils could see the films too. School authorities rented 12 downtown cinemas and the cinema visits were regarded as part of schooling.

Goldwyn's Donation

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Samuel Goldwyn, as usual, kicked off annual Motion picture Permanent Charities drive with $30,000 donation to spearhead the '63 campaign, industry's yearly all-comprehensive charity shellout. Last year's $1,287,189 is expected to be topped this year.

Gordon Stuhlberg is campaign chairman.

Frisco Fest Chief In Pique Reaction To L.A.'s Own Fete

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Irving M. (Bud) Levin, director of International Film Festival here, is burned over decision of Screen Producers Guild to stage an International Festival in Hollywood next year. Levin has been burned for six years now (his Sixth Annual festival starts tomorrow (31) because Hollywood has steadily refused to enter its product.

Levin flipped as follows: "After six years of calculated non-participation in the San Francisco International Film Festival, Hollywood is finally admitting its stupidity. Instead of joining with the rest of the world in San Francisco, it wants to play ball in its own back yard. This will not be the last San Francisco Festival."

LOCAL PRESSURE SELL BEHIND 20TH'S 'SODOM'

Twentieth-Fox's Titanus acquisition, "The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah," is not being sold for the family trade, rather to the teenagers and "more mature buyers," 20th veep Charles Einfeld told an exhibitor seminar in New York Monday (29). Presiding at the seminar, also addressed by domestic sales chief Bob Conn, was eastern division manager Abe Dickstein.

According to Einfeld, who has just wound up a crosscountry tour on behalf of the pic, "Sodom" will be backed by a campaign costing $1,000,000, almost all of which will be spent at the local level. Though it thus won't be a "national campaign, he said, its total effect will be that.

Pic is being backed by an RCA Victor soundtrack album, double-page newspaper spreads and ads in the Sunday supplements which will cite local theatre dates. Pic will also be sold via the fan mags and such "special audience" mags as Stag, Cavalier, Gent, Male, Climax and True Detective. Just before its Jan. 25 national release, it will also be sold via minutes spots for five night's running on NBC-TV's Tonight show.

Einfeld stressed to the approximately 50 exhibs were in attendance that all this would be in addition to regular co-op ads company would place with theatres. In language of ad trade, he estimated campaign would result in total of 1,176,000 "impressions."

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Screen Producers Guild appears to have its work cut out for it in Hollywood's first International Film Festival, which the Guild last week stated it would hold in 1963. While reaction in the industry generally reflects support of a festival, there seems to be certain hesitancy in endorsing the SPG project unqualifiably.

This lack of all-out support stems particularly from two points (1) how such a festival is handled, and (2) whether it should be held in Hollywood or Washington, D.C.

Y. Frank Freeman, board chairman of Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, speaking personally since he said no AMPP meeting yet had been called, declared over weekend that such a festival, if all details "could be resolved, would be of inestimable value to the industry."

Freeman said: "I don't care who suggests it, whether the Producers Guild, or the directors, or writers o whatever group, I am for it if it is good for the industry. I think everybody will get behind it if it's set up right. I don't know the retails of the Producers Guild's plan, but I feel the Guild has made a very important suggestion which can be of inestimable value to the industry."

Directors Were First

George Sidney, prexy of Directors Guild of America, however, pointed out that the national board of his organization last April voted unanimously to endorse a U.S.-sponsored international film fete to be held in City of Washington. While declining to offer any official reaction of the DGA to the SPG's announced 1963 festival here, he said a proper spokesman would be Fred Zinnemann, chairman of the Hollywood Guild Film Festival Committee, which was set up last year upon suggestion of George Stevens Jr., chief of the film division of the U.S. Information Agency. Committee, composed of two reps each of the four creative guilds, started functioning early this year when it selected U.S. entries for the Cannes, Ven-

MIXED-NATIONALITIES JURY AT FRISCO FEST

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

A five-man jury will judge Sixth Annual International Film Festival here opening Wed. (31). Included are:

Lewis Milestone, reeent director of "Mutiny on the Bounty."

Leopoldo Torre-Nilsson of Argentina, director: "Summerskin." "End of Innocence."

Kashiko Kawakita of Japan, juror at Cannes, Venice, Berlin this year. Wife of Nagamasa Kawakita, managing director of Unijapan Film.

Jiri Weiss of Czechoslovakia, director, "Romeo, Juliet and Darkness," SF winner in 1960.

Darius Milhaud, French composer, who will also present special award for best original musical score.

Festival begins at Metro Theatre with Bulgarian entry "Sun and Shadow," directed by Rangel Vulchanov.

Opening gloomed by timing of announcement of Hollywood first international fest next year, but Irving Levin's plans for future Frisco festivals unchanged.

Top billers on hand: Ammanuele Riva, star of French entry, "Therese Desqueyroux" (and of "Hiroshima, Mon Amour"); Valentina Malyavina, lead in Russia's "Ivan's Childhood"; Norma Angelica and Alma Delia Fuentes of Mexico, and Janet Margolin of Hollywood's Indie, "David and Lisa." Paul Heller, latter's producer, also here, with Keir Dullea.

Fete runs two weeks, 23 entries.

L.A. Uneven; 'Gigot' Great $10,000, 'Lolita' Good $25,000, 'Pigeon' 21G; 'Day' Sock 22G; 'Grimm' 20G, 12th

Los Angeles, Oct. 30.

Local firstruns continue spotty this week with holdovers and long-runs providing the biggest strength. Among the incomers, "Lolita," in first general release, expected a good $25,000 or over playing four theatres. Even stronger is "Gigot," which looks to get a great $10,000 on exclusive playdate at the Four Star.

"Pigeon That Took Rome," playing first general run, looks fair $21,000 in five houses. "Brothers Grimm" should hit a big $20,000 in 12th round at Warner Hollywood. "Music Man" looks $15,000 in 14th at Hollywood Paramount.

"Longest Day" is eyeing a socko $22,000 in third session at Carthay, a spurt from second week. Also on hardticket. "West Side Story" shapes big $18,000 in Chinese 46th stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Four Star (UATC) (868; $1.50-$2)—"Gigot" (20th). Wow $10,000. Last week, "I Like Money" (20th) (3d wk), $1,400.

'Convicts' Fair $9,500, Frisco; 'Grimm' 21G, 12

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Firstrun trade here generally is on downside this stanza as the Cuban crisis hit home. Harticketers are doing best at the wicket Of the new entrants the best bet is "Convicts 4," which looks fair at Golden Gate. "Brothers Grimm" shapes big in 12th session at Orpheum. "West Side Story" also shapes big in 46th-final week at the United Artists.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; $1.25-$1.50)—"Convicts 4" (AA) and "Hell to Eternity" (AA) (reissue). Fair $9,500. Last week, "No Man Is Island" (U) and "Battle Hymn" (U) (reissue), $9,000.

'Day' Mighty 17G In Uneven Det.

Detroit, Oct. 30.

Two newcomers are putting vigor into an otherwise sluggish setup here this week. Auto show hurt last week. "Longest Day" shapes mighty at the Mercury. "Chapman Report" is rated brisk at Madison.

Reissued "Roman Holiday" and "Sabrina" are producing an okay return at Grand Circus. "If Man Answers" looks fair in second at Michigan. "Brothers Grimm" in 13th session at Music Hall continues great.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox Theatre of Detroit Corp.) (5,041; $1.25-$1.49)—"I Spit on Grave" (Indie) and "Ninth Bullet" (Indie) (4th wk). Down to okay $9,000. Last week, $11,500.

Mercury (United Motion Theatre Co.) (1,468; $1.50-$3) — "Longest Day" (20th). Wow $17,000. Last week, second-run.

'Requiem' Smash $7,500, Prov.; 'Tarzan' Okay 8G

Providence, Oct. 30.

State shapes okay this week with "Tarzan Goes To India." But standout is Elmwood's "Requiem for a Heavyweight," rated socko. Strand is fair with "Notorious Landlady," third "Almost Angels" is on the nice side at Albee. First real snow of season Friday (26) hurt trade.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 75-$1)—"Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue) and "Almost Angels" (BV) (3d wk). Happy $5,000. Second was $4,500.

Elmwood (Snider) (724; 90-$1.25)—"Requiem For A Heavyweight" (Col). Socko $7,500. Last week, "Meet Me In St. Louis" (MGM) and "Day at Races" (MGM) (reissues), $9,000 in nine-days.

State (Loew) (3,200; 75-$1)—"Tarzan Goes To India" (MGM) and "Damon and Pythias" (MGM). $8,000. Last week, "Pressure Point" (UA) and "War Hunt" (UA), $5,000.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; 75-$1) — "Notorious Landlady" (Col) and "Mr. Hobbs Takes Vacation" (20th). Fair $5,000. Last week, "Interns" (Col) and best of Enemies" (Col) (subruns), $4,500.

'Gigot' Smash $12,000, Philly; 'Requiem' Loud 17G; 'Day' $21,500, 3d

Philadelphia, Oct. 30.

The Cuban situation mowed down firstrun receipts midweek but trade picked up over the weekend. Result is a quite spotty biz picture here currently. "Requiem For Heavyweight" looms big at the Viking, with long lines Saturday night. "Gigot" is rated smash at the Trans-Lux with an unexpected strong femme play after a modest start.

"Brothers Grimm" still is nice in 14th session at the Boyd while "Longest Day" is rated socko in third round at Goldman.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (622; $1.20-$1.80)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (3d wk). Hep $10,000. Last week, $13,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,536; $2-$2.75)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (14th wk). Nice $10,500. Last week, $11,000.

Fox (Milgram) (2,200; 95-$1.80)

War News Sloughs Chi Biz Even Tho 'Requiem' Hot $27,000; 'Answers' Good 15G; 'Day' Big 22G, 'Boccaccio' 14G

Chicago, Oct. 30.

Patrons are staying home in droves to keep track of the international situation via tele and radio. This is putting a crimp in Chi deluxe film biz. A shortage of new product isn't helping trade either. However "Requiem For A Heavyweight" is taking a sock $27,000 first round decision at Oriental. Monroe reissue tandem of "Female and Flesh" and "3 Blondes In His Life" is rated okay.

Last week's arty entries are sharing in the general decline, but have slid proportionally less. "A Kind of Loving" is registering a smart second Esquire session, and "Operation Snatch" is bright on first holdover second at Cinema. "Shoot The Piano Player" is pulling a neat second Surf round.

"If A Man Answers" is ringing up a good third Chicago stanza, "Very Private Affair" is frisky in its Loop third. Woods pair of the oldie "Lady and Tramp" and "Almost Angels" looks good in fourth frame. 'Boccaccio '70" shapes torrid for United Artists fifth session.

"Longest Day" is pacing the hardticketers with a wow third week in the making at the Roosevelt. "Brothers Grimm" is quiet in its 11th McVickers canto while "West Side Story" is fine in its Todd 36th.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (495; $1.25-$1.80)—"Unsent Letter" (Artkino) (2d wk). Okay $2,200. Last week, $3,800.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; $1.25-$1.80)—"If A Man Answers" (U) (3d wk). Good $15,000. Last week, $21,000.

Cinema (Stern) (500; $1.50)—"Operation Snatch" (Cont) (2d wk). Good $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

'Sword' Dull $5,500 In Buff.; 'Lady' Big 11G, 2d

Buffalo, Oct. 30.

Newcomers are not much help currently, with overall trade very spotty. "Sword of Conqueror" looms light at the Buffalo. Some reissues are not doing so well although "Lady and Tramp," an oldie, is rated big in third round at Lafayette. "Horror Hotel" shapes full in first at Paramount.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 90-$1.25)—"Sword of Conquerer" (UA) and "Hero Island" (UA). Dull $5,500 in 6 days. Last week, "Pressure Point" (UA) and "Court Martial" (UA). $5,600.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 90-$1.25)—"Carry on Teacher" (Gov) (3d wk). Okay $2,400 or less. Last week $2,500.

Cuban Crisis Nips D.C. But 'Phaedra' Wow 9G; 'Day' Still Great 15G

Washington, Oct. 30.

Cuban crisis is making a sharp dent in film biz this session. "Phaedra" on opener at Dupont is the only picture coming up to par with a wow frame. "Longest Day" slipped slightly at Ontario but looks smash again in third round.

"Lady and Tramp" and "Almost Angels" shape hefty at Capitol in second. "Boccaccio '70" still is boff at Trans-Lux in fourth.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador-Metropolitan (SW) (1,480; 1,000; $1-$1.49)—"Chapman Report" (WB) (3d wk). Fair $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

'Affair' Okay $12,000, St. L.; 'Galahad' 6½G, 3d

St. Louis, Oct. 30.

Too many reissues on just opened bills is slowing up overall gross total here this session. The Cuban crisis hurt midweek, with the whole city suffering. "Roman Holiday" with "Proud and Profane," oldie combo at the St. Louis, shapes mild, but "Kid Galahad" looms good in third at Esquire. "Lady and Tramp," on reissue, teamed with "Almost Angels" looks okay on moveover to the Mid-City.

'Requiem' Sock 8G, Mpls.; 'Day' 13G, 2d

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

"Requiem for a Heavyweight" stands out as the most important in a cluster of newcomers, three of which have gone into nabe houses. It's off to a fast start with a big opener at Lyric. Other fresh entries winning attention are two British comedies, "Carry On, Teacher" and "Only Two Can Play," bowing in uptown.

"Longest Day" shapes sockeroo in second session at the Mann. "Almost Angels" looks dandy in second State round. "Brothers Grimm" looms boffo in 11th stanza at the Cooper. Reflecting the product situation is the fact that the Loop firstrun Century is in its second week of reissues. It has "Spartacus" for an okay session.

War Clouds Bop B'way B.O. But 'Candidate' Boff 48G, 'Bury' Hep 16G, 'Requiem' Smash $35,000, 2d

The Cuban crisis, which hit business badly last Wednesday and Thursday, is taking its toll at Broadway firstruns this session. Rain mixed with the season's first snow last Friday (26) was regarded as little help although trade perked up a little at night. By Saturday and Sunday, with the war threat over at least temporarily, the boxoffice began a recovery.

Two newcomers are doing well. "Manchurian Candidate" hit boffo $48,000 or close in first session, daydating the Astor and Trans-Lux 85th St. Pic also is playing Premiere Showcase houses. "We'll Bury You," undoubtedly helped by the Cuban crisis, hit a lusty $16,000 or thereabouts on initial week at the Forum.

"Requiem For a Heavyweight" still is smash with $35,000 in first holdover round daydating the Criterion and the new arty Kips Bay. "Chapman Report" looks like $28,500 in second week daydating the Victoria and Trans-Lux 52d St.

"Gigot," with stageshow, also was hurt and likely will wind its fifth and final stanza at the Music Hall with an okay $110,000. New stageshow and "Gypsy" move in tomorrow (Thurs.). "No Man Is an Island" looks only $13,000 in third round at the Palace, with "Two Before Zero" replacing today (Wed.).

"Very Private Affair" is swinging low in final nine days of fifth week at the State. House closes for previews of "Mutiny on Bounty" early next week, with pic to open Nov. 8. "Period of Adjustment" goes into the Paramount today (Wed.).

"Longest Day" looks to hold with wham $33,000 or close in current (4th) session at the Warner. "Barabbas" looms smash $28,000 in third round at the DeMille. It also was hurt by the Cuban crisis.

"Brothers Grimm" held with big $22,000 in 12th stanza ended last Sunday (28) at the Cinerama (formerly Capitol). "West Side Story" shapes big $28,000 in 54th session at the Rivoli, being helped by one extra performance.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; $1.25-$2)—"Manchurian Candidate" (UA) (2d wk). First round ended yesterday (Tues.) was boffo $33,000 or near despite playing many other houses, including Trans-Lux 85th St.

Cinerama (Loew) (1,552; $1.50-$3.50)—"Brothers Grimm" (MGM) (13th wk). The 12th stanza finished Sunday (28) was big $22,000 after $25,000 in 11th week.

Criterion (Moss) (1,520; $1.25-$2.50) — "Requiem for Heavyweight" (Col) (3d wk). First holdover stanza completed yesterday (Tues.) was socko $27,000 or close after $36,000 opener. Daydating with Kips Bay.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; $1.50-$3.50)—"Barabbas" (Col) (3d wk). This week ending today (Wed.) looks like great $28,000 or near after $33,000 for second.

Cuban Crisis Hurts Biz; 'Day' Still First, 'Grimm' 2d, 'Gigot' 3d, 'Requiem' 4th, 'Story' 5th

The Cuban crisis, which clipped grosses the middle of last week, will make for offish biz in current session across the country. Colder weather in many sections, however, was a plus factor, and easing of the tensions over the weekend helped.

"Longest Day" (20th) again is champion, the same as last week. It is playing in nine key cities covered by VARIETY and is going great guns in all of them. "Brothers Grimm" (MGM), second a week ago, again is finishing No. 2.

"Gigot" (20th), just getting around extensively this week, is capturing third place. "Requiem For Heavyweight" (Col) is taking fourth money.

"West Side Story" (UA), which long has been high on the list or in No. 1 spot, is finishing fifth. "Chapman Report" (WB) is sixth. "Almost Angels" (BV) is landing in seventh position.

"Is a Man Answers" (U) is pushing up to eighth place. "Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par) will be ninth while "Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) is taking 10th spot.

"No Man Is Island" (U) is finishing 11th. It was 10th last week. "Very Private Affair" (MGM) rounds out the Top 12 pictures. "Waltz of Toreadors" (Cont) and "Divorce, Italian Style" (Embassy) are the runnerup pix.

"Phaedra" (Lope), one of the brighter new pix, shapes wow in both Washington and Boston, and still is great in N.Y. on holdover. "Panic in Year Zero" (AI) is rated good in Boston. "Tower of London" (UA), also new, shapes fine in Denver. "White Slave Ship" (AI), also a newie, is socko in Omaha.

"Touch of Mink" (U), still loud in Toronto, looks good in N.Y. and L.A. "Lolita" (MGM), on first general release in L.A., shapes big.

"Sky Above" (Embassy), okay in Balto, looms slow in Detroit. "Spartacus" (U), on reissue, is rated okay in Minneapolis.

"Barabbas" (Col) continues torrid on extended-runs in Toronto, Boston and N.Y. "Interns" (Col), okay in Boston, looks nice in Toronto.

"Carry On Teacher" (Gov), okay in Buffalo, looms good in Balto, Cincy and Minneapolis. "Matter of Who" (Herts) is smart in L.A.

"Tarzan Goes to India" (MGM) shapes oke in Providence. "Lady and Tramp" (BV) (reissue), which is usually paired with "Almost Angels" on dates this week, is landing big money playing solo in Buffalo.

Mastroianni, Italy's Newest Grade-A Export, Wants to See 'All U.S. Cliches,' Act with Kim

By JACK PITMAN

Marcello Mastroianni, in New York last week on a maiden visit to the New World, remarked on such things as the beauty of Kim Novak, the beauty of Manhattan, and his willingness to work in American productions—provided.

He has offers from Yank filmmakers, he said, and is agreeable on condition that the plot be "modern" and employ him in a natural way, the latter as acknowledgement that his English is virtually non-existent. If this be a handicap in the onward-and-upward scheme, he is for now "too lazy" to do much about it.

Sparked by "La Dolce Vita," he has become a stellar name in the Italian cinema, an export attraction of rising impact. He was thought, on first encounter, to be prematurely grey, until it was explained that his locks underwent a tint job for a just-completed role in "Fellini 8½," by the same wizard who directed him in "Dolce."

A VARIETY man ushered into his suite high in the Sherry-Netherland Hotel found Mastroianni at a window absorbed by the skyline and Fifth Ave. momentum. His mood, relayed by an able interpreter, was "enthusiastic." The star had "always thought" Manhattan to be "cold and grey," but as of his first morning (a sunny one) in the city was finding it "warm and beautiful." Added his translator: "It makes the heart melt."

Talking on, Mastroianni sounded much the tourist, responding that he hoped to see "all the American cliches . . . everything one has dreamed of." His anticipation was running high—he had, in fact, not slept since his Pan-Am jet touched down at Idlewild the night (Sun.) before.

Of those many offers to do Yank films, he could not pinpoint them from memory, but one that he could identify had come from Darryl Zanuck for the film version of an Italo novel dealing with Italians in wartime Africa. No more on the status of this gambit other than it's tempting and under consideration.

More immediate expectation is that he will agree to do another pic of Italian origin for Joseph E. Levine. His visit here, pertinently, is to help plug a Levine import, "Divorce—Italian Style," the comedy which stars Mastroianni. Schedule called for splitting a fortnight between N.Y. and Los Angeles.

Star said his own image on the screen did not fascinate him to the extent of repeated sittings, nor does he much postmortem his portrayals. He is otherwise an ardent filmgoer (he digs plays, too—his career started on the stage) and asserts a catholic taste for the medium, Yank oaters included.

Likes Anglo 'Irony'

Of current cinema modes, his countrymen impress him by their "modernity of themes," the problems expressed in the work of Fellini, Visconti, Antonioni, et al. He admires the "atmosphere and irony" of the British moderns, while he is taken by the actors and "showmanship" of American production. He is wry on the French, who impress him "by the effort of each director to appear more intelligent than the next one."

Could he cite an American actress with whom he'd like to appear? Not one but at least three—Natalie Wood, Susan Hayward and Kim Novak, adding through interpretation that Miss Novak "is so beautiful."

Mastroianni is married to the former Flora Carabella, an actress, but increasingly idle by choice, though now and then prone to small appearances in French productions. They will come to the U.S. next October with an Italian company scheduled for Broadway in a pair of Goldoni plays to be directed by Luchino Visconti. Latter has primary identification as a film director for Yank audiences, but has also achieved much renown in Italian legit, and in fact previously directed Mastroianni for the stage.

On the private side, the star confirms reports of an unspectacular off-screen existence devoted to family (he has a 10-year-old daughter) and pals, enjoying such diversions as the discovery of offbeat restaurants. He does not feel obliged to dig in at home when not working, however. "If you stay home, nothing happens. If you go out, it's just the same, but something might happen."

Colosseum Tactics Re Film Offices

Colosseum of Motion Picture Salesmen, the union of exchange bookers, is checking information that nonunion men have been engaged in telephonic sell of pix in certain territories. Union has asked members to file reports on any instances of the practice.

Partinently, the union's contract expires tomorrow (Thurs.), and evidence of contractual violations by the film companies would of course, make for bargaining leverage.

Related rumor is that the union, its membership shrunken by deep cutbacks on exchange personel, is contemplating merger with the frontoffice locals.

Offbeat Scoring in N.Y. For Denmark-Animated 'Outer Space' Feature

Boston, Oct. 30.

Boston-based producer Norman Prescott returned here from Europe, where he put the finishing editing touches on his animated film feature, "Pinocchio's Adventure in Outer Space." Film is a 75 min., animated wide screen, Eastman color production.

Scoring of the picture and sound effects will be completed at Titra Sound Studios, New York. Scoring will take an estimated three months because of the intricate electronic sounds to be created. Arrangements and original sound track will be done entirely with tympani and electronic music creating an unusual sound effect for the outer space sequences.

Walter Scharf, who just completed the Jerry Lewis picture, "It's Only Money," will do scoring. Picture was made in Denmark. It will be ready for summer release, 1963.

Prescott said he had completed a deal in Europe with Editions Du-Lombard, Belgium, for publishing, printing and distribution of hard cover, soft cover and comic books, based on the film, for distribution throughout the world in 18 languages.

Prescott said he has not shown film to any distribs yet, and will await its final completion before doing so.

Bostonians to TOA

Boston, Oct. 30.

A big delegation of Boston film men head for the National Theatre Owners of America convention in Miami Nov. 6-10.

Among those making the trip: Julian Rifkin, prexy IENE, New England TOA unit head of Rifkin Drive-ins; Malcolm Green, Interstate Theatres, first vice president; Edward Redstone, Redstone Drive-ins, second vice president, and official of NAC; Albert Lourie, Lourie Theatres; Al Daytz, Daytz Theatres; Nelson Wright, Daytz Theatres; Joseph Cohen, booker, buyer; Richard Smith, prexy, Smith Management Corp.; Sam Pinanski, prexy ATC Theatres, and past national TOA prexy; Arthur Lockwood, Lockwood & Gordon Theatres, also a past prexy TOA; Henry Gaudet, Weirs, N.H. Drive-in; Carl Goldman, executive secretary IENE.

Canada's Woman Censor

Regina, Sask., Oct. 30.

Miss M. A. MacPherson has been named chief film censor for Saskatchewan. She is the first woman to receive such an appointment at either the provincial or national level in Canada.

She succeeds William E. Murray, who died July 24. She had been assistant censor since 1950.

From 1958 to 1960 Miss MacPherson was vice-chairman of the Canadian Film Censors Conference.

'Morality' No Issue To Most Theatres, States Shurlock

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Theatre operators are far more interested in (1) quantity of product and (2) lack of good comedies than they are in the moral tone of Hollywood releases, Geoffrey Shurlock, Motion Picture Assn. production Code Administrator, reported upon his return from the east, where he testified at N.Y. state film classification hearing.

Shurlock, en route home, boarded a Greyhound but and made a number of grassroot stopovers in various towns and cities as far west as Dallas, gabbing unofficially with theatremen on stopovers.

"There was hardly a word on the moral tone of Hollywood product," he said, "but plenty on the need for comedies and generally poor boxoffice on sordid pictures."

Exec made stops in Williamsburg, Richmond, Memphis, New Orleans, Houston and Dallas. Strongest complaint was voiced in New Orleans, he said, where one exhib reported a furore over "Splendor in the Grass" ads. The Natalie Wood-Warren Beatty embrace came out so dark he seemed to be colored, with expected result at boxoffice.

In Richmond, he declared, the big problem was a one-woman campaign against a Brigitte Bardot cut-out. In Memphis, last objection was raised five years ago, over "Baby Doll."

"Generally," Shurlock pointed out, "I got no more than a blank look—people seemed much less worried about morals than quantity and lack of good comedies."

ERNEST SANDS INTO SALES BERTH AT AA

Ernest Sands is switching from Astor Pictures to Allied Artists as domestic sales manager, effective Monday (5). This is the post relinquished a short time ago by Maurice (Razz) Goldstein when latter moved to Warner Bros. Post was interimly filled by AA exec v.p. Ed Morey.

Sands joined Astor a year ago as sales chief, after 12 years in various sales positions with WB.

FARCICAL TONE APART

Legion Is Father Dubious Re 'Divorce—Italian Style'

The Roman Catholic Legion of Decency has given a separate classification of Embassy Pictures' Italo import, "Divorce—Italian Style," which has to do with a Sicilian nobleman's attempts in no divorce country to murder his wife so he can marry a younger woman.

Calling the film a "somewhat irrelevant satire on Italian marriage legislation, LOD says that although its comical and farcial tone removes "any serious concern about the moral implications of its theme, the use of religion and religious characters as background in treatment calls for reservation."

VAN NORMAN'S RETIREMENT

Milwaukee, Oct. 30.

Eugene Van Norman, active in motion picture theatre management for 42 years, has retired. Recently was manager of Times Fine Arts Theatre, operated by Marcus Theatre Management Co.

Robert J. Neu has succeeded Van Norman there.

Indian Summer & Cuban Crisis Crimp October; 'Brothers Grimm,' 'West Side,' 'Almost Angels,' 1, 2, 3

By MIKE WEAR

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarized each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases but are not, of course, fully "definitive." An index of relative grossing strength in the U. S. - Canada market this monthly reprise does not pretend to express total rentals.

The month of October, with preelection interest, the crisis over Cuba and usual attention to the gridiron, both college and pro, hurt firstrun film biz that month in many key cities covered by VARIETY last month. But despite a shortage of big, strong product, trade held even or slightly better than a year ago which is more than can be said for many lines of business. Indian Summer weather (in Russia they call it Women's Summer) was rated no help.

"Brothers Grimm" (MGM), mostly playing on hardticket, copped the month's boxoffice sweepstakes.

October's B.O. Best

1. "Brothers Grimm" (MGM).
2. "West Side Story" (UA).
3. "Almost Angels" (BV).
4. "Chapman Report" (WB).
5. "Boccaccio" (Embassy).
6. "Pigeon Took Rome" (Par).
7. "Thank A Fool" (MGM).
8. "No Man Is Island" (U).
9. "Waltz Toreadors" (Cont).
10. "Private Affair" (MGM).
11. "Damn the Defiant" (Col).
12. "Music Man" (WB).

It was first every session in VARIETY weekly tabulations excepting the final one when "Longest Day" (20th), the new hardticketer, pushed up to No. 1 spot. "West Side Story" (UA), third a month ago but for many months first, wound up in second place even though it has finished or is nearing the end of many big key city engagements.

"Almost Angels" (BV), generally dualed with "Lady and Tramp" (BV), an oldie, finished third. "Chapman Report" (WB), also new, wound up fourth being out only two weeks. "Boccaccio '70" (Embassy) soared to fifth position. It was 10th in September.

"Pigeon That Took Rome" (Par), which was 12th the month before, climbed to sixth spot. "Thank A Fool" (MGM), a newie, took seventh place. "No Man Is An Island" (U), which hinted some strength at the close of September, captured eighth spot.

"Waltz of Toreadors" (Cont), which showed promise late in the previous month, finished ninth. "Very Private Affair" (MGM), another newcomer, wound up 10th.

"Damn the Defiant" (Col), which hinted some potential late in September, took 11th position while "Music Man" (WB) was 12th.

"The Interns" (Col), fourth in September; "Sky Above" (Embassy), in 11th place the same month; and "Counter Point" (UA), a new entrant, were the modest runner-up films.

"Besides "Longest Day" (20th), an obvious blockbuster based on its showing the final week in October when in first place, only a few other newcomers hinted much potential. One of these, of course, is "Barabbas" (Col), which, on its first three engagements, shapes smash.

"If a Man Answers" (U), another new entrant, wound up ninth one week in October but was inclined to be spotty. On the other hand, "Requiem For Heavyweight" (Col) looms big judging from initial playdates. It was wow in N. Y. and Boston, and lusty in L. A.

"Gigot" (20th), a newie, which is going five weeks at the N. Y. Music Hall, also started out well in Frisco. "Phaedra" (Lope), likewise, new, is rated great in Boston and N. Y. for first sessions. "Divorce, Italian style" (Embassy) did well enough one session in October to cop seventh place despite a rather inane title. "Long Day's Journey Into Night" (Levine) was great on its first two weeks in N. Y.

"300 Spartans" (20th), which was ninth in September, finished eighth one week in October. "Rear Window" (Par) (reissue), one of the few oldies to do well in September, finished 11th one week in October and was runnerup pic another stanza.

"Miracle Worker" (UA), sixth in September, was a runnerup film one week. "Coming Out Party" (Union) did nicely in arty houses during the month. "Operation Snatch" (Cont), fairly new, performed likewise.

"Convicts 4" (AA) came through with some sizable engagements without creating any sock showings in big keys played. "Taste of Honey" (Cont) continued to rack up solid coin in arty houses during the month.

Stevens Rolls His 'Greatest Story'

Producer-director George Stevens started shooting his long-delayed "The Greatest Story Ever Told" yesterday (Mon.) in Crossing of the Fathers, Utah, on the backwaters of the Colorado River. Sequence on which filming began was that of Christ's baptism, with Swedish star Max Von Sydow as Jesus and Charlton Heston as John the Baptist.

Cameras turned after invocations by Ward Bishop LeVon Gifford, of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints (Mormon), Father John Sullivan, of the Roman Catholic Church of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, and the Rev. Fred Ferguson, of the Community Methodist Church, all of nearby Page, Ariz.

Shooting on these locations is expected to continue until mid or late December, and then move to the studio in Culver City where a replica of Jerusalem has been built on the back lot. The film is to be released by United Artists either in late 1963 or early 1964.

CHARLES BOASBERG'S REGIONALS FOR PAR

Series of regional sales meetings by Paramount under Charles Boasberg, domestic distribution v.p., started with a two-day session which opened at the homeoffice Monday (29) with attendees including exec v.p. George Weltner, other Gotham execs and regional and branch managers..

Followup sessions are scheduled for New Orleans, Chicago and San Francisco.

Boasberg appears to be bearing down, driving across the "sell" message. It's clearly a matter of the new product plus the reissues such as "Rear Window" bringing more income.

It's an old bromide that picture companies have their ups and downs. Par, perhaps the most consistent money-maker over the years since the first decree (Par's) entered in the industry antitrust case, at the moment is going slow. That is, with current features.

There's strong product in the wings (or, at least, potentially strong product coming up) but right now it's Par's job to get the best of everyhting from the merchandise at hand.

Meanwhile the corporate structure is as solid as it ever has been. The $2 annual dividend rate continues without a threat.

Barney Balaban, president of Par, insisted on the 50c quarterly payoff when times were much better and some, but not vocal, stockholders thought there should have been an increase. It was Balaban's policy to maintain the status quo, so far as divvies are concerned, to provide a cushion against possible lean years.

The fact of life now indicate that Par is having a lean year (profitable but less than previous) but still the divvy status quo.

Mank Re Directors: 'Cotton-Pickers'

all further services and departed from Paris without telling Mankiewicz, "leaving me with a large amount of omlette on my face."

Took Powder

"Not for many years," said Mank, "have I been prevented from even talking about my film," adding that in his estimation the confusion which Zanuck felt about the picture could have been cleared up in one half-hour discussion. Mank's implication was that if Zanuck really had any intention, other than taking over the picture entirely, the prexy would not have behaved as he did.

Mank declared Zanuck's argument that Mank had, in effect, brought Zanuck a first cut of the picture was also ridiculous. It would have been absurd to prepare all out-takes for dubbing, said Mank, because the loops could be prepared easily. The version he showed Zanuck had been cut for length only.

Three Requests

As far as costs are concerned, Mank said he never knew what the costs were on the film, but he thinks it unfair in the extreme to indirectly or directly blame him, star Elizabeth Taylor, or any other one person for the staggering budget. Mank asked for only three things on the film, he said, (1) for Rex Harrison, (2) for Richard Burton, and (3) for a delay on the September, 1961 start. The first two were granted, and the third was not, as a result of which he was forced to write the script concurrent with shooting in continuity. He would not put the blame on former 20th prexy Spyros P. Skouras for forcing the premature start of the film, said Mank, adding: "The picture was conceived in a state of emergency, shot in a state of emergency and wound up in blind panic."

As far as being available for consultations with Zanuck after the latter cuts the picture, Mank said he didn't think it would serve any useful purpose. Would he be available to direct additional scenes, as offered by Zanuck? That would depend on what the scenes were, said the director. Otherwise, he said, "I'm planning a long rest. I've developed a deep distaste for the making of films, not in those areas which have to do with the creative side. After 30 years, I thought I'd seen all the infighting and dirt . . ." Obviously he doesn't think so now.

Confidence Breach

Mankiewicz took big exception to "personal and confidential letters" between himself and Zanuck which the prexy read "in Zanuckized" (edited) versions for "his self-serving purposes." He also thought Zanuck's "incomplete" account of the Figaro deal, designed to put the whole matter on a money level, "typical of the man." Mank reported that actually he and NBC shared equally in the $1,500,00 capital gain, and that in return for $3,000,000 spent by 20th to get Figaro, and Mank's contract, 20th received approximately $2,000,000 "in cash and negotiable securities," as well as interest in "The Barefoot Contessa" and "I Want to Live," as well as a property owned by Mank, "Showcase."

Mankiewicz added, he had not called any "members of the Directors Guild" to enlist their support. After reading the Billy Wilder blast, he called Wilder who told him his (Wilder's) blast had been written before the Mank dismissal and had to do with the firings of other people. Mank referred to Zanuck's statement about Oscars by saying Zanuck had not produced "Letter to Three Wives." He also recalled that "Letter" unfortunately came out at the same time as Zanuck's "Twelve O'Clock High." He remembered that prior to the Oscar voting, Zanuck called Mankiewicz into the office to tell him 20th studio votes would be going to "High." "Wives" got Mankiewicz the writer-director Oscars.

Mank had suggested to Zanuck, in Paris, that "Cleo" be released as two pix, but said yesterday that he was never allowed to pursue the subject. Zanuck commented only that "we thought about it but don't like it."

Mank plans to go to Hollywood either today (Wed.) or the next day to wind up some affairs there. As far as his doing "Justine" is concerned, that's out, since 20th, by firing him, fired him also from that project on which he had been working at the time he was called to "save" "Cleopatra."

S. P. SKOURAS' EX-AIDE SUES ON HIS CONTRACT

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

John C. Healey, former executive assistant to 20th-Fox prexy Spyros P. Skouras, today (Tues.) filed breach of contract suit against the company charging the manner of his dismissal last September violated his pact. The action, in Santa Monica Superior Court, asked for $46,951 assertedly due him.

Healey charged that 20th ignored a 90-day termination clause in his contract. Company, he said, repudiated his contract by orally informing him last Sept. 11 that he was to be let go Sept. 14. His contract had been in force since July 10, 1961 and had been signed by former 20th v.p. Peter G. Levathes.

Healey, who had been with the studio 26 years, received a salary of $500 weekly, plus $100 weekly expense account. His suit charged that under severance terms of his contract, he was to receive a year's compensation, amounting to $26,000.

Directors Nominations Of Third Quarter Films

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Directors Guild of America has nominated four features released during third quarter of 1962 to compete for its annual Directorial Achievement Award, including one foreign and three American.

Quartet embraces "Birdman of Alcatraz," UA, directed by John Frankenheimer, Dave Silver, assistant; "The Music Man," Warner Bros., Morton da Costa, Russell Llewellyn; "Wonderful World of the Bros. Grimm," Metro, Henry Levin and George Pal, James E. Jennings; "Boccaccio '70," Frederico Fellini, Vittorio de Sica, Luchino Visconti.

BLOCKBUSTER DOUBTS

Value Line Eyes the Rise of 'Angled' Productions

Value Line, investment survey published by Arnold Bernhard & Co., in the current issue argues that Hollywood, in its switch from low-budget pictures to the bigscale epics, has stirred repercussions.

The analysts of Wall Street believe the pursuit of "blockbusters" is risky, has created a new kind of "star system," which has become the film colony's "master," and also has led to production of "controversial" films which could lead to revival of the threat of censorship.

Business Week's Views

Business Week in its Oct. 20 issue speculates that the epic-cost productions might be dwindling as American exhibition veers to smaller houses in suburbia and the shopping districts. Also, the epics simply are too risky, states the mag.

Business Week further wonders about the source of product to accommodate the new houses going up, thinks there might not be enough pictures to satisfy, and, encompassing as all get-out, notes a return to Hollywood-based production because "runaway" is becoming too expensive. Only source quoted in the piece is VARIETY.

Karp, Freeman In N.Y.

Y. Frank Freeman, Paramount v.p.-director, and Jack Karp, production v.p., in New York, unheralded, for general production conferences. They'll probably remain east for the remainder of this week.

Both execs were closeted with the homeoffice brass most of yesterday (Tues.).

SASKATCHEWAN FEST: 91 DOCUMENTARIES

Yorkton, Sask., Oct. 30.

Canada's seventh biennial international documentary film festival, held here, drew 91 entries from 38 exhibitors in 20 countries. Three-day event, a non-profit community effort, was put on by the Yorkton Film Council.

The Golden Sheaf trophy for the best film in the show went to "Hold Back the Sea," a Shell Oil documentary about Holland.

Other winners were:

Creative art—"Delacroix," by Anthony Roland, France.

Natural history—"Sea Sanctuary," British Information Service.

Agriculture and industry—"Symphony Japan," embassy of Japan and "Roughnecks," National Film Board of Canada (tied).

Science—"Revealing Eye," Shell Oil.

General—"Circle of the Sun," National Film Board.

Sociological—"The Test," National Film Board.

Fashion Omnibus On 11 Features, By Edith Head

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Paramount has set a unique one-shot promotional affair aimed at plugging total of 11 upcoming pictures to fashion and womens page editors from all over the country. Studio has set up cocktail-dinner event under tag "Edith Head's Penthouse Party" in cooperation with the California Fashion Creators, to be held Nov. 14 at 7 p.m. on the penthouse set of "Come Blow Your Horn."

Miss Head has arranged for special fashion promotion on 11 films which she designed for the studio, with several of the stars of the films to be on hand along with models to display the wardrobes in an informal setting. She calls it "a crossection of Hollywood design."

Pix to be publicized include "Girls! Girls! Girls!" "Papa's Delicate Condition," "Who's Got the Action," "Hud Bannon," "A Girl Named Tamiko," "Come Blow Your Horn," "Donovan's Reef," "Samantha," "My Six Loves," "It's Only Money" and "The Nutty Professor." Two costumes from each film will be used.

Among stars of the pix now set to appear, either in their own costumes, or as hostesses and hosts, are Jill St. John, Martha Hyer, Nita Talbot, Barbara Rush, Elizabeth Allen, Miyoshi Umeki, Stella Stevens, Phyllis McGuire, Laurel Goodwin, France Nuyen, John Wayne, Cesar Romero and David Janssen. Additionally, she will have eight topflight actress-models, among them Pat Olson, Pat Jones, Mary Morlas and Olavee Parsons and four Japanese girls who will appear in "Tamiko" costumes.

Designer, now the only contracted designer in Hollywood, said fashions to be presented represent "an estimated cost of $420,000. Costumes to be shown run from $2.89, cost of an outfit worn by Patricia Neal in "Hud Bannon," to $3,700, for costume worn by Jill St. John in "Horn."

Miss Head is doing all arrangements for the "party, to be staged informally and "not as a fashion show. She said she is also integrating past, present and future of Hollywood design, will have models appearing in costumes worn by Mae West, from "She Done Him Wrong"; Ginger Rogers in "Lady in the Dark," Hedy Lamarr in "My Favorite Spy" and Clara Bow in a Charleston outfit.

Each guest will be given an informational kit including photos of sketches and promo on pix, now being prepared by studio.

Johnston to Asia

Motion Picture Assn. of America prexy Eric Johnston left New York Friday (26) night for a three-week trip through the Far East.

Johnston, who'll be looking into film affairs as well as matters relating to his various government - industry posts, with touching bases in Indonesia, India and Pakistan before returning to the States about Nov. 18.

'Cleo' Length Not the Issue — DFZ

The running time of "Cleopatra" has never been one of the issues in his dispute with director Joe Mankiewicz, 20th-Fox prexy Darryl F. Zanuck stated in New York Friday (26). Picture ran about four and a half hours when he screened in Paris recently.

Though he admitted once saying that he couldn't imagine any film really being worth a running time of more than three and a half hours, Zanuck says now that he thinks "Cleo" will "justify" a four-hour length. That would probably make it the longest of all screen epics, beating the three hours and 37 minutes of "Gone With the Wind." A couple of other "epic" running times: "Ben-Hur," three hours and 32 minutes; "War and Peace," three hours and 28 minutes.

Zanuck also hopes to have "Cleopatra" ready for its world preem by mid-May.

Zanuck's 'Cleo' Complaints

also calls for additional episodes to bridge the many bridges that the story has to cross, and particularly the bridge from the Caesar story to the Antony story."

Liz Not Needed

Zanuck declared Elizabeth Taylor would not be needed for any additional shooting, but that probably both Rex Harrison and Richard Burton would be. In this connection he wrote Mank that he would make "every effort to obtain your services, if you are available" to shoot the added material.

In this letter, copies of which were given to the press, Zanuck, however, made it clear that he holds Mankiewicz responsible for the "more than $30,000,000" already spent on the picture at the time—several months ago—that Mank told Zanuck he was prevented from doing many things he had wanted to do on the film. Zanuck told the press that Mank had been hired only as "director and to supervise the writing and correction of the literary material."

Zanuck said the previous Spyros P. Skouras administration had not deprived Mankiewicz of the big "triumphal" scene, and though he (Zanuck) has no desire to "vindicate" the previous administration, it was not that administration's fault that Mank wrote the script "or at least rewrote it" during production.

Overtime Sets Idle

"I am not going to ask you why the script was not completed prior to production," Zanuck quoted from his letter to Mank, "but it is only reasonable to point out that this caused you to shoot the major part of the picture in continuity." This, he said, resulted "in at least $7,500,000 in added production costs which do not appear on the screen.' Sets were built on overtime and then left idle for weeks and months. Some of the exteriors waited so long they had to be repaired or reconstructed. Can this be fairly and honestly be charged to the 'administration'? These are production decisions, and in this case they were not only vital but tragic . . .

"You were not the official producer, yet in the history of motion pictures no one man has ever been given such authority. The records show that you made every single decision and that your word was law. You were never denied anything until the last three or four weeks of the picture, when the treasury had begun to sag and (Joseph) Moskowitz (retired 20th veep) and the others arrived with the 'ultimatum.'

Authority

"I cannot absolve Spyros of his share of the responsibility. He was in a desperate personal situation, but since he was not a picture maker, and since Peter Levathes had no production knowledge, and since both Doc Merman and Sid Rogell were either powerless to act or useless, you were indisputedly in the driver's seat. On this point, I do blame the administration for giving any one man such unlimited authority. They did not give it to me on 'The Longest Day.' I had to fight for every inch of it."

The letters between himself and Mank, which Zanuck quoted from, covered the period from Oct. 15 through Oct. 21, climaxed with Zanuck's statement to Mank that the director's services were being terminated on the completion of the dubbing. In the earlier correspondence, Zanuck quoted Mank as saying that the prexy's points were "most helpful" and his comments on the battle scenes "valid." After that, however, relations became strained until Mank wrote Zanuck asking that the situation be "clarified," and whether or not he, Mank, would remain in full authority. The correspondence which was quoted, however, does not show at just what point Mank and Zanuck disagreed on the handling of the pic, leading to Mank's request for "clarification."

On the matter of the script, Zanuck reported to the press conference that he had just learned that the arbitration committee of the Screen Writers Guild had found that writing credit should be shared by Mankiewicz and Ranald McDougall and Sidney Buchman.

As if to emphasize that Mank had been well taken care of, Zanuck reported that 20th had paid $3,000,000 to acquire Figaro, jointly owned by Mank and NBC, from which "Mankiewicz realized $1,500,000 in capital gains." In addition, Mank was paid $260,000 in salary over the 20 months, plus about $60,000 in expenses at $100 a day.

Zanuck emphasized that he as prexy could never hand over final print approval to any director. Even so, he said, he has always been able to work with talented people and get the best out of them. He recalled that recently he had worked with Mark Robson to cut 25 minutes from "Nine Hours to Rama" after Robson had finished all work on the pic, and assumed it was ready for final printing. In that case there was no friction at all, said Zanuck, adding that Robson later wrote him saying that all the suggested changes and cuts "worked."

DFZ also thought it necessary to point out, in view of the constant references in the press to Mank as "the Oscar-winning writer-director," that the two films on which Mank received Oscars, "A Letter to Three Wives" and "All About Eve," had been "personally produced and edited by me."

Castle Re Producers

except I want to sell tickets instead of get votes," he says.

Producer, whose "Homicide" was one of last years surprise smashes, makes no claim to knowing precisely what the public wants, other than "excitement." "We must ask ourselves," he says, "Is it exciting?—If it is the public will come. Our audience is 75% youth —they're easy to bore and if you do you're dead."

Castle just returned from New York where he received the "Showman of the Year" award from the Assn. of Motion Picture Advertisers and says, "The enthusiasm back there is remarkable—especially when you contrast it with the local gloom. Too many here have become defeatists—and defeatists make bad pictures. I see no reason for it. The demand is still there—we just have to go to greater lengths to stimulate it. I have pictures scheduled clear through the end of the year and feel confident that everyone will make money."

Latest gimmick from the man who has sold insurance policies to those viewing his shockers, has offered—with few takers—a money back guarantee to patrons, and has introduced "The Fright Break" to movies, will be to film the opening sequence of his "Candy Web" using girls of 15 different nationalities in 15 different versions. Each is to be done in the girl's native language and will accompany picture to appropriate countries, thus creating a pre-sold exploitation situation.

Ask Fast Decision On 'Connection'; Argue Obscenity Goes Beyond Sex

By JAMES L. CONNERS

Albany, Oct. 30.

New York attorney Ephraim London, representing Irwin Shapiro's Films Round World on behalf of its still-unlicensed feature, "The Connection" argued Oct. 22 in Court of Appeals here that his client is suffering large losses on account of the delays. Part of these losses related to outlay for advertising and preparations to open the film at the D. W. Griffith Theatre off Times Square in Manhattan. In effect, London's argument asked for sympathy for loss on a disputed unilateral action of the distributor to present the film sans license while the State Board of Regents had an appeal pending against a previous court decision favorable to "The Connection."

"Slowness" of the Regents in pressing the appeal was a matter of questioning in an hour long hearing here. Charles A. Brind Jr. appeared as counsel for the State of New York. The issue is used on soundtrack of the vulgar word for excrement.

It seems probable that a decision might come very soon. Before it reached "The Connection" matter, eighth on the day's docket—(hearing ended at 6:10 p.m.) court insiders indicated the ruling might be made "in four or five weeks."

Six of the seven judges bombarded the opposing lawyers with questions. Chief Judge Desmond's inquiry-emphasis on the reasons for the "long" delay. He attributed some of this to "the slowness of these people"—the Regents and the state's reviewing procedures; asked London whether the Legislature had been asked to take speed-up action. It has not been sought.

London insisted that, based upon his extended experience in New York State film appeals, the average time for actions pursued under Sec. 78 of the Civil Practice Act (to review a determination by the Regents) was "six months."

In the pending case, which "moved with the speed of light"—London praised the Regents and others for their "cooperation" in expediting the appeal — almost eight months have elapsed.

Brind told Judge Desmond that the period could be "three months, two months." The chief judge, who has a quick delivery, a mobile, expressive face and a manner of questioning which ranges from the friendly to the sharp and seemingly critical, opined that one phase could be handled "within a week."

Clashes

As London outlined the involved procedural steps, Brind interjected, "It is for your (appellants) protection." He and London clashed head-on when Judge Stanley H. Fuld directed a query to the New York attorney about the possibility of showing the picture without a license. London explained that "I felt we had a perfect right to show the film, but Mr. Justice MacAffer signed an order restraining further exhibition." London said: "I don't think Justice MacAffer had the power to sign this order." The lawyer quoted a section of the law to support this view. However, Justice MacAffer (of Albany) inked the order, after hearing arguments at a special term in Kingston. This banned exhibition of "The Connection" until the Regents' appeal was heard by the Court of Appeals.

Then followed the question: was MacAffer's action based on a provision for an "automatic stay" pending appeal by a stage agency? Brind replied in the affirmative. He then inferred that London had not told the entire story.

London appealed, in early July, to the Court of Appeals for an order "vacating the statutory stay." The motion was denied in a brief document signed by Judge Desmond. At that time, the Appellate Division order annulling the Regents' determination had not yet been filed. This was recorded on July 11.

History

The Court of Appeals' order followed Brind's argument that the tribunal "had no power to grant this stay," according to London. He stated: "I asked this court for a stay, to prevent the Regents from interfering with the picture during the summer months." Drive-in dates were to be sought for "The Connection."

London supplemented his plea that the Court of Appeals consider "the constitutional issue here" and invalidate a law (Section 122 of the Education) "which violates the constitutionally-guaranteed freedoms of speech and press," by underlining the "power" which the present statute, in effect, gives the Regents.

"The procedures used by the Regents, not willfully or evilly, but resulting in evil, are such that the Regents can prevent a picture (from being exhibited) for well over a year, and they can virtually control and dictate what can be shown in this State," London declared.

He continued that "Section 112 is in direct contravention of the court area set forth in the Roth case (U. S. Supreme Court), and application of this section is a violation of constitutional guarantees of freedom of speech and press."

In "The Connection," asserted London, the Regents have banned a picture "with less than one-half minute of its 102-minute running time devoted to the word they term 'obscene.'" London stated the four-letter term, which normally connotes human excrement, was used as "slang for heroin" 11 times. Brind had estimated it was employed "on about 17 occasions."

Substitute Words

Three other terms which Brind cited in the Regents' brief, but which he did not repeat to the court, although calling its attention to them on Page 11, were used by London in his argument. He employed all four, after giving the Court its choice of three other "polite" words instead, for the "tabooed" short one. Judge Desmond commented, "We are not squeamish."

However, as London went into a strong defense of "the good old, vigorous Anglo-Saxon word—which he claimed had been supplemented, with many others, by more genteel French terms, after the Norman conquest of England," Judge Desmond observed: "Don't get so enthusiastic about it." This provoked a laugh.

London argued that "It is a matter of linguistics, of semantics." Also, that the other words to which Dr. Brind, for the Regents, objected and which they held to be "obscene," certainly did not mean "this film violates the standards of the community." The phrases were used in conversation by drug addicts, London contended.

Brind did not know precisely how to categorize the graphic phrases, but he did hold that the four-letter word was "obscene." It was designed to conjure up in the minds of some persons lewd desires."

Obscenity, Brind argued, is not "limited to sex," in the Regents' view. As used in the film, the word was "designed to sell the film, to appeal to 'the interest of the public'," quoting Brind. It could not be logically considered as having application, in all instances of the film version, to heroin. Nor could the phrases be so interpreted.

Books Vs Screen

The Regents' counsel discoursed on excretion, etc. He claimed, and London denied, that use of a word or words in a book—"The Connection" has been published and distributed in book form—is quite different from it being spoken by actors in a motion picture.

The screen audience is a cross-section of ages and intelligence—from children and youth to the adult, and from morons to the intelligent, Brind underscored. The Regents, clothed with power as "heads" of the State education system, are also empowered by the Legislature to license motion pictures.

It was in a proper exercise of such authority that the Board upheld the MPD and the Regents' review committee in rejecting "The Connection," unless the four-letter term were deleted, Brind added. They "were doing their job, fairly and unarbitrarily," in the position taken on the film. "The Board was protecting the public."

The Court of Appeals, which on a number of occasions during the past 30 years, had "refused to substitute its judgment for that of the Regents" on motion pictures," now possessed the power to reverse the Regents, but Dr. Brind did not think it would. Or so he hoped.

Cites Times Vs. Chi.

Brind cited the U. S. Supreme Court decision in Times Film Corp. vs. City of Chicago as binding that "obscenity" is a constitutional ground for licensing motion pictures. Mr. London demurred that opinion was based on a "narrow area" involving an Illinois law—"strong minority opinion" was written, and "the chief judge urged that all prior censorship and all licensing be held unconstitutional."

London cited as cases which supported his position in "The Connection" a recent Missouri one—the so-called Marcus decision. Likewise, the U.S. Supreme Court finding, in June, 1962, on Manual Enterprises vs. Day.

Answering a question from the bench, Brind said he could not find a decision dealing with the specific delineation he made as to the verboten word and its implications.

London challenged Brind's argument and the Regents' stand that a word could have one effect in a book and a different impact via the screen. He cited a pronouncement that "The medium which is made available does not affect the question of obscenity."

How, asked London, could a motion picture almost exactly like a stage play which had "run for two years and more than 600 performances, in New York City alone, without any protest," be considered "boscene"? Or—the book (a paper-back), which London held aloft?

He agreed to supply the judges with copies of the book. Dr. Brind asked for, and received permission, to submit the script of "The Connection."

Judge Desmond appeared to be telling Mr. London that "We decide case by case. We can't take the same position in different cases." This, in reply to the lawyer's repeated requests that constitutionally of the licensing law be passed upon, in the current case. Why was London pressing for invalidation of the state's statute on motion pictures — in view of his success before the U.S. Supreme Court in other film appeals? "The Miracle" and "Lady Chatterly's Lover" were two.

"The constitutional question is an issue here. I respectfully make the point, because I do not think this Court can find for the Regents here, unless it also finds a constitutional statute," was the way London put the matter at one point.

He reported that "Only seven cases have been litigated over some 700 Regents' orders for deletion." Major productions, "costing from five to 20 or 30 million," placed such an interest charge on "borrowed capital" that distributors cannot afford to tie up the investment while litigating appeals.

Part of Value

"Motion pictures are perishable," remarked London. "If you hold up a picture for a year, you lose part of its value."

Judge Charles H. Froessel commented, earlier, that "The U.S. Supreme Court has held that you have to exercise independent constitutional judgment" in ruling on "obscenity."

London, in his 35-page brief, italicized a 1961 Court of Appeals decision in the Richmond County News Co. case, on that angle. The Court of Appeals there limited obscenity to "hard core pornography."

The proceedings before the Court of Appeals differed markedly from those in the Appellate Division, where Mr. London held the floor, to himself, for almost 60 minutes, and few questions were asked by the judges. Brind submitted a brief on that occasion —May 9. Last week's court-querying marked a high in censorship cases heard here.

The Appellate Division held the word, as used in the film, "is at the most vulgar, but is not obscene, pursuant to Sec. 122 of the Education Law."

Live Now—Pay Later

with some predictable, but acceptable comedy.

The interior of Gregson's credit store is well done. And it is a pity that it is put to use in only one sequence, involving Hendry and a tipsy Miss Ritchie, Ruth Batchelor and Clive Westlake have concocted a catchy title song. "Live Now—Pay Later" has a number of worthwhile points but must be rated a near miss. Rich.

La Lutte Finale

(The Final Battle)

(GERMAN—FRENCH)

Paris, Oct. 30.

Georges Glass-Jean Marin release of Aero Film production. Selected and mounted newsreel footage by Peter Rosinski, Raphael Nussbaum. Commentary by Jean Serge spoken by Serge, Max Megy; editor, Georges Marschack. At Studio De L'Etoile, Paris. Running time, 70 MINS.

This a strange one. A compilation subject about the Russia of the Czar and then covering the Revolution seems to resemble the Yank "We'll Bury You," reviewed in VARIETY, Oct. 10 issue. But not completely since this runs 70 mins., not 77, and seems to have some different footage with German and French backgrounds.

"Bury," a Columbia release in the U.S., is a condemnation of Russia while this is anti-Stalin but seemingly pro-Khrushchev and Lenin. It also gives a lion's share of credit for the succeessful Revolution to the banished Trotsky.

This shows the Czar at play while Russians suffer and then the First World War plus the beginnings of the Revolution with the aborted German tries and flashbacks to the first 1905 anarchistic rumblings in Russia. Also shown is Russo-Japanese war footage but without the shot of the sunken Russo vessel mentioned as a highlight for the other pic.

The Lenin and Trotsky footage is sharp and unusual as are some rugged shots of executions of Red soldiers by White Army people. Pic shows various armies—Russo, Yank, British and French trying to put down the Revolution. But all is based on the commentary which is much too didactic and full of loopholes.

The images are the thing and the old footage still remains absorbing but seemingly can be bent to any outlook. This ends with Khrushchev's rise to power and the takeover of Lithuania and the anti-Stalin speech of K. There is obviously a link between the two pix but both have different viewpoints. This review is mainly for the record. Mosk.

The Main Attraction

(BRITISH-COLOR)

Corny yarn but some good performances, a few lilting songs and colorful circus atmosphere. For Pat Boone fans.

London, Oct. 23.

Metro release of a Seven Arts (John Patrick) production. Stars Nancy Kwan, Pat Boone; features Mai Zetterling, Yvonne Mitchell, Keiron Moore, John Le Mesurier. Directed by Daniel Petrie. Screenplay, John Patrick; camera, Geoffrey Unsworth; editor, Geoffrey Foot; music, Andrew Adorian. Previewed at Metro Private Theatre. Running time, 90 MINS.

Tessa	Nancy Kwan
Eddie	Pat Boone
Gina	Mai Zetterling
Elenora	Yvonne Mitchell
Ricco	Keiron Moore
Bozo	John Le Mesurier
Bus Driver	Carl Duering
Proprietor	Warren Mitchell
Burton	Lionel Murton
Clown	Lionel Blair
Band Announcer	Frank Sieman

Pat Boone's attempt to escape from his own image of the cleancut All-American youth is a good try. Playing with Nancy Kwan, Boone is a cynical, drifting young man with an eye for the gals but no desire, at first, to settle down. Performance is handicapped by John Patrick's screenplay which is neither sharp nor decisive enough. Nevertheless, Boone, in between singing four pleasant songs, smokes, drinks and h[illegible] tumbles with the sexy Mai Zetterling. Enough for his fans to realize that Boone is no longer in only prissy roles.

Boone gets fired from his job in an Italian cafe after a punch up with some drunks. He's picked up by Miss Zetterling, who is something of a dipso-nympho, and he becomes her stooge in her circus ventriloquist act. He also becomes her lover. But Boone also becomes enamored with Nancy Kwan. She is a young equestrienne, part of an act run by Keiron Moore and his wife, Yvonne Mitchell, who is her crippled sister.

After complications, the hero hops the circus and catches up with Miss Kwan who has also broken away because of problems. Up in the Alps, the pair have a splendid night of bliss in a chalet, and then get involved in an avalanche. But all's well. Director Daniel Petrie and scriptist Patrick steer the six main characters back into the receptive arms of their chosen.

Geoffrey Unsworth's lensing makes the most of both the circus atmosphere and the local scenery while Andrew Adorian has chipped in with a pleasing score. Petrie's direction is sometimes flabby, but highlights a few dramatic situations effectively.

Best performance comes from Miss Zetterling. She clearly realized that the role had to be overplayed and does it with abandon. Miss Kwan's part is rather too naive but there are some rewarding supporting roles by a stolid Moore, John Le Mesurier and Miss Mitchell, who suffers to good effect as the crippled elder sister.

Boone gives a pleasant performance but will have to give second thoughts about ever playing a heavy. There are four songs which he puts over persuasively. He has had a hand in writing two of them, the title song, "Main Attraction" and (the best) "Amore Baciami." The numbers are worked logically enough into action. Rich.

The Loves Of Salammbo

(C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Inferior exploitation item.

Hollywood, Oct. 22.

Twentieth-Fox release of Fides-Stella production. Stars Jeanne Valerie, Jacques Sernas; with Edmund Purdom, Arnoldo Foa, Riccardo Garrone, Kamala Devi, Charles Fawcett. Directed by Sergio Grieco. Screenplay, John Blamy, Barbara Sohmers, from story by Gustave Flaubert; editor, Enzo Alfonzi; music, Alexandre Derevitsky. Reviewed at the studio, Oct. 22, '62. Running time, 74 MINS.

"The Loves of Salammbo" lasts only 74 minutes but a more inept job of filmmaking is difficult to imagine. Fides-Stella production has been gathering dust on 20th shelves for over a year.

Total confusion prevails in the Italo-filmed item, from scenario, through editing, through scoring, through dubbing. Storyline has something to do with internal strife in ancient Carthage over delayed payment of pick-up forces who were hired to defend the country against the Romans. The acting is stilted under director Sergio Grisco. Photography is erratic, editing is chaotic, scoring is obtrusive and anachronistic. Much of the film sounds as if it was dubbed one second off beat in an echo chamber. Tube.

Capurcita y Pulgarcito Contra Los Monstruos

(Little Red Riding Hood and Tom Thumb Against Monsters)

(MEXICAN—EASTMANCOLOR)

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

Peliculas Nocionales release of Peliculas Rodriguez production. Stars Maria Gracia, Cesarea Quezadas, Jose Elias Moreno; features Manuel "Loco" Valdez, El Enano Santanon, Ofelia Guilmain, Magda Donato, Armando Gutierrez and Quintin Bulnes. Directed by Roberto Rodriguez. Screenplay, Fernando Morales Ortiz and Adolfo Torres Portillo; camera, Rosalio Solano; music, Raul Lavista. At Alameda Theatre, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

Director Roberto Rodriguez is an old hand in directing this series of films using characters dear to the hearts of youngsters. In this one Little Red Riding Hood and Tom Thumb fight familiar screen monsters, and naturally win.

Not much on plot but the color and photography are good and interpretation by such old favorites (of former films) as Manuel "Loco" Valeez, and Jose Elias Moreno is adequate.

The gold mine discovered by the Rodriguez brothers continues to be mined in this series, with this one likely to do good business at boxoffice here and in Spanish language markets. Emil.

ice, Berlin and Edinburgh film festivals.

Zinnemann told VARIETY: "There is no question that the committee is wholeheartedly in favor of the Screen Guild's proposed festival." Committee, to which each of the four guild prexies appointed two members, is composed of Zinnemann and Willis Goldbeck, Directors; Walter M. Mirisch and John Houseman, Producers; Allen Rivkin, vice-chairman, and Charles Schnee, Writers; Gene Kelly and Richard Widmark, Actors. Other members pro-tem also have sat in, including Charles Brackett, Ivan Moffett and Henry Blankee.

As to Capitol

Zinnemann stated that part of the work of the committee in its latter stages "was talking about an American festival, nothing conclusive but clearly thinking in this direction.

"Quite a few, however, feel that Washington would be the appropriate place for such a festival, but this has not been fully discussed. What matters is where America can put its best foot forward in impressing the world. The subject of whether a fete should be held in Washington or Hollywood is still in debate."

Rivkin, who also prexies the Screen Writers Branch of the Writers Guild of America, West, likewise emphasized the point of a festival site.

"I am in favor of an official American film festival," he said, "but whether my guild is in favor of it being held in Hollywood or Washington has not yet been determined."

More enthusiastic and outward was George Chandler, prexy of Screen Actors Guild: "Personally," he commented on the SPG project, "I think it is a splendid idea to have an International Film Festival in Hollywood. I am sure the plan will be given full consideration by the board of directors of the SAG when it is presented to them."

Adopting a more dubious view, Leon Barsha, prexy of American Cinema Editors, nevertheless went on record as in favor of the SPG film fete, with certain reservations. "My organization is heartedly in favor of any art form which will further motion pictures," he observed. "Our only concern concern, however, lies in the great number of festivals which are springing up throughout the country and the world, and we don't want to get lost in the shuffle. If the Screen Producers Guild can find a way for it to stand out, we're all in favor of it."

Publicists Guild will discuss matter of at next meeting of its Executive Board Nov. 5. Don McDonald, veepee, in absence of Don Boutyette, prexy, on location in Arizona, stated over weekend: "The general reaction of our members is very favorable to the festival. An official reaction will be announced after the matter has been discussed at next meeting of the Executive Board."

Kansas City, Oct. 30.

Downtown theatregoing is enjoying a resurgence here through major efforts by the Durwood Theatres with five of the six loop theatres under its banner. Last week the newest of the patron enticements, free bus service, went into effect, following by a few months the big downtown boost given by free evening parking.

A free bus ride home is offered by any of the five Durwood Theatres, Roxy, Saxon, Empire, Capri and Studio, to any patron who asks for a return trip transfer at the boxoffice when buying his ticket of admission. Earlier the Kansas City Transit company had tried to heighten the downtown lure with a free bus ride project, calling the busses "Showboats."

When only one bus was dolled up with paddle wheels, pennants, etc., the public thought the free rides were confined to the one gay bus, and the plan was junked. Now it's ride any bus downtown, get a free return ride when you buy a theatre ticket.

If the free bus ride plan does as much for downtown evening theatre going as does the free parking, a considerable boost in grosses is in the office, according to Stanley Durwood, president of the circuit which also has theatres in St. Joseph and Jefferson City, Mo. and Leavenworth, Kans. It's position as a downtown exhibitor in the past 10 years has changed from that of a minor position with a single first run theatre to the dominant downtown circuit with the five theatres in operation.

Free parking is the biggest bonanza ever for the circuit, according to Durwood. The July and August theatre operation this year brought the circuit $205,007 against $118,346 for the same months the previous year, an increase of $86,661.

During the two months this year the circuit paid $11,548 for parking, and expense it did not have in 1961. The circuit has every downtown garage and parking lot in the deal, save one, and gets an average discount of 25 per cent. Obviously the undertaking has proven worthwhile, Durwood points out.

The parking is free, publicized and given with no strings. That is in contrast to most free parking policies observed today by merchants and theatres, on somewhat of a clundestine basis. The circuit here is the only one in the entire nation which pays the entire parking cost for the customer Durwood says.

The same plan would prove as beneficial for other downtown business, including doctors, lawyers, dentists as well as merchants. Some parking plans now in effect he describes as half-hearted, given discreetly with a sizeable purchase and backed by only token advertising. It gets token results, he believes, and always will until it is general, generous and forthright. The patron simply wants to know he is wanted, and the cost of paying parking for the merchant is slight in view of the dollar volume which results, Durwood says.

The free evening parking is proving so successful that the circuit is considering expanding it for full daytime use. The free parking idea has made downtown Kansas City the most successful motion picture market in a 5-state area, including St. Louis, Durwood says.

During the period of Durwood ascendancy the industry has seen the demise of the big Tower Theatre (2,100 seats), the Orpheum Theatre (1,900 seats) and the Esquire Theatre (820 seats), as well as the Royal, a second runner. The only first run house outside the Durwood banner now is the Paramount (1,900 seats) operated by American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres (A. H. Blank).

As manager of the Paramount Harold Lyon has held to the price line, maintaining the lowest admission prices downtown, generally a $1.25 top, striving for attractive physical appearance, and standing by the philosophy that nothing draws so well as good product. Durwood and his managers are in ready agreement on this point.

If Durwood plans materialize the downtown area will get another new theatre. This one is still in the planning stage, but is figured to be an artfilm policy, similar to the one now in effect at The Studio Theatre, a 150-seater in the lower lounge of the big first-run Saxon, which in turn formerly was the Loew's Midland with 3,300 seats. Durwood operates it as the Saxon with 1,600 seats, generally closing off the big balcony.

Best guess as to the new theatre is that it will be in the Empire Theatre building. This theatre presently is the Cinerama operation, but has some alcoves and areas which could be converted to an intimate arty. Durwood is keeping no secrets, but says plans as yet are a bit incomplete.

While the Durwood interests are laboring intensely for he downtown resurgence, the other big circuit here, Fox Midwest of National General Theatres, has shifted its operations entirely out of th edowntown area. It now has first runs in what fr years were second runs in shopping centers, except the Uptown.

All of its theatres, the Uptown, Plaza, and Brookside which are usually first run in Kansas City, Mo., solve the parking problem with shopping cener parking problem with shopping center parking lots, and sufficient street-side parking open to all the public. The Granada in Kansas City, Kansas, similarly has sufficient on-street and city parking lot space.

The two operations are prime exhibits in the shift of first-run theatre operation brought about by the automobile, suburbia and the big ube. Take your choice, but neither is like the pre-war and early post-war days.

'LONGEST DAY' LOOKS BIG FOR CONTINENT

Paris, Oct. 30.

Twentieth-Fox's "The Longest Day" appears certain to be a real blockbuster in Britain and on the continent if the tempo of its initial dates is maintained. According to figures supplied by Percy Livingstone, managing director for Great Britain and Ireland, and David Raphel, continental division manager, pic has earned $136 800 in film rental in its first 10 engagements this side in just 12 days.

Including the dates which started last week, the film is now playing in 22 theatres in Britain and on the continent.

Toll Lessons From Etobicoke Trials; Cash-Each-Time Clearly Wisest Policy

Howard Minsky, head man at Paramount-owned International Telemeter, asserted this week that the pilot run is over at Etobicoke, Toronto, to the extent that Par has all the intelligence required to get its home toll television system off the ground. The run at the Toronto suburb will continue as it has been going for more than two years with about 5,700 subscribers paying up to $2 per program. But the important point is that Par has garnered enough information about the basics of pay-tv to determine future course.

Minsky took over the presidency of Telemeter last summer, succeeding Louis A. Novins, who at the time left Par entirely. Minsky had been an exec in the Par domestic sales department on the theatrical end.

Future course of tollvision so far as Telemeter is concerned will draw upon these conclusions from the Etobicoke experiment—

(1.) There's a vast potential audience and a good amount of the customers haven't been theatrical attendees. Polls have shown that 32% of the tuners-in haven't been to a theatre in over a year. This is reflected in surveys taken by agencies independent of Telemeter. Indeed, the audience for home toll, regardless of turnout at home b.o., doesn't hurt theatres.

(2.) Theatrical films, in theatres, draw about an average of 6% of the potential, and this scales upward to a just-about-top of 17%. Many people just don't go.

(3.) Pay-as-you-see toll has clear advantages over any kind of billing system at the end of the month because the customers are up to date on expenditures on a day-to-day basis and not confronted with a bill that hurts. The concept of cash payment is right.

(4.) The acceptance of pay-tv has been and will continue to be a tough problem just as there were difficulties in converting to sound, color and the various widescreen processes.

Favors Partnerships

Minsky is an enthusiastic advocate of the notion that theatres and toll can work together to the advantage of each, pointing to the fact that the College Theatre, Toronto, has been doing firm business while playing day-date with Telemeter. There are people who want to leave their homes for entertainment and others who don't, or can't.

Etobicoke has been a financial loss, and will continue to be so, considering the costs which range to $80,000 per program and the perhaps $10,000 that can be gotten back from subscribers. This gets written off as experiment. Says Minsky: "We know we can't make money in a pilot study but we have developed a prototype and the experiment has proved we know where we are going."

Added Minsky: "We feel the wire concept is right (i.e., cabled transmission rather than over the air) and know also that the concept of cash is right."

Hateful Progress

Minsky acknowledges opposition to toll on the part of exhibitors and retaliates that some theatremen fought against conversion to sound, CinemaScope and Cinerama. "But this is show business and the spectrum is widening. I remember when the late Charles Skouras and other national circuits wouldn't touch drive-ins, but drive-ins have reached the point where they account for 25% of our domestic business."

Minsky admits the possibility of roadblocks, such as the legalistic delay in Little Rock where exhibs are in a court row with Telemeter, but insists that progress can't be held back indefinitely.

As for the exhib antipathy, he wonders about the fact that some exhibits are directly involved in the operation of community antenna systems in areas so geographically set up that they can't receive normal commercial tv. Exhibs are the impresarios, he points up, yet theatre business hurts bad when the CATV (Community Antenna TV) hookups are established. So on what side are the exhibs really? Minsky argues that theatremen actually can work both sides of the street—that is, locally providing pay-tv hand in hand with theatrical presentations as has been done in Etobicoke.

The exec strongly indicated a new possible angle anent payvee presentation. This would be in conjunction with CATV operators. He says community antenna systems and Telemeter "are electronically and psychologically compatible."

Telemeter's immediate future, outside of Etobicoke, appears to be in the southwest. It's introduction in Little Rock awaits the okay of the Arkansas Supreme Court, over the objections of exhibs. Also, without legal objection so far, is the formation of Home Theatres Inc. as franchise operator to work in other cities of the southwest, four of such unspecified cities already being in various stages of pay-see "engineering."

Closed-Circuit Culture Come-On

The closed-circuit National Cultural Center fundraiser Nov. 29 will be fed to community antenna systems as well as to dinner and theatre parties cross-country. Theatre Network Television is producing, with a lineup of show folk scheduled to appear. Dinner and theatre admissions will be scaled from $10 to $100.

Anchor origination for the production is to be Washington (including appearance by Prez JFK), with pickups also slated from New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and Augusta, Ga., latter for Gen. Dwight Eisenhower's participation.

Others appearing include Leonard Bernstein (as host) Harry Belafonte, Abe Burrows, Pablo Casals, Bradford Dillman, Florence Eldridge, Benny Goodman Orch, Tammy Grimes, Jascha Heifetz, Hal Holbrook, Danny Kaye, Gene Kelly, Frederic March, National Symphony Orch, Jason Robards Jr., Jerome Robbins Ballet, and Richard Tucker.

Broadway producer Roger L. Stevens is NCC chairman.

ACAPULCO FEST SEEKS METRO-TITANUS TRIO

Coproductions involving Metro of Hollywood and Titanus of Rome —three in number—have been invited to the Festival of Film Festival winners in Acapulco, Mexico, opening Nov. 24 and running through Dec. 6.

The three features are "Family Diary," a winner at Venice; "Arturo's Island," which was named best picture at the San Sebastian Film Festival, and "The Days Are Numbered," which took top prize at Mar Del Plata.

70% CAPACITY AT $3 FOR FULLMER-TIGER

Vancouver, Oct. 30.

Closed circuit telecast of the Gene Fullmer-Dick Tiger middleweight title fight from Candlestick Park in San Francisco drew approximated 1,240 customers in the Capitol Theatre, about 70% of the 1,710 capacity. All seats in the Famous Players' house was tagged at $3 on a no-reserved rush admission basis.

Turnout was surprisingly good in view of the sour taste left with fight fans here by the abrupt finish of the recent high-priced Patterson-Liston bout. Tickets for that event were $6 and $4.

Picture quality suffered intermittently from interference trouble on the line between S.F. and Seattle before reaching Vancouver, resulting in a distorted image which made fighters look like Crazy House mirror reflections. While this caused some laughs, majority of patrons did not find it funny, but pictures cleared in the nick of time each occasion to still vocal money-back demands from some impatient fans. Decision was popular and final evaluation indicates a good potential for the scheduled Archie Moore-Cassius Clay fight.

Ticket sales were handled by Percy Hicks Ticket Bureau, with theatre projection by TelePrompTer of Canada Ltd.

urging State and U. S. Information Agency to proceed cautiously in approving exchange projects.

A State Dept. official, contacted in Washington by telephone Monday, pointed out that there are some Senators who feel there should be no exchanges whatsoever—"shortsighted, to say the least," he said. He reported that the department had seen a treatment of Cowan's project, before the producer went to Moscow for eight weeks this summer, but that no approval could be officially given till they had seen a completed script.

Meanwhile, he said, the department feels that exchanges of all kinds should proceed "without exact relationship to political events of the moment." The idea, he indicated, is that all such exchanges need longrange planning, and none would ever be completed as it was put on the planning boards and removed every time there was a change in the relations between the two countries.

Alliance Theatre Chain Wants in On Community Antenna in All Situations

Chicago, Oct. 30.

Alliance Amusement Co., the midwestern motion picture theatre chain, is stepping up its community antenna teevee network for the professed reason of making sure that it owns the CATV system in towns in which it owns picture houses.

The Chi-based firm has just revealed construction of a CATV system in Streator, Ill., a city with a population of 20,000 located in northwestern Illinois. Alliance entered the CATV field a year ago with a system in Ottawa, Ill., and now claims that more than 40% of the homes are connected to it.

In addition, Alliance holds a franchise to construct a CATV system in Logansport, Ind., has another under construction in Marseilles, Ill., and has made additional applications for franchises in several other Indiana cities. The Ottawa fee has been $5 per month per home, and a company spokesman said that the new outlets would probably charge the same.

Alliance is partnering with the Jerrold Electronics Corp. of Philadelphia in the CATV on a 50-50 basis. Jerrold was one of the earliest entries in the CATV field, but sold its 15-system skein a few years ago. Alliance owns 70 theatres in the Midwest—30 drive-ins and 40 hardtops. They have been in the theatre business for 45 years.

S. J. Gregory, the prexy of Alliance, maintains that the question of whether a CATV system poses a threat to a theatre owner is a moot point. "More to the point," he says, "is the question—who will own the CATV system, the theatre owner or another industry group?"

Gregory contends that the motion picture industry made a big mistake by fighting television at its inception instead of joining it. "It behooves us to have an open mind," he adds, "and profit by our mistakes."

Alliance started its diversification program four years ago by purchasing franchises for several McDonald 15c Drive-In restaurants. They now own 10 of them.

Toll Competition to Hartford Exhibs

Reason exhibition spokesmen are morose over the pay-tv challenge lurks in competition (Oct. 20-26) provided in the Hartford, Conn., area, where WHCT (channel 18) is tolling away. Fee service offered this fare:

"Music Man," "Damn the Defiant," "Thunder of Drums," "Zotz," "Boys' Night Out" and "The Interns." Not to mention a tape of Hildegarde's supperclub turn, the Yale-Cornell grid match, a National Hockey League tilt, and the Fullmer-Tiger middleweight championship bout from San Francisco. Hildegarde and the films get repeat airings, of course.

Of 175,000 Seats Only 40,000 Sold For Closed-Circuit Tiger-Fullmer Go

Fiscal results were far from heartening on last week's closed-circuit telecast to 27 theatres and 23 auditoriums across the country of the Dick Tiger-Gene Fullmer middleweight championship bout from Candlestick Park, San Francisco.

Total of 175,000 seats were available but only 40,000, or less than 25%, were sold. The gross was $140,000, compared to $3,400,000 raked in for last month's heavyweight fight between Sonny Liston and Floyd Patterson from Comiskey Park, Chicago, which was wired into 250 exhibition outlets.

The Terms

The live gate at Candlestick amounted to $100,000 on the basis of 12,000 paid admissions. The break-even figure was $155,000. Tiger, winner and new champ, received a flat $25,000; Fullmer, dethroned crown-holder, collected 45% of the live gate and held all ancillary rights. Promoters were Norman Rothschild and Golden Gate Boxing Club.

Fullmer franchised out the closed-circuit opportunity to Lester M. Malitz Inc. on this basis: Exhibitors and Malitz split the gross on a 50-50 basis after equipment and loop costs were recouped from the top. After all costs, the Malitz share was to be split on the basis of two-thirds to Fullmer and one-third to Malitz. The aforementioned ancillary take of $140,000 was taken up by all costs and overhead; neither Fullmer nor Malitz came away with any loot at all.

Thus it was that closed-circuiting of major sports events hit a new ebbtide. Many theatremen who had been pledged to take the telecast backed out. The public generally was not eager to spend $4 or $5 for the bigscreen transmission after the sub-par Liston-Patterson fracas. In Albuquerque the gross was $1,834 against costs of $1,825. Hardly a money-making proposition.

In Manhattan

The pugilistics and the fiscalities came out fine, however, in one location. This was Manhattan's Academy of Music which had 2,759 sales (95% of the film house) and a gross of $10,340. Observer from VARIETY caught the Acad outing and can attest to the strong attendance plus fine reception and audience enthusiasm.

The Malitz outfit, which used to handle the erstwhile Wednesday night fights for ABC-TV, took pains and exercised obvious know-how in the pickup. Full lighting surround was provided at ringside. The screen images came in bright and well-defined. In addition to this the fight itself was full of action. The paying customers had a ball.

But the Acad was the money-making exception. The turnout was slight around the country as theatremen and fight buffs were disinclined to go for another whirl after the inadequately transmitted Patterson-Liston contest. Also the Cuban crisis obviously kept many at radio and television ringside on the Cuban crisis. Too, the set-to was postponed three times and this hurt.

The upcoming non-title match between Cassius Clay and Archie Moore for some time has been on the calendar for closed-circuiting, but this now seems unlikely. Uncertain, too, is a pickup of the Tiger-Fullmer return, now scheduled for next January.

Culture Vs. Films

in charge of old values, like a new release, are wringing their hands and hoping their bosses understand that the amusement power structure at the Times have been drastically revised.

Who Controls What?

One theme of discussion around Times Square is this distribution of authority at the Times. It is far from clear and, regardless, disturbing. This relates to the constant irritant factor of the dispatches from Hollywood itself as filed by Murray Schumach, apparently operating wholly independent of either Bosley Crowther or Abe Weiler. L.A.-N.Y. phone circuits buzz plenty about Schumach. The favorite descriptive for him is "cynical."

Film company nabobs have been slow to forgive the failure of their own N. Y. employes to have more influence at the Times. Actually, the Times has always been extremely independent, always making its own decisions, and enjoying prestige partly on that account. The current shift of amusement emphasis is the paper's own evaluation of news importance, recogniizng overseas, symphony, opera, ballet and so on as never before, but accommodating such expansion somewhat at the curtailment of the television and film media.

The Times still reviews all principal films, of course. There is as yet no parallel to the television policy of "bunched reviewing" according to program trends. But meanwhile the question raised so forcefully by the broadcasters, "What's With the N. Y. Times?" has its counterpart in the film companies.

N.Y. Filmmakers

hardly a succes fou, the picture has waited until now to receive further U.S. release.

In addition to their production-distribution chores, the Seneca guys also are landlords of some consequence, maintaining their own studios at Hempstead, L.I., where they shot about 80% of "Fantastic" and which, when not busy on Seneca projects, has been made available to other indies. One recent client: the producer of another local feature, "By Any Other Name."

Seneca Productions also takes on a number of outside industrial and television projects. For Wolper Productions, Seneca has shot and is continuing to shoot segments for the tv series, "The Story of . . ." including those of an actor, publicist, harness driver, artist and wrestler.

Since all three guys are practicing filmmakers, they can switch functions quite neatly. While Kronick was preparing the release of "Yojimbo" this summer, McCarty was directing "Fantastic" and Gaffney was producing. Their next feature project is likely to be a script by Kronick titled "Not Enough Kissing in The Streets." Before that, however, they have been contracted to produce and direct a half-hour pilot film, written by Ossie Davis and starring Damita Jo, which is expected to be the first all Negro television comedy series.

Friedman to Embassy

New recruit in the ad-exploitation ranks at Embassy Pictures is Arnold Friedman, who exits United Artists after two years as assistant to pressbook editor Milt Skolsky.

Prior to that he was a field man for Columbia. At Embassy he'll function as assistant to ad director Robert Weston.

International Sound Track

London

Gala Film Distribs is to release Michaelangelo Antonioni's "The Eclipse," starring Monica Vitti and Alain Delon . . . Edie Adams, with Bob Hope and Anita Ekberg in "Call Me Bwana," now rolling at Pinewood, flew to Athens for location surveys for an upcoming segment of her ABC-TV series. She is already skedded to do shows in London and Salzburg following her present film stint . . . Ian McShane, the 19-year-old actor who made his screen debut in the Betty Box-Ralph Thomas production, "The Wild and the Willing," waxed his first record of songs from the film last week, and on Nov. 11 makes his tv bow in the ABC Armchair Theatre production "Thank You and Goodnight" . . . Gordon Douglas, currently directing "Call Me Bwana," is talking a deal with Ben Fisz . . . One week after publication, John Braine's "Life at the Top" (sequel to his "Room at the Top") headed the bestsellers charts. Romulus, who filmed "Room at the Top," will be making the sequel, again with Laurence Harvey, early in 1964 . . . Rank Film Distributors have inaugurated a 24-hour press service at their Wardour Street h.q. . . . Ruth Dennis, a senior exec of Public Relations and Administration, who has worked in New York and Hollywood, is heading a new department at the agency to service stars and artists working in, or visiting, Britain.

Hammer Films next production is to be a comedy, "Love in Smoky Regions," which Michael Carreras is to produce from a first novel by ex-Fleet Street columnist Angus Hall. They're doing the screenplay jointly . . . Peter Rogers has inked composer-arranger-conductor Eric Rogers (no relation) to do the music for all his forthcoming films in his expanding production program. First in the new deal was "The Iron Maiden," and that will be followed by "Nurse on Wheels," which starts filming on Nov. 12 . . . A check on ticket sales reveals that 10,923,684 people have seen Carl Foreman's "The Guns of Navarone" since it opened in April 1961 . . . The publicity department of the Mirisch-Barbican color production "Summer Flight," now filming at Shepperton, did double duty for key scenes in the film last week. Shooting inside the unit office building, director Dan Petrie turned the publicity department into a London newspaper office, and later into an accounting office. (Checking expenses?).

Paris

Vaude comedian Pierre Etaix has finished his first pic feature "Le Soupirant" (The Suitor) which reportedly has only a few lines of dialog with the rest all gags based on the character of Etaix, a meticulous, cold but engaging character at war with inanimate objects and society unwillingly. Etaix made two shorts for producer Paul Claudon which won fest awards, "Rupture" and "Heureux Anniversaire." Claudon decided to let him make a feature cheaply but with plenty of time. After six months it is ready and inside talk is comparing Etaix to Jacques Tati. It concerns a timid man trying to get married. Etaix plays and directs.

After the success of "The Longest Day" (20th) oldtime director Julien Duvivier announcing a pic to take place during and after D-Day based on a true incident when the landings had a flock of inmates of an insane asylum escaping. To be written by Maurice Bessy, Henri Jeanson and Duvivier, it is to be a "comedy" . . . Word is that French-Yank Film Accord talks are progressing smoothly. They run out at the end of the year and will probably be extended from Jan. '63 to Jan. '65 with over 140 permits each year, remittances free, and maybe a special dispensation to reissue biggies older than seven years in firstrun setups . . . Director Abel Gance off to Rome to direct a French-Italo costumer "Cyrano Et D'Artagnan" in which Jose Ferrer dons doublets and Jean-Pierre Cassel. Daliah Lavi and Sylva Koscina are also in the pic . . . Victorine Studios in Nice will not close until other studios are built in Colle-Sur-Loupen nearby on the Riviera.

Rome

$1,000,000 is publicized fee for Sophia Loren's services in Samuel Bronston's "Fall of the Roman Empire," which starts in Madrid Jan. 7, as well as cipher which local grapevine sez the Mirsches offered Federico Fellini for his (still unaccepted) U.S. directional stint . . . Fellini incidentally just wound his eight and a half after some retakes on final footage, expects pic will be released about February, not December as previously reported . . . Despite star Marcello Mastroianni's four-day absence for an eye treatment, and plentiful rain, pic only wound one week over sked . . . Fellini insured for about $5,000,000 against work stoppage or delay by Lloyds of London.

Hugo Butler has written a script for direction by Mexico's Luis Bunuel . . . pic deals with present-day Italian youth and would be shot in Italy . . . Butler recently completed scripts for Robert Aldrich's "Sodom and Gomorrah" and Joseph Losey's "Eva" . . . Damiano Damiani, whose "Arturo's Island" won top prize at San Sebastian this year, starts "La Rimpatriata" (The Repatriated) soon in Milan . . . Dominique Boschero, Leticia Roman among names cast so far.

Titanus-Metro's "Family Chronicle" which shared top Venice kudo this year, also won Barcelona color fest award . . . 20th's "Longest Day" gets Gala Italo sendoff this week in Milan and Rome . . . Vittorio DeSica and Sophia Loren to be re-teamed as director and star of upcoming but untitled Carlo Ponti feature.

Bobby Cohn's run into title problem for Italo version of his "Interns" . . . while here to check on local release (January) of his pic, he zeroed in on apt one, found another pic had just been passed by Italo censor that day with the chosen title . . . also found out that contrary to U.S. tastes, medico pix per se are b.o. poison in Italy.

Buenos Aires

Salvador Salias' "Barcos de Papel" (Paper Boats) directed by Roman Vinoly Barreto, with Spanish juve actor Pablito Calvo, shared the top Venice festival award . . . Comedian Jose Marrone is due to leave this month for work on a coproduction in Spain, having severed his ties with D'An Fran here, when a demand for 1,000,000 pesos per picture, plus percentage, was turned down . . . French actor Gerard Blain has been signed by Marcelo Simonetti for "Unos Guantos Dias" (Some Few Days), a Luis Pico Estrada yarn to be rolled next Dec. with Leopoldo Torre Nilsson directing. A young Italian actress is also being sought for this opus . . . Rodolfo Kuhn hopes to collaborate with Francois Truffaut and Jean Luc Godard, directing an episode of the "World's Best Frauds." Producer Marcelo Simonetti is seeking a scripter for the Argentine episode . . . The new Screen Institute authorities are to reinitiate the regular story contests. To cut red tape synopses are to be considered, whereas formerly a completed script had to be submitted. INC has speeded up all procedures for granting production loans, to the industry's great relief.

Roman Vinoly Barreto's next project is "Persecution" from an Adolfo Bioy Casares story, with Alfredo Alcon as male lead and possibly Italian actress Brunella Bovo . . . Daniel Tinayre, whose "The Sisters" held five weeks in first run, planned "The Cricket is not an Insect" by Eduardo Borras, as his next, with Tita Merello in a star part. Unfortunately, the actress is in bad health and has been forbidden to work . . . Sergio Kogan (producer of the local version of "My Fair Lady") and Columbia began a tv contest under Rene Jollivet's management, titled "Hollywood Seeks a Star." The winner will leave for Hollywood Nov. 27 and on return will have a part in Kogan's film for Columbia

Whistler's Brother

London, Oct. 30.

A mysterious whistle, which was recorded with each take, prompted director Dan Petrie to call in the British Society for Psychical Research during the filming, at a vacant historic mansion, of the Mirisch-Barbican production "Summer Flight," starring Susan Hayward.

After two hours' investigation, the research team advised the director that the strange whistle could easily be eliminated—by removing a neighbor's 10 year old boy from an upstairs attic room.

Film-Tele Talent Schools Planned For W. Germany

Bonn, Oct. 23.

Plans are still in negotiation here with the West German Government for a Film and Television academy to train newcomers to the two industries.

Starting about six months ago, a commission headed by Dr. Berthold Martin, board director of the Federal Office for Culture, has been considering proposals for this interesting training development. But like any other project, once it gets into the hands of officials, things tend to move slowly.

Initial plan was to develop a Film and Television academy for teaching directing, producing, acting, and technical skills for television and films; to build up film archives, trade schools, art school classes, university classes, so that a graduate would emerge with an official two-year degree. But some of the plans have bogged down because of competition between the two industries, and current negotiations concern the building of a television training school in Munich (which could draw on funds from the Bavarian Govt. and classes from Munich University) and have the film training school in Berlin.

Other problems, of course, deal with funds. Is the Federal Govt. going to come up with money for the initial classes, or will they be locally financed by state govern-

Anglo Amalgamated To Fold Pix Distribution In Britain, Keep Overseas

London, Oct. 30.

Anglo Amalgamated Film Distributors, a leading British indie, is to fold its distribution setup in Britain at the end of the year, and its product will be handled from Dec. 30 onwards by Warner-Pathe. Stuart Levy, joint managing director with Nat Cohen, of Anglo, will supervise the distribution of his company's output through Warner-Pathe, and Alan Kean, Anglo's joint manager, will be joining W-P as a sales exec at the end of the year.

The distribution affiliation between Anglo and Warner-Pathe follows the announcement earlier in the year that Associated British Picture Corporation, the WP parent company, had acquired a 50% holding in Anglo Amalgamated for a reported $1,680,000.

Anglo will continue its own overseas distribution arrangement,

'Longest Day' Sparking West End, 'Wild' Hefty 17G, 'Landlady' Big 12G 'Porgy & Bess' Standout 22G, Third

London, Oct. 30.

There are two major newcomers brightening the West End scene, and both are doing standout biz. The first to hit town was "The Longest Day," which, with capacity at every evening performance, grossed a smash $24,500 in its opening week at the Leicester Square Theatre, and is heading for a comparable figure in the second round. The other is "The Chapman Report," which, though severely mauled by the London critics, is heading for $21,000, or more, in its first Warner stanza. Also currently making their West End bow are "The Wild and the Willing," which is shaping to a hefty $17,000, or near, in its first week at the Odeon, Leicester Square, and "The Notorious Landlady," which looks to hit a pleasant $12,600 at the Odeon, Marble Arch.

Among the holdovers, "Porgy & Bess" closed its third Dominion sesh with a standout $22,400, while the London Pavilion "Dr. No" was set for a socko $16,900 in its third round. "West Side Story" continues in great style, with a fancy $14,000 for its 34th week.

Estimates for Last Week

Astoria (CMA) (1,474; $1.20-$1.75—"West Side Story" (UA) (34th wk.). Great, $14,000.

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 70-$1.75)—"If a Man Answers" (Rank) (3d wk.). Fair $6,000. Almost $6,400 previous week. "Live Now—Pay Later" (Regal) opens Oct. 25.

Casino (Indie) (1,155; $1.20-$2.10)—"South Seas Adventure" (Robin' (9th wk.). Stout $12,000. Holds one more round with "How the West Was Won" (MG) preeming Nov. 1.

Coliseum (MG) (1,795; $1.05-$2.80)—"The Password Is Courage" (MG) (2d wk.). Steady $9,200. Around $10,000 opening week.

Columbia (Col) (740; $1.05-$2.50)—"Lolita" (MG) (7th wk.). Likely $8,500 or close. Almost $10,000 previous week.

Dominion (CMA) (1,712; $1.05-$2.20)—"Porgy & Bess" (BLC) (3d wk.). Great $22,400.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,375; $1.05-$2.80).—"The Longest Day" (20th) (2d wk.). Opening round, which closed last Thursday (18), hit mighty $24,500 for 11 performances, with capacity at every evening performance. Second sesh, winding 25th, is likely to close at or near the previous week's high. Holds indef. of course.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 70-$1.75)—"Dr. No" (UA) (3d wk.). Fancy $16,900, same as previous week. An amazing result in view of concurrent saturation release. Stays, natch!

Metropole (CMA) 1,394; 70-$1.75) —"El Cid" (Rank) (45th wk). Steady $5,700.

Odeon, Haymarket (CMA) (600; $1.05-$2.80) — "Barabbas" (BLC) (20th wk.). Okay $6,100.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 70-$1.75)—"The Wild and the Willing" (Rank) (1st wk.). Like-

British Exhibs Warn Of Feevee Danger

London, Oct. 23.

In its campaign against the introduction of toll-tv, the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association has warned the Board of Trade and the Postmaster-General that there is "a very real danger" of feevee "destroying the existing cinema market long before the new medium is, if ever, established."

According to a CEA letter, on the anticipated green light for pay-tv exhibs might well conclude that they had no future and so dispose of their theatres. "The number of theatres remaining open (in Britain) is getting dangerously low," warns CEA, "and a further contraction might well bring about the collapse of the whole industry."

What particularly bothers the exhibs is the fact that many producers have turned a deaf ear to their suggestion that the anticipated Tollvision experiment may prove a failure, and have warned them of "a loss of confidence among exhibitors" which could leave the filmmakers without a market at all in the U.K.

Aussie Hotel Reverts To Name Act Policy, Eased Loot a Factor

Sydney, Oct. 23.

After a long lapse of floor shows, the Chevron-Hilton (the Hilton interests are out nowadays), swing back to top U.S. acts, with Yvonne De Carlo the initial entry in the Silver Spade Room. Miss De Carlo is a four weeks' stopover.

Other U.S. topliners due to jet in for the room are Dan Dailey, Jane Powell, Larry Parks, Betty Garrett, Diana Dors, Buddy Greco, Tony Martin, Patrice Munsell and the Kirby Stone Four. Understood that overtures have been made to Judy Garland for an Aussie date.

The C-H is still heavily in the red because of construction costs and a drastic governmental monetary credit squeeze. Nevertheless, a new board of directors is confident that the hotel will swing into the black in the not too distant future.

Rebirth of top talent for the Silver Spade is seen as plan to win customers from other key nightclubs who are enjoying major biz with overseas talent. The exit of monetary restrictions now permits the C-H to make top bids in the overseas' market for the best talent available.

Keen Competition

With nightclubs now upping the ante for key talent here, with vaude and tv also bidding for new faces, this territory is a plush play spot. It's less than 24 hours from the U.S. via jet; there's no Sabbath playdates and, what's more important, there are no coin takeaway restrictions.

With C-H back again in the nightclub biz, Aussie saloon-goers should see plenty of U.S. talent from now on.

Plans for Latin American Actors Union Postponed

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

The highly publicized plans to set up a Latin American Actors Association has run afoul of "political tensions" in the area, and has to be shelved for the time being. So said Rodolfo Landa, head of the Mexican National Assn. of Actors. With little political stability in Latin America, early creation of the association is not possible. Further, in Venezuela, the actor's union is divided and in conflict because of differences in political thinking.

The same split, due to union leaders being on opposite sides of the political fences, is also prevalent in Peru, Colombia, Puerto Rico and other areas, Landa said.

However, Landa affirmed that the association will be set up eventually. A meeting of union leaders is scheduled for next spring, when it is hoped political strife and uncertainties in the area settle down.

CANTINFLAS' HOT B.O. 'NIKKI' 'GEISHA' GOOD

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

The Cantinflas name is still magic at the boxoffice in Mexico. Mario Moreno's latest film, "The Extra," grossed slightly more than $10,000 in its first day's run at five houses. First week's gross came to $78,360. Added to this, the film earned $149,988 in a special one-day preview showing in 27 provincial houses. Production have been virtually met and the film will soon be earning profits for the comic's Posa production unit. Foreign release should be all gravy.

Walt Disney's "Nikki" did more than $11,000 in its third week at the Las Americas.

"My Geisha" (Par) in its fourth week at the Chapultepec, registered a strong $12,400, and "Notorious Landlady," (Col) also in its fourth week at the Latino, is doing almost $10,0000.

"Jessica" UA) at the Variedades, hit a good $8,800 for its third week. "Spartacus," (UI) which was to have been pulled after 19 weeks at the Diana, was held over because of strong public response and did a strong $9,200.

Eric Johnston to Become Prez Of IFFPA at London Meet Nov. 1

London, Oct. 30.

Eric Johnston will formally be elected president of the International Federation of Film Producers Association at the general assembly meeting in London next Thursday (1) and Friday, but will not be present to assume the chair. The Motion Picture Association prexy touched down briefly in London last Saturday (27) en route to the Far East.

Johnston, of course, will be succeeding Arthur Watkins, who has served as International prez for the past two years. He's retiring because of ill-health, and at the end of the year will also ankle his post as president of the British Film Producers Asociation.

One new item on the International agenda will concern the admission of short film producers into membership of the Federation. In some cases, short producers are part of the major producing associations; in Britain, and some other countries, they have associations of their own. There has, apparently, been some general interest among short film makers in linking up with their big brothers in the International Assn.

As at every other International get-together, film festivals will be a top item on the agenda, though it's considered unlikely that any major changes will be made in the existing format. Attempts in past years to control the number and duration of international fests have met with little success, though they all need Federation blessing to keep in business. (See separate story on Cannes best plans).

Also on the general assembly agenda: a discussion of author's rights pertaining to international film copyright, film archives, a review of activities during 1961-62 and a look at the Federation's finances.

'WEST' GETTING PARIS BALLY BEFORE PREEM

Paris, Oct. 30.

The second Metro-Cinerama feature coproduction, "How The West Was Won" will be the first to open here and on the Continent when it preems Nov. 27 at the Empire-Abel, the specially built Super-Cinerama hardtop. However it got a private exhib and press viewing Oct. 2 for fine results and is now getting a big ballyhoo promotion.

To step up matinees, priced from $1.30 to $2 all those who reserve seats will get a tenth of a lottery ticket. The wild west restaurant, inaugurated Oct. 2, will be kept open and there is also a snack bar, "Restaurama," and a place to leave infants, "Babyrama."

Another innovation will be the "Americana," a group of stores selling Yank items like blue jeans, Indian emblems etc. that are hard to get in France.

Bandit Slays Cashier At German Drive-In

Frankfurt, Oct. 30.

West Germany's only drive-in, the Gravenbruch, near Frankfurt, recently suffered a robbery and murder, as 2,000 customers sitting in their autos watched a Hitchcock murder mystery and were totally unaware of the real-life drama occurring only a few yards away.

A masked man approached the cashier, 30-year-old Ingrid Theile, demanding money. As two ticket-takers standing nearby watched, thinking the episode was only a joke, the man seized a cashbox containing the recepits of about $1,000. Apparently nervous, the robber shot and killed the cashier and dashed off in the darkness.

Police with trained dogs searched the heavily wooded area, and found a stolen car parked along a nearby road. The bandit has not yet been apprehended.

Rewards totalling about $2,000 have been posted by the district attorney, the city, and the theatre management.

Patrons at the cinema were viewing the Hitchcock film "Dial M for Murder" at the time the shooting occurred, and did not notice the shot.

Resnais' New One

Paris, Oct. 30.

The most controversial of the newer French filmmakers, Alain Resnais, is now quietly at work on his third pic "Muriel" in a small French sea town. His "Hiroshima Mon Amour" and especially "Last Year In Marienbad" excited a lot of interest and comment, and managed to cop film fest prestige and prizes and do nicely at world box offices.

Resnais is again using an offbeat writer for his script, Jean Cayrol, as he did with Marguerite Duras for "Hiroshima" and Alain Robbe-Grillet for "Marienbad." It promises to be another offbeater that will elicit both pros and cons, but will be awaited by film buffs, vied for by film fests, and haggled over by foreign film buyers on the solid if limited b.o. prowess of his other pix.

Rewrites Put 'Escape' Over Munich Budget

Munich, Oct. 23.

"The Great Escape," a Mirisch-Alpha production for UA release, recently wound up shooting at Bavaria Studios here, 75% over its time budget. As a result of the delayed schedule, there were some who commented that the picture could have been made in Hollywood at no higher cost."

Producer Robert E. Relya, answering the critics, pointed out that the costs would have been the same no matter where the picture was made as it was additional rewrites that caused Escape" to run over, and this could hapepn to a picture made in Hollywood just as well as to one made overseas. In all, six rewrites were required, the last by Ivan Moffit. But it's hoped that the rewrites will pay off in increased production values on the screen. The rough cut of the World War II film now runs five and a half hours, and this will eventually be sliced to 240 minutes.

Next project on the company's agenda is a Mayan story, "The Moundbuilders," which will be filmed in Mexico with Yul Brynner starring and John Sturgis directing.

No Agreement At Paris Common Market Meeting

Paris, Oct. 30.

The recent meeting of representatives from production, distribution, exhibition and technical services from the Common Market film industries came to no conclusions regarding ECM film aid from small hikes in admission prices due to exhib objection.

Exhibitors felt that needed tax reduction was the main point and could not find a modus videndi with the others who thought film aid, for production was the top thing. There will be another meeting in Nov. to try to work out a system that would please all.

Bronston Sets Up New Italo Co. for 'Empire'

Rome, Oct. 30.

Samuel Bronston Productions Italiana has been formed by the Madrid-based producer to "develop and amplify collaboration with the Italian film industry."

Bronston, who plans to shoot some of his upcoming "Fall of the Roman Empire" in Italy, stressed however that the new Italo office did not prelude a general move away from his current Spanish hq. Nor was he deliberately setting up shop here in order to cash in on coproduction and aid advantages, he added. "If we get them, so much the better, but we're not looking for them, nor do we need them."

Prexy of Bronston's Italian subsid is Giorgio Dickman, with Mike Washinsky and Paul Lazarus as veepees. Bronston skied in from Madrid for the opening accompanied by Lazarus and Washinsky. Among others present at the inaugural were Van Heflin, France Nuyen, Robert Wagner, Bronston art directors John Moore and Veniero Colasanti, Dimitri Tiomkin, plus several Italo industry toppers.

Bronston announced Jan. 7 as the Madrid starting date for "Fall of the Roman Empire." Anthony Mann directs a cast headed by Sophia Loren, Alec Guiness, Stephen Boyd, Richard Harris, and James Mason. Interiors will largely be filmed in Rome's Cinecitta Studios.

ments, or paid for by the industries themselves?

A large committee of experts in the fields concerned—including Bonn politicians, a representative of the West German Film Producers' Union, an official with the West German Film Censorship Board, a representative of the Obernhausen Group (this is the young group of documentary makers who are considered the big hope of developing a German "new wave" of filmmaking) are all part of the project, along with representatives from West German TV Nets One nad Two, the latter only starting to broadcast in April 1963.

With so many fingers in the pot—and so many tongues wagging in various directions—it is to be hoped that eventually all the talk will result in some concrete action.

The picture industry has developed more or less on its own since the war and is now affected by the tremendous fall-off of business here, while television is rapidly mushrooming ahead.

But it's still a very vague proposition. And as one of the representatives pointed out, "There are some training schools for films or film academies in Paris, Warsaw, Tokyo, Moscow, Italy, the U. S., and even in Thailand, West Germany is just about the only major country that has no form of official training.

and, as a result of the new deal, intends to extend its activities in providing facilities and finance for independent producers as well as concentrating on the company's enhanced production program.

Peter Rogers Doubles Prod.

London, Oct. 30.

As a sequel to Anglo Amalgamated's increased production, Peter Rogers has decided to step up his output for that company from three to at least six a year.

A new producer-director crew is now being recruited by Rogers, and he will be exec producer. The Rogers-Gerald Thomas partnership, which has made over 15 features during the last five years for Anglo, will continue, and their latest production, "Nurse on Wheels," is due to start Nov. 12.

Among the projects in active preparation is the seventh in the highly successful "Carry On" series. Others on the slate include "Second Opinion," "Whistle in the Dark," "Steady Boys, Steady," "The Tangled Webb," "The Great Spinoza Robbery," "A Dog's Life," "Call Me a Cab." "Under Canvas," "Up the Armada," "Not in the Book," "Lowering the Tone," "Thanks for the Memory," "Between the Sheets," and "Anyone for Sex."

Mexican producers are forming their own cooperative venture to make pictures. Initial effort involves Guillermo Calderon, Rene Cardona and Espartaco Santoni who plan to make "Four Leaf Clover," with this having a $480,000 budget. Said Santoni, about a recent development here: "If workers can form cooperatives, why not we producers also?" . . . Even extras want to get in on the production act with Sebastian Muro representing them looking for private capital to launch extras as motion picture producers.

Inside Stuff—International

Arnljot Engh, head of the cinemas owned by the city of Oslo, made the Norwegian preem of "West Side Story" a front page story. To a morning show he invited the press and retired cinema personnel. At the performance in the Colosseum, the entire Parliament, the city council, Trygve Lie, former secretary general of UN, and ambassadors from various countries were invited. Local stars sang hits from "Story" in the lobby, and Engh himself made a speech praising the pic. But the fest did not end at that point. Engh had invited all entertainers in Oslo to attend a night presentation of the pic, dedicating the presentation to those who could never see a normal performance of the film. Every actor, musician, and opera-singer in town filled the 900-seat theatre. "Story" is on a hardticket basis, and already beat a box-office record on the opening night; being the first pic in Norway to be sold out one week in advance.

Report in international soundtrack issue of Oct. 24 erratumed by crediting William Garrone as producer of "Mastery of Space." Garrone should have been credited only as cameraman. Pic was produced by P.G.L. Productions, N. Y.; in association with NASA.

German Films' U.S. '61 B.O. Was Up Despite Domestic Prod. Worries

Frankfurt, Oct. 30.

While West German filmites are crying the blues about dwindling box office and the fall-off in theatre attendance at home, one bright spot emerges: West German film receipts from other countries have not shown a corresponding drop, and are actually down only a slight 5% from the previous year, while West Germany's exports to the U.S. doubled in 1961.

According to the West German film Export Union, German film exports in 1961 fell 5% to a total of about $6,425,000. Of this total, the biggest share $1,497,250 came from the U.S. This represented nearly twice as much as German films realized in America in 1960, when the total income was $841,725.

German pix also accounted for $447,250 in France in 1961 (a drop from 1960), plus $70,500 in England, $320,250 from Italy, $976,725 from Austria, and about $3,114,725 from all other countries combined. Only in America was German take-home pay larger than it had been in 1960. In Italy for instance, where local production has increased considerably, the German cut was down 45% from 1960, in France, 20% less, in Austria, 25% lower.

Interestingly, it appears that German films are doing better and better in America, since the 1960 income from the U.S. was 90% higher than that of 1959, and 1961 was nearly doubled again. Higher rentals and better distribution of German pix accounted for the increase, it was noted here. On the other hand, business in West Germany dipped a total of 37% in 1961 over the best of the post-war years, 1956.

German producers, who had formerly agitated that they be guaranteed rentals for a certain number of films yearly in America, are now content with the developing business which has occurred without any pressure on their part. Some German producers had asked that MPEA members operating in West Germany take a set number of pictures, at a set fee, for the U.S. annually, and this topic has long been under discussion. With grosses down considerably in West Germany, the foreign companies doing business in Germany all took considerably less money out.

Foreign film business in Germany (all these figures include West Berlin) went down to about $27, 843, 725 in 1961—a drop from the $33,156,000 of 1960. Of that the highest amount, about $11,335,725, went to the U.S. (down from the $13,009,000 that U.S. films earned in Germany in 1960).

The French came in second, earning $3,905,500 in 1961, while the Austrians were next with $3,484,250, followed by Italy with $2,331,250, England with $2,170,725, and all other countries with a 1961 total take of $4,616,250.

Col.'s German Subsid

Frankfurt, Oct. 30.

A new West German production company, called Constellation Film Corp., has been founded in Frankfurt, with capital of $1,000,000 to produce films for Columbia.

By Christmas the new group will complete plans for a program of eight or 10 titles to be made in Germany.

It is planned that next year, both Constellation and Columbia films in Germany, now headquartered in Frankfurt, will move to Munich to be closer to the production centres.

Rate the Gate

Glasgow, Oct. 23.

Michael Goldberg, chairman of the Citizens Theatre here, has divided legit audiences into four main groups:

1. Those who come to the theatre only to be entertained.

2. The uplift group, who want only clean and wholesome plays, pointing to a moral or adorned with a message.

3. The avant garde, the far-out, fringe group, interested only in anger, anguish or Anouilh. Their approach to the theatre is this: if a play is obscure, it must be good; if it's incomprehensible, it is brilliant.

4. The hard core of audiences, drawn from intelligent, adult-minded people whose minds are fluid and receptive, who are prepared to think as well as re-arrange their prejudices.

United Arab Republic Sets 3 Pic Deal With British Femme Prod.

London, Oct. 23.

Margaret K. Johns, managing director and producer of Libertas Productions (International) has set up a deal with the United Arab Republic involving three pix that will be made in English, shot in Egypt and aimed at Western audiences. The three pronged program consists of a full length feature, a documentary and a second feature. The trio will be budgeted for $770,000, of which Egypt will put up $560,000. The balance of $210,000 will be supplied by British Lion for the full length film which it will distribute.

Miss Johns told VARIETY: "We shall start shooting 'Incident on the Border,' which will be my first full length feature, in November on a 10 weeks' schedule and a budget of $490,000. American, John Berry, will be directing Iain MacCormick's screenplay and Desmond Dickinson will do the lensing."

The film will be dubbed in German and Arabic and, though no casting has been settled, Diane Cilento and John Fraser are under negotiation and Miss Johns also hopes to have the German star, Hardy Kruger. Second production will be a 60-minute documentary in color and CinemaScope called "Highway to a New World" which Peter Baylis, noted for his series on NATO, will script and direct. Orson Welles is named as narrator, and it will be distributed by Columbia.

No title or distributor have been set for the supporting feature, which John Pudney will script from a play by Abdulla Basheer, an Egyptian poet who has settled in England. Top tv director Philip Seville has been pacted as the director.

Miss Johns, ex-actress and ballet dancer and, at 34, Britain's youngest and most glamorous woman film producer, said: "We are making certain that all three films will faithfully reflect life in the United Arab Republic."

Reissue Cantinflas?

Mexico City, Oct. 23.

A move by Eloy Poire Hernandez, who recently set up a new independent distributorship, to link five old Cantinflas two-reelers under title of "The Cantinflas Festival" has been frustrated by the comic. Mario Moreno denounced the Hernandez plan as "fraudulent" since rights to the films are owned exclusively by Posa Films, production unit owned by Cantinflas. Comic's deposition stated that the name "Cantinflas" is registered worldwide. No one can use the name without express authority of Mario Moreno.

The Film Bureau was on verge of granting a permit for showing of the linked shorts as a "feature" film. After talking with Cantinflas, Carmen Baez, Bureau head, suspended action on the authorization. Apparently matter will now go to the courts for resolution.

The idea of capitalizing on the Cantinflas shorts was spurred by the success of the Harold Lloyd oldies, which are doing good boxoffice.

Cantinflas may issue the pix via his Posa Films (Columbia distributorship) unit. Involved in the current dispute were five oldies including "Cantinflas, Boxer;" "Cantinflas, Taxi Driver;" "Cantinflas & His Cousin;" "Cantinflas In The Dark;" and "Cantinflas Against Dynamite."

Rod Alexander Maps Sharper Western Touch For Japanese Terping

Tokyo, Oct. 16.

Rod Alexander, dancer turned choreographer, has settled here with a longrange program for putting his dances into Japan's theatres, nightclubs, films and tv shows. In explaining his undertaking, he said, "While Japanese dancers are extraordinarily good—their productions and sense of design are beautiful—I feel their Western numbers can be sharpened.

"Maybe I can give the dancers a little better understanding of motivation, content, dynamics and construction so their presentations would be more accurate and have greater showmanship," he added. "It would help them begin to develop more of an inner feeling of Western dance. Now, it's a little superficial. They do it very well and they're well-trained, but it seems to be without true understanding."

Should he encounter too much resistance from Japanese producers to start with a splash, Alexander is willing to win them over gradually through his teaching at the International Dance Institute here, the creation of numbers for single tv shots and the staging of individual acts.

Eventually, Alexander hopes to form his own troupe. The purpose would not only be for overseas tours, but also to generally showcase the abilities of Japanese dancers. "It's easy to use words," he said, "but it's much better to have a living example."

Italian Legit Down 10,000,000 Theatre Admissions in 10 Years

Rome, Oct. 23.

The Italian legit theatre has lost 10,000,000 customers in 10 years, according to figures just released here by SIAE, the Association of Authors and Publishers. Not surprising, therefore, that the average Italian spent little more than 25c during all of 1961 on theatregoing.

Inevitably, television, jukeboxes, dancehalls, and other "miscellaneous" entertainment items, together with sport events, were on the rise, while filmgoing habits changed little in the same period.

1961 totals also show Milan spending twice as much as Rome on theatre tickets (just over $2 per head, vs. $1 average for the Eternal City), though Rome topped the nation in the number of performances: 4,645 vs. 3,941 for second place Milan.

Drop in legit attendance is less disastrous if one considers only top-ranking companies, including one or more name players each. In this exclusive sector, 1961 total of 1,600,000 spectators compares with 1951's 2,000,000, while the national total of performances in theis group is actually higher now, with 5,381 rather, than the 1951 total, when there were 5,285.

Meanwhile, the legit season which has just started is already notable for the number of absences of top-ranking players and companies.

Last year's top-grossing company, headed by Paolo Stoppa and Rina Morelli, will not perform; nor will that topped by Gino Cervi, who holds the 1960-61 record for a single performance. Others ankling the season are Vittorio Gassmann and his National Popular Theatre; Andreina Pagnani; Dario Fo and Franca Rame—other top draws; and, probably, the DeLullo-Falk-Guarnieri-Valli-Albani company, one of the mainstays and consistently most successful of the postwar legit outfits in Italy.

Plans for Cannes Fest in High Gear; Shorter, Later, Fewer Pix

Paris, Oct. 30.

Though still six months off, plans for the next Cannes Film Fest are already being made. It will be shorter, have a later starting date, try to have fewer pix, and also include a special critics section for promising first films.

Though it is generally conceded that Cannes was the top fest of the year in regard to quality, film and press turnout, coverage, and business transacted, fest prexy Robert Favre Le Bret feels that some changes are needed. Main problem is the plethora of films plus the diplomatic aspect of the fest that makes it impossible to turn down an entry from any country. Many nations have begun to realize that a nondescript pic does not help and, rather than gaining prestige, only hurts. So there seems to be less insistence on forcing an unlikely pic on the fest.

Quality Important

Of course some clinkers are still forced through, but last year's fest had a surprisingly high level, including those from smaller nations. It is hoped this may prevail again this year, but the burgeoning French community in Afro countries are beginning to be felt and there is hope something worthwhile may show up from them. Last year the African films were really European since they were made and conceived by Frenchmen.

So with plans that the number of films can be kept down to a handy 20 or so, rather than 33, the fest has been cut down to 13 days, to run from May 10-23 a week later than usual. There will probably be two official pix a day, with 7 and 10 p.m. screenings to give a semblance of evening shows for all. There will be earlier showings for the press.

The International Producer market with free morning showings of pix for press and prospective buyers, will also be continued and underwritten by the French Film Producer Assn. and will be available gratis to anyone with a pic to sell provided it is not more than a year old. Even here some selectivity will be attempted.

Critics Choosing

A group of local critics have already been chosen to begin screening pix from all countries and to pick from seven to 10 the Critic Section. This event had fine attendance last year and unveiled several new films of promise that snared sales values and prestige.

Though last year's grand prize taker, a Brazilian pic "The Given Word," was a flop here commercially, it is pointed out that others have done well. The new method of choosing U.S. films by having Hollywood Guild members do it was also found successful and it is hoped it will be continued.

Le Bret is already making the rounds of countries looking for unusual product, besides the pix that will be sent officially. He is due for a New York and Hollywood jaunt later this year.

Also being mulled is a special section, akin to the Venice Info Section procedure, that would be able to absorb film from various countries that are not felt up to competing calibre, but this is touchy since many nations might be offended. It will have to be handled with diplomacy, but, if it succeeds, the new section could lessen the burden of extra, politically-imposed, pix and leave the field to quality, or so it is hoped.

Usher Blusher

London, Oct. 30.

Speaking at a showmanship luncheon at the Savoy last week, Mike J. Frankovich, Columbia's first veepee, recalled the days when he was an usher in a Los Angeles theatre, and had an ambition to become a theatre manager.

"I never quite made it," he added in resigned tones.

Continue Efforts To Regain Latin Markets For Argentine Pix

Buenos Aires, Oct. 23.

Determined efforts are being made, with Screen Institute support, to recover Latin-American markets for Argentine films. Following the Film Week held in Paraguay in September, saved at the last minute by the timely appearance of Luis Sandrini and wife, Malvina Pastorino, with Olga Zubarry, the attack is now directed at Chile, where a two years contract was signed with the Pacifico Theatre in Santiago for exclusive release of Argentine product. The contract was signed there by L. A. Mentasti and Oscar Cacici after Barzelatto and Sacompanieco of the Chilean circuit had viewed the best Argentine product of recent years, selecting the 30 best-suited to their market.

An Argentine film week was also recently concluded in Madrid as part of Columbus Day amenities, INC sending a delegation of stars ands delegates. selections for the exhibition were "The Man of the Rose Colored Corner" (Sono), "The Ruffian" (Tinayre), Torre Nilsson's "Fin de Fiesta," Antin's "Odd Numbers" (La Cifra Impar); Ralph Pappier's "Crime," "He Nacido in Buenos Aires" (Mujica) and Kohon's "Three Times Anna."

Raul Barbarita's Films Mundiales is also endeavoring to reestablish Argentina ascendancy in the Uruguayan market, having lined up seven releases in eight weeks, with another five pending. His campaign included tv publicity and presentation of Argentine screen personalities including that of Libertad Leblanc, of "La Flor de Irupe," hailed as the new Israel Sarli. This "sexy type film was roundly condemned by local critics and commentators, and had no local boxoffice impact.

Irish Cinemas' Net Up

Dublin, Oct. 23.

Irish Cinemas Ltd. net profit for the year ending June 30 totalled $137,065.60 (against $122,237.60 last year). Dividend on the common shares was unchanged at 17½%.

Odeon (Ireland) Ltd., also a Rank-controlled operation, reported a profit for the same period of $162,738.80 ($117,359.20 previous year) and held its common dividend again at 17½%.

R&R Does Paris B.O.

Paris, Oct. 30.

French jazz purists and critics are beginning to unbend and realize that rock 'n roll is an adjunct of jazz and not something to be forever disdained. They eased up for the solid work of singer Fats Domino, who came in with his orch for a six day stay at the big Palais Des Sports. Biz was brisk among the youngsters, twist fans as well as jazz buffs.

The Olympia had a one nighter for several noted but more obscure Yank singers and musicians which drew a good crowd and powerful mitts. Among those on the program were Helen Hume, John Lee Hooker, T. Bone Walker, Brownie Mac Ghee, Memphis Slim, Sonny Terry, Shakey Shake, Willie Dixon and Jump Jackson.

NBC Digs in on Hot Off-the-Air D.C. Spectacular; Could Be Zingiest Cloak & Dagger Show of the Year

Washington, Oct. 30.

NBC has raised the curtain on what could be the best of its thriller-crime-and-detective programs, but it won't ever be seen on tv.

Instead, the spectacular is to continue in an uncrowded FCC room Wednesday (31) with another mighty giant, the Ford Motor Co., as the worthy opponent.

NBC dropped a hint of what's to come in preparing to continue the hearing for a trade of its WRCV radio-tv stations in Philadelphia for WNAC-AM-FM-TV in Boston. Ford's subsidiary Philco, is standing by with a legal shotgun to blast away at the swap and nab the Philadelphia outlet for itself.

In hearings last week, Philco crammed the record with testimony tainting the NBC image with reports the network "muscled in" and used "pressure and ultimatums" in its business dealings with stations.

Irving Segal, counsel for NBC rose to the occasion on Thursday and charged that "Ford and Philco are here to get a television station for nothing."

"They're not here in the public interest," stated Segal.

The blast came after attorneys for Philco complained they had sought without success some 76 documents from NBC for use in the hearing. They finally won a subpoena to have NBC produce them, but Segal said several days were needed to gather them and to decide if they are relevant to the case.

"If we feel Ford and Philco just want these documents for competitive business reasons, we will oppose their request," said an NBC attorney.

After all, these are business matters and Philco is trying to get a tv station, a valuable piece of property, for nothing. Philco has alleged that they can prove things, now they say they need our documents to do that. That is nonsense."

Philco attorney Henry Weaver told the FCC's chief hearing examiner, James D. Cunningham, that "we have tried unsuccessfully to get these papers without a sub-

Move to Speed up Swap

Washington, Oct. 30.

NBC and RKO General jointly petitioned the FCC Friday (26) to give them temporary authority to exchange their Philadelphia and Boston radio and television stations before NBC's Dec. 31 deadline.

Under the consent decree signed with the Justice Dept., NBC has to get out of Philadelphia by the last day of the year. NBC went to the U.S. district court in Philadelphia last week to sound out chances for getting the Dec. 31 deadline postponed. The court issued a "memorandum opinion" suggesting the network ask temporary relief from FCC instead. The court had been advised the Justice Dept. would oppose any extension of the Dec. 31 requirement in the consent decree.

Permitting the temporary swap would not "constitute a determination by the Commission of any of the issues designated for hearing," the petition stated.

Lum (& Abner) Carries Fulbright Torch to Ozarks

Washington, Oct. 30.

Suave Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), the most unlikely Arkansan since Lorelei Lee, has reached back into show biz's recent past, to translate his campaign for reelection into understandable Ozark terms.

The high C of his finale is being delivered in the incongruous monotone of Chester Lauck. In radio's palmiest days, Lauck was the front half of the unique Lum 'n' Abner tandem.

Now advance man for an oil company in Houston, Lauck was drafted by Fulbright forces to record five five-minute spots for radio and television in his old ineffable style. They are being strategically dropped statewide during the last five days of the campaign.

Fulbright, an ex-college president and now lofty architect of global strategy as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has a little trouble communicating with his constituents. Lauck, or rather Lum, does a much better

NBC Tunnel Show 'In Month or So'

The much-disputed program about the escape tunnel between East and West Berlin will probably be aired by NBC-TV, and just as probably it will be aired within the next month or two.

"The Tunnel" was cancelled last week, a day after the Cuban crisis broke out. NBC News had planned to air the 90-minute film of the digging tonight (Wed.), but a remark by Lincoln White, press secretary to the U.S. State Dept., upset network officials. White said he wouldn't try to stop NBC-TV from airing the program, but he nonetheless showed his disapproval. A few days late, the perfect out came with President Kennedy's speech, but now that the crisis has eased, various NBC officials say, the stated reason for the cancellation no longer obtains.

Other obstacles to "The Tunnel" seem to have been cleared away. Of course, a negative statement by the East German government still stands as is, but West Germans, at first unhappy over the film being used on NBC-TV, have seemingly reversed themselves.

Lester Bernstein, an NBC veep, was in Berlin prior to the Cuban crisis. His presence was apparently hinged to removing objections by the West Berlin Senate to the program. Afterwards, the city government seemed to embrace the idea of the program. There was a report later that Ernst Lemmer, Minister for All German Affairs (i.e., between East and West Germany), who has an office in Berlin, where Bernstein was, also approved of the show. Lemmer said that he approved of any program that would shed light on the state of affairs there.

Planned as TV Spec, WB's 'FBI Code 98' To Get Theatrical Release

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

"FBI Code 98," which Warner Bros. telefilmed last season as a potential spec for ABC-TV, will be released as a theatrical film instead.

WB had filmed the FBI story as a possible 90-min. telespec. Actually, the studio shot more footage than was needed, having a theatrical release in mind in event the show didn't make it as a spec, and "Code" runs 105 minutes.

Jack Kelly, Ray Danton, Phil Carey, William Reynolds, Andrew Duggan, Merry Anders, Peggy McKay and Kathleen Crowley are in the film, which was budgeted at around $500,000. Stanley Niss produced.

NBC 'Archeologist' Unearths a Studio

A specially constructed "fireside chat" radio studio, finished at NBC's 30 Rock headquarters in the late '30s, has been rediscovered. The word rediscovery is almost literal, NBC execs say, since they came upon it and found that not a piece had been changed—or used, apparently—in some 25 years.

The little radio studio snuggled mutely behind the big election studio 8-H, and was disclosed only as alterations of the giant room were carried out. A studio the late Franklin Delano Roosevelt never got to use, it is paneled in pine and has a fireplace, too. NBC News has decided to use it finally as the place for tabulating Manhattan voting returns on Tuesday (6) night.

Bette Davis Vice Burr As a Modern Portia

Bette Davis will portray a modern-day Portia on "Perry Mason," when the series will have to do without the services of Raymond Burr for four segments this season. Burr, who has been portraying Perry Mason for nearly six years without missing a show, has to have some minor corrective surgery done. Burr plans to go to the hospital at mid-season, leaving him unavailable for five hourlong segments.

Four of the five segments will feature guest stars, each taking a case usually given to the great Perry Mason. It is presumed that Miss Davis, as well as the other three guestars, won't lose a case either, just like Mason. The fifth segment will be a rerun.

GF—Never Had It So Good

When a sponsor's riding with six prime time shows on a network (CBS) and winds up with seven places in the Nielsen Top 18 (including the No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 entries)—that's not only the neatest trick of the year, but making it in spades. It's one of the most unique records ever posted in tv by a national client and why the General Foods boys are indulging in some fancy Nielsen nipups these days.

Based on the new season's first national Nielsens, here's how GF comes off: It's Lucille Ball show is in No. 1 position; Andy Griffith in second place; Danny Thomas in third place; Jack Benny in 10th place; "Gunsmoke" in 14th place and "I've Got A Secret" in 15th place.

On top of that the hour special with which GF launched the season, utilizing all its stars, wound up in No. 5 position as a seasonal kickoff bonus.

Israel Warned to Move Pronto On TV or Face Pirating of Channels

Tel Aviv, Oct. 30.

Professor Walter Kingson, of the Univ. of California, who was sent to Israel by UNESCO as a radio and tv expert, has warned Israeli authorities, that the neighboring Arab countries may pirate Israel's four tv channels, if Israel doesn't make soon use of them.

Israel has no tv yet and the discussions, whether and when to establish a State-owned tv station have been going on for years. A Government committee was recently formed to study a report, made by a previous committee, recommending to start off with an educational channel. The Rotschild family is willing to finance the venture. However, Prime Minister Ben-Gurion is reportedly still objecting on the premise, that Israel doesn't need such luxuries.

In a press conference, Prof. Kingson has now added a powerful argument in favor of building a tv studio as quickly as possible. He explained that by international agreement, four channels were allocated for Israel. Egypt is already using five channels, Lebanon three. The Arab States may soon run out of channels and in that case they may decide to pirate the Israeli allocations, claiming that the Israelis are not exercising their rights anyhow.

Prof. Kingson came to Israel as advisor to the newly-opened Radio School in Jerusalem. The school's aim is to prepare educated young people for service in the State-owned radio station, the Kol Israel. The first sign of the Government's willingness to introduce tv is, that the school plans to open a tv class too.

Prof. Kingson is accompanied by his wife, who will teach radio script-writing at the same school.

ABC's Jimmy Dean Pilot

ABC-TV has signed pop singer Jimmy Dean to star in a half-hour pilot aimed at the 1963-64 season. Format of Dean show has not yet been detailed but it's figured to be of a music-variety nature.

Web is planning to spin off the Dean pilot in the Tuesday night 10-10:30 p.m. slot where the Sid Caesar and Edie Adams specials are running.

NBC Incepting 'Dewline System' On Election Nite

NBC News says it has a "dewline reporting system" to facilitate "jackrabbit" predictions on Nov. 6, Election Night. A host of NBC reporters will fan out through six "major" states and they'll be feeding back early returns to Election Central in N.Y. where the network hopes to issue something akin to "magic town" survey results.

Web says the "dewline" system was never used before by tv in a national election. It is based on a trial run last November during the New York Mayoralty race when NBC was able to tabulate 170,000 votes from 310 election districts "within 41 minutes of the closing of the polls" and then "accurately reported," per the web, the results of the entire vote in N.Y., won by Robert F. Wagner. It was used also in the recent Massachusetts Dem primary won by Ted Kennedy.

Distribution of "dewline" is based on political, ethnic, sociological and economic cross-sections, after the fashion of most polltaking. These early results will then be "projected" to a national base and—hopefully, for

NBC's Robinson Gets Saigon Boot

NBC News Far East correspondent James Robinson was ordered out of Saigon by Madame Nhu, Vietnam's first lady — sometimes called "The Dragon Lady" by Foreign press representatives there.

Expulsion order said Robinson was being ousted because of a "lack of deference towards the regulation and laws" of Vietnam. U.S. Embassy fought ouster, so did other American correspondents in Saigon, but he was reported as having gone by Monday (29), date he was scheduled to leave in any event. (NBC doesn't have fulltime man there.)

Belief expulsion was based on attempted Vietnam pressure against deviation from official government press line. Robinson said the Vietnamese government was long mad at NBC for a film on their President, which they felt did not "depict him in the proper light."

Gardner-Levy-Laven Set TV Comedy Pilot

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Production team of Arthur Gardner, Jules Levy and Arnold Laven will make its first venture into comedy, piloting "Which Way Did They Go?," by Arthur Brown Jr.

Trio, which produces "The Rifleman" at Four Star, plans to roll the pilot in November. Comedy has an outdoor background.

FCC and Industry Speak Soft, But In the Background Knives Whetted

By MIKE MOSETTIG

Washington, Oct. 30.

It may or may not be Armageddon, but the broadcasting industry and LeRoy Collins are cautiously and quietly moving to a test of strength with the Minowmen.

In the foreground Collins is taking a tougher line with the FCC and its boss Newton Minow.

In the background, the industry is bolstering its political front.

The NAB is now out in the open with its political action program as its new lobbyist, Paul Comstock, advises broadcasters to jump into politics at home and use their influence to boost favorable candidates.

But the biggest obstacle so far to active broadcaster politicking is the threat of license revocation, and FCC's powers of revocation as interpreted by Minow.

It was these threats that Collins knocked down at the Washington NAB Fall Conference as Minow and Commissioners Frederick Ford, T. A. M. Craven and Rosel Hyde looked on from the head table.

Said Collins: "I frankly think the danger of losing licenses is grossly magnified beyond all reason."

"I do not feel that broadcasters should react with cries of anguish as some do when they get a letter from the FCC asking for an explanation of some relatively trivial matter—or when some Commissioner makes a speech—or when some trade magazine editor sounds off and views with alarm," Collins added.

And in the unkindest cut of all, NAB prexy said, "There is no sound reason why he should wring his hands or tremble in fear before any man or influence in government or out."

Noting that the industry "is out of the knee pants era of adolescent behavior," Collins stated that as mature adults broadcasters should act, "not because we have to but because we want to—not because it is smart—but because it is right."

But as right has a way of being determined by might, it will take more than words to firm Collins' stand.

As Collins was trying to whittle FCC's revocation powers, Comstock was proposing that the industry draw up a list of station owners who can put the bite on certain Congressmen when their vote is needed on broadcast legislation.

Comstock suggested NAB make a list similar to the type used by the American Medical Assn. which names doctors who can pressure Congressmen on certain bills.

But how far broadcasters can go in their politicking comes back to the question of how far FCC can push its revocation powers.

Both FCC and the industry are trading or treading uncharted ground.

Minow's remarks on possible revocation in his 1961 "wasteland" speech have yet to be bolstered by any specific action on such a broad basis as he then suggested.

Also looming is the vision of a more Minowized and Kennedyized FCC—the latest addition being E. William Henry, the personification of the shrewdly intellectual young New Frontiersman.

Power politics, not doctrine, shape the crux of conflict as broadcasters and Commissioners speak quietly and kindly of one another but as they even more quietly wet their knives in the background.

IT'S CBS 1ST; NBC 2D; ABC 3D

Missile-Tempoed TV

Apparently the day is over, in this era of high-cost tv, when a sponsor or a network can play around with a show and nurse it into a hit. The chances are, with but isolated instances, that you're no better off come May than you were in November, and that virtually means a click from scratch. Such is the missle-tempoed pace of tv today that the selling season for '63-'64 will start in December—only a month away. Some sponsors have already committed for next season. Madison Ave. clients have appraised the hits & misses, the casualties and the survivors into next season.

NBC is playing around with plans for a Monday night reshuffle. ABC is reshuffling its Monday sked, and its Roy Rogers Sat. night show may go after 13 weeks. CBS' "Fair Exchange" is on the rocks and the Thursday-Friday lineups are up for reexamination.

In a rocket age in tv, you got to make it fast, you got to make it commercial and you got to make it good. Otherwise, like David Susskind, you have no recourse but to peddle it to educational tv.

Dream Me Up a Title

TV Dramatic Shows This Season Coming up With Some Whoppers

A trend to rococo titles for tv dramatic shows, started last year by "Ben Casey" on ABC-TV, has generated a spectacular crop of literary efforts this season. Apparently the word has gone out to the titlists to be as obscure as possible in the maximum number of words.

Typical allusive title on "Ben Casey" stanzas are "In the Name of Love, A Small Corruption," "Between Summer and Winter, The Glorious Season," "Saturday, Surgery and Stanley Schultz," "So Oft It Chances In Particular Men," "For the Ladybug, One Dozen Roses," and others equally lengthy and unilluminating.

Other tv dramatic shows have joined the game. The NBC-TV "Eleventh Hour," for instance, has come up with such niftles as "I Don't Belong In A White Painted House," "There Are Dragons In This Forest," "Angie, You Made My Heart Sad," "Hurrah, Hurrah, The Circus Is Coming To Town," "The Second Day of Creation," and others. "Sam Benedict," another NBC-TV entry, is running under such titles as "Life Is A Lie—Love Is A Cheat," "Hear The Mellow Wedding Bells," and "A Split Week at San Quentin." "Naked City," on ABC-TV, is another title-happy series. A typical one used recently was "Five Cranks For Winter—10 Cranks For Spring."

But ABC-TV's "Wagon Train" still calls 'em straight along the lines of "The John Smith Story."

Levathes Out At 20th; Bill Self In

Twentieth Century-Fox prexy Darryl F. Zanuck reshuffled the company's television department last week with the selection of William Self as director of all tv activities. Self replaces Peter Levathes, acting head of 20th-Fox TV who is no longer with the company.

Self, onetime director of program administration for CBS-TV in Hollywood, has been conferring in New York with Richard D. Zanuck, DFZ's rep at the studio, and Vincent Sherman, Hal Kanter and Paul Monash, three tv producers on the 20th lot.

Clairol CBS Buys

Clairol, via Foote, Cone & Belding, has bought a roster of morning and nighttime minutes on CBS-TV.

In the nighttime, Clairol bought 16 minutes in "Password," "Fair Exchange," "Dobie Gillis," "Eyewitness," and "Miss Teenage America."

Daytime, Clairol inked for 22 morning minutes starting Nov. 26. in addition to one segment of "Secret Storm."

Pharmco bought 78 morning minutes over a 13-week period.

NBC Moves Fast As Mary Martin Talks ABC Deal

When it began to look like ABC-TV and Mary Martin would get together on a deal, NBC-TV, the longtime home base for the star, moved in fast to hold her and renegotiate a new contract. Even so ABC did manage to tie up Miss Martin for a one-shot guestint on a Bing Crosby special, but it's on a reciprocal basis in return for which Crosby will guest on a Mary Martin special. The latter will e on NBC.

Apparently NBC had been dragging its feet and permitted Miss Martin's contract to lapse. The plan for Abe Burrows to whip up a show for her ("this would be in addition to her "Peter Pan" repeat already on tape) had collapsed. That's when Miss Martin and her agent started talking things with ABC. At this point, it's reported, NBC moved in fast with result that a new two-year contract is reportedly in the works.

Comden & Green Relent, So Cara Williams Gets Lead In 'Bells Ringing'

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Impasse between CBS-TV and MGM-TV over "The Bells Are Ringing" pilot created when CBS-TV pactee Cara Williams was nixed as the lead for the series has been resolved, and Miss Williams will be its star.

Adolph Green and Betty Comden, who authored "Bells" on Broadway and in pix and the pilot, had rejected a CBS-TV pitch to have Miss Williams star in it. With this, CBS-TV, which is bank-rolling the half-hour pilot, said the deal was cold without her.

A CBS source said objections of Comden-Green had been "overcome," and the project was proceeding with Miss Williams as its star. The comedienne starred in "Pete and Gladys" on CBS-TV last season.

FIRST NIELSENS ALREADY POSTED

By GEORGE ROSEN

Madison Ave. is still reeling from the first major National Nielsens of the new season (and subsequent 30-city Nielsen reports) which reveal some of the most dramatic shifts in viewing habits in years. Shows that were solid clicks last season have suddenly fallen into rating disrepute in the reshuffling of the three-network schedules, and although the season is only a month old, the disaster periods have already been posted.

The patterns, the hits and misses have in virtually all cases been established, for what the ratings now disclose will in all probability be born out in future listings.

These are some of the major highlights:

CBS has a commanding first position lead, probably its best showing in a decade.

NBC wins second place hands down.

ABC, trailing in third position, is having probably its worst rating season in years.

CBS has Mondays, Tuesdays and Saturdays all wrapped up in pink ribbon. NBC is right in there with CBS for Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Sunday contention. Give or take a couple of rating points, these nights could go either way.

Of the 50 prime time half-hours per week (Sundays 7 to 11; weekdays 7:30 to 11) CBS wins 32 of them on the National Nielsens for the period ending Oct.; NBC wins 12 and ABC six. Latter include the "Naked City" two half-hours; the "Ben Casey" two half-hours and the "Wagon Train" two half hours (although NBC's competing 90-minute "Virginian," by virtue of a rear guard action which gives it a sock 8:30 to 9 payoff, is now figured to overtake it on the National Nielsen averages.

In holding a firm grip on the No. 2 position among the three networks NBC winds up in third place only on Monday nights, which is something of a "crisis night" for the network, with even the once lofty "Price Is Right" taking a drubbing from the hot Andy Griffith show.

On the Nielsen 30-city scoreboard for the week ending Oct. 21, the three-network variance is not as sharp as on the all-encompassing National Nielsens (since they don't take in account the correctional factors in which ABC gets hurt on clearances). Here's how the webs come off:

CBS: 17.9
NBC: 16.7
ABC: 15.4

Whereas on the National Nielsens they read:

CBS: 20.3
NBC: 18.0
ABC: 14.6

The advertising agencies, interested in the network rating struggle only secondarily, are primarily concerned with the show's they're sponsoring. Thus when a Perry Como on his first time out (as reflected in the National Nielsens) comes up with a 15.0 average against the hot-rated "Beverly Hillbillies" on CBS, that spells trouble. For no matter how many slide-rules you use, how do you square a 15 rating with the highest priced show in television?

The multi-market Nielsens for the week ending Oct. 21 are jampacked with "incendiary" items. They reflect the fate of some dozen series, none of which have succeeded in achieving the safety margin of a 20 rating, with the lone exception the expanded Hitchcock series on CBS. They disclose a downgraded rating status for the once invincible "Untouchables" in its shift to Tuesday night on ABC in competition with Jack Benny and Garry Moore; a decline in the Dick Powell ratings in the same Tuesday time periods. They disclose the collapse of the once mighty potent Thursday night sked on

'It's a Man's World,' 'Fair Exchange,' Roy Rogers Loom as 1st Casualties Of Season as Webs Bolster Schedules

All three tv networks were deeply involved this week in plots to strengthen their weak spots as a whole flock of early casualties loomed on the horizon.

As an example, there's talk that NBC may call it quits with the Monday evening "It's A Man's World" in the face of poor rating returns and P & G cancelling its participation. Going in for the Peter Tewksbury hour entry, it's reported, may be another Revue property "The Plainsman." This was originally designed for ABC, which had paid for the hour pilot, but which never got on that network.

There's also talk that if "Plainsman" gets the nod and makes the grade it could go to 90 minutes next season, thus enabling it to bridge the high-rated CBS "Lucy" show. It would also mark NBC's second venture into hour and a half programming, with another 90-minute Revue property, "Virginian," already on.

However, "Man's World" deal is for 19 weeks, so it's unlikely anything will occur until then.

Meanwhile ABC also has a Monday plot in the works. This involves moving "Rifleman" into the 7:30 period (although P & G has nixed the move), then going 8 to 9 with "Dakotas," the successor show to "Cheyenne" currently in the 7:30 to 8:30 period.

Also ABC, it's reported, has virtually decided upon lopping off the Saturday night 7:30 Roy Rogers show, which has been getting poor Nielsen returns opposite Jackie Gleason and "Sam Benedict."

Meanwhile over at CBS there's a Thursday, Friday plot cooking which could find the hour long Friday night night "Fair Exchange" fading after 13 weeks. In its place will probably go the expanded to-an-hour "Twilight Zone" series. (Thirteen are already in the can.)

Meanwhile, in a bid to strengthen Thursday nights, CBS (if it can get the blessing of the advertisers involved) may reverse the order of the "Nurses" and Hitchcock hour series, with the latter going 9 to 10 and "Nurses" going 10 to 11, which would get it off the "Kildare" hook.

Texaco Doesn't Dig Freud Stuff, Exits '11th Hour'

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Probing into the unconscious, as Sigmund Freud found out, can be a dangerous thing, a lesson now being learned the hard way by NBC-TV's "The Eleventh Hour" series with a psychiatrist as the central character. One of the sponsors, Texaco, which had a schedule of six minutes over a 13-week span, has already pulled out of the show because of the subjects it is tackling.

The show, in fact, may be radically extending video's boundaries of the morally permissible. On Nov. 7, a stanza, titled "Of Roses and Nightingales and Other Lovely Things," will be dealing with illegitimate teenage pregnancy, once again posing the problem of abortion. This show has occasioned some censorship of advertising copy by TV Guide. The mag forced the network to revise the final word of its ad for the show, originally reading: "What do you do when your teenage daughter says she's pregnant," to "in trouble."

Another "Eleventh Hour" stanza, due to be telecast Dec. 5, is concerned with the murder and probable rape of a 16-year-old girl by a young boy. This show has overtones of homosexuality. The next show, Dec. 12, will revolve around the offbeat relationship between a brother and sister.

"Eleventh Hour" is a Norman Felton production under the Metro-TV banner.

Cornelia Otis Skinner Still Waiting for TV To Shed 'Gook,' Grow Up

Dayton, Oct. 30.

Veteran actress Cornelia Otis Skinner, in Dayton as the first lecturer in the current Town Hall series, said she does not plan to seek a career in television until "the medium grows up a little." She has made occasional appearances on tv, but said, "I'm an old pro who resents being directed on television by a combination baby Bernhardt-Edwin Booth." She said tv will improve only when the public demands that it does. "Right now the public, by and large, wants this gook it's getting," she said.

"Some tv is exciting, interesting, and very good. But I get sick over some of the scripts I've seen. They're full of these terrible, noble women and that sort of thing. I just don't like acting for the advertisers."

She said she would like to find a play and return to Broadway.

Jerry Lewis As Wkly NBC M.C.?

Appears as though Jerry Lewis is going to end up as a weekly NBC-TV emcee sometime after the first of the year. Comedian, however, is understood talking to web program brass about heading a talk show of some kind.

Lewis is considered likely for a Monday night slot, as perhaps replacement for part of "Saints & Sinners." "Sinners" is not faring well on rangings in its 8:30-9:30 p.m. slot, but use of Lewis as mid-season sub in that time is only educated guess by observers.

Interest in Lewis as talker, as well as comic, on tv stems from his appearance last summer as host of "Tonight," when talks began with NBC-TV on regular show.

Joey Bishop TV Show Gets New Producers

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Danny Thomas, who functions as exec producer on "The Joey Bishop Show" as well as starring in his own series, has sent a memo to the Bishop staff notifying it Eddie Rio and Ray Jacobs will serve as producers on the Bishop series until further notice.

Marvin Marx exited as producer of the comedy series last week.

Tell the Good Story of B'casting' Gov. Collins Bids Promotion Boys; Cites 'Operation Cuba' as Historic

By BILL BARKER

Dallas, Oct. 30.

NAB prexy Gov. LeRoy Collins urged some 400 members of the Broadcasters Promotion Assn. on Monday (29) to "tell the good story of broadcasting." As keynote speaker of the organization's seventh annual seminar at the Holiday Inn Central here, before an audience that included the Dallas Ad League and the Assn. of Broadcasting Executives of Texas, he cited the latest example of broadcasting's heroic achievement.

"On the day of President Kennedy's historic message to the people, seven radio stations were secretly advised that they would get an urgent telephone call from the White House at 6 p.m., with the owner or manager to receive the call. Press Secretary Pierre Salinger made the call, asked their voluntary cooperation in beaming the President's address directly to the people of Cuba, taking the Voice of America translations in both Spanish and Portuguese, and repeat the broadcast all through the night. These stations were under no obligation to disrupt regular schedules. Without exception all stations promptly agreed. The President's address directed a portion of his remarks to the captive people of Cuba and said his speech was directly by special radio facilities. Jamming operations were thwarted and there's every indication that our plans were heard by the Cuban people. Salinger later told that no station asked indemnification for the lost commercial revenue. And FCC Chairman Newton Minow applauded radio for "this proud moment in its history."

Collins called on the industry to tell the good stories of the NAB Code of Good Practices, of the new NAB research programs, of the growing technology and acceptance of broadcasting, to accept their roles of inseparable parts of their communities and of the broadcaster's fight to advance freedom of broadcasting.

"It is argued by the American Bar Assn. that with air coverage participants in court trials would 'ham it up.' Under fair tests this has not proved true. As we plan better to tell the good story of broadcasting, let us be sure that we deserve to tell it through our own dedicated efforts, which have made a contribution to its truth," Collins concluded. Don Curran, of ABC, Assn. prexy, introed Collins and the other speakers.

Up earlier on the "broadcasting's image" session, Board Chairman William B. Lewis, of Kenyon & Eckhardt, stressed that broadcasters needed to publicize more forcefully the good, progressive actions the industry has already taken to improve the overall image. He urged management to take stricter control of the commercial content and scheduling. Anticipating his own industry's blast, Lewis said "the main body of complaints the FCC receives from viewers concerns commercials. They are too loud, too strident, many are nauseating. Too often they interrupt programs without thought, taste or courtesy." He cited the successful British and Italian formula for non-interruption of programming, and urged broadcasters to control commercial content "without taking yourselves or the advertisers to the cleaners."

On improving the image, general manager Jack Harris, KRPC-TV, Houston, said viewers are in three classes, the embracers, the acceptors and the protestors, but agreed the majority of viewers approve of tv today. He decried the "enslavement of ratings" as a major industry hurdle and declared "some way must be found to unshackle network and station operations from their enslavement to ratings. A station or net that seeks only the highest number fails in its prime responsibility, to its audiences and to itself."

Harris stated that the American people have earned the right to the kind of entertainment they want and do not subscribe to a Washington bureau's dictation of substituting its cultural tyranny. "The American people have the right to decide what they will see in their living rooms. Let's not try to appease these television critics. When did sex become un-American? it's a matter of good taste. And it disturbes me that critics in and out of Washington tv is mediocre," Harris concluded.

Marcus Bartlett, general manager, WSB-TV, Atlanta, on building the station image pinpointed conception, likeness and portrayal in his comments, abetted by color slides of his station and city. Stressing integrity, he told that "even though our station is newspaper-owned, we still accused one of our papers of irresponsible reporting." Bartlett cautioned that if a station gets bored in promoting its own image, the audience may notice it.

Editorials were started regularly in 1958 over WDSU-TV, New Orleans, general manager Louis Read told via "New Orleans At Large" with slides showing examples of local special events in color.

WFAA-TV, Dallas, built its image on essential principles of honesty, integrity and dependability, general manager Mike Shapiro emphasized. "You must live up to your advertising; all sales are unimportant if the product is inferior." He stated that every station employee must be courteous, considerate and aid in the public relations job to create a good station image. As to his successful WFAA-TV "Let me speak to the manager" series, with himself as host, Shapiro credited its popularity to his taking time to answer the mail and phone calls, and to openly, honestly mention other tv stations and their programming, to aid viewers. He urged station managers to institute such program and build viewer rapport by being honest — "tell them you thought the 'Bus Stop' segment was in bad tase, and that 'The Defenders' showed courage in the episode on abortion."

Seminar continues through Wednesday.

Det. WJR Back In CBS Radio Fold

WJR, Detroit, the 50,000 watt clear channel outlet, one of the key midwestern radio stations, has rejoined CBS Radio.

It's a return which met a hearty welcome back from both the network and the station. WJR's return, according to Worth Kramer, prexy of Goodwill Stations, Inc., had been prompted in part by the new CBS affiliation plan. Kramer apparently was referring to the return of station compensation by the web.

WJR, which had been a CBS Radio affil for 25 years until it pulled out in 1959, had operated as an independent in the three interim years. Detroit's pioneer WJR had disaffiliated from CBS Radio when the web introduced its barter plan in lieu of station compensation three years ago. Return to station compensation apparently paved the way for the WJR repledge of allegiance to CBS Radio.

CBS Radio, without WJR, in Detroit, had a disadvantage, in that it depended on what could be termed periphery stations for its coverage of the Detroit market, home base of that important automotive biz. Including Detroit, the 50,000 watt clear channel outlet serves a total population area of 15,500,000 in a four-state area, plus an area of 3,000,000 in Canada, according to research figures.

Deal between station and CBS Radio was made prior to the Cuban crisis, but another motivating factor for the reaffiliation was the worldwide news, pubaffairs services of the web.

CBS Radio prexy Arthur Hull Hayes, who had been on tour of the web's "Third Dimention" presentation, flew into Detroit's airport to sign the necessary papers of reaffiliation. Signing the papers, he continued on to the Coast.

Werner Michel Ankles Reach-McClinton Agency In 'Creative Policy' Tiff

After more than five years with the agency, Werner Michel, radio-tv veepee of Reach-McClinton, has resigned over what he calls "severe disagreement on creative policy" between himself asd the agency's management.

Michel joined the agency in 1957 and was veepee for radio-tv, a member of the board of directors and its creative planning committee and in charge of such shows as "20th Century," "Breck Golden Showcase" and worked on Playtex from its intro to tv. He also was in charge of commercial productions and involved in the making of the Martini & Rossi blurbs.

Same time, Playtex ad chief David Ketner this week announced scuttling of Reach-McClinton in a shift of some $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 in billings to Young & Rubicam and Ted Bates, effective Feb. 1. Reach-McClinton handles the firm's bras and new Living Girdle line.

Bates will get Living Bras and Living Girdles while the 250 Bras and Playtex Girdle (switching from Bates) goes to Y & R. It reportedly means between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 in billings for each agency.

Y & R took on the Sarong account (another Playtex line) a few months back with the industry bemused as to why the giant shop would take on the meager $250,000 biller. Move has paid off nicely.

ABC 1st Qtr. Biz Despite Ratings

The first quarter of 1963 is shaping up promisingly for ABC-TV which, at this point, has sold just over 80% of its availabilities for that period. Most of this business is from sponsor commitments for at least 26 weeks. Web execs anticipate no important hurdles in plugging up the holes on its first quarter schedule in the next four or five weeks.

Optimistic biz outlook has not been dimmed by the web's poor showing to date on the ratings. Web execs contend that it's a traditional pattern of the initial Nielsens since these ratings do not reflect the delayed broadcast of ABC-TV shows on between 50 and 60 stations and that these d.b.'s do show up on subsequent ratings.

NBC 'Dewline'

NBC—a correct prediction on the outcome of the races in those states and perhaps others.

Big six "dewline" states are also where the most important Gubenatorial and Congressional races are expected to happen. States chosen are N.Y., Massachusetts, Connecticut, Michigan, California and Texas.

"Dewline" speed, NBC feels, comes from the placement of reporters at the election district, or precinct level, and come Nov. 6, they'll be all over the field. For instance, NBC says there will be a total of 600 "dewline" precincts in N.Y. alone and 300 in California. Each precinct will require one man and one private telephone line to NBC headquarters. (A sidebar is that many of those phones, each costing the price of installation and a normal month's fee, will be used for a single call and that's absolutely all.)

All told, NBC News will have 3,750 persons working on its election coverage next week, the web says.

Also, an NBC News source says that the occasion will be a "boon" to college campuses, from which many of the single-use precinct reporters have been gleaned. Kids have been making a good buck, apparently, from rehearsal and study time needed to prep the NBC "dewline."

Steubenville—Michael Macaluso, formerly sales manager of WBOY, Clarksburg, has joined WSTV here as an account exec. Macaluso, who broke into broadcasting as a newsman, went into sales with WSTV Radio before going to Clarksburg.

TV-RADIO: WEEK TO REMEMBER

'No Time for Contrived Drama'

Dick Salant and Jim Hagerty, bosses of CBS and ABC News respectively, implemented explicit statements on the dos and donts of coverage in the world crisis.

After patting his staff on the back for the coverage they'd given last week, CBS' Salant wrote in a memo:

"I am sure that it is superfluous and even presumptuous of me to remind you that whatever the competitive temptations, this is no time for contrived drama, or for doom-laden or hyperthyroid portents. Where it is necessary to report rumors—and I think that the circumstances would be quite extraordinary—they must be labeled as rumors. As much as possible we should label stories by sources. I would rather be beaten by the competition than to contribute to pressing a panic button or to disseminate information which proves to be inaccurate."

Hagerty of ABC said his network's policy is to cut in with important news bulletins as they happen; "we do not believe in cutting in, for the sake of cutting in, but we have and will continue to report the developments as they occur."

In a closed-circuit speech to affils, Hagerty said: "We will dig as deeply as possible, but without disclosing specific data about types of ships or troop movements."

EBU Meet Here Talks Up a Global Storm But Nothing Is Resolved; Stanton's 'Town Meeting of World'

By the time the European Broadcasting Union ended its meetings Friday (26) in N. Y. the clearest sign was that the future of a global television organization was cloudy.

It's true that almost everyone in EBU, and many Americans who might in any way affect the creation of a Europe-America-Asia-Africa-Australia alliance of broadcasters, hoped foi such an organization. Yet many of them also had doubts or questions as to the practical means of bringing about one.

A major obstacle to a world broadcasting union is thought to be that U. S. broadcasters are essentially competitive economically and that in most of the countries of Europe they are not.

While signs of this were only slight during the first, EBU meeting on U. S. soil, it is nonetheless contended that another obstacle is a feeling of resentment by Europeans about the wealth and far-reaching effects of American tv. It is no secret that European telecasters would like to sell programs here just as American entrepeneurs sell abroad.

It was mentioned more than once in the course of the four-and-a-half day period in which EBU members were meeting in the U. S. that there should be, on the part of the American networks, better reapproachment with Europeans on the origination of news programs. Also arising was a proposal by Europeans that perhaps the American broadcasters and the Europeans should meet all at once at certain pricing problems. In either case, the Americans purportedly were amenable to discussion and had even, in a few instances, taken ameliorating steps already, but they cautioned Europeans that the nature of the American system could not guarantee accord among its tv networks.

At a press conference held Friday to sum up the EBU meeting's accomplishments, Olof Rydbeck, president of the Union and di-

White House Memo On News Security

Washington, Oct. 30.

The White House, in the midst of the Cuban cliffhanger, asked editors and radio-television news directors not to broadcast certain military information they may garner.

Presidential press secretary Pierre Salinger issued a memo listing 12 types of information the Government feels is "vital to our national security."

The memo said the Defense Department has notified all military personnel of the prohibited information and added "despite this fact, it is possible such information

CAPITAL CITIES POSTS MAJOR PROFIT HIKE

Capital Cities operating profit before depreciation for the first three quarters this year was up 86%, from $1.86 per share in '61 to $3.46 per share in '62, reports CC prexy Frank M. Smith.

Net broadcasting income was up 65% to $10,947,768 this year against $6,637,160 for the similar period last year.

A couple of new properties, WKBW-AM-TV, Buffalo, and WPAT-AM-FM, Paterson, N. J., boosted this year's totals.

Smith said that while income was up substantially in network, national and local business, the greatest rate of increase has come from the local area with local businessmen increasingly moving to broadcast advertising.

Minow Salutes An Industry 10-Strike At Peak of Crisis

Washington, Oct. 30.

Ten radio stations came in for the highest praise from FCC Chairman Newton N. Minow.

Their action in turning over their facilities through night hours to U.S. Information Agency for intensified broadcasting into Cuba was described by Minow as "a proud moment for the broadcasting industry."

Commercial AMs tying in with linked landlines to the Washington studios of the Voice of America for the special allnight broadcasts were WGBS, WMIE and WCKR, all of Miami; WSB, Atlanta; WCKY, Cincinnati; WKWF, Key West; WWL, New Orleans; and KAAY, Little Rock. In addition, two shortwave stations, WRPL, Boston, and KGEI, San Carlos, Calif., carried the programs.

A VOA spokesman said stations had volunteered their facilities also, but only those 10 were actually used. VOA made the arrangements in each instance without a discussion of any compensation to the station for the time involved. The subject of how much VOA is to pay, if anything, will have to be negotiated later.

The Voice, in another development, massed all its facilities Thursday (25) for a worldwide "saturation broadcast" capable of surmounting Communist jamming For eight and a half hours, VOA told the truth about the U.S. quarantine of Cuba. The broadcast was divided into 30 minute segments,

MEDIUM ALERTED TO CUBAN CRISIS

The tv networks had reason, when all is said and aired, to be rather proud of their "continual" coverage of the Cuban crisis. They were there as the story developed, although radio, because of its more extensive coverage, came off a bit better in the long run.

There is some doubt cast on the decision of tv not to cover the story continuously as they did for the first three astronauts, since this game of international chicken, out there in the Atlantic, affected considerably more than three lives. Among the answers why the biggest story in 14 years of commercial tv was not covered around the clock was this one, aside from the overwhelming cost of preemption: Since dead spots were bound to develop in the story, the reporters would turn to speculation, a natural journalistic bent anyway, and that might unnecessarily inflame an already frightened public to terror.

Furthermore, said a network executive, the story—unlike the Shepard, Glenn, Grissom flights—only had a beginning, no middle and no end in sight. How long could a network stay on Cuba and the war scare, without exhausting its personnel to the point of uselessness or before continuous coverage bankrupted even the richest of networks? So, they say, the nets would have been out of their minds to cancel everything and go ceaselessly to the crisis.

Yet when things were working well for the tv webs, which was most of the time, they worked very, very well. Take your choice—at NBC, CBS or ABC, the directors or their news superiors showed uncanny ability to be where the story was. The newsmen, to a man, were careful, intelligent—one might even say masterful or, as an observing Swedish broadcaster suggested last week, "superb" in their coverage of the developing thermonuclear hairraiser.

Even if they didn't satisfy everybody Wednesday morning, when the Russians and the Aaltntic fleet seemed determined to clash, the video webs broke into their schedules with such unusual frequency that viewer's knowledge of the situation was replenished. And by sticking more to available facts than to conjecture—which the networks never more feared than now—they didn't simultaneously refuel tension among viewers.

NBC's 65 Interruptions

NBC-TV's news department—merely as a forinstance—listed over 65 "interruptions" between Monday and Friday noon and four full specials in that period. CBS-TV listed about 30 interruptions, including long periods of UN coveragee, and in five nights it had five fullblown specials. ABC-TV not only broke in regularly but it reported a number of UN spots, plus what it termed "wrapup reports and interpretive commentary."

Everybody stayed on a "flash basis" throughout the crisis, though by Friday evening, as the time between hard news stories became longer, the flashes understandably became less frequent.

One of the big heroes, cited by more than one listener last week, was ABC Radio. It's coverage, they felt, was not only virtually continuous on the Tuesday night of the crisis, it was—via ABC News—as complete as anybody at the time could humanly have made it. Another of the big heroes, which like WABC also in N.Y., was WNDT, which is the market's new educational tv station. Unfettered by fear of preempting commercials, and also prepared for an emergency as this, the station trotted out a group of highly informed men who lent their expertise at the height of the crisis to what someone labeled "sane, informed" analyses of what was going on. If their presence on WNDT was not a nerve calmer it was a way of supplying the fearfully lonely

Great Britain's Com'l TV 'Giants' On Tenterhooks on Eve of White Paper; Fear Threat to Earning Potential

London, Oct. 30.

The Government's White Paper, which will determine the shape and pattern of forthcoming television legislation, is expected within the next week or two, and its publication should put an end to the guesswork and forecasting that has been going on since the Pilkington committee made its recommendations last June.

Though the Government's attitude is still a hotly guarded secret, there is some concern in the commercial tv camp at the persistent rumor that the Postmaster General, with Cabinet approval, is responding to the pressure groups and intends to cut down on the earning potential of the "giants" of the industry.

According to current rumors, the northern territory, as one example, will be divided into two separate, seven-day-a-week operations. At present, Granada TV network has the Monday to Friday franchise, and ABC-TV takes over in the weekends. It's being suggested that Granada will have the Lancashire terrifory and ABC the Yorkshire area. The latter company, however, will have to give up its weekend franchise in the Midlands.

The Midlands territory, now run by ATV on weekdays, with ABC on duty at the weekends, will, in all probability, remain a single entity, but there appears to be some doubt as to which company will have the operating franchise.

The big problem confronting the Government's legislators is how to cope with the London area, which is covered by Associated Rediffusion on weekdays, and ATV at weekends. Unlike the north, where Lancashire and Yorkshire are covered by separate transmitters, the London region broadcasts come from a single transmitter, sited at Crystal Palace.

It's known that both AR and ATV have staked claims to be London program companies, but how the territory will be split seems to be unresolved. For each company to have an equal share of the week would clearly be impracticable, yet if one had four days and the other three there would be an understandable beef from one of them.

To complete the pattern of the redistribution of areas, the Government is also said to be toying with the idea of merging some of the smaller regions, which would be operated by new companies, formed from the existing program outfits. The idea is to give each region more or less equal status. That would be a help to some of

B'casting Division Sets Pace for AB-PT Record Earnings in 3d Quarter

Paced by the broadcasting division, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres racked up record earnings for the third quarter and the first nine months of 1962. Prexy Leonard H. Goldenson reported to stockholders that the third quarter operating profit of $2,450,000 was an increase of 30% over the $1,886,000 for the like quarter of 1961. Profit represented 56c per share compared with 43c per share last year.

The nine-month net profit rose to $8,003,000 from $7,580,000 last year, equaling $1.83 a share compared with $1.74 for the like period of 1961. For the first nine months, there was a capital loss of $97,000 compared with a capital gain of $6,178,000 in the like period last year.

Goldenson reported that the third quarter results reflected continued record earnings for the ABC broadcasting division. Theatre business, he said, improved substantially over the earlier periods of the year and was about comparable to the like period of 1961. All other operations of the company were ahead of last year, he said.

ABC Int'l Has Own 'Global Meet' & It's Strictly Hardsell

ABC International Television, which denies allegations by other network execs that it broke the ground rules at its EBU luncheon last week by making it a "commercial," is frankly demonstrating the hardsell approach at its special presentation this morning (Wed.) at the Americana Hotel, N.Y. In its first promotion of this type ABC International Television is pitching the idea of an international commercial hookup before 850 foreign broadcasters, ad agencies and manufacturers.

ABC International is selling its message in Visualscope, a widescreen process projecting slides, films, cartoons, etc, all of which detail what ABC International Television is and how it operates. Some live performers are also being used in the presentation.

Also attending this promotional meet are execs of ABC's 22 associated stations that are now located in 14 countries, including Canada, Latin-America, the Middle East, Japan, Phillipines and Australia. In the first international hookup of this character, ABC International engages in buying programs and selling time for its global affiliates.

Godfrey's 2d Special

Second hourlong Arthur Godfrey special on CBS-TV will be "Sounds of the City," with New York as the backdrop. Telecast will be Feb. 1 (Friday night at 8:30).

Sponsors for the Feb. 1 broadcast include Menley & James Laboratories, and Quaker State Oil. First Godfrey CBS-TV special will be Nov. 10. Title of the opener will be "Arthur Godfrey in Hollywood." Perry Lafferty produces and directs.

Gerald Adler In Dual O'seas Role

NBC-TV programming finally has a man of its own—kind of—in Europe. That is Gerald Adler, who is already European director for NBC International has another job, that of program rep in Europe.

Consequently, he reports not only to Joe Klein, head of International, but also to Mort Werner, veep of NBC-TV programming. For the program department, Adler will handle program submissions by foreign sources and also be on hand, virtually all the time, to supervise any deals going abroad for NBC-TV.

Corollary of this is the establishment by NBC of a TV Advisory Service, also headed by Adler who will work with foreign producers on the touches that might be needed to make a U.S. tv program sale. Much of this was the outgrowth of the European Broadcasting Union meetings of last week in

Desilu's $1,000,000 for New Pilot Prod.; 'Trader Brown' & Others

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Desilu Productions is allocating a budget conservatively estimated at $1,000,000 on the production of pilots for the 1963-64 season, it was revealed by Desilu prexy Desi Arnaz. While some deals are still in negotiation, Arnaz stressed that the figure he cited was a minimum amount, that in all likelihood it would be more by the time all the various deals are wrapped up. Program veepee Jerry Thorpe is in charge of the pilot production.

While the pilot agenda is diversified and balanced insofar as categories of entertainment go, comedies predominate—five of them scheduled for piloting. Arnaz explained the stress on comedy is not only because he is convinced this is a most saleable commodity, but pointed to the company's own origination—the "I Love Lucy" hit which led to the Desilu empire. And, of course, the new Lucille Ball series this season is again the rating pacesetter.

Comedies on the Desilu sked are "Trader Brown," which would have Ethel Merman starring, Cy Howard producing the half-hour show; "Joe Sent Me," a half-hour show set in the 1930's, for which Nancy Walker has been set, Howard also producer of this one; "Oh Nurse," starring Glynis Johns, half-hour, created by Phil Shuken. In addition Arnaz is negotiating for Gale Storm and Julie Newmar to star in two more half-hour comedies.

Desilu also plans to pilot a high-budgeted dramatic hour, a top secret project on which no details are forthcoming pending current negotiations. Arnaz is also negotiating for an hourlong anthology property created by Vincent Flaherty, a series about people who came to the U.S. and made good, and contributed to the growth of the country.

He also plans a pilot of "High Horizons," hourlong drama located in the west, but not a shoot-'em-up oater, and this depends on "whether I can get the right cast," Arnaz said.

Desilu also has two two-part spinoffs on its "The Untouchables" series. "The Seekers," starring Barbara Stanwyck as a tracer of missing persons, and "The White Knights," about the Public Health Service, starring Dane Clark and Joseph Schildkraut. First seg of the Stanwyck potential series will be aired next Tuesday, second one Dec. 25; first of "Knights" will be seen Nov. 20, second on Jan. 22. "I don't like spinoffs unless the show involved fits into the series on which it's seen. We don't want to weaken 'The Untouchables,' but these two properties did integrate into the series," Arnaz expalined.

Arnaz said he hasn't even pitched all of the various pilot projects to the networks yet, but that's because it's the policy of Desilu to first develop its pilot properties before presenting them. "We don't operate like some other companies who go to the networks

SG SALES ON H-B CARTOONS, COL PIX

Screen Gems has added 17 markets in its syndicated sales of 156 five-minute Hanna-Barbera cartoons, "Touche Turtle," "Lippy The Lion" and "Wally Gator," the first made expressly for syndicated release by H-B. Bringing the total national sales to 51, new deals were made with WTEN, Albany; WCIV-TV, Charleston; WTVC, Chattanooga; WTVT, Washington, N.C.; KLFY-TV, Lafayette, La.; WWL-TV, New Orleans; KMID-TV, Midland, Tex.; WJRT, Flint; WHO-TV, Des Moines; KETV, Omaha; KARD-TV, Wichita; KBTV, Denver; KNTV, San Jose; KVAL-TV, Eugene, Ore.; KROL-TV, Reno; and KING-TV, Seattle.

Screen Gems also locked up three stations of the Newhouse chain for its latest package of 73 post-1950 Columbia films to bow on television. Newhouse group of WSYR-TV, Syracuse; WAPI-TV, Birmingham; and WPTA, Harrisburg, follows on the heels of a sale to the four CBS o&o's in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis.

Borge-Seldon's '6 Pac' Bought by WOR, KTTV

WOR-TV, New York, and KTTV, Los Angeles, have bought the series of six hour specials, "6 Pac," being produced by Victor Borge-Seldon Assoc.'s and distributed by TV Marketeers.

Geoffrey Seldon, VBS prexy, and Wynn Nathan, TV Marketeers prexy, have just returned from Europe where they initiated negotiations for continental rights to the package. Nathan is now ready to launch a market-by-market U.S. pitch with an audition print containing excerpts from the six shows, which include: "The Best of Borge"; "Vincent Price's Genius at Work"; "The James Dean Story"; "Money Isn't Everything" (an original musical); "The Jim Moran Show"; and a jazz special.

Martin Benson's 'Profile' Quickies

London, Oct. 30.

After having made six pilots in Rome, Martin Benson is now filming his "Profile" series in Britain, and will be making others in Portugal and other parts of Europe. They are being lensed entirely on location.

Each episode is restricted to four minutes, and the personalities profiled are not necessarily well-known, but thought to be typical of the area. Benson aims to make a minimum of 52.

The series will be distributed by Talbot TV in Britain, and by the parent Fremantle Television in the rest of the world.

Filmways, Sutherland's East, West Blurb Deal

In a move that will base the company's tv commercial production in California, Filmways has negotiated a deal with John Sutherland Productions of California for a working arrangement on blurb productions.

Sutherland will be able to work in New York with Filmways' east coast blurb operation headed by Fred Raphael, while Filmways will concentrate its commercial work in California under Will Cowan, head of the subsid, Filmways of California. Company now has a theatrical and a tv programming production centre on the Coast.

Contracts are being drawn for the working agreement, which will be up for approval of Filmways stockholders at the annual meeting in December.

WHJB Sold to Group Of Pitt Area Residents

Pittsburgh, Oct. 30.

WHJB, Greensburg, has been sold to a group of Pitt area residents for an undisclosed price, pending approval by the FCC.

The new buyers include Irwin D. Wolf Jr. and John M. Wolf, sons of the late I. D. Wolf, who owned part of WTAE, Channel 4; Robert H. Burstein, Irving A. Wechsler, John L. Laubach Jr., Leonard E. Laufe and Mel Goldberg, who formerly headed WKPA, New Kensington, and who will assume management of the station when the new ownership receives FCC approval.

WHJB has been on the air since 1943 and was owned by the Brennan family who also at one time owned both KQV and WJAS in Pittsburgh.

It's Now KNBC

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

NBC-TV's owned-and-operated station in Hollywood undergoes its third change of call letters in 13 years and a new location Nov. 11. Studio moves to the web's vast acreage in Burbank and KRCA becomes KNBC.

In 1954 the change was made from KNBH to KRCA.

AAT's Cleve. Sale

KYW-TV, Cleveland, has bought 82 features from Associated Artists Television (AAT), for weekend programming and spotting on station's "Early Show."

AAT pix consist of 40 "Cavalcade of the 60's, Group One," which includes the titles of "Friendly Persuasion" and "Al Capone;" 32 "Cavalcade of the 60's, Group II," among which are "Love in the Afternoon," "The Big Circus" and "Babe Ruth Story."

Wolper 'Story Of' Segs Snarled By New World Crisis

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Five segments of David Wolper's "The Story Of" documentary teleseries have been affected by the Cuban crisis, according to series producer Mel Stuart. Producer revealed situations under which segments have been shelved for the duration and said several instances have required rescripting to change portions of shows now in production that cannot be completed because Governmental cooperation had been discontinued.

Segments include "Story of a Jet Carrier Pilot," which was filming on board U. S. S. Ranger 100 miles off San Francisco until Sunday—day before Pres. Kennedy's "blockade" announcement—when, according to Stuart, "we were asked to leave without being told why." Crew was sent off ship without equipment, which is now being flown to them, he said. They had several shots remaining and, at this point, are not certain if Lt. Donald Watkins, subject of the show, will be available for them to do pickup shots and last-minute narration.

Similar situation involves Sgt. Aloysius Sobkowiak, subject of the "Story of a Marine" episode. Print of this show had been sent to Washington D. C. for approval before final shots, but completion is being held up because "we now can't get an answer from Washington and we don't know if Sgt. Sobkowiak will still be available to us."

Other episodes affected include one on a newspaperman, Thomas Braden, who was to be photographed having dinner with President Kennedy and also asking a question at the President's press conference. When Cuban situation arose, both these acitvities were called off, necessitating script changes. New sequences had to be substituted in "Story of an Election," featuring California Congressional candidates James Corman and Stephen Foote. Stuart, who was personally producing and directing segment, had skedded section involving auto ride with Pres. Kennedy. However, the President's Calif. trip was called off.

Alex Gresshoff, skedded to leave last week for Berlin to develop four episodes to be done there, has had his trip cancelled, with the four segments shelved for the duration.

"Story Of" series is now in 112 markets, will debut locally in January. UATV is releasing. Fifteen of 39 segments have been completed, eight (including those snarled) are now in production. Producer-directors Terry Sanders and William Cartwright are involved with Stuart and Gresshoff.

7 ARTS PEDDLING AMATEUR BOXING

Seven Arts TV, which normally restricts itself to station distribution, is presently trying to line up a network or national spot advertiser for its new half-hour tape series, "World's Amateur Boxing Championships."

If it doesn't go that way, it's fairly certain the distrib will send the weekly stanza via the syndie route. Meantime, Seven Arts has been using, for them, a fresh sales gimmick—having "Boxing" producer Sandy Howard go on all the agency sales pitches. Howard already has two fight tapes in the can and Seven Arts says it has plans for another 50.

ECONOMICS OF TV CINEMATICS

Public Service Shell Game

Washington, Oct. 30.

The Federal Communications Commission has set the record straight on non-commercial spot announcements.

Too many stations have been playing the shell game on those back-to-school, safety and other public service type spots, the commission claimed in a policy statement.

Before lowering the boom, FCC told how the spot announcement pea keeps turning up under a different shell. Sometimes if the spots come during a music segment, the whole thing is termed an educational segment in filings with the commission or the spots are added to a station's talk or public service log time; or all the spots are added up by category and added to the total agricultural, religious or educational time as the case may be.

In pending applications, such responses should be amended to conform to the ground rules, said the commission, adding "future inaccuracies of the types described will be viewed as serious violations of commission instructions."

Other TV Distribs Won't Go For ITC Late Nite Cuffo Plan on Pix

Independent Television Corp's plan to open up late night station telecasting via provisional offering of free programming has met with resistance from other distributors.

ITC, in making the dramatic offer, invited other distributors to associate themselves with the plan. One leading syndie exec said that any free offer "generally downgrades product." He was of the opinion that no distributor should give away what can be sold. If a station is offered a program for sale for a 1 p.m. slot, that station might say no to the series only to get it free for late night telecasting, the exec argued.

ITC, which made its offer in letters to stations throughout the country, said it had not received station reaction, as yet.

Another syndie exec said that stations have traditionally held back on sharing of advertising revenues with any distributor. ITC plans provides that if a station accepts ITC series for telecasting after the station's normal signoff and that program garners sponsor support, station and ITC would share in the revenues at an agreed upon formula. If the ITC late night programming runs sustaining, the programs would be given to the station free.

It also was pointed out by some syndie execs that keeping stations open beyond the normal signoff period presents many costs to stations other than programming. Thoses costs are personnel manning facilities, costs which were described as not being negligible in unionized situations. It also was stated that the advertising potential in the wee hours of the night was small.

It was generally acknowledged that there is a tight time squeeze faced by syndicators. All polled, though, felt that the ITC plan was not the answer. One syndie exec, however, wished ITC luck on its endeaver.

Syndie Whirl For 'Leave It to Girls'

United Artists Television, distributing "Leave It to the Girls," has sold the daytime panel series in a number of key markets. "Leave It to the Girls," originated by WNBC-TV, N.Y., is the first series to be distributed by UAT produced specifically for daytime.

Initial deals include KTTV, Los Angeles; WBKB, Chicago; WRC, Washington; WWJ, Detroit; WGR, Buffalo; WFAA, Dallas; WFMJ, Youngstown; KPRC, Houston; KVOO, Tulsa; and WGAL, Lancaster.

The cross the board daytime strip, produced by Ted Bergmann and Martha Rountree, features commentator Maggie McNellis.

'Wyatt Earp' Sales

ABC Films has sold "Wyatt Earp" to WBRC-TV, Birmingham; WKY-TV, Oklahoma City; WRBL-TV, Columbus, Ga.; and KALB-TV, Alexandria La.

The half-hour series has now been sold into 110 markets.

Wallace Set to Narrate Marilyn Monroe Special

Mike Wallace has been signed to narrate the half-hour tv special on Marilyn Monroe, now being produced in Hollywood for distribution by Official Films.

Official prexy Seymour Reed says the show should be completed ahead of schedule—before the end of November—and a five-minute sample of the archives film is being pitched to possible sponsors and ad agencies.

Producer is Art Lieberman and a special score is being prepared by Elmer Bernstein who will conduct the music. Scripter is Malvin Wald and editor is Philip R. Rosenberg.

British ABC's 2,000 TV Segs Around Globe

London, Oct. 30.

During the first nine months of this year, ABC-TV has sold almost 2,000 programs throughout the world. The deals were made through Associated British Pathe, the foreign sales arm of the parent Associated British Picture Corp.

Included in the total is the recent deal with Desilu for the distribution of "Journey of a Lifetime" through America and English speaking Canada. There are also negotiations with Desilu to distribute the series, which was filmed entirely in Biblical settings, throughout South America, using Spanish and Portugese versions.

Seven Arts have taken ABC's Armchair Theatre" drama series for distribution in America, Canada and other parts of the world.

Other recent deals have been made with Television International Enterprises for Kenya, Sierra Leone, Trinidad and Gibraltar; with Malta TV for "Mantovani," "Tales from Dickens," "Journey of a Lifetime" and "Armchair Theatre"; and with Australia Broadcasting Commission for "This is Sinatra," which was made here during the star's summer visit.

WM IN $1,000,000 JAPAN, AUSSIE SALES

William Morris Agency reports tv film sales of more than $1,000,000 to Japan and Australia during the last three months. Leonard Kramer, foreign sales chief who junketed to Tokyo, Sydney and Melbourne, says the major deals included the "Dick Powell Show," "Loretta Young Show," "Saints and Sinners," "Mitch Miller Show," "Real McCoys," "Danny Thomas Show," "Andy Griffith Show," "Rifleman," "Corruptors," "McKeever and the Colonel" and "Wyatt Earp."

DISTRIB POSER: SYNDIE VS WEB

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Thrust of NBC-TV and ABC-TV into programming of features has altered the features-to-tv biz to such an extent that a good deal of new cinematic product is first being offered to the webs and then, if not sold, to stations via syndication.

In short, sale practices of pix has the potential of turning full circle, following a sales pattern of vidfilm series of years ago, when syndicators would first offer pilots to networks and then, if not grabbed off at the national level, would pitch the same wares in syndication. Stations, then, in the heyday of vidfilm syndication, would cry "we're being offered rejected merchandise." Some station buyers of features are raising that cry today in relation to pix.

The practice of first running to the network isn't all pervading at this point. It's feared, though, by some hefty station buyers that in the future few, if any, of the present pix syndicators could reject the network price lure.

Seven Arts Associated, which handles Warner Bros. and 20th-Fox post-'50 product, will not sell to the networks, according to sales topper Bob Rich. "We're in business with the stations and we want to continue that exclusive relationship," Rich says.

Screen Gems, when it opened its new package of post-'50's, took the station by station rather than the network route.

What happens, though, in three or four years, when the supply of post-48's will dwindle further and networks and stations as customers vie for the same pictures? The handwriting spelling more money via networks is clearly legible now. It will become bolder and clearer in the future, according to some forecasters.

Currently, webs spend about $175,000 per pic, including one rerun. In syndication, same pic can gross from $150,000 to $175,000, according to some estimates. The difference in price seems narrow on the surface, but, in reality, it's quite big.

Group of pix sold on the network level has relatively no distribution costs. Distribution costs on the market level for the same group of pix would be relatively high. Then, there is the matter of reruns. Pix sold on the network level have quite a residual value when they are sold again in syndication. Residual value of syndication first pix aren't nearly as high. Most syndie deals are for multiple runs over a period of years, compared to one or possible two runs on a network during one season. It's estimated now that pix sold on networks then sold in syndication can gross about $275,000 per cinematic, with good selling and good pix. The estimate may be high, but the figure, in any event, is higher for the network-syndication combo

STORER 3D QUARTER NET EARNINGS UP

Storer Broadcasting reports third quarter net earnings for 1962 were $881,553—36.1c per share—compared to $702,584 (28.4c per share) in the third quarter of '61.

For the first nine months, the group's earnings were $4,499,919 this year compared to $2,735,085 a year ago. This year's figure includes a capital gain (net after taxes) of $911,492 in the sale of radio station WWVA, Wheeling, W.Va. On a per-share basis, the three-quarter dividend amounted to $1.85 compared to $1.11 last year.

Storer this month paid off the balance due Loew's Theatres on purchase of WHN, New York, in January. Company made a bank loan of $5,000,000 to buy the station which is payable over a period of five years.

Whatever Happened to That NAB Screening of Post-'48s? Nothing

It looks like the proposal of the National Assn. of Broadcasters to screen so-called "controversial" post-'48 features has fallen into limbo. As far as the pix distributors go, it's a welcome state of affairs.

NAB Code Authority director Robert Swezey at last year's NAB convention spoke of the need of a national screening board to pass on so-called "controversial" pix of more recent vintage, pix which are being produced in Hollywood and abroad in a more adult cinema climate. Swezey at the time, which was last April, said he would confer in N.Y. with the major pix distributors on his proposal. Plan would work better with the cooperation of pix distributors. It's now seven months later and projected confabs have never been held.

Opinion of the distributors, an opinion which seems to be prevailing, is that local station management should be solely responsible for the pix telecast. A national screening board, as envisioned by NAB, smacks too much of censorship, distributors feel.

Attitudes of local stations, as has been proven time again, vary as to telecasting adult-themed cinematics. Some stations won't play a feature labeled "condemned" by the National Legion of Decency. A few stations might, and a larger group may try to cut objectionable scenes, if the "C" pic were bought. Other than the Legion's "C's" adult themed pix haven't too tough a time, relatively, to find a market among stations.

Quinn Martin Pacts Exclusive With UAT

QM Productions, headed by Quinn Martin, an independent film producing company, has been signed to an exclusive contract by United Artists Television. Scripts for two tv projected series under the QM Productions banner have been prepared. One of the projected series is being coproduced with ABC-TV.

Martin, an exec producer, has been associated with the two-partner "The Untouchables," which touched off the series; "Bernadette" for Desilu Playhouse and "The New Breed."

Martin joins four other indie producers who are committed for one or more pilots for UAT, others being Leslie Stevens' Daystar Productions, Bill Asher and Chrislaw Productions, David L. Wolper and Jules Bricken.

'Best of Groucho' $2,500,000 Gross As Syndie Entry

Two years in syndication, the 250 half-hours of "The Best of Groucho" has grossed $2,500,000 for NBC Films, which makes it the distributor's top dollar syndie show.

Stanza is in "88 Situations," according to NBC which also supplied the money figure. And where all 250 were not sold the first time around, every single station that owned any part of them picked up the rest in the second year. Sales boss of NBC Films Bill Breen said it's the first time on NBC Films books that there had been no expirations or cancellations for a syndie show that was being stripped for daily use by stations.

Jerry Lewis Dystrophy Special Set for WPIX, National Distribution

Muscular Dystrophy Assn. of America-produced Jerry Lewis hour tv special called "From This Moment On" will be seen for first time on WPIX, N.Y., Tuesday, Nov. 6 at 9:15 p.m. Program was filmed recently in Hollywood and stars Jerry Lewis as host along with guest appearances by Ethel Merman, Dorothy Collins, and Bobby Darin. Other guest stars include, Steve Allen, Andy Williams, Vince Edwards, Helen O'Connell, Jim Backus, Betty White, Hugh Downs, Bobby Van, Rose Marie, Hy Averbach, Jan Clayton, Pat Harrington Jr., Dennis James, Allen Jones, Stubby Kay, Dina Merrill, Troy Donahue, Jules Munshin, Pat O'Brien, Suzanne Pleshette, Cesar Romero, Barry Sullivan and Henry Mancini and his orch.

Filmed recently at Hollywood's El Capitan Theatre before an audience of 200 Hollywood personalities the program was produced for Lewis and the Muscular Dystrophy Association by Ernest Glucksman. Program is directed by Jack Shea.

Show will be distributed nationally to other tv stations.

METROMEDIA DIVIDEND

Metromedia, parent company of Metropolitan Broadcasting Co., declared an exetra dividend of 10c per share for 1962 in addition to the regular semi-annual dividend of 10c.

Melon is payable Nov. 30 to stockholders of record as of Nov. 16.

Sklar & Mayer Educ'l TV Prod.

Mike Sklar and Harold Mayer, both formerly with CBS-TV's public affairs department, have set up their own company, Mayer-Sklar, to handle programming projects for educational tv showcasing. Already in the works an 11-part series, "Exploring the Universe," with Dave Garroway hosting the half hours devoted to science with emphasis on physics and astronomy. A couple of Nobel prize-winning physicists, I. I. Raabi and Edward Pudcell, have already been lined up as guests along with Robert Oppenheimer, director of the Princeton Institute of Advanced Research. Lester Cooper is producing; Dennis Kane is directing.

The Mayer-Sklar company is also rolling with 10 half-hour films devoted to psychology being produced in cooperation with the American Psychological Assn. Titled "Focus on Behaviour," series is being produced by Mitchell Grayson with different directors being assigned to each show. Company is also planning five shows on the space program in association with the National Aeronautics & Space Agency.

Mayer-Sklar is also producing a one-hour film for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America on the union's 50th anniversary. It'll be a history of the U.S. as seen through labor's eyes.

THE TEAHOUSE OF THE AUGUST MOON
(Hallmark Hall of Fame)
With David Wayne, Paul Ford, John Forsythe, Miyoshi Umeki, William Le Massena, Teru Masumoto, Yuki Shimoda, Fred Kareman, others
Producer-Director: George Schaefer
Writer: John Patrick
Teleplay: Robert Hartung
90 Mins.; Fri. 8:30 p.m.
HALLMARK CARDS
NBC-TV (color)
(Foote, Cone & Belding)

Quiet charm, infectious humor and warm wisdom spun their magic web in the vidversion of "The Teahouse of the August Moon." There were lapses in acting, times when the fragile composition seemed shallow, moments when the play seemed dated. Yet, overcoming all, like a warm summer breeze, were the threads of poetry, the imagery sparked by wisdom, the gay abandon of gentle people.

Producer-director George Schaefer mounted the teleplay, done in color, as he would a stage play. The settings always were studio confined, making the outing more of an adventure of spirit than of location.

Catching the spirit best of all was David Wayne, portraying Sakini, the Okinawan who tries to translate eastern and western ways. Wayne, who played the same role in the Broadway engagement, had the lilt of the poet, the grace of a sage, and the humor of a gifted clown. When things would become dull, as they occasionally did, he always came back for the lift and never missed.

Paul Ford, another original Broadway cast member, faulted a bit. He appeared to be delivering his lines more to a theatre audience than to the studio cameras. Ford of "Sergeant Bilko" fame should have been aware of that pitfall. Nevertheless, he did project the role of the bumbling American officer trying to introduce democracy to the natives of Okinawa, only to be conquered by them.

John Forsythe as Captain Frisby didn't seem to get into his role until midway in the play, when he took on added dimensions. Miyoski Umeki as Lotus Blossom, the geisha girl, was winning, feminine, and the source of a merry, if overdrawn, mish-mash when the democratizing American officers failed to understand the difference between a geisha girl and a prostitute. With the difference now clear, it might not be a wonder if America, for a change, does not adopt an oriental custom—of having geisha girls. Miss Umeki made the role so winning.

William Le Massena portrayed the Army psychiatrist, sent out to probe the mind of erring John Forsythe, only to succumb to the same native ways as his would-be patient. Teru Masumoto drew laughs as the Okinawan version of a femme women's leader. Yuki Shimoda as the old man, championing a tea house rather than a pentagon-shaped school, had some of the finest poetic lines. Others in the cast lent their individual talents.

Teleplay was by Robert Hartung, from the play by John Patrick which, in turn, was based on the novel by Vern Sneider. All the above writing credits helped to make this fragile outing of goodwill and understanding, a pleasant 90-minute interlude before the tv set. The commercials, done in a variety of styles, were up to the standards set by this Hallmark dramatic vehicle.

One transmission goof should be noted. In the midst of the telecast, a promo on an upcoming NBC-TV "River Nile" special suddenly intruded on the screen like a wild sore thumb. Horo.

Canada's Election Spread

Ottawa, Oct. 30.

Wide AM and television coverage of the Nov. 6 elections in the U.S. has been set up by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. James M. Minifie, CBC's man in Washington, is to head a panel of experts on U.S. affairs for the radio coverage.

Video airers will use nowlton Nash of CBC; George Bain, Toronto Globe & Mail correspondent in Washington and CBC announcer Bruce Marsh. Coverage will start at 9:30 p.m. for AM, 10:30 p.m. for tv, and continue until the results are final.

THE RIVER NILE
With James Mason, narrator; others
Producer-Writer: Lou Hazam
Director: Ray Garner
Music: Eddy Manson
60 Mins., Sun. (28), 10 p.m.
LIGGETT & MYERS, BRISTOL MYERS
NBC-TV (film, color)
(J. Walter Thompson, Young & Rubicam)

Once in a long while, television will produce a piece extraordinarly worthy of repetition, and Lou Hazam's celluloidal love affair with "The River Nile" is one of this thin file. The subject matter was splendid, and the film, in color, so clear, so comprehensive and so beautiful that a viewer could easily imagine the making of this 55-minute picture took far more time than television production is normally alloted.

Guy Blanchard's camera traced the Nile from its central African sources northward through many countries, into Egypt where it dwelt on that nation's magnificent antiquity and, finally, into the Mediterranean. The blues of Blanchard's film were the bluest blues, the reds faded by extreme sunlight, the whites stark and the greens vivid. With the help of his director Ray Garner, Blanchard brought a delicacy, even lightness to his work. If the scenery was at times splendid and, at all times, charming, the pictures of the animals were the best ever seen in a nature film. Never before were there such lions of beauty or crocs of humor.

But Hazam was the guiding force. So overtly enamored was the writer and producer of the 4,000 miles of water, which he felt so strongly was a power for good, that he chose to pen his narration in poetry, using the angular, sometimes stiff syntax of the ancients. In a way this was entirely apt, although sometimes it became a minor hurdle to jump. Hazam's epic had in it also the touch of a crusade; he encouraged a plan to move the temples and massive statuary of Egypt to higher ground in order to save it from the high waters of the Aswan dam. In James Mason's hands, the narration was clear and always dramatic, at moments too much so.

As much a part of the narration and the mood of beauty was the music. Eddy Manson took some original sounds, some musical cliches (used sparingly and with purpose) and refreshingly wound his way up river along with the brilliant camera.

Presence of two hardsell sponsors may not have been appropriate to the mood but, for certain, the cases of Liggett & Myers and Bristol Myers benefitted roundly from the milieu. Art.

HERE'S EDIE
With Edie Adams, Peter Falk, Duke Ellington Orch.
Producer-Director: Barry Shear
30 Mins.; Tues., 10:30 p.m.
CONSOLIDATED CIGAR
ABC-TV, from N. Y. (tape)
(Lennen & Newell)

Edie Adams, looking smart and fetching, dressed in chic style for the proper numbers, made her half hour of sophisticated jazz a soothing pleasure for eyes and ears. Duke Ellington & orch supplied the music; Miss Adams, the vocalizing and beauty, a neat combo for the living room.

The motif for the opening stanza of "Here's Edie," first of a series of Tuesday night ABC-TV half-hour specials this season, was sounds of a big city. Theme offered room for blues, joy and a pinch of sex. Motif also allowed New York to serve as a backdrop. Idea for the outing was a good one, and Miss Adams also did well in the commercials, pitching, of all things, cigars. Commercials showed Miss Adams off as a comedienne. Pity she didn't inject more of a comedic note in her program—but that quality of hers may be used to good avail on other outings of the series.

Peter Falk did a guest stint, delivering a monologue of a New York cabbie. His bit had more pathos than humor, and most of the laugh lines were heavy and forced.

In her last segment, Miss Adams did a switch from a lovely rendition of "When I Fall in Love" to portraying a night club stripper. There was humor in the juxtaposition, the switch capturing the light, irreverent Miss Adams to ... Horo.

MISS TEENAGE AMERICA CORONATION PAGEANT
With Bud Collyer, Allen Ludden, Zina Bethune, Bobby Rydell
Producer: Paul Levitan
Director: Vern Diamond
Writer: Craig Gilbert
90 Mins., Fri. (26), 9:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
CBS-TV, from Dallas

Finals of the second annual "Miss Teenage America" beauty pageant here provided a fine showcasing, and good entertainment, for 90 minutes at the State Fair Music Hall, with 79 contestants from as many cities amply filling the big stage. Lovely femmes, in the 13 to 17-year bracket were judged on poise, personality, talent and skill at dramatic improvisation. No bathing suit competition for the entrants.

Darla Jean Banks, 16, of Fresno, Calif., was crowned the 1963 "Miss Teenage America" by the first, 1962 queen, Diane Lynn Cox, of Richmond, Va., and singer Bobby Rydell. Brunette looker was among the six finalists. She received a four-year college scholarship valued at $14,000, a new convertible, a year's supply of cosmetics, a 10-day Caribbean cruise and a chest full of tennis shoes. There were no alternates or runners up. In the talent portion, Paulette Jane Breen, 15, of Toledo, took the award with an acrobatic ballet.

The six finalists displayed exceptional talent in providing interim entertainment, with a big assist from the "Singing Cadets of Texts A. & M. College" chorus and their vocal of "I Enjoy Being a Girl."

Bud Collyer, of CBS-TV's "To Tell the Truth," made an affable emcee. He received fine assists from the hostess and host, Zina Bethune of "The Nurses" and Allen Ludden, the "Password" emcee. Rydell, Ludden and Miss Bethune worked neatly with finalists in the ad libbed sketches.

This was the first year of full network coverage by CBS-TV, which has a seven-year pact on the Dallas-owned pageant. Producer Levitan and director Diamond gave it top treatment, with no hitches. Dallasites Charles R. Meeker Jr. and Hyman Charninsky were the pageant's producer and musical director, respectively, and jelled the show before tv exposure via the eliminations and rehearsals during the week. Bark.

WAYNE & SHUSTER HOUR
With Shirley Harmer, Don Gillies, Paul Kligman, Don Francks, Samuel Hersenhoren Orch
Producer: Don Hudson
Writers: Wayne & Shuster
60 Mins., Tues., (23) 8:30 p.m.
UNION CARBIDE, GENERAL MOTORS, MAX FACTOR
CBC-TV, from Toronto (tape)
(Sanfield, Johnson & Hill; MacLaren; Muter, Culiner, Frankfurter & Gould)

Don Hudson has been producer-director for seven seasons of the "Wayne & Shuster Show," which now has the status of four 60-min. specials, the next to be presented (taped) on Dec. 10. Show has also three sponsors.

Wayne & Shuster who, in addition to appearing on the "Ed Sullivan Show" as well as the one-hour specials on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. web, remain the only comedy team to be widely known outside Canada—and they write all their material.

Comedians also worked in Shirley Harmer's warbling of "This May be the Start" and "Smiles" (with plenty of hiptossing) into their 60-mins. stint; and Don Gillies was again choreographer, though "The Painters" (four boys, four girls) was the featured routine and was producer Don Hudson's idea.

Takeoff on "Bonanza," tagged "Bandana," with Johnny Wayne taking the role of "Cartwheel" father and passing much of the dialog to Frank Shuster, was the comedy highlight of the program. Pair also did a burlesque of CBC's birth of tv 10 years ago, complete with light banks that went out, intrusion of stagehands, lighters that refused to work, etc. The team maintained their reputation as very funny fellows.

Samuel Hersenhoren and his 27 men—though they never appeared on-camera — gave fine support; with production values excellent. McStay.

BOB HOPE SHOW
With Lucille Ball, Juliet Prowse, Bing Crosby, Les Brown Orch
Producer: Jack Hope
Director: Jack Shea
Writers: Mort Lachman, Bill Larkin, John Rapp, Lester White, Charles Lee, Gig Henry
60 Mins.; Wed., 9 p.m.
TIMEX: CHEMSTRAND
NBC-TV, from H'wood (tape)
(Warwick & Legler; Doyle Dane Bernbach)

The Cuban crisis must be serious since Bob Hope laid off gagging about it on his first show of the new season last Wednesday night (24). In his opening monolog, when Hope generally ribs and roasts the state of the nation, the script skirted all sensitive issues and latched onto some dated headlines about Telstar and the space program.

But Hope's delivery was, as usual, masterful in its parlaying of snappers into a potent laugh payoff. His teeoff chatter was a nifty lead-in to a firstrate variety stanza highlighted by a couple of sharp takeoffs on network tv programs. In these, Hope was the incontrovertible star within a supporting constellation consisting of Bing Crosby, Lucille Ball and Juliet Prowse.

First skit echoed the tv lawyer cycle in which Miss Ball played a district attorney and Hope was the underworld syndicate boss. It was a broad parody which even broke up the players, but this type of thesping highjinks is par for the course on a Hope outing.

The second skit, a takeoff on "Bonanza," was even better. In this one, Crosby was the head of vast Texan empire and father of three sons, all of whom were played by Hope. With Miss Prowse rung in for some sex appeal, it was a risible romp in a madcap groove which Hope carried off with flawless timing and unruffled aplomb.

As her solo number, Miss Prowse was showcased in a swinging Turkey Trot production, in which her slick hip-tossing hoofing was given highly attractive production backing by a male ballet troupe. Miss Ball and Hope also joined for some gentle kidding about their costarring roles in the film, "Critic's Choice," a sequence that was illustrated by some film clips showing how each goofed their lines.

Crosby was featured in the finale, doing an okay solo vocal on "I Can't Begin To Tell You" and then duetting on "Put 'er There, Pal," from their film, "Road To Utopia." It was top-name and top-drawer all the way. Herm.

TWENTIETH CENTURY
With Walter Cronkite, narrator
Exec Producer: Burton Benjamin
Producer: Isaac Kleinerman
Director: Dan Klugherz
Writer: Earle Luby
30 Mins., Sun., 6 p.m.
PRUDENTIAL
CBS-TV (film)
(Reach, McClinton)

Since the inception of "Twentieth Century" six years back, the tv lanes have been literally inundated with shows embracing the same documentary-reportage technique. Yet it must be said in all frankness that this veteran CBS-TV series has a professionalism, a style and a freshness that still makes it a superior entry of its kind.

For its seasonal premiere last Sunday (28), "Twentieth Century" devoted itself to a word-picture of the formative years of Dag Hammarskjold, the ill-fated Secretary-General of the UN who was killed in a plane crash a year ago.

Granted the limitations of a half-hour showcase and, of necessity, the episodic treatment, nonetheless the participants succeeded in etching for the viewer, however fleetingly, those qualities which through boyhood and into manhood, eventually gave to the world a statesman of high integrity, a man of keen intellectual curiosity and attainment, a man possessed of tremendous soundness and balance as befits a servant of the world and, in the words of narrator Walter Cronkite, "a man who lived for peace and died for that cause."

In the reminiscences with close friends and associates, including his grammar school teacher, (now 70) and as the cameras roamed over the places (Uppsala, Stockholm, Lapland, etc.) which were significant in Hammarskjold's early life, "Twentieth Century" came up with a warm, personal portrait of a man to remember. Rose.

WEEKEND
With Jerry Lester, Bobby Darin, Choo Choo Collins, Richard Wess Orch, others
Producer: Vernon P. Becker
Director: Arnee Nocks
Writers: Ronald Axe, Ronald Friedman, Sol Weinstein
60 Mins., Sat., 11 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WOR-TV, N.Y. (tape)

Comedian Jerry Lester joins syndication's plush variety offerings this season—which includes the Steve Allen nightly strip from Westinghouse Broadcasting and six specials from the new Victor Borge-Geoffrey Selden production team. His show opened in New York Saturday night (27) on WOR-TV, and reportedly on nine or so other stations around the country.

Initialer in the series featuring the comic whose "Broadway Open House" was one of tv's early smashes came off as predominantly a display of the host's manic antics—sort of a nitery show for the folks who don't want to mess with baby sitters, the parking problem and the crowded, smokey environs on the big night off.

Lester's jet chatter and bounce gave the illusion of a swifter pace than the hour actually had, and the traditional stage set with band backing helped to promote the nitery atmosphere. Choo Choo Collins, well-stacked blonde singer, also fitted into the clubby scenery with a couple of upbeat standards belted dramatically.

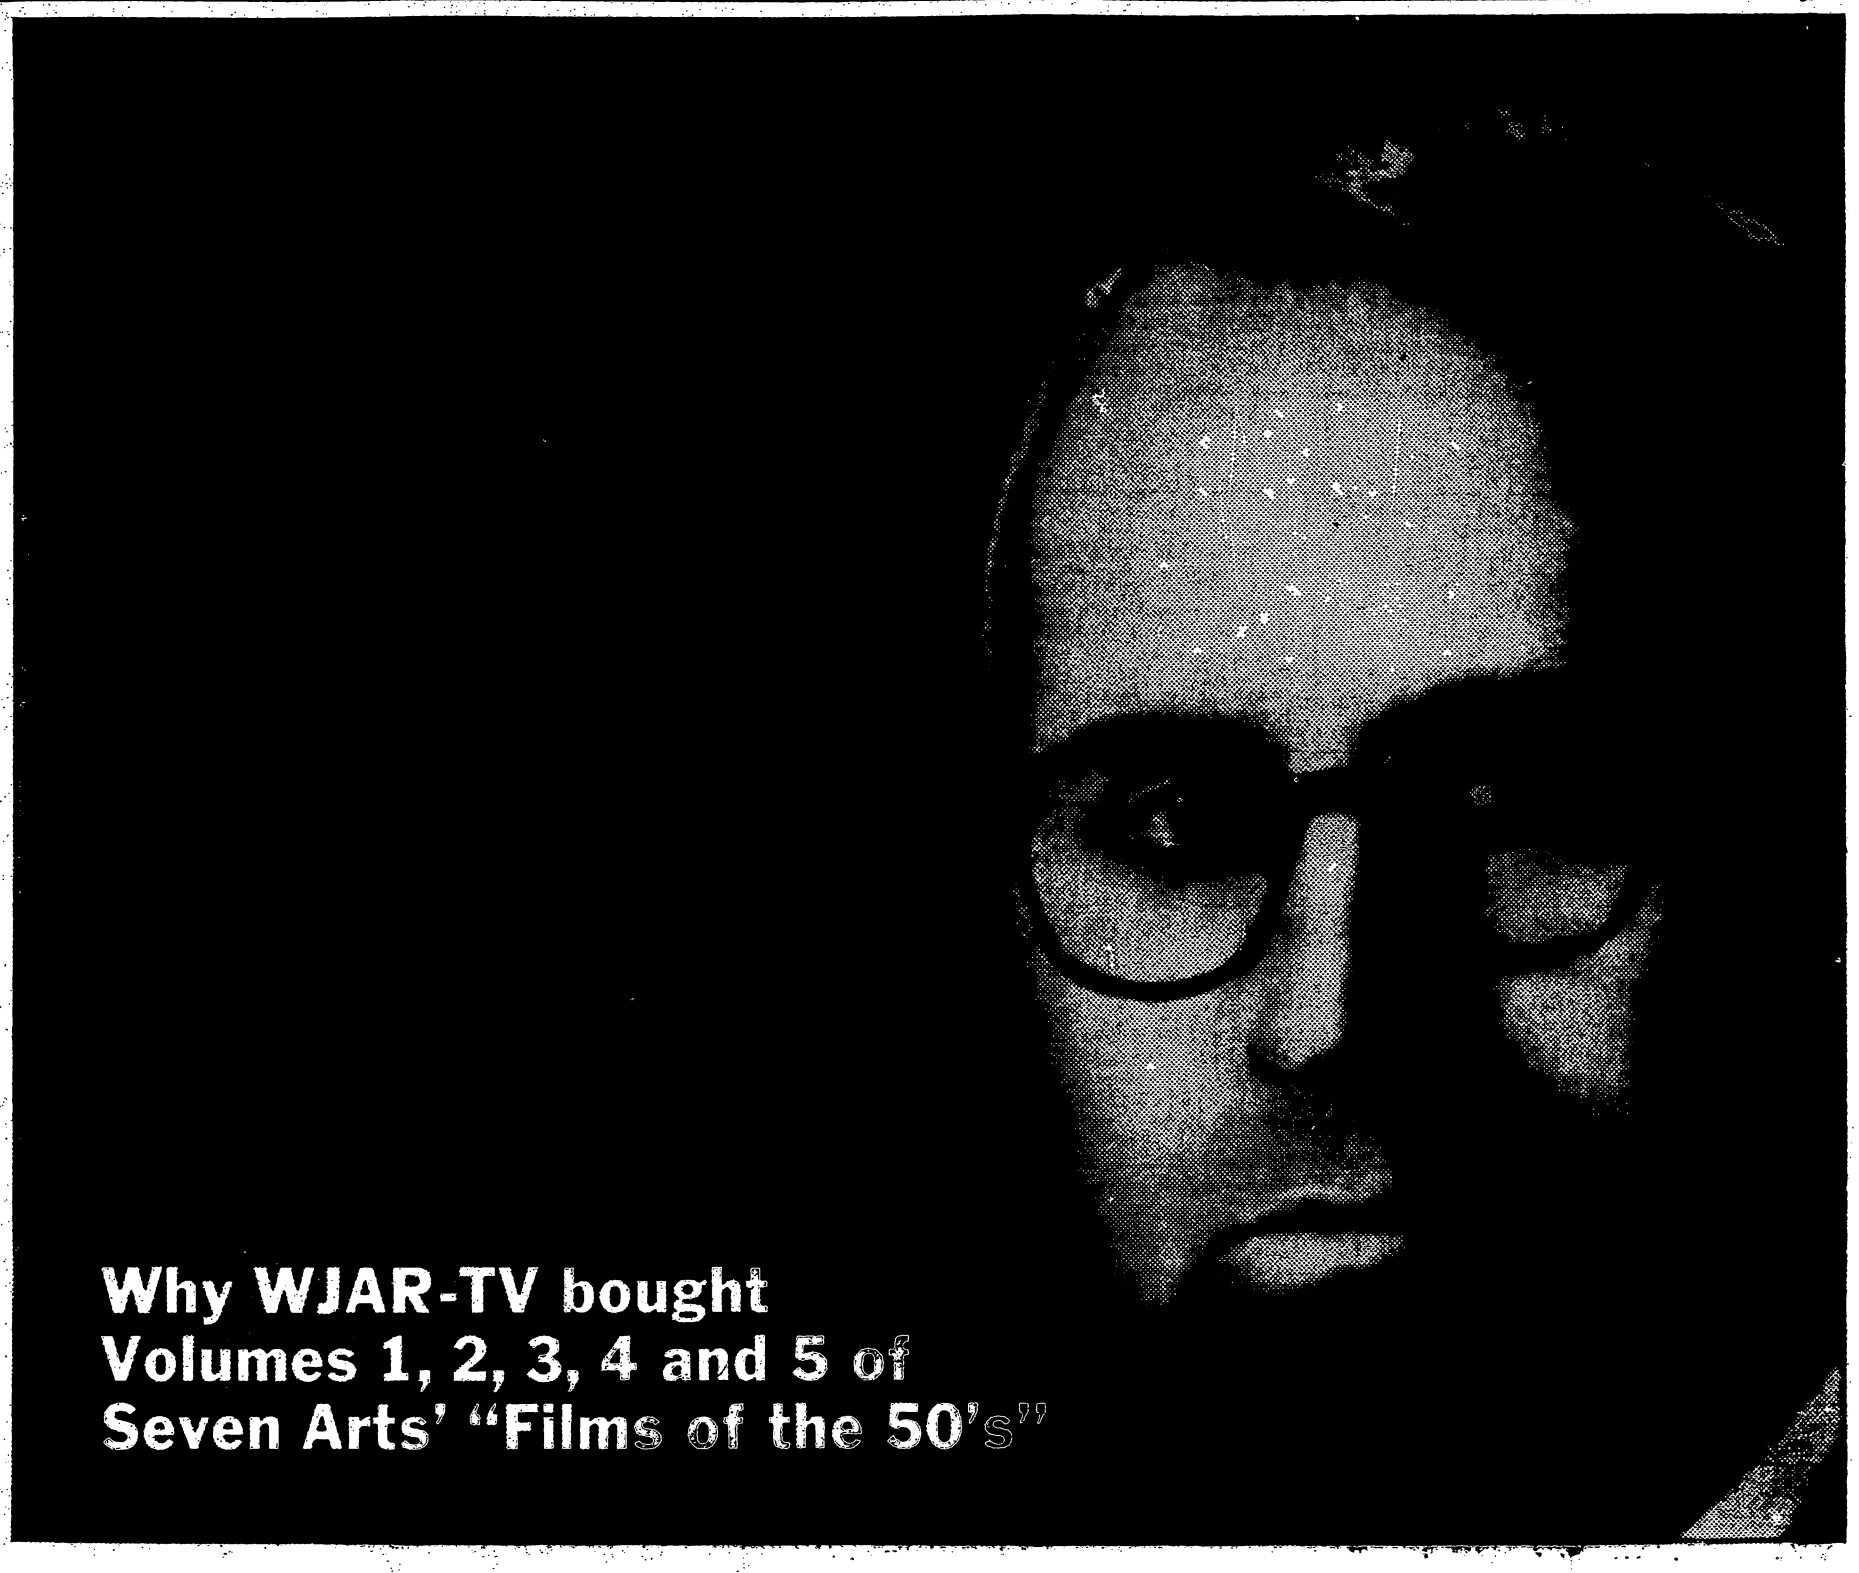
There was some deviation with guest Bobby Darin, who took a turn at the piano and went out into the audience for a windup bit with Lester. The audience participation, a carefully staged affair with prop interviewees including a Mrs. Miller who could have been that chronic fan of Jack Paar, was apparently meant as a takeoff on such wanderings on other late night outings. Teen fave also managed large plugs for his current pix.

Easily the highlight was a satirical routine by Lester, aping radio's rock-and-roll deejays, with such items as tomorrow's hit, "That's Wednesday," by Conway Gangster and the Hoods on the Maffia label, "When My Face Clears Up Again Kathlene." More of the same would be most welcome.

Richard Wess' six-man band, with Chubby Jackson on bass, sets a solid musical pace. Bill.

GREAT TEACHERS OF OUR TIME
With Dr. Roman Vishniac
Producer: Walter D. Engels
Director: Marvin Long
30 Mins., Sun., 8 p.m.
WPIX-TV, N.Y.

This public service half-hour produced by WPIX and New York University which features top professors from New York area universities and colleges is prey to the subject's tv personality.



Show caught featured Dr. Roman Vishniac of Yeshiva, a biologist considered the leading photographer of microscopic life. Undoubtedly a good man in the laboratory, Dr. Vishniac's video projection was hampered by a thick accent, and primetime tv, at any rate is hardly the spot for an 8th grader's intro to biology. The straight, unrelenting single-camera mugging of the subject served only to entrench the stolid mood; nor did the switch to the professor's microscopic photo work hypo the show.

There was once a show around that delved the personal lives as well as the academic views of the nation's teaching greats, and this WPIX-NYU effort would benefit by a bit of the same. A few camera sweeps of the campus as an intro don't provide enough background. Bill.

SRO on Orange Bowl

The Orange Bowl football game, which ABC-TV will be televising for the second straight year on New Year's Day, has been sold out. One-half sponsorship has been picked up by Buick Motors, through McCann-Erickson, with the other half split between R. J. Reynolds Tobacco, through William Esty, and United Motors Service Division of General Motors, through Campbell-Ewald.

The web will also carry surrounding Orange Bowl events, such as the parade the night before the game and a regatta, which will be presented on "Wide World of Sports" in January.

President and General Manager, WJAR-TV Providence, R. I.

"There is no question about it, we think Seven Arts' 'Films of the 50's' are the best films available. We purchased Volume 1 to get leadership in the market, and when Volumes 2 and 3 became available we bought them because we knew they would help us continue to maintain our position as the top television station in Rhode Island. We have just recently added Volumes 4 and 5 of Seven Arts' 'Films of the 50's' to our library, assuring us of dominance in this market for a long time to come.

and the way to get numbers is to run the best films. Seven Arts' 'Films of the 50's' have always done very well for us rating wise, and as for sponsors . . . they're happy, and have been for some time."

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week five different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

White House Memo

may come into the possession of news media."

"During the current tense international situation," the memo continued, "the White House feels publication of such information is contrary to the public interest. We ask public information media of all types to exercise caution and discretion in the publication of such information."

White House officials said the memo was not binding on anyone, was merely a request for cooperation. They refused to call it censorship, voluntary or otherwise, but admitted it was unprecedented.

The memo grew out of a meeting Salinger had Tuesday (23) with both newspaper and radio-tv network representatives at which the news lid was discussed.

Officials, asked if there had been indiscreet disclosure of security information, cited as an example a network tv broadcast on which a Guantanamo DP had been asked about the military buildup at that U.S. naval base on Cuban soil.

The 12 embargoed types of information included: plans for employment of U.S. forces and equipment; estimates of U.S. destructive capability; intelligence estimates of enemy targets; intelligence estimates of enemy capability or success of U.S. intelligence; details on U.S. troop, vessel or aircraft movements; and location, strength and vulnerability of any U.S. forces or installations.

Glazer's WBC Slot

Ralph L. Glazer is taking over as national radio sales manager for Westinghouse Broadcasting, filling the vacancy left by Walter Schwartz who was shifted to WINS, N.Y., as assistant general manager when WBC took over the latter station two months ago.

Glazer moves over from CBS Spot Sales where he was eastern sales manager.

CBS In The Lead

ABC in the face of the NBC "Kildare"-"Hazel" combo and the re-emergence of CBS' Thursday night sked (after a '61 disaster) sparked chiefly by "Mr. Ed," "Perry Mason" and the hour Hitchcock. On the other hand "Nurses" on Thursday is proving a dud.

Further, they suggest trouble for the Andy Williams musical hour and a decline in the Nielsen payoff on the Mitch Miller show in its shift to Friday nights. Jackie Gleason's Saturday night hour on CBS holds a commanding lead over "Sam Benedict" (NBC) and Roy Rogers (ABC). Latter is expected to be axed after 13 weeks.

Jack Paar's Friday night hour on NBC holds its own, though is getting beat in its first half-hour by ABC's "77 Sunset Strip." The competing "Fair Exchange" on CBS is fast going down the drain.

Above all, the ratings solidify the preeminent status of the old established personalities and properties such as Ed Sullivan, Jack Benny, Danny Thomas, Red Skelton, Lucille Ball, or a "What's My Line." That's why CBS never had it so good.

Reprise of The Business There Is None Like

Again the preparations pick up steam. Again editorial men are at work. Again a vast accumulation of data is collated from the literal far corners. The result will be the great annual issue as the current year ends and the next year begins. The values have grown with the know-how of 57 years of publication so that there is now an enormous anticipation factor.

The Anniversary Edition specializes in special data, trade-useful analysis of trade trends. It packs information, insight, interest. There is the color and the humor, too, alongside the sweeping panoramic detail.

Quite literally the Anniversary Edition of Variety is an exciting merger of the trade facts and this periodical's unique skills in mustering them, interpreting them, making them come alive. Past issues of the annual compilation of special text have been called a concentrated, comprehensive, crash course in entertainment and the engineering of popularity.

It remains a truism that the richness of editorial material imbues the Anniversary Edition with extraordinary advertising potential. In addition to the immediacy of its impact there is the bonus value of the issue being regarded as keepworthy, as reference file and year-round bedside reader.

THE BLACK & WHITE MINSTREL SHOW
With The Mitchell Minstrels, Stan Stennett, Eddie Calvert, George Chisholm, John Boulter, Dai Francis, Tony Mercer, Benny Garcia, Valerie Brooks, the Jackpots, the Television Toppers, the Jeffrey Brothers, Johnny Vyvyan, Orch under Eric Robinson
Producer: George Inns
45 Mins., Sun., 7:25 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

This odd, and maybe suspect, entertainment returned to the schedules with its simple vigor and elan unimparied. Its production polish has already won the show a prize, and a legit version is a current money-spinner at London's Victoria Palace. Modelled on the old Negro minstrel shows that were once a summer mainstay at holiday resorts, the content remains naive, the gags ancient, and the tunes middle-aged if not pensionable. The male supers all appear with black faces and white hands, and the gals as their mother made them. And it stays surprising that such an oldhat gimmick should retain a mass audience. Reason must be that its nostalgic reminiscences are still potent, for it ignores every showbiz development in the past 25 years.

Chief material is a songalog hodgepodge, launched in this one by a clutch of Mississippi melodies, complete with banjos, riverboat hoots, and the kind of terping midway between an amble and a shuffle. But the show also took in an old English ballad about Polly Perkins, demurely sung by Valerie Brooks; a takeoff on German beer-cellar music; and Western hoss-and-buggy tunes, anything, it seemed, went.

Backbone of the offering were the choral bits delivered by the George Mitchell group, who had a setpiece in a nursery ditty. Guest spot was filled by Eddie Calvert and his trumpet, and Stan Stennett provided some subdued pierhead comedy. George Chisholm's party piece was a singing medley at the piano, mildly burlesquing assorted ballads.

But the show's main asset remained its zippy production, George Inns insuring that no individual item stayed long enough to be found wanting. Stanley Dorfman's sets also cleverly illustrated the black & white motif, and the basic gimmick would only be offensive to those who can't forget their color prejudices, or to those whose memories don't stretch back too far. Otta.

ZERO ONE
(The Liar)
With Nigel Patrick, Margaret Rutherford, Katya Douglas, Susan Travers, Beatrice Varley, Robert Flemyng
Writer: Michael Pertwee
Producer: Lawrence P. Bachmann
Director: Silvio Narizzano
25 Mins., Wed., 9:25 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

Based on the experience of an airline security officer, "Zero One" opened with a couple of ponderous and improbable tales. However, "The Liar" showed some improvement, if only because it had a guest performance from Margaret Rutherford, the chin-wagging eccentric thesp who can generally inject some flavor into any script. On this occasion, Michael Pertwee's plot was competent, although predictable, and the dialog was literate.

David Clandon (Robert Flemyng) was planing to Britain from Canada when his wife died, ostensibly from heart failure. Another passenger, Mrs. Pendenny (Margaret Rutherford), claimed that she had seen Clandon smother his wife with a pillow, told the skein's hero, Alan Garnett (Nigel Patrick), but was disbelieved. She was known as a congenital liar, and had cried wolf too often.

Upshot was that Mrs. Pendenny was dared into telling the press about her suspicion, and Garnett restaged the crime to get at the truth. Of course, Mrs. Pendenny was right all along, and Clandon obligingly admitted guilt.

Nigel Patrick, a suave and debonair thesp with a fine comic talent, seemed somewhat subdued in this segment, and the character hadn't enough quirks or traits to stretch his gifts. Production values were okay, with Silvio Narizzano directing with flair, but some of the minor cameos were crude and, as indicated, the end could be guessed about one minute after the beginning. Otta.

NATA PER LA MUSICA
(Born for Music)
With Caterina Valente, Mac Ronay, Paddy Stone, Vittorio Gassmann, Corrado Lojacono, Claudio Villa, Nicola Arigliano, Gianni Ferrio Orch, others, guests
Director: Mario Landi
Writers: Guido Castaldo, Maurizio Jurgens
60 Mins.; Sun. 9:05 p .m.
RAI-TV, from Rome

Caterina Valente is back for a nine-show Italo variety series, and audiences on this initial evidence look headed for another seasonal treat to compare with singer's previous "Bonsoir Catherine," staged by RAI last season.

Miss Valente once again registers in all departments: song, dance, emceeing, comedy, and just plain sympathy. She's as savvy a performer as has been seen hereabouts in some time, and RAI has done well in according her an encore. Strong backing for her song-and-dance routines came from MacRonay who came across strongly with his offbeat humor in a couple of sketches.

Britain's Paddy Stone was another beg-off debut with his solo chair-dance routine, also providing some fancy terp routines for his dance group (12 boys and eight gals.). Series' format—each is keyed to spoof of certain genre: quizzers, ad pix, sport programs, etc.—is anti-climatic, also because the writing, at least in the initial stanza, lacked snap and sharpness. More promising adjunct is a quiz interlude which every week will pit Miss Valente against three top Italo pop singers in a test of (lyric) memory. This made for some amusing ad libs on the show caught, with Claudia Villa, Nicola Arigliano, and Corrado Lojacon as her opponents.

Future stanzas will also feature guestints by such imports as Eddie Calvert, the Fraternity Brothers, Della Reese, Al Cajola, and others. Technical credits were in the usual RAI quality niche. Hawk.

WINTER JOURNEY
With Patricia Neal, Eddie Albert, Sam Wanamaker, Chuck Julian, Jared Alen, Alan Gifford, Guy Kingsley Poynter, Sonia Fox, Peter Carlisle
Producer: John Jacobs
Writer: Clifford Odets
90 Mins., Fri., 9:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Differences of national temperament are starkly emphasized in the reception awaiting a scribe like Clifford Odets. "Winter Journey" is a tense and fluent play, concentrating its emotional content in the character of Frank Elgin, the thesp alcoholic who is given his comeback chance and almost muffs it. The British tradition would be to treat the problem more sedately, pulling its emotional punches but, maybe, delving deeper into character nuances. This production aimed at recreating an American impact, with appropriate casting. The three leading U.S. thesps played it to the hilt, and the result was a slight sense of exaggeration for local consumers, but a show that would probably drain the tear-ducts on the other side of the water.

Those that remembered the legit version and "The Country Girl" movie would be in the minority, anyway. The main difference in this treatment, by John Jacobs, seemed to be that the ambiguous character of Elgin's wife, Georgie (Patricia Neal), was less marked. There was never any doubt, for the alert viewer, that Elgin was responsible for his own downfall and that Georgie was the long-suffering helpmate at the end of her tether. This made the character of Bernie Dodd (Sam Wanamaker), less formidable, for his conviction that Georgie was master-minding her husband's failure seemed to have no basis in fact. This somewhat destroyed the subtlety of Odets's play, and made the final scene of Elgin's Broadway triumph an anti-climax.

But, in every other respect, this was a compelling slice of tv drama, and it contained three remarkable performances. Eddie Albert got right to the heart of Elgin's insecure bombast, arousing sympathy for his refuge in the bottle. He also convinced that he was an actor of past genius, and expressed gently the pathos of a man with a past who suddenly saw that he might have a future. Patricia Neal, too, was excellent as the wife who had married beneath her and was inclined to keep it that way. Her encounters with the hostile Bernie were dramatically explosive. Sam Wanamaker, whose style tends to be over-Methodical, operated well on a more mechanical level, when he didn't let his technique show through.

Minor thesps were competent, but had little chance to be anything else. John Jacobs ensured that the main trio were highlighted by closeups, and deftly deployed the play in an idiomatic setting. It remained, however, a diminished version of a fine bit of theatrical craftsmanship, because it dodged the central who-was-guilty issue. Otta.

USTINOV IN ORBIT
With Peter Ustinov
Producer: Bill Ward
Director: Quentin Lawrence
60 Mins., Wed., 9:45 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

During this hour, Peter Ustinov discussed four different productions of his latest play, "Photo Finish," showing clips of the companies in London, Zurich, the Hague, and Berlin, where the show was running simultaneously. Ustinov linked by talking to himself, answering his own questions, and attempting a survey of acting styles and theatre organization in the different countries.

Those who have relished Ustinov's earlier tv appearances and admired his fund of anecdote, mimicry, and insight would have been disappointed in this. Although he introduced a few sharp arrows, aimed at critics and the Chinese drama, the tone was otherwise earnest. Method adopted was to contrast film of the same scene in the various national versions, and this was repeated five times. This was four times too many, for, once the interest of seeing the same situation differently interpreted wore off, there was little to take its place. It also involved fair slices of German and Dutch, which would be Greek to most viewers.

The linking, too, seemed ill-prepared. Ustinov talked to the director of the Dutch production and discussed the influence of language on national acting styles. He quizzed the Berliner about the subsidized German theatre, and asked the Swiss whether he thought his play was a tragedy or comedy. Little that was memorable or deep came out of this, and each interview was followed by chunks of play again.

Interest was mainly for thesps, and those intrigued by style and interpretation. It could have been slashed by half its running time to advantage. Director Quentin Lawrence got some astute variations in the presentation of the same incidents by the four acting troups, but otherwise played safe. In fact, the hour suffered from lack of advance forethought, and from Ustinov's natural reluctance to criticise any of the thesps or directors, which might have stimulated. Otta.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Bell & Howell Close-Up

On its second outing this season, "Bell & Howell Close-Up" came up last night (Tuesday) on ABC-TV with a disturbing film essay on the American prison system. Titled "The Big Revolving Door," the half-hour was the first half of a two-part documentary on the treatment of short-term prisoners on Riker's Island, one of the nation's relatively more enlightened penitentiaries 75% of whose graduates eventually return.

The "Close-up" team of director Nicholas Webster and writer Robert Lewis Shayon illuminated the institutional dry-rot and callousness which nullifies all attempts to rehabilitate the prisoners. Interviews with New York City Correction Commission Anna Kross revealed that though she is sensitive to the problem, she cannot move faster towards reform than public indifference and bureaucratic resistance permit.

The first half hour focussed on Riker's Island as seen through the eyes of a young prisoner. After being jailed for a few months for stealing a car, he left the prison even more embittered towards society than when he entered. His comments and that of other prisoners about life at Riker's Island were in stark contrast to the more optimistic claims of Mrs. Kross, the warden and a couple of the dedicated prison teachers. The clearly stated and unavoidable conclusion of this study in penalogical futility was that the American prison system is 100 year behind the times, approximately at the point where medicine was before it fully adopted scientific procedures. Herm.

Ed Sullivan Show

The big surprise on Ed Sullivan's CBS-TV show Sunday (28) was not the appearance of Steve Allen, ES' erstwhile competitor on another network a few years back, but the spinning of a side from Allan Sherman's Warner Bros. album "My Son, The Folk Singer." It was given visual values by a lip-syncing from the comedy team of Harvey Norman & Stanley Dean, but the takeoff of the "Frere Jacques" folk tune, called "Sarah Jackman" by Sherman is hilarious enough to stand on audio alone as deejay play has been proving. However, it was a solid plug for the already zooming album and one that added much gaiety to the hour.

Allen, on the other hand, didn't fare as well. His main effort was a satirization of the intricacies of current quiz shows. The idea had some merit, but the overall lacked the punch that Allen usually puts into his takeoffs. He came off much better in a later segment with a nifty riff on the keyboard and in a piano duet with Sullivan. Other comedy segment was handled by Jackie Mason who had a funny dissertation on expensive apartment house living. It was well delineated and packed with a good punchline at almost every turn.

With the exception of Lucho Navarro, a master of duplicating strange noises like a rocket take-

Sunday Night at the Palladium

The affable, college-boy personality of Pat Boone was the star bait of this "Sunday Night at the Palladium" from Associated TeleVision. The boy, trailing memories of heavenly teetotal rectitude, is immensely likeable—the kind of performer that parents don't mind their kids foot-tapping to. His appearance practically coincided with the world premiere of "The Main Attraction," and a couple of this movie's ditties climaxed his act. These, presented for the first time, seemed so-so, but might grow when ears get more used to them. Boone also gave out a jaunty "Lonesome Road" which was slick rather than fervent, and opened with "It All Depends on You." Clad in a four-buttoned blazer, he made a neat impression of a decent guy doing a wholesome job. The squeals, which came, were not intrusive.

He was ushered in by ventriloquist Dennis Spicer, just back from his U.S. tour. Spicer came up with a routine offering on this occasion, gagging with a glove-puppet tiger and snake to rather less effect than heretofore. His familiar echo-throwing was again a winner, and he scored with a finale that involved his old, and insulting, dummy.

The Kaye Sisters, a curvaceous voice-alike group, clicked with a bouncy clutch of numbers, giving more than their full value to "Come On In" and their latest waxing, "We Won't Say Goodbye." They also showed a somewhat desperate sense of comedy in "Nature Boy," with the most nubile sister attempting a Betty Hutton and coming perilously near to mutton.

The show was somersaulted into initial life by the Seven Volants, who repeated a highly-sprung routine to cracking effect. Norman Vaughan emceed with aplomb, and the dancers, under Pamela Davis, leaped with vigor. "Beat the Clock" and Jack Parnell's band were present as usual, and Alan Tarrant produced in pedestrian fashion. He seemed afraid of showing audience reaction, and, in this toprating music-hall show, participation should be seen as well as heard. Otta.

poena; now we must resort to the legal means of a subpoena."

Under court order to bring the documents is Robert L. Werner, RCA vice president and general counsel, who was in Italy last week. Segal said he hoped Werner would be back in the U. S. by Wednesday.

Also due to testify under a Philco subpoena is Don McGannon, president of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., who took a trip to Russia, but for what reason no one could say.

Weaver said Philco will elicit from McGannon evidence that NBC violated a consent decree to stop alleged blackjacking of stations to sell to the network.

"We expect McGannon to say that NBC, after signing the decree went right to Westinghouse and said 'We've been ordered out of Philadelphia, we're interested in your Boston station'," Weaver told the examiner.

"We say that is a continuation of the conspiracy and abuse of network power."

E. V. Huggins, board chairman of Westinhouse Broadcasting Corp., led off the hearing with reports that NBC was "determined" to get Westinghouse's station in Philadelphia, WPTZ (now WRCV).

Chris Witting, former president of Westinghouse, followed up by admitting he gave a congressional committee testimony that NBC was "muscling in" on their Philadelphia station.

Charles Thieriot, president of KRON-TV in San Francisco, added a few reports of the network's unsuccessful effort to buy that station from 1954 to 1960.

and seek a deal where they will pay for the scripts and development of a pilot. We spend our money on them. I don't believe in waiting for the networks to okay preparation of projects."

The prexy recalled last selling season he sold the new Lucy series to JWT veepee Dan Seymour without a pilot, script or outline, just by telling him Lucy would be doing a comedy series. And this brought from Seymour a commitment of between $5,000,000-$6,000,000 for show and time. Later, Y&R and General Foods stepped in to pick up half that tab. Arnaz added, in telling of the circumstances of the sale, "that's the exception, of course."

He said pilot production will begin in November, that he hopes to have all the pilots finished not later than the end of February.

Networks Deny Employment Bias

tives of the three tv networks in statements outlining their webs' nondiscriminitory practices in hiring of both performers and production staffers; also negro comedian Dick Gregory, Negro actor P. Jay Sidney; variety host Ed Sullivan; and pix producer Otto Preminger and others.

During the first day of hearings (Monday) hiring practices were assailed by Negro actors Sidney Poitier and Ossie Davis and actress Hilda Simms.

In the sharp style of his nitery performances, Gregory quipped, "The only tv show that hires Negroes regularly is Saturday night boxing . . . The only thing colored you find on Broadway these days is a ticket stub.'

He nailed the ad agencies with primary blame in alleged discrimination in tv.

Ed Sullivan, whose variety show has feataured many Negro performers throughout its 15-years on the air. said his show had never been hurt by integrated programming. He and other producers pinned any lack of integration on "thoughtlessness" rather than other factors. He suggested the use of a Negro personality on all panel shows.

Preminger, who said it never occurred to him to have a Negro assistant cameraman on one of his pictures, opined, "I feel the initiative is lacking. It should be stimulated. Maybe the Government can help, but especially this should be done through private stimulation."

Networks' Spokesmen

CBS corporate officer Larry Lowman, in a prepared statement, said his company had 250 Negro employees in all phases of the organization. Several are members of the executive training program, he said. He reviewed senior veepee of programming Hubbell Robinson's policy statement on Negro hiring of some six months ago, and pointed to the use in CBS shows of Negroes as they appear in day-to-day American life.

ABC programming veep Theodore Fetter declared that his network has had a nondiscriminatory employment policy for many years —applying to both staff personnel and performers. His statement to the committee carried an attached exhibit listing more than 30 shows in the last two years that have featured Negro performers and civic leaders.

He said that in hiring staff personnel, manager execs are fully aware of company policy and are completely cooperative in the "implementation of nondiscriminatory employment practices."

"We are pleased to report," said Fetter, who appeared for veepee in charge of the tv network Tom Moore, "that currently we have non-white employees in many diverse, creative and technical capacities, including managerial positions."

As regards performers, he said ABC encourages the hiring of the best talent available regardless of color, and pointed out that much of the web's programming was done by outside packagers.

Fetter cited the recent hiring of Malvin R. Goode, former Pittsburgh Courier reporter, as a news staffer, and Olympic star Rafer Johnson as a commentator to cover the U. S.-Russian track meet aired by the web. He also cited the "Closeup" documentary on Negro life in America, "Walk in My Shoes," and a number of entertainment shows that have used Negro talent, and the appearance of numbers of unemployed Negroes in a documentary on automation filmed in Detroit.

George B. Fuchs, NBC veepee, personnel, also cited his company's long-standing (1919 as subsid of RCA) anti-discriminitory policy.

He also cited NBC's announced participation in President Kennedy's "Plans for Progress," to re-emphasize and extend policies of nondiscrimination.

He said that Negroes are employed in many key exec and supervisory and technical posts at NBC, listing the positions without naming the personnel.

In entertainment, he said, "NBC has been diligent in bringing home to the outside production companies the policies we want followed in having our program faithfully reflect the role and participation of minority ethnic groups in American life."

Fuchs also cited the signing of a young NBC discovery, Ena Hartmen, fashion and photog model, who was signed by the web in August after a talent audition.

Otherwise, the exec buttressed his statement with quotes from outside sources lauding the network's use of Negro performers in parts which reflect their actual community standing.

Poitier, Davis, Hilda Simms

An entirely different picture was drawn in the first day of the hearings by Negro actors Sidney Poitier, Ossie Davis and actress Hilda Simms.

Said Poitier, "I'm probably the only Negro actor who makes a living in the motion picture industry which employs 13,000 performers . . . It's no joy to me to be a symbol."

He said his first roll in theatre was in 1946; his second didn't come until 1959—"I've got 13 years to go and I'll be working again." He also cited a large span of years in which he did no tv, but stated he had turned down offers he considered unsuitable.

Davis said his 13 parts on Broadway in the last 16 years had possibly made him the most employed Negro performer. He said, however, it had been a touch-and-go existence, and pointed out that the production "Purlio Victorious," had 16 white and Negro actors integrated, but no Negroes in some other areas of production.

Miss Simms said she once played the wife of a Negro in an NBC-TV drama and, because of her light skin, the network received more than 200 letters of complaint. She said she refused to let the network apologize, and the show was her last performance for the network.

In legit, she said, "Of course, there are Negro plays. Well, damn Negro plays. I'm not asking for romantic parts, a blending of blood, but just a chance. I say it's immoral when we see casting notices and know bloody well it's no use applying because there are no Negro parts."

COURT TOSSES OUT LARS DALY CLAIMS

Chicago, Oct. 30.

Lars Daly, the indomitable losing candidate on the "American First" ticket, lost his equal time case against CBS, AB-PT and a third defendant listed as West Central Broadcasting Co. Daly had sued the three companies for $1,500,000 in compensatory damages and $94,000,000 in explempary damages, charging violation of the Federal Communications Act in a number of election periods when he wasn't given equal time with the other candidates.

The court threw out Daly's three appeals, ruling that he had no private right to damages and that the Illinois statute of limitations obtained.

Daly isn't running in this year's senatorial race because he failed to meet the petition requirements. With him out of the picture, WNBQ tried to arrange a debate between incumbent Sen. Everett Dirksen (Rep.) and Rep. Sidney Yates (Dem.), but Dirksen declined.

Louisville — WKYW, local primary affiliate of the CBS Radio Network, has been sold to Producers, Inc., Evansville, subject to FCC approval. F. Eugene Sandford, prez of Radio Kentucky, which owns and operates the station, announced the sale. Urge Radio Outlets to Get Aboard Code Wagon or Face FCC Wrath

Washington, Oct. 30.

"The threat is real" that the FCC will tighten its regulatory grip if stations don't subscribe to the Radio Code, an official of the Code told the fall conference of the National Assn. of Broadcasters here.

Charles Stone, manager of the Radio Code, branded as a "lie" the contention that NAB was hoisting a phantom to scare stations into signing up.

"This visible, disembodied spirit," said Stone in an extravagant choice of words, "is not a goblin concelved by NAB. We have not raised the spectre of fear, but we are spectactors who see an ever-growing ghost of things to come—if the utterances of some eventually become the law of the broadcasting land . . . If the Radio Code is to steer you through the channel, we must point out and avoid the rocks of FCC authority to change its threat of destructive regulation . . ."

Ed Murrow Licking Bout With Pneumonia; USIA's Cuba 'Freezeout'

Washington, Oct. 30.

Edward R. Murrow, veteran CBS newsman now in Federal service, is about to lick a battle with pneumonia which has had him in bed for more than three weeks. Now in Bethesda, Md., Naval Hospital in a D.C. suburb, he is expected to leave Thursday.

Murrow, U.S. Information Agency director, went down with pneumonia in Tehran during a Middle East trip early this month. He was flown back to New York and spent several days at his Dutchess County farm before being moved to the Bethesda hospital, where he has been for more than a week.

USIA representation in the top level White House conferences on the Cuban crisis has been conspicuously absent. None of the lists of persons included in these talks on policy contained a USIA name.

Murrow reportedly has been angered in the past because USIA, which is expected to explain American policies globally, is not invited into sessions where the policy is made.

Denver—Richard J. Braun has been elevated from assistant promotion manager to promotion manager for the Mullins Broadcasting Co's KBTV, Channel 9, and KBTRadio in Denver, effective immediately. Braun came to Mullins Broadcasting a few months ago from radio station KALL, Salt Lake City.

off, racing cars, etc., the rest of the show was in the musical groove and quite good, too. From New York's Basin Street East came Louis Prima, Sam Butera & The Witnesses and vocalist Gia Maione. They opened with a snappy version of "Oh, Marie," gave Miss Maione the floor for a nifty treatment of "How High The Moon" and then rocked the screen with "I Want You To Be My Baby." From Italy, and via RCA Victor, came tenor Sergio Franchi. It was a quick repeat for him, having appeared on the Oct. 14 stanza. His big-voiced renditions of "Finiculi-Finicula" and "What Kind Of Fool Am I" displayed his range in pop and opera to excellent advantage.

England was represented by young thrush Helen Shapiro, recently signed to the Epic label here, and Acker Bilk, who's been clicking in the U.S. on Atco Records. Miss Shapiro came through with a zingy quality on "I Don't Care What Happens To Me" and showed a potent belting style on "After You've Gone." Bilk offered some moody clarinet work with a dancing line accomp. It was the opening shot in the stanza and set everything up in a tasty fashion.

WCBS-TV Editorial

WCBS-TV v.p, and g.m, Norman E. Walt Jr. came up with a sensible teleditorial over the network's Gotham channel Friday (26) which was excellent community relations and overall goodwill and good showmanship. In a forthright manner, pulling no punches, he cautioned against any N.Y. Newspaper Guild strike, scheduled for tomorrow (Wed.) midnight, at a time when safety and morale are essential, in light of the Cuban crisis, and on a local community level because of its coming unfortuitously a week before an election.

While stressing that radio and tv "would of course broaden further coverage of local, state and national news" he accented the proper function of the press in interpreting the news, in depth. At the same time Walt patted radio and tv's advantages on the instaneity of news coverage. Under the circumstances he urged all parties— publishers and the Guild —to extend their contract negotiations until these vital issues have been resolved.

Walt reprised that nine other unions pledged support of the Newspaper Guild and that these 10 unions could create a long shutdown and blackout on four morning dailies with a combined circulation of 4,000,000, and the three evening papers with their 1,500,000 combined daily readership. At this writing the Wednesday midnight deadline had not been resolved.

(Over the weekend the Newspaper Guild's secretary-treasurer termed the CBS editorial an "intrusion" while contract negotiations were going on.) Abel.

CBS Reports

Fred Friendly, exec producer of "CBS Reports," returned to cover Dixie's integrational sore spots because, "News media are often criticized for reporting violence and controversy, but not going back to see how the wounds have healed, to see what the real outcome of the story is."

"The Other Face of Dixie," aired Wednesday (Oct. 24), turned "Reports" cameras back on Clinton, Tenn., Norfolk, Va., and Atlanta, Ga., where web shows were created out of crisis, and also on Little Rock, which, of course, provided a lot of news footage in its day of school integration.

It was clearly an intelligent gesture and, while the results were not of even interest, the follow-up effort turned up some truly dramatic moments and a fair share of human interest.

If perilous controversy and violence were the original news pegs, some of this one's most absorbing moments were in interviews with the Dixie diehards. There was the Little Rock official with a rationale who appeared to have commentator Harry Reasoner on the verge of illness. There was the state governor who oiled over his earlier hysteria with incredible aplomb, and there were chilling opinions from shiney-faced high school youths who apparently have remained untouched Dixie traditionalists throughout it all.

In contrast were students and officials won over, and a couple of downright inspiring interviews with two woman teachers who had appeared in the earlier CBS coverage as courageous advocates of integration and who had seen the initial fulfillment of their hopes.

Interviews were supplemented by excellent location camera work by Robert Clemens, Charles Mack and Martin Barnett. Bill.

Week to Remember

viewer with some valuable companionship. Shortwave WRUL stayed on around the clock at the height of the crisis.

WPIX, WOR-TV—two more N.Y. stations—did well. Others who saw WNEW-TV had only praise for that Gotham outlet's handling of the crisis.

In fact stations all around the country responded to the emergency in their individual ways. As an example, for the duration of the critical Cuban situation, KOGO-TV-AM, San Diego, has retained Rear Admiral A. W. McKechnie, SNU retired, as a special news consultant.

Station says McKechnie was put on to provide the area with broader news coverage and particularly as a service to the large number of military families living in San Diego.

As for the radio networks—they and local radio were there more than tv, although only occasionally were they there with much more. Apparently radio, too, decided that continuous coverage—save for the few exceptions— was not in order.

Of course, goofs will occur. Before President Kennedy spoke on Monday, NBC-TV introduced that fact and then interrupted the interruption, so to speak, in order to bring two commercials, at least over the N.Y. owned & operated station WNBC-TV. Then the President spoke. CBS-TV, on the other hand, did an excellent wrapup of the crisis, only to ruin it at the 11:30 p.m. close out one night by having anchorman Walter Cronkite cut in on the White House correspondent, so that N. Y. affils could air a paid politicast.

Since then, all three tv networks have stepped up the number of regular daily newscasts throughout the crisis.

NBC-TV has added two to its daytime schedule, bringing the total of five-minute shows to six a day before 6 p.m. CBS-TV has added one to its regular schedule during the day. ABC-TV stepped up its news coverage, too—by supplying five-minute news shows locally from 7:55 p.m. to 10:55 a.m. —when the network starts its operation. (Five minute wrapups were supplied to the networks at the start of each hour all day by ABC and a special news show was inserted between halves of the pro football game last Sunday Oct. 28.)

ABC News chief Jim Hagerty said the web's radio and tv coverage was planned for a protracted international crisis. That also goes for the CBS and NBC operations.

Instead of the long-ago-planned 90-minute program on the Berlin tunnel, the one that stirred up so much controversy both at the U.S. State Dept. and in Germany, NBC-TV decided to air a 90-minute wrapup on the Cuban situation tonight (Wed.). Reuven Frank who produced the completely filmed tunnel project also produced the Cuban replacement. Last week, NBC said it was cancelling the scheduled tunnel airing, because of the intensity of the crisis over Cuban arms. Art.

CBS-TV's Adult Game Now Luring the Kids As Weekly Panelists

Kid tv panelists are making inroads on the adult game show of Goodson - Todman's "Password," telecast on CBS-TV Sunday evenings and daytime Monday through Friday.

First youngster to play "Password" was Connie Godzina, a 16-year-old high school cheer leader from Brittan, Mich., last Sunday (28). On yesterday's (Tues.) daytime show, Kitty Carlisle and Sam Levinson found themselves paired with even younger players, none-year-old Abby Trestman, of Tenafly, N. J., and Dean Burris, 10, of Forest Hills, N. Y. Two more children—both nine-year-olds—have been set for next Sunday's (4) "Password" stanza.

Exec producer Bob Stewart says "we're using children and teenagers on the show because we've discovered that kids play the 'Password' game in school and at home." Hundreds of kids, according to the producer, have written in suggesting themselves and other children for "Password." "What we want to do is to use two children about once a week on the daytime show and children and teenagers on the Sunday night show, as often as we can," Stewart adds. Until recently, minimum age for playing the game on camera had been 18.

It is argued, now not quite as strongly, that selling the cream of the pix to the networks dilutes the attractiveness of packages in syndication, packages which in practice usually are studded with cream to make up for the "B's." Whatever the merits of that argument, it seems more likely that the higher prices offered by networks isn't and won't be ignored.

Metro TV, for example, is prepping a new group of pix for selling to stations, but first is talking to the networks about possible selection of titles for web exposure. Twentieth-Fox and United Artists Television took the web route.

This is the situation with only two major post-'48 libraries as yet unexposed to tv, Universal and Paramount. Seven Arts Associated is reported to have a supply of from three to four years of pix, under its release schedule. Metro TV, now releasing about 30 a year, has quite a supply of pix. Other than some independents, and the sources listed above, the supply of post-'48's from Hollywood is relatively limited.

Those doing some crystal ball gazing see the possible eventuality of fresh pix to tv becoming so scarce that the new pix might become a strictly network commodity —an eventuality which is seen as years away, but very possible.

job in a smoothly professional manner.

As a psychological bonus, the Lum spots carry heavy overtones of nostalgia, right from the opening organ music bit through the overall intimate conversational atmosphere.

The corn pone humor is understandably heavy. Intermixed with straight-faced pleas for the return of Fulbright (as well as other Democratic Arkansas congressional delegation) to the seats of power are such gems as:

—The conversational interjection, "By Grannies";

—The crack about the local yokel who unknowingly picked up a red hot horse shoe at the blacksmith's, and after doing a jig of pain was asked if it wasn't pretty hot. "No," he replied, "It just doesn't take me too long to look at a horse shoe."

Fulbright can't miss.

Gerald Adler

N.Y. Adler had returned from his headquarters in London to attend the sessions and it seems that some EBU members again expressed interest in selling programs to American tv, just as American tv so frequently sells programs abroad. (So far, the exchange has, many abroad feel, been inequitable.)

George Graham, head of NBC Enterprises, parent to NBC International, encouraged EBU members to think up radio programs for consumption in the U.S. via NBC Radio network. He told them at a meeting on Thursday (25) that radio can be used to condition the public in the U.S. to European programming and Graham, recently of NBC Radio himself, suggested that an ideal start might be a radio version of EBU's annual big tv show, the Eurovision song contest, wherein big stars from each member country sing a local hot song in one big special program.

Acad Votes For An Int'l Emmy

Next spring the first Emmy award for international tv will be given by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences. Org is soliciting nominations from foreign countries, which will then be submitted for a vote to a "jury of former Emmy winners."

Meantime, the N. Y. TV Academy's awards committee, under Ted Cott, decided last week on revisions in the local Emmys awards for this season. After the awards last spring, some N.Y. stations, including WNEW-TV, rose up in anger against the awards, particularly against removal of a show from the Emmys simply because it had been shown in more than one city yet not shown on a network. This, say Acad execs, will no longer happen because the awards committee has decided that any tv program produced in N.Y. "yet not seen in over 75% of the country," will definitely qualify for a N.Y. Emmy award.

N.Y. chapter will maintain the year-old "no category system" of nominations, the one difference being that this time there will be two listings—personal and programming. Apparently, there were objections to the fact that programs and personalities had to compete directly last spring.

New Skirt for Emmy?

A change in the shape of Emmy—essentially, the change would be in the makeup of the statuette's skirt—was proposed to the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences by Betty Furness, head of the N. Y. chapter of the org. Seems that the fellows (clearly in the majority) on the Academy Board of Trustees were not as enthusiastic about the need for a change in Emmy and they referred the matter back to the locals, as the saying goes, for further study.

One of the objections to a change in the Emmy is that former winners might feel their awards were now less important. Miss Furness was described as feeling strongly about the necessity of a change in metal statuette.

EBU Meet

rector-general of Swedish Broadcasting Corp., mentioned one idea that seemed partly along the road to fruition. That was a "project of truly international programming to celebrate the first anniversary of the lanching of Telstar."

Stanton's 'Town Meeting' Bid

A day earlier, atop the St. Regis, where CBS (due to flipping of a coin) was the last of the networks to host a luncheon for EBU members, CBS prexy Dr. Frank Stanton proposed "a television town meeting of the world." CBS, he said, planned an experimental program on which people on both sides of the ocean, utilizing Telstar, could discuss a "subject of worldwide interest and urgency."

Dr. Stanton suggested that the program might come about next spring as Telstar reaches its first anniversary in space. The CBS topper also mentioned in the course of his speech a desire to remove the "legal, technical and other barriers to the flow of programming from continent to continent."

If only to point out the subtle, yet real, differences between U.S. and European needs and attitudes, it was noticeable on Friday, at the press conference, that while Rydbeck and his associates also sought to lower barriers to program and idea exchanges, Rydbeck again seemed unwilling to credit the Americans with having taken the initiative.

When Sarnoff of NBC on Monday (22) became the first major executive here to call publicly for a worldwide broadcasting organization, Rydbeck immediately afterwards expressed his appreciation but noted that his European cohorts had already thought that one up. After Stanton's speech three days later, Rydbeck—again in a seemingly gracious thank you to the CBS officer—suggested that the EBU had also discussed that, prior to Stanton's speech, of course. At the press conference Friday afternoon, he reiterated that EBU wanted a Telstar anniversary program and that Stanton's proposal for one was "included" in others to be taken up at later EBU conclaves. He noted that EBU's Luxembourg delegate "had already proposed" a similar idea.

The EBU administrative council is scheduled to meet on Nov. 9, when apparently discussion will be held as to the "practical forms" any worldwide org is to assume. The next general EBU meeting, of the kind held last week here, will be held next June or July in Stockholm, and Rydbeck invited the American Broadcasters to attend.

Rydbeck said in his statement to the press that "substantial progress had been made" in the course of the N. Y. conclave and that a "number of challenging proposals have been made which will be given serious consideration by the EBU and its members on both sides of the Atlantic and in other parts of the world."

In short, no firm decisions were reached on apparently any substantive measures, since, according to EBU, all the stuff done here was then to be forwarded to the "appropriate bodies within the EBU," one of which was given as the administrative council.

No Clear-Cut Plan On North America EBU Counterpart

In the wake of the European Broadcasting Union's meeting in New York last week, a fissure has developed among the U.S. networks over the question of setting up a regional association covering North American television broadcasters. Difference of approach was highlighted in the proposals put forward at EBU meeting by CBS-TV president Dr. Frank Stanton and by Donald Coyle, president of ABC International Television.

In working out agreements on international transmission of programming in view of the limited time available for that purpose, Stanton recommended the setting up of a regional association including the three U.S. networks, U.S. Information Agency, National Educational Television & Radio Center and the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., all associate members of EBU.

Coyle, on the other hand, suggested that the regional association also include the Canadian commercial tv operation, CTV, and Emilio Azcarraga's tv operation in Mexico, both of which are not EBU associates. ABC thinking on this point is that the North American tv association should not be an adjunct of or subordinate to EBU by limiting its membership exclusively to EBU members. An all-encompassing North American association, Coyle believes can tie in closely with EBU but as a separate entity geared to handle the problems unique to a hemispheric area which is now the dominant force in world television.

NBC has not yet indicated which idea it supports although it's expected to lean in the direction of confining membership in a North American association to EBU associates. At this point, the differences among the networks has not been clearly spelled out in any sharply defined forensic statements, but they exist nonetheless in embryonic form and are expected to shape subsequent efforts to set up a world broadcasting union. A meeting of the North American EBU hosts—the networks, the educational centre, and USIA, is scheduled for Dec. 5, according to John White, the educational centre's boss.

Latinos Fear 'Stiff' Competish Of U.S. TV Stanzas; May Ban Dubbing

Mexico City, Oct. 30.

American television episodes, dubbed locally, are proving to be the "stiffest competition for Mexican films in principal Latin American markets," according to a statement issued by the official Peliculas Mexicanas distributorship.

While executives refused to make a direct statement, it has been learned from a reputable source that the board of directors may recommend a prohibition of further dubbing of American made series here. Matter is subject to discussion between Pel-Mex and the Union of Film Production Workers.

The distributorship stand is that the downward graph of Mexican production is in part attributable to big boom in release of American episodics in the Latin American market. Allegedly theatre boxoffiec figures are slumping because public prefers somescreen entertainment for free. Robert J. Corkery, Motion Picture Export Association vice president, who had made many swings in the Latin American area on MPEA business, denies that boxoffice has been "seriously affected."

Juan Bandera, Peliculas Mexicanas manager, admitted that Mexican videotaped soap operas exported into Central and South America are having wide acceptance. These are competing for the market with American episodics.

While producers of Mexican television material appear to be gaining a good share of the Latin American market, this is reacting adversely in release of feature length material in commecial theatres.

Peliculas Mexicanas is the weakest link in the triumvirate of official Mexican distributorships (Cimex and Peliculas Nacionales the others), and the firm may be seeking to place the blame for its recent financial losses on television inroads.

Newley's 'World,' 'Purr-ee' Track, Getz's 'Band,' Pitney's 'Heart' Top LPs

ANTHONY NEWLEY: "STOP THE WORLD—I WANT TO GET OFF" (London). It's been a long time since a Broadway musical has received such a pre-opening spinning push as this latest David Merrick production. "What Kind Of Fool Am I" and "Gonna Build A Mountain" received a rash of pop singles action and the disk jockey contingent found them hard to resist. The songs as performed in the show will probably be the major factor in attracting the consumer to this package. It's handsomely packaged and makes a strong addition to the original Broadway show album shelf. The package is dominated by Anthony Newley, who wrote words, music and book with an assist from Leslie Bricusse. His handling of the show's two big songs are immense. Also contributing to the general pleasure is Anna Quayle who does quite nicely by "Typically English," "Glorious Russian," "Typische Deutch" and "All American," as well as in duet with Newley on "Someone Nice Like You."

"GAY PURR-EE" (Warner Bros.). With music by Harold Arlen and lyrics by E. Y. Harburg, Warners' animated feature film "Gay Purr-ee" has the services of a top cast including Judy Garland, Robert Goulet, Red Buttons, Hermione Gingold and Paul Frees to handle the singing and speaking voices of the cartoon characters. The score has a bright and colorful flavor and it's presented with sparkle on this soundtrack set under the baton of Mort Lindsey. Performances likewise are first-rate with Miss Garland lending her touch to a variety of pleasant tunes and Goulet giving his full-voiced approach to others. Frees figures in a couple of clever comedy turns and Buttons duets nicely with Goulet on one tune. It's a nicely-produced soundtrack session and could do well if the pic clicks.

STAN GETZ WITH THE GARY McFARLAND ORCH: "BIG BAND BOSSA NOVA" (Verve). Bossa nova's boom in the U.S. can be credited to Stan Getz who was its prime launcher with his "Jazz Samba" package and the concurrent click of the "Desafinado" side from the same set. The Getz-styled samba beat is enlarged here via Gary McFarland's arrangements for a big band and it should draw plenty of action from the bossa buffs. Four of the tunes are by Brailian composers and four are McFarland originals. All are highly exciting when Getz's tenor sax comes through or via the work of such other instrumentalists like Hank Jones (piano), Jim Hall (guitar) and Johnny Rae (drums).

GENE PITNEY: "ONLY LOVE CAN BREAK A HEART" (Musicor). This is for those who want a more permanent record of Gene Pitney's clickos. But, in addition to the plus values of LP-ing such single entries as "Only Love Can Break A Heart," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" and "If I Didn't Have A Dime To Play The Juke Box," producers Aaron Schroeder & Wally Gold have rounded up a flock of newer entries that stand a chance of pulling out as single clickos, too. With Burt Bacharach and Alan Lorber sharing the arranging-conducting chores, Pitney has solid musical values behind him and another strong album in front of him.

SKITCH HENDERSON - NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC: "WINTER HOLIDAY" (Columbia). Last winter Skitch Henderson went into New York's Carnegie Hall for a guest date with the New York Philharmonic and this package is a pleasing recapture of that concert. Pianist - conductor Henderson steered the symph boys along some attractive pop trails and they followed with lush and mellow sounds that will suit many programmers. The repertoire includes such ever-pleasing entries as "Winter Wonderland," "Moonlight In Vermont," "Sleigh Ride" and some of foreign origin like "Troika," from "Lieutenant Kije Suite," "Never On Sunday" and "La Mer." It's a well-rounded program marked by high-calibre taste all the way.

NIKKI PRICE: "NIKKI" (Epic). Right from the first side, "Would'ja For A Big Red Apple," a seldom-heard Johnny Mercer tune, Nikki Price projects with impact. Although she differs from the run-of-the-mill songstress heard on disks these days, her style isn't so offbeat as to appeal to only a specialized few who've caught her work along the intime nitery circuit. She has a mass attraction that will surely develop once the spinners start giving the package its due exposure. Although she toys effectively with such popular numbers like "Fools Rush In," "If I Were A Bell" and "My Love Is A Wanderer," the unfamiliar entries like "Peel Me A Grape," "A Thousand Blue Bubbles" and "Sweet Pumpkin" as well as the aforementioned "Would'ja For A Big Red Apple" help her impress as a vocalist with a big potential.

"AHMAD JAMAL AT THE BLACKHAWK" (Argo). The light and swinging piano stylings of Ahmad Jamal are nicely showcased via this outing. There is simplicity yet flourishing strength to Jamal's jazz and, backed by the late Israel Crosby on bass and Vernell Fournier on drums, his inventive and smooth-sounding technique comes brightly forward. The emphasis is on a swinging rhythmic approach here, but there's also an occasional ballad thrown in too. Recorded at the Blackhawk, Chicago, this is the last waxing to feature the trio with this personnel.

LAURINDO ALMEIDA: "VIVA BOSSA NOVA" (Capitol). Yet another entry in the bossa nova sweepstakes, this session features guitarist Laurindo Almeida and a group of top Coast jazz men working over a variety of tunes in the vogue. Included are such tv show themes as "Naked City" and "Route 66," hit tunes like "Moon River," "Lollipops and Roses," "Ramblin' Rose" and "Lazy River" and straight bossa novas like "Desafinado" and "One Note Samba." The set captures the right rhythmic backgrounds even if some of the tunes don't work out to best advantage melodically. It's slick-sounding array that could break through.

SHIRLEY BASSEY: "SINGS THE HIT FROM 'OLIVER' ("AS LONG AS HE NEEDS ME") PLUS OTHER POPULAR SELECTIONS" (United Artists). Once you get by the long-winded title there is lots of listening excitement in this latest compilation of Shirley Bassey's singing technique. She's a full-throated singer with an emotional feel for lyric values that makes each song a warm and rich experience. "As Long As He Needs Me" is the big attraction, of course, and will pull in buyers who've heard her rendition via its earlier single release, but there are joys here, too. Among them are Rodgers & Hart's "Spring Is Here," Cole Porter's "I Get A Kick Out Of You," Kern-Hammerstein's "All The Things You Are" and Irving Berlin's "Let's Face The Music And Dance."

BILLIE HOLIDAY: "LADY-LOVE" (United Artists). Billie Holiday fans are known to be legion and here's another set they'll want. It's a never-before-released waxing of a concert the late Lady Day gave in Germany as part of her 1954 European tour. She was in fine voice for the trek and her performance is rightly captured on this platter. All elements of her unique and as yet unmatched vocal feeling and stylings are here along with some solid jazzmanship by the likes of Red Norvo, Buddy DeFranco, Jimmy Raney, Red Mitchell, Sonny Clark and Carl Drinkard.

THE FOLK MUSIC OF WASHINGTON SQUARE" (Folkways). The Washington Square Park area of New York's Greenwich Village is a mecca for folkniks. They gather there to sing, play and shoot the breeze. Melvin T. Reiter, a folk enthusiast, went to the Square and recorded some of the goings on. This LP is the result. It's an interesting set, featuring 22 performances by a variety of folkniks, none of whom is professional but some of whom could be, judging by the quality of their work. All kinds of material are presented and some is worthwhile. It all adds up to an interesting set which has been well-edited to capture the vitality of the performers.

THE HILO HAWAIIANS: "MEMORIES OF HAWAII" (Decca). There apparently is a continuing call for music out of Hawaii so this set will have no trouble in finding its audience. Recorded in Hawaii by one of the island's foremost groups, The Hilo Hawaiians, each groove smacks of authenticity in the vocalizing and instrumental departments. There are some songs with a Mainland touch ("Hula Twist," "Singing Bamboo" and "Dancing Under The Stars") but the group gives them a traditional island approach that will keep everybody happy.

LES McCANN LTD.: "ON TIME" (Pacific Jazz). Les McCann has a swinging and often driving jazz piano attack which gets a fine display via this session which also features Leroy Vinnegar on bass, Ron Jefferson on drums and Joe Pass on guitar. Together as well as in solo, they get off some sweet swinging sounds that should set well with the hipster audience. There's a bright swing to this disk, paced by the leader's piano.

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

CHUCK CLARK . . . . . THE ANNIVERSARY SONG
(United Artists) . . . . . I Love Being Loved By You
Chuck Clark's "The Anniversary Song" (Mood) is a snappy workover of this smash Al Jolson vic tune by a rocking singer with a hardhitting combo in support. Could be very big. "I Love Being Loved By You" (Rockford) is a bright slice with a catchy beat for the coke set.*

MAXINE BROWN . . . . . AM I FALLING IN LOVE
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Promise Me Anything
Maxine Brown's "Am I Falling In Love" (Maxine†) is a firm rhythm ballad on which this songstress impresses potently with her deep-down blues style. "Promise Me Anything" (Eden†) is a slow moving ballad with lesser chances.

MR. ACKER BILK . . . . . LIMELIGHT
(Atco) . . . . . Lonely
Mr. Acker Bilk's "Limelight" (Bourne) is a lushly melodic interpretation of the Chaplin tune which should sustain this British clarinetist's pace in the U. S. pop lists. "Lonely" (Bourne-Rank*) gets a similarly styled instrumental workover with the reed contrasted with a string orch.*

PATSY CLINE . . . . . WHY CAN'T HE BE YOU
(Decca) . . . . . Heartaches
Patsy Cline's "Why Can't He Be You" (Pamper†) is a solid slow-tempoed ballad which this country singer belts with commercial impact across the board. "Heartaches" (Leeds) is a neat reprise of this standard in a simple arrangement.*

LES PAUL-MARY FORD . . . . . PLAYING MAKE BELIEVE
(Columbia) . . . . . I Just Don't Understand
Les Paul-Mary Ford's "Playing Make Believe" (Cedarwood†) is one of those sentimental, country-flavored ballads which this team can dish up in highly attractive style. "I Just Don't Understand" (Cedarwood†) changes pace with a rhythm number also nicely handled.

ROY HAMILTON . . . . . I AM
(Epic) . . . . . Earthquake
Roy Hamilton's "I Am" (Joy) is a big ballad with a stirring religioso lyric which this singer belts very effectively. "Earthquake" (Blackwood†) reverts to a bouncing rocking groove in which Hamilton is also at home.*

AL HIRT . . . . . THEME FROM 'THE 11TH HOUR'
(RCA Victor) . . . . . Theme From 'Two For The Seesaw'
Al Hirt's "Theme From 'The 11th Hour'" (Miller) turns this network tv show theme into a rich-sounding instrumental in which the trumpet is backed by a large fiddle section. "Theme From 'Two For The Seesaw'" (United Artists*) is a fine pic tune instrumental, also with chances.*

CHRIS CERF . . . . . CHEERLEADER
(MGM) . . . . . In the Middle of the Night
Chris Cerf's "Cheerleader" (Northridge) is a rousing rocking with a clever seasonal peg and romantic lyrics which this newcomer handles in strong commercial style. "In The Middle of the Night" (Hill & Range†) is another entry with a good beat and lyrics, also well handled.*

JERRY JACKSON . . . . . SHE LIED
(Kapp) . . . . . Wide Awake In A Dream
Jerry Jackson's "She Lied" (BoBob) dishes up a rocking ballad with some stylistic vocal flourishes that will earn spins with the teenagers. "Wide Awake In A Dream" (BoBob*) is a ballad in a sweeter groove belted very effectively by this singer.*

RUSS VESTEE . . . . . A TOUCH OF VENUS
(Amy) . . . . . Good Old Days
Russ Vestee's "A Touch of Venus" (E. B. Marks†) is a sharply written teenage ballad which this singer gives plenty of pop mileage in a standout arrangement. "Good Old Days" (Amy†) is a routine rocker in a stale melodic format.

MARTIN DENNY . . . . CAST YOUR FATE TO THE WIND
(Liberty) . . . . . The Payoff
Martin Denny's "Cast Your Fate To The Wind" (Friendship†) is an arresting instrumental with a pounding rhythmic format tailormade for this pianist and combo. "The Payoff" (Leeds) is another nifty slice with a good rhythmic conception.*

LES BAXTER ORCH. . . . . THEME FROM 'MANCHURIAN CANDIDATE'
(Reprise) . . . . . Manchurian Beat
Les Baxter Orch's "Theme From 'The Manchurian Candidate'" (Savage†) shapes up as a potential pic tune winner on the strength of its offbeat melody and the film's b.o. "Manchurian Beat" (Bax†) also has some interesting instrumental angles for spinning power.

GREEN RIVER BOYS . . . . . TRUCK DRIVING MAN
(Capitol) . . . . . Kentucky Means Paradise
Green River Boys' "Truck Driving Man" (American†) is a colorful backwoods tune belted in zestful style by this blue grass combo. "Kentucky Man's Paradise" (American†) is a cute salute to the state of Kentucky, somewhat exaggerated but done with humor.

FABIAN . . . . . SHE'S STAYIN' INSIDE WITH ME
(Dot) . . . . . Break Down and Cry
Fabian's "She's Stayin' Inside With Me" (Lyle-Holloja) is a mediocre rocking ballad which he projects to the teenage audience that isn't concerned with the quality of his voice. "Break Down and Cry" (American†) is a talk-sing number which makes even less demands on his pipes.* Herm.

'Victrola' Tag Stirs Lotsa Memories As Victor Revives It in British Mkt.

The "Victrola" label is making a comeback. The tag, which has been associated with the classical catalog of the Victor Talking Machine Co. as far back as 1906, has been revived in England by RCA Victor to identify the reissue of classical recordings by topflight artists originally on the RCA Victor Red Seal label.

The series, which will be issued as a lowprice line, will hit the market in Great Britain this month. The first issue of eight LPs includes symphonic performances by Toscanini, Monteux, Reiner, Kondrashin and Stokowski; ballet music conducted by Arthur Fiedler and Jean Morel; the Tchaikovsky Violin Concerto played by Milstein under the direction of Munch.

Orchestras represented are the NBC Symphony, the Royal Opera House Covent Garden Orchestra, the Boston Symphony and the Vienna Philharmonic. They will be advertised at 21 shillings, sixpence each (approximately $3), about half the cost of regular LP records in England.

"The aim of the RCA Victrola label," stated Dario Soria, division vicepresident of the international liaison department, "will be to make available at low prices the basic classical catalog to a generation of young people now starting to build a library." By the end of 1963 it is planned to have at least 50 recordings available in the DCA Victrola catalog.

The "Victrola" trademark was created and first used by Eldridge Johnson, who, with Emile Berliner, founded the Victor Talking Machine Co. Although Johnson coined the trademark primarily for the first horn-enclosed phonograph, it soon also became a famous trademark for recordings.

A letter from Johnson dated June 9, 1905, is the earliest evidence discovered in connection with the "Victrola" trademark. It reads: "For some time past I have been revolving the matter in mind of protecting a new name for Victor goods in all parts of the world. 'Victrola' is similar to nothing I

W. German Disk Biz in Sharp Dip

Frankfurt, Oct. 30.

The disk business in West Germany is dipping downward, with 500,000 fewer platters sold in the first six months of this year as against the same period a year ago. Total sales in the January through June, 1962, slot were down to about 21,190,000.

Sales of the 6½ inch singles rose a slim 1.9%, but LP sales dropped a heavy 14%. Interest in stereos, though, increased. They accounted for 28% of the total sales during the first six months of the year.

Of the total disks pressed during the period—about 25,470,000—only 4.3% or 4,180,000 were exported. At the same time, however, the German record buyers brought 22% of the total sales in foreign pressings, which accounted for 64,000,000 platters made in other lands. That, too, indicated more interest by the German buyers in records from other lands, since in the same time a year ago, only 51,000,000 records were imported from other countries.

Apparently the boom in record business that occurred in the '50s is past. The German disk industryites hope that the growing enthusiasm for stereo equipment here will stimulate trade.

Another possible aid to the diskeries' income may be the upped prices for singles. Because of rising production costs, the major firms recently decided to increase prices by 75 pfennigs (about 18c), which means that singles will cost $1.18 instead of the former $2 price.

Right now, it's estimated that there are about 11,600,000 platters in record shops waiting to be sold. And unless the Christmas buying season is an enormous success, it looks as if the disk business will be in for a recession in 1963.

Brit. Disk Mfrs.' Aug. Sales Hit $3,432,800, Up 23%

London, Oct. 30.

Manufacturers sales of disks in August, valued at 3,432,800, were 23% more than in August, 1961, while domestic and export sales rose 21% and 34%, respectively. Total output in the month was 33% more than a year earlier. LP production was 40% higher and 45s climbed 33% over the previous year.

In the first eight months of 1962, production of LPs was 20% higher than the similar months in 1961; in this period production of 45s was almost unchanged from a year earlier, but 78s were 10% less.

Chi AFM Local's Rump Dissidents Gain in Standing

Chicago, Oct. 30.

It appears that the Chicago Musicians for Union Democracy, the rump group of players which has been needling American Federation of Musicians Local 10 chief James C. Petrillo for the past year, is making a concerted effort to change their status from rebel raiders to loyal opposition.

In a switch from their earlier sniping tactics, the group, headed by their candidate for Local 10 prexy, Barney Richards, met amicably with Petrillo to discuss the Dec. 4 union election. The parley was described as "cordial" by the CMUD.

The meeting is the first time in the 30 years that Petrillo has maintained absolute control over the local that he has formally acknowledged opposition. The turning point came at an Oct. 9 meeting when an impressive 25% of the Local 10 members present voted along with the CMUD, or at least against the Petrillo stewardship.

The dissidents nearly succeeded in voting a salary cut for Petrillo, and it was only after an impassioned speech by the prexy that a series of "clean election" proposals by the CMUD were voted down.

One of these proposals was the prime subject of last weeks confab, and it appears that Petrillo has done a turnabout on the issue, if only provisionally. Tentative agreement was reached on a CMUD proposal which would provide that the Loyala U. School of Industrial Relations completely conduct the Dec. 4 election and certify its results. The balloting would be done on voting machines. Petrillo had ruled the same proposal "out of orded" at the last regular meeting of the local.

CAMEO-P'KWAY NETS $180,116 FOR 3D QTR.

Cameo-Parkway Records has declared its first quarterly dividend of 10c per Class A common share, payable Dec. 10 to shareholders of record Nov. 15, 1962. The diskery's unaudited figures for its third quarter ended Sept. 30 indicated a net profit of $180,116 or 30c per share outstanding compared with $65,701 or 11c a share on the same number of shares for the comparable period of 1961.

For the nine-month period ended Sept. 30, 1962, C-P's net earnings were $710,547 or $1.17 per share as against $184,119 or 30c per share for the same period last year.

Linsky to Dimension

Herb Linsky has joined the Al Nevins-Don Kirshner combine as director of sales and promotion for their newly formed Dimension label.

In the past, Linsky has been associated with RCA Victor as a district manager, with Epic as national promotion manager, and with United Artists as national promotion director.

Casals Plans USSR Trip

San Juan, P.R., Oct. 30.

Pablo Casals, returned home from a summer of concerts and travel in the States and Europe last week, revealed plans to take his "crusade for peace" to Moscow next summer for two performances. His oratorio, "El Pesebre" (The Manager), was heard last season in Carnegie Hall, N.Y.

The 85-year-old Catalonian cellist said that his projected visit to Russia, now being arranged by the U.S. State Department, will be his first since 1914.

Milwaukee Symph Yens Maj. Status

Milwaukee, Oct. 30.

Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra intends increasing number of resident musicians from 40 to 60 in 1963, according to board of directors. There's also plans of extending number of concerts from 25 to 28 weeks.

Expanded season would add $300 to $500 a season for resident musicians. Musicians now average $115 weekly.

There's a three-year plan afoot to make orchestra a major symphony.

If approved, the 1963-'64 budget would be about $354,000, as compared with $278,000 this season.

Kingston Trio's Hot 35G In 3 Keys; Det. Promoter Eyes Bossa Nova Tour

Pittsburgh, Oct. 30.

Ed Sarkesian, Detroit promoter, disclosed here that the Kingston Trio racked up a smash $35,000 gross over the Oct. 19-21 weekend. On Friday (19), the trio did $8,000 at the Veteran's Auditorium in Providence, R. I., on a 10-day promotion. On Saturday (20) at Boston's Donnelly Auditorium, there was a sellout with a $15,000 take. At Buffalo's Kleinhans Auditorium, the trio went clean again Sunday (21) with a $17,000 gross with over 1,000 turned away.

Sarkesian, meantime, is planning a November tour to feature leading exponents of the bossa nova. He had jazz concerts on the road for years, headed by his own "Jazz for Moderns" but has concentrated on the Kingston Trio during the past two years outside of a jazz festival he promoted in Detroit's Cobo Hall in September.

EPIC INVADES WESTERN FUROPE VIA EMI LINK

Epic Records will move into western Europe via a new tieup with EMI (Electric & Musical Industries). The new association follows a licensing and distribution deal set in January for EMI to handle Epic product in the United Kingdom.

The arrangement for western Europe covers Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Switzerdan. Epic's entire dimestic catalog is included, as well as all new material recorded by pop and classical artists.

In each country the local EMI affiliate will be responsible for the release of Epic product.

Britain's Int'l Disk Festival Hikes Budget to $100,000

London, Oct. 30.

Response to the first International Disk Festival—to be held in the British seaside town of Brighton next May— has been such that the initiaal $50,000 budget set to launch the fest is now expected to wind up nearer $100,000, according to the fete's organizer, Barry Langford.

Langford steered the idea of an all-national festival through the official Brighton Council channels to gain approval of not only local council officials but shonkeepers and industrialities resident in the resort.

The phonograph and allied trades fair, which will run parallel with the fest, is expected to be a £8,500,000 event featuring product of distribs around the world.

2 Trade Assns. Pledge Full Support To Fox-Abeles' Drive vs. Disklegging

The battle to halt record piracy is getting hotter. Harry Fox, music publishers' agent and trustee, and his counsel Julian T. Abeles with the latter's associate, former assistant U.S. Attorney John S. Clark, have experienced decisive reactions in their campaign to eliminate disklegging.

One significant response has been the assurance of full cooperation by Jules Malamud, exec director of the National Assn. of Record Merchandisers, and Paul Ackerman, exec secretary of the Assn. of Record Merchandisers & Distributors of America. Both groups have agreed to notify their respective jobber and distributor members concerning any unauthorized recordings brought to their attention.

The associations also agreed to obtain proof from manufacturers supplying such members that their recordings are authorized together with the indemnification. They further promised to undertake an informational program for such members, concerning their liability for sale of infringing records.

Another significant reaction has been the recent settlement of infringement suits brought by Abeles, at the instance of Fox on behalf of his music publisher prinicipals, against Treasure Productions and Fortuna Records, their officers and a number of the largest record retailers.

Jobber, Et Al. Liable

In the case of Shapiro-Bernstein and other music publishers against Sam Goody, the U.S. Court of Appeals held with Abeles that a jobber, distributor or dealer of infringing records was liable to the copyright proprietor, under the compulsory license provision of the Copyright Act, separate and apart from the liability of the manufacturer.

However, a number of actions were recently instituted in behalf of Fox, including the aforementioned suits against Treasure and others, by Abeles to further extend

Vernon Duke's Musical, Book and Paris Ballet

Paris, Oct. 30.

Composer Vernon Duke is here with his songstress-wife, Kay, powwowing with Roland Petit on a new ballet, "Lady Blue," which he wrote for Zizi Jeanmaire.

After completing the score for "Zenda," a new legit musical which Edwin Lester and George Schaefer will produce next summer in New York, the Dukes are on a combination European holiday-business trip. He's also polishing the proofs of "Listen Here" (a study in music appreciation) which is on Ivan Obolensky's spring list.

RCA Even With Col in Orig Cast LP Sweepstakes

RCA Victor nabbed its second original Broadway cast album of the season last week with the wrapup of "The Student Gypsy Or The Prince Of Liederkranz." Victor's other cast package is "Oliver."

Victor is now running neck and neck with Columbia in the original Broadway cast almum sweepstakes. Col's two tuners are "Mr. President" and "Nowhere To Go But Up." Other entries so far this season are "Beyond The Fringe" via Capitol and "Stop The World—I Want To Get Off" on the London label.

Still in the undecided stage, but causing plenty of disk company interest are "Little Me," the Cy Coleman-Carolyn Leigh-Neil Simon musicalization of the Patrick Dennis novel and the new Alan Jay Lerner-Richard Rodgers musical, "I Picked A Daisy."

Arrangements for Rick Besoyan's "Student Gypsy" were set by Edward Padula, show's producer, and Bob Yorke and Joe Linhart for Victor. Besoyan's only other musical entry was the off-Broadway production of "Little Mary Sunshine," which was put into the groove by Capitol Records.

"The Student Gypsy" will begin a three-week engagement at Boston's Shubert Theatre Dec. 25 and will follow that with two weeks at Philadelphia's Forrest Theatre starting Jan. 14. The New York preem is scheduled for Jan. 31.

Music publishing rights to the score are owned by Tommy Valando's BMI operation, Sunbeam Music.

NEWTON BROS. PACTED BY DARIN-BLAUNER CO.

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Bobby Darin and Steve Blauner have signed the Newton Bros., variety act currently at New York's Copacabana lounge, to an exclusive recording pact with their Ferrion Inc. company. Darin will a&r first album in recordings sessions to begin this week.

No release has been set on wax, although Darin earlier a&r'd album of Dick Behrke, "Like West Side Story," for Atco, and Danny Long Trio album for Capitol. He has also produced two Capitol singles of Jimmy Boyd and Tyler Karr doing Darin's own songs.

Previous disks were leased to record companies with which Darin was contracted. However, Newton Bros. disks are being planned for new label to be set up by Ferrion, with distribution through Capitol.

Col's Nickel Plugger

Narissa Nickel has won a permanent niche at Columbia Records' public relations department as coordinator of special programs. She's been at Col for the past couple of months on a temporary basis.

Miss Nickel will be responsible for special publicity programs involving recording artists of Columbia and its subsidiary label, Epic Records.

Victor Eyes New Promotion Media

RCA Victor is going after a bigger chunk of radio-tv time for its disk artists. According to Ben Rosner, diskery's manager of radio-tv relations and field promotion, the areas of artist promotion are being broadened to meet the demands of new sectors of sales potential that have evolved in recent months.

"More markets," Rosner stated, "mean more interest in our product; more radio and tv exposure of our artists. It is vital to our interests that these budding and blossoming new areas be accorded the attention and service they require and deserve."

Promoted in the department's expansion is Stan Pat, who formerly covered the Chicago-Milwaukee-Minneapolis territory. Pat, whose new title is manager of Coast radio & tv relations and artist promotion, will base in L.A. and be responsible for the San Francisco, Seattle, Portland and Phoenix territories. He'll report to Rosner.

Moving into Pat's former district is Augie Blume, who previously represented Victor artists in Baltimore-Washington areas, and Philadelphia and Harrisburg as well, will now be covered by Joseph DelMedico. Latter, who just joined the diskery, was formerly with Schwartz Bros. in Washington, and has been in the promotional field for years.

Also broadening their areas of artist relations and promotion in this cross-country buildup are Gordon Bossin, John Rosica and Perry Stevens, all reporting to Rosner. Bossin will now cover Erie and Buffalo while continuing to cover Detroit and Toledo.

John Rosica, currently servicing New York, Newark, Albany and Syracuse, adds Rochester to his field. Stevens' current area of coverage, encompassing Cleveland, Akron, Columbus and Cincinnati, has now been expanded to include Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Wheeling.

'America's Greatest Hit Songs' a Slick Tome; Errs Only in Its Title

"America's Greatest Hit Songs (A Hit Parade Album of the Most Popular Music of Our Time)", compiled and edited by Lyle Kenyon Engel (Grosset & Dunlap; $6.95), errs only in its title. But otherwise it is a most attractive presentation of 62 memorable top pops by such songsmiths as Stanley Adams, Johnny Black, Irving Caesar, Duke Ellington, Albert Gamse, L. Wolfe Gilbert, Lorenz Hart, Ernesto Lecuona, Richard Rodgers, Al Stillman, Mel Torme, Richard A. Whiting and Victor Young.

The usage of "greatest" and "most" is fraught with danger at almost any time, no matter the category. In trade aspects, Engel perforce had to be limited to deals and terms effected with this or that group of publishers. Thus Marks, Porgie, Jefferson, Sam Fox and a couple of other independents are the copyright owners with which the editor was best able to make a deal for reproduction of the unexpurgated pinaforte copies of the 62 songs utilized.

They're a good choice and include complete words and music of standards such as "Lady of Spain," "Peanut Vendor," "Nola," "Too Young," "Breeze and I," "Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now," "Ballin' the Jack," "Ballerina," "Malaguena" and others, but of course many more Hit Paraders are omitted.

Engel would be the first to concede the limitations when negotiating such a book. It is attractively illustrated, including stills of the recording artists identified with the tunes. Jacket heralds that disks and sheet music of the 62 items sold over 100,000,000 a probably accurate summation.

Many of the arrangements include ukulele, Sonovox and the like; quite a few, also, have supplementary Spanish and French lyrics appended. Book, of course, is a good compendium for gang singing around the piano and makes a nice gift item. Abel.

ever heard of and seems to me to have a sound suggestive of music and would in all probability be the best word to use."

The "Victrola" trademark was registered by the Victor Talking Machine Co. as early as 1906 to be used both for talking machines and for records for talking machines. Artists whose recordings have appeared on the Victrola label ranged from Patti and Tamagno to Caruso, Le Luca, Galli-Curci, Matrinelli, John McCormack, Toscanini Kreisler, Paderewski and Heifetz.

Carlton Gets Palmer

Carlton Records has set a deal with Gaity Records of Ontario for the exclusive U. S. disk services of teen disker Jerry Palmer. His first Carlton release will be "Come Along With Me," already issued in Canada by Gaiety.

an OPEN LETTER... to all my friends in SHOW BIZ.....

Dear Sir:

I have just recorded a new comedy album called "Basse-Ackwards", which has been acclaimed by critics as a "Treat in High Infidelity" guaranteed to entertain grown-ups of all ages, and all three genders . males, females and comedians. During my career as a comedy writer for all the greats of show biz, I've accumulated an extensive library of nonsense including Songs That Never Made the Hit Parade, but no Shriner's Parade is complete without them.

As my dear friend and best client, Joe E. Lewis, once said, "Show me a man who doesn't like to laugh, and I'll show you a man whose wife is a widow." However, if you're the type who likes fun, I'm sure you'll like my album because there's a little in it for the girls, a little in it for the boys, and a lot in it for me. By the way, this is the only album on the market that has two flip sides, and I think I've flipped on both of them. To sum it up, this album is a tongue-in-cheek, expo-se' of show biz. And I might add, I bit my tongue on several occasions while recording it.

Zanily yours, Eli Basse

P.S. You don't have to be a performer to dig it, it's fashioned for everyone, in all walks of life, including the horses I play..... So let's not keep this album a secret. Go to your nearest record shop and say, "Basse-Ackwards" they'll understand. If you like it tell your friends, if you don't like it I hope you don't have any friends.

Victor on Latino Kick in U.S., Bids for $1-Mil. Sales in Genre

With the Spanish-speaking population in the U. S. as its target, RCA Victor will incorporate Latin-American albums into its catalog and will merchandise them under regular company policies.

According to Lee Schapiro, manager of domestic sales and promotion of foreign records, the diskery anticipates an annual sales volume of $1,000,000 within two years on the Latin-American releases. Prior to the company's new program for domestic manufacture of current bestselling albums and future releases from the RCA Victor Mexicana catalog, U. S. distributors have been ordering product from Mexico on a direct import basis since 1958.

While the tapes for the releases will be produced in Mexico, Victor will manufacture the actual records in this country. "We will offer better service, and, at the same time, will assist those distributors who have no previous sales experience with Latin-American product, to stock and merchandise for the growing Spanish market," Schapiro said.

The diskery will use the same pictures, liner notes and serial numbers (MKL for monaural and MKS for stereo) as are used on the albums in Mexico. The prices will be comparable to the manufacturer's nationally advertised suggested list price for RCA Victor pop merchandise.

The initial Latin-American release includes 67 albums, 13 of which are available both in monaural and stereo, chosen from lists supplied by the eight U. S. distributors that previously imported albums from Mexico. "We had distributors submit lists of what they considered the 50 bestselling Latin-American albums in the U. S., and we broke those down into a composite listing of albums which comprises our first release," Schapiro pointed out. "Our projected aim is 150 Latin-American albums in the RCA Victor catalog by the end of 1963."

The new program will enable RCA Victor Mexicana to assure its artists that their albums will receive wide distribution in the U. S. With simultaneous release of the albums in both countries, artists will be able to take advantage of combined merchandising and publicity. Latin-American artists to be featured in the drive will be Amalia Mendoza, Miguel Aceves Mejia, Jose Alfredo Jiminez, Los Tres Ases and Marco Antonio Muniz.

Herb Homes' Cont'l Tour To Push Colpix Product

Herb Homes, director of international relations for Colpix Records, left New York last week on a tour of the label's foreign distributors. He'll visit England, France, Holland, Germany, Sweden and the Benelux nations. Jerry Raker, general manager of the diskery, is expected to join him during the trek.

Homes will discuss sales policies and future product and attempt to cement closer ties with Colpix' European distribs. Also part of the trip are meetings with parent Columbia Pictures' foreign ad-pub managers whom he'll brief on Colpix releases and joint promotional campaigns for the film company's product via the label's LPs and singles.

Victor's Red Seal Inks Pennario to Long Pact

Pianist Leonard Pennario will begin recording under the RCA Victor Red Seal banner early in 1963. The concert-recording artist was inked to a longterm deal last week by Alan Kaye, Red Seal manager of artists & repertoire.

Pennario, who has performed with virtually every major orchestra in the world, was invited to do the Franck Piano Quartette with Heifetz, Piatagorsky and Primrose at the Pilgrimage Theatre in Hollywood in August, 1961. The work is featured in the recently released RCA Victor Soria Series package, "The Heifetz-Piatagorsky Concerts" with Primrose, Pennario as guests.

CAMEO'S NEW FIELD REP

Marvin Brody has joined Cameo-Parkway Records as midwest field representative. He was recently with United Artists Records.

Brody reports to Al Cahn, national sales director of the label. He joins Lee Leseff, who reps the line on the Coast, and Clark Geartner, who works in the East.

Bans Xmas Payola

That old payola bugaboo apparently is still troubling the broadcasters. Tipoff is the "open letter" sent to the music industry last week by WABC, the American Broadcasting Co.'s New York key, concerning Christmas and its personnel.

The letter, signed by WABC program director Sam Holman, reads: "With the rapid approach of the Christmas season, I would appreciate it if you would inform your manufacturers that under no circumstances should Christmas gifts be sent to WABC disk jockies or employees.

"We would appreciate the fact that one of your suppliers or you may like to use the Holiday season to give a token of thanks, but we must draw a hard and firm line that any gifts received will be returned."

the separate liability of jobbers, distributors and dealers, apart from a like liability of the manufacturers, under the general damage provision of the Copyright Act for the infringment of the "exclusive right" of the copyright proprietor "to arrange or adapt it if it be a musical work."

While it has been held that the authorized manufacture of records implies the right to make an arrangement or adaptation for such purpose, it is Abeles' position that if the manufacture was unauthorized then the making and marketing of every such arrangement is an infringement of such exclusive right of the copyright proprietor.

This will be based upon the determination of the U.S. Court of Appeals, obtained by Abeles in the case of Reeve Music et al against Crest Records, in which the court held with Abeles that "infringement of a copyright is a tort, and all persons concerned therein are jointly and severally liable as joint tort feasers." This would add to the mechanical statutory royalty, of the manufacturers, jobbers, distributors and dealers, the additional liability of $1 for each composition on each infringing record.

Wins 43G Settlement

In the actions against Treasure Productions and others, it was the manufacturers' contention that their royalty obligation to the publisher principals of Fox, computed at the rate of 2c for each record manufactured, did not exceed $7,500. However, for the period from Aug. 1, 1957 through Dec. 31, 1961, the defendant-manufacturers and their respective officers agreed to pay $10,000 as the basic royalty of 2c a record, in addition to three times the amount thereof in the sum of $30,000 by the way of damages, and a further sum of $3,000 making a total of $43,000 instead of $7,500.

Said defendants further agreed that they would immediately make books and records of Treasure and Fortuna available for examination by Fox's accountants, for the purpose of determining the records manufactured since Jan. 1, 1962 and, within 30 days after a report thereof has been furnished to them, to make an additional payment to Fox.

However, Abeles has taken the position that in the other pending actions, and in future actions to be brought, on behalf of Fox and his music publisher principals, payment will be demanded of the manufacturers, jobbers, distributors and dealers of the further sum of $1 for each composition in each infringing record. Fox and Abeles are confident that such a substantial recovery, against all concerned in such infringing activities, should unquestionably be a powerful curtailing factor.

Bennett Weak 6G, Frisco

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Tony Bennett, who has been hitting the concert trails of late, drew 1,600 patrons to the War Memorial Auditorium here last Saturday (27) for a week gross of $6,000.

Tickets were scaled to a $4.50 top at the 3,200-seater, setting the potential capacity at $11,000. Festival Productions presented the date.

Inside Stuff—Music

"Alley Cat," the Bent Fabric click on the Atco label, has won an unorthodox spinning fan in Pegeen (and Ed) Fitzgerald, the WOR (N.Y.) Mr. and Mrs. radio team. The Fitzgeralds, of course, never play records but she did it as a departure because she is "cat people," hence the rhythm and the title appealed to her. She liked the beat and as an ardent antivivisectionist, with particular affection for felines—hence the euphemism "cat people" — the title attracted her. The Fitzgeralds' departure into disk spinning caused the WOR switchboard to light up, and the station had to put on a special information girl listing the Atco label, including number, also to indicate it's since been "covered" by Riverside (with a lyric). None of the "society music" bandleaders around town heard of it but have now programmed it. Liberty Music stores reported to The Fitzgeralds that people who have never bought a single record in their lives—the LP clientele—have forced them to stock it. Mrs. Fitzgerald, in turn, is intrigued by the Atco recording artist "with the most unlikely name of 'Bent Fabric.'"

The name is derived from the artist's square handle, Bent Fabricius-Bjerre. He's a veepee-artists & repertoire exec of Metronome Records in Denmark. In addition to his recording chores he's also emcee-pianist of a popular tv show in Denmark and is compared with Perry Como because of his low-key mannerisms.

Joe Linhart, who handles the Broadway show scene for RCA Victor, went on loan to London Records for a one-shot producing deal of the original cast album of "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off." Linhart did the freelance bit for London under a request from producer David Merrick with whom he worked on preparing the original Broadway cast album "Oliver'," which is out under the Victor banner.

Norman A. Adler, exec veepee of Columbia Records, has been appointed to the National Council of the National Planning Assn. The National Council, composed of representative leaders in agriculture, business, labor and the professions, encourages and promotes cooperation among the major economic groups in the country to find workable solutions to pressing domestic and international problems confronting the U.S. Adler is also a member of the Academic Freedom Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union.

Tax Applies to Certain Stereo Phonos, Govt. Sez

Washington, Oct. 30.

Internal Revenue Service has ruled that companies making so-called stereophonic phonographs which require separate dual speakers to give them stereo capacity are subject to the manufacturers' excise tax imposed on phonographs.

The IRS ruling said the devices are known as "stereophonic fidelity phonographs" and are equipped for stereo reproduction but do not contain a built-in speaker. The device operates two separately housed speakers connected to its dual channel amplifier to produce the stereophonic effect.

Whether the device is sold with the separate speakers or without them, as is sometimes the case, the maker must pay the tax, IRS concluded.

Charles Noyer Shifts To Phil Davis Enterprises

Charles Noyer, arranger-composer-conductor-pianist, has joined Phil Davis Musical Enterprises as assistant creative director. He'll be working with Davis, E. C. Redding, Joe Rhodes, Hale Rood and Earl Paul on a variety of projects.

Noyer has long been active on the music scene, having arranged for several bands, scored and conducted for many artists and written music for film, tv and commercial use.

Marjorie Mitchell Repeats With RIAS on Tour

American pianist Marjorie Mitchell will hit 10 German and Swiss cities as soloist with Berlin-based RIAS (broadcast) symphony. Between Nov. 9-23 she plays Munich, Stuttgart, Dusseldorf, Aachen, Frankfurt, Bern, Zurich and Bonn. She was agented by Thea Dispeker.

Miss Mitchell is repeating the two Gershwin works, "Piano Concerto" and "Rhapsody in Blue," with which she made her European debut five years ago. They have become demand items over there.

MEMO TO: JIMMY DEAN
Dear Jimmy:
Now that your 1961-62 record sales have topped the five million mark, there is some contemplation at the wax works as to just how to commemorate the next milestone. Well, buddy, this is the plan. When your six millionth platter is bought and paid for, the powers-that-be at Columbia aren't going to give you another gold biscuit. No sir, Jimmy, they're hosting to you to a week's vacation at Fort Knox.

Americana, N.Y.

Tony Martin with Joe Castro; Eloise Tavalo, Mary Beth Williams, Joel Weist, Ben Lutz; Lester Lanin orch and Gao Quartet; $4 cover, $10 premiere dinner; $6 cover Sat.

The Royal Box, as the new Americana's nitery is billed, drew a Las Vegas-Miami Beach-show biz turnout Monday night (29) with Tony Martin as the room's No. 2 attraction. Harry Belafonte, who preemed to a somewhat stiffer $5 and $7.50 couvert (it's now $4), was SRO, and Martin bids fair to duplicate that business.

Authoritative, urbane, showmanly and in fine voice, Martin is still a romantic troubadour of Tin Pan Alley pops and Shubert Alley showtunes, interlarded with items such as "Fascination," ultramodern lyrics to oldies such as "Whoopee," and a touch of the licorice stick for the getaway "Bye Bye Blackbird." And of course his trademarked "See You In My Dreams" signoff.

He did a solid hour and could have stayed on longer with a surefire repertoire of standards he made even more familiar in person or on platters.

Martin fittingly salutes the Main Drag with "Lullaby of Broadway" and didn't overlook a large bow for Claude C. Philippe, plus a particular salvo to columnist Louis Sobol (among other names he dropped), in between his w.k. "knee-action" barytoning. Fortified by pianist Joe Castro ("a familiar name of late"), whom he also identified as "one of the 10 best jazz pianists extant," Martin is further backed by a competent mixed quartet (listed above) of whom Eloise Tavalo gets special solo and duet opportunities. Personable soprano has a fine voice with future to match. In addition, this Hal Belfer "productioned" routine has augmented fiddles and a solid sweet-trumpeting Don Goldie plus that excellent Lester Lanin orchestra.

The rest is Martin, his mike, strawhat, cane and clarinet, mixing up surefires such as "Best Things In Life," "Shalom" & "Milk and Honey," "What Kind of a Fool Am I?" (perhaps the only ballad with "damn" in it, as part of an ultra romantic paean: an excerpt from Anthony Newley's "Stop The World" etc.), "I Believe In You," "Never Been In Love Before," "Gigi."

There's some effective small-talk about his upcoming Paramount biopic and "who will play me?"; when he dismissed Bobby Rydell, Fabian and Bobby Darin in favor of Eddie Fisher, Martin, observed, "I'd like to play his life."

It's a surefire act which requires but little editing. However, the reference to "my late friend Gary Cooper" became spurious when he linked "Fascination" as having been "specially written for Gary and his picture, 'Love In The Afternoon'"; the hip outfronters know this is a 30-year-old standard which just happened to become part of the strolling Parisian fiddlers' schmaltzy music and that it was not specially written for Cooper or the picture.

This is a minor captious detail that is eclipsed by Martin's slick arrangements and robust voice; he perhaps has never been in better vocal delivery before.

As for the Lanin dansapators, they sure get 'em up on the floor. Frank Milanesi is the maitre d' at the door, better known in Florida, who will have to get to know the Manhattan clientele better; this is perhaps where Philippe and Loew's Hotel publicist Jim Shanahan (or whomever the latter ultimately designates on the local level) will have to cue Frank a bit more. The $10 preem special dinner proved excellent groceries; the service likewise above par. Abel.

Sahara Inn, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 25.

Ella Fitzgerald, Marc London, Frank York Orch; $3.50 cover.

With rare exceptions (and Ella Fitzgerald is one of them) by the time most singers become legends they have largely substituted showmanship and sheer professionalism for rigors of musicianship. But to one who has glommed Miss Fitzgerald intermittently for a couple of decades, it would seem that she is continually setting higher standards for herself and always attaining them.

She's unmatched for both the subtlety and clarity of her phrasing, for her purity of tone, and for a style that defies imitation because it is so much a part of herself. There's a sort of musical integrity about her songery that resists time, trends and styles. And it must have been this artistic gyroscope that the late Chick Webb spotted when she was auditioning for "bread money" at the Harlem Opera House in New York in the mid-'30s.

Perhaps not too surprisingly, Miss Fitzgerald comes off very well in the flashy Club Gigi of the Sahara Inn. Although far from a hangout for jazz enthusiasts, its crowds are sophisticated enough to recognize a good thing when they hear it. She draws a great mitt with such staples as "How High The Moon," "Georgia," "Misty" and "You Made Me Love You." One jarring note, not musical, was Miss Fitzgerald's gown, which was totally unflattering.

Curtain raiser Marc London is well known to Chi cafe goers for his recent work in "Medium Rare," the revue at the Happy Medium cabaret theatre on Rush St. An extremely stagewise young man, he's capable of hitting frequent comedic high spots. But his materially is loosely cast and makes for occasional lulls in his momentum.

His humor derives mostly from the fact that he is Irish, Catholic and from Boston—a rich vein that he generally mines astutely. He also demonstrates a pleasant singing voice in an effective song-and-patter closing routine.

Miss Fitzgerald was backed by her own quintet for opening night, but owner Manny Skar decided to augment the combo with 12 men from Frank York's house orch for the remainder of her engagement.

Jack Carter and Jane Darwyn open Nov. 7 for two weeks. Mor.

Nugget, Sparks

Sparks, Nev., Oct. 25.

Davis & Reese, Winged Victory Chorus (10), Dick Weston, Moro-Landis Singers and Dancers (17), Leighton Noble Orch (10); produced and staged by George Moro; $4 minimum.

For this edition of the "International Follies," Nugget operator John Ascuaga has picked two acts (Davis & Reese, Dick Weston) that have earned good reception in prior local dates and should repeat for this stanza. Winged victory Chorus, new to the locale, could also become a good bet for Nevada bookings.

Headliners Davis & Reese have changed their routines little since the last time around, and probably for good reason: it's a sock presentation with high risible qualities evoking the anticipated tabler reaction. There's no lull in pace, material is smart although some of it is slightly dated at this point, and duo spares no energy. Continued pleasers are the punchy fighter interview, the tap routines atop drums and the "Dear Ann" lampoon of a big-name nitery singer.

The Winged Victory Chorus, 10 uniformed males under the direction of Joe Baris, offers a 20-minute concert composed mostly of hit tunes and a medley from "My Fair Lady." Titles essayed include "Everything's Coming Up Roses," "Hey Look Me Over," "Till There Was You" and "76 Trombones." Visual appeal is enhanced by militaried choreography neatly executed. Three of the group are given solo spots.

Weston, who inherited the opening slot of the edition, proves a good warmer. The talented voice-tosser works through dummies Clarence and Aunt Martha with sharp story-telling and one-liners. Mannequins, with Weston's clever voicing, take on human characteristics, particularly while adlibbing with stage siders. Exit vocal has the ventriloquist singing three parts at once for top audience endorsement.

Production numbers are holdovers from previous show, themed to a salute to George M. Cohan. David Swain handles the vocal chores with authority, and Holger & Dolores are showcased as featured mixed dance team. Two are exquisitely smooth in their display of acro-ballet talents. Little Bertha, the Nugget's performing pachyderm, continues to win heavy mitts for hard-to-believe routines under the direction of trainer Jenda Smaha.

The Foster Edwards band does the usual capable job of backstopping the entire show.

N.Y.'s Dansapation Yen Reflected in Little Club Plus Hotel Spots

Billy Reed's facelifted Little Club is one of the more attractive intimeries in town, a posh boite said to cost $150,000 to re-do. It has been a major job with elimination of pillars etc., making the Little Club look not so little.

Spot of course is dominantly attuned to its boniface. The ex-hoofer gone bistro host has long made his East 55th St. joint a fashionable hangout.

This season's new secret ingredient is the addition of Chauncey Grey, longtime society dansapation fave, and is attuned to the theory that since Le Club has caught on with dancing to disks then live musicians should do better. Result has been that Ted Straeter first opened The Columns of the Savoy Hilton with only straight music; then the St. Regis' Maisonette, long attuned to "Continental" and other names, brought in Peter Duchin; and now the Little Club which is not a hostelry but of cabaret genre.

The jury is still out on all fronts although Reed apparently has the minimal overhead. Straeter, for all his "society" popularity, and it is not inconsequential, has been spotty; the Arturo Arturos Trio has just been added in order to "keep the room going" with constant dance music. Duchin, with an extraordinary teeoff into the St. Regis (socialite, show biz, etc.) is likewise spotty. On another tangent, the Pierre with a show that was frankly designed to be a "budget cheater," i.e. large orch with a "pops" policy, gave the Cotillion Room one of the least distinguished semesters.

In the orbit of the Little Club, El Morocco remains a "human museum" for the gawkers and the high-fashion paraders although it is generally spoken of as "having lost something" with (a) its move to east of 2d Ave. and (b) the passing of John Perona. (Son John now carries.) Reports persist also that Restaurant Associates (of the 4 Seasons, Forum, Tower Suite etc. operations) has been ogling Morocco but this has been denied.

As part of the Gotham nitery scene, the overall impression persists that unless it's a glam show like the Latin Quarter, or the International Theatre Restaurant (current Minsky's burlesque policy there puts it more in the revue class), or names at the Copa or the posh polite aura plus names at the Waldorf, Plaza and Americana, it's tough going. The feeling also comes more and more to the fore that with "expense-account entertainment" being more carefully watched by Uncle Sam, the tariffs are just too high for the values, unless it's a real want-to-see name. In that case a $5 and $7.50 couvert (as was the case for Belafonte's boffo biz at the Americana) seemingly isn't a keeper-awayer. Abel.

Little Club, N.Y.

Chauncey Grey Orch (5); $2 and $3 cover.

hungry i, S.F.

San Francisco, Oct. 26.

Dave Astor, Phoenix, Lightstone, Don Asher Trio; $3.50 admission, no minimum.

Following the smash success of Peter, Paul & Mary almost any act would seem thin here, but it's not fair to the current show to compare them that way. This billing has been doing close to a 100 paid admissions at $3.50 each or the opening show on off-nights such as Mondays, so it can be said they're holding their own.

Dave Astor, a sharp young comic who has talent, may well shape up into a first rank performer in time. He could profit from reworking his on-stage image. It's a little too cocky right now, but he has a fast wit and some excellent one-liners as well as good timing.

It's doubtful if set political references can make it these days since everything happens too fast. The only solution is improvisation and Astor apparently works from prepared material. However, the rest of his act is strong.

The Phoenix III are a trio of folk singers, a splinter group from the Harry Belafonte Marching and Chowder Society. They run through a solid list of folk ditties and perform well. They have good voices, musically intelligent arrangements and they can sing, either as a group or in their individual solos.

What detracts from their act somewhat is the staginess of the presentation and the tempos of the songs they sing. Lyrics are relatively unintelligible, which is a losing bit.

Lightstone, a mime with a wild sense of humor, continues to be more than adequate as the opening act. He has some far out laugh getters which indicate a wonderful imagination. When he lapses from his standard act and pads it, as he did the night caught by becoming oral, it suffers somewhat. Rafe.

Hotel Astor, N.Y.

Lilian Knight, Dick Harding Orch (4), Young-Gannon Duo; $1.75 cover Mon.-Thurs.; $2.25 Friday-Saturday.

Anthony M. Rey, veepee of the Astor, has come up with solid entertainment bet with the preem of Lilian Knight, blond singer and comparative newcomer to the New York scene. A former schoolteacher, she knows her way around a mike since the success of her own show on WICS-TV, Springfield, Ill., prompted her to make singing a career. Her appearance in this attractive Hotel Astor room indicates she's broadening her show biz horizons.

Whether warbling a ballad, blues tune or new pop song, Miss Knight delivers with ease. Comely and garbed in excellent taste, she deftly does "Together Wherever We Go," from Gypsy." "I'm Going To Get Him" showcases her voice on a swingeroo type of number while "What Kind of Fool Am I" is given an excellent buildup for exciting returns. "Got Some Living To Do" provides the finale tune with an organ background for big aud response.

The Dick Harding Orch, here since the Emerald Room was launched more than a year ago, furnishes superb show backing as well as music for some patron terping. Harding favors the baby organ in pre-show warmup, scoring with such tunes as "Can't Help Loving You" and "Anything Goes."

The Young-Gannon Duo is a strong holdover. Combo stresses piano and bass with occasional vocalizing. Pair also provides excellent terp tunes. Wear.

Gerde's Folk City, N. Y.

Jean Redpath, Ron Eliran, Willie Wright; $2.50 minimum.

This comfortable Greenwich Village tavern is the hangout of the folk-music hippies. Such as the Limeliters, Kingstons, et al., would most likely be stopped at the door.

While ersatz corn-cracking is out, the current bill is not without commercial application. All three performers have high vocal skills, and all three project an infectious, sophisticated and individual wit in both their music and their segue patter.

Scotch lassie Jean Redpath, doing her fourth round here, is one of the more humane sopranos in any medium. Her rich and clear vocals on a book covering 250 native folk tunes and ballads of all kinds command a remarkable audience reverence (although this is a class audience naturally bent on listening).

Between numbers, Miss Redpath slips across some educational background bits that are sweet-coated with anecdote and a marvelous Scotch burr. It amounts to more music And the singing voice is true enough for several numbers without the self-accomp on guitar.

Ron Eliran has a wide enough reach with his Israeli ballading to make the Sullivan show from time to time. He gives the currently popular milk-and-honey up tunes zesty interpretation along with a sharp, irreverent comic flair. His ape of the r&r pelvis twisters scores the genre to perfection.

Negro folk singer Willie Wright brings it all home with dramatic and earthy renditions of America's original music. He has a range that allows for everything from Sam Cooke-like sotto bits to overwhelming religioso chants and shouts. The catalog also contains a lot of hip, native humor and pathos. Proper exposure (he's with MGM disks) could take Wright all the way. Bill.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Oct. 25.

Diana Dors, Vagabonds (4), Damita Jo, Morty Storm, Earl Barton Dancers (15), Jack Cathcart Orch (15); presented by Ben Goffstein; stage direction, Milt Bronson, $4 minimum.

For the next two weeks, patrons of the Riviera's main showroom may think they are in a lounge—watching a four-act variety bill. Although it's not supposed to work out that way on a variety bill, in this one the opening act gets the most applause.

Damita Jo, easily among the best chirps in the biz today, opens the show after a holdover Earl Barton production number, and she had first-nighters cheering. She socks across a righteous scat version of "After You've Gone," and includes "Together," "Be Sure It's True," "Rockabye," and "I'm Saving The Last Dance For You" in her too-brief session. She winds her turn with a wild "Nobody Till Somebody Loves You," putting animation from head to toe in the stirring stomp-off.

A very funny standup comedian new to Vegas, Morty Storm, has the difficult assignment of following Damita Jo, but he had the audience with him from his "foist" Brooklynese accented line, "How about that—the management hired an expensive act to warm you up for me!" Storm, because of his delivery, makes even familiar comedy lines sound fresh. He's a good addition to the Strip, and should become a regular.

Blond British bombshell Diana Dors closes the show, preceded by the surefire Vagabonds. Miss Dors never looked more beautiful, and she pleasantly vocalizes on such as "It Ain't Necessarily So," "Angel Eyes" and "I Love Being Here With You." She also tosses in impreshes of Eartha Kitt, Marlene Dietrich, Mae West and Lena Horne to good effect. Billy Jacobs gives fine assistance as her conductor-88er, fronting the Jack Cathcart orch (15).

The Vagabonds (4), longtime faves in Vegas, click with their musicomedy antics, and are joined in vocals by the pretty Bobbi Boyle. Duke.

Eddys', K.C.

Kansas City, Oct. 26.

Dorothy Shay, The Continentals (6); $1.50-$2 cover.

Advent of Dorothy Shay to the Eddy Bros. Restaurant marks a milestone for the spot, for she is the first Park Avenue hillbilly ever to play here. Some unusual interest attaches to her local appearance, and biz looks perky for the fortnight.

Miss Shay is a songstress with much to offer in the way of casual but penetrating chatter as well as her well-known repertory of songs. Her off-the-cuff manner with her comedy interludes is laugh-full and helps make her 45 minutes all too short.

Songs range from a bevy of standards to the mountain tunes which are Miss Shay's forte, and she leads off with a parody on "Swingin' Round the Mountain" to put the customers in the very mood they anticipate. She also warbles a medley from her USO days, and mounts a strong close with "Uncle Fud," 'Feudin', Fussin' & Fightin,' an "Efficiency" as she goes off to a great hand. Quin.

Dino's Lodge, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 23.

Louise Vienna, with Jack Elton, Steve LaFever; no cover, no minimum.

Louise Vienna's third date at Dino's shows the shapely young singer in a new collection of songs and what appears to be an attempt at change of pace. The little girl qualities characteristic of her earlier performances have been subdued, with singer apparently trying for a more sophisticated area. At this point, she is not sufficiently aware of what she is doing, with result that she comes off with less pro sense than she has proven capable of in the past.

Miss Vienna's major problem in songs like "How Did He Look?" and "I Believe in You' is lack of communication. She rushes them, pushes for lively sounds but doesn't give them the sensitivity required for empathetic reaction. Better arrangements and a stronger individual style would help. Her voice is good, but she is not using it to best advantage. Dale.

Inflated Argentina, Brazil Coin A Hazard in Booking Foreign Acts

Buenos Aires, Oct. 30.

Argentine peso devaluation since March last, due to adverse balance of payments, has brought very heavy loss for concert managements, who had signed talent at 83 pesos to the dollar last year, then had to shell out at the rate of 125 to 135 or more.

In addition, they've also been hit by higher taxation on business turnover, apart from encountering diminishing receipts, even for such longtime favorites as pianist Byron Janis.

The exchange position is also rocky in Brazil, where from about 350 cruzeiros to the dollar, the currency has gone to around 700. Few Brazilian cities, outside Rio and Sao Paolo can afford to book concert names at this rate, so elimination of dates increased the all-round overhead cost of Latin-American tours.

Concert Managers are now lining up plans for 1963, hampered by inability to see which way the cat may jump, politically or economically, throughout Latin America. For this reason they are turning Europewards in search of talent, or wherever fees are not demanded in dollars.

AGVA DELAYS CLOSING ITS OLD AGE HOME

Plans to close the Old Age Home of the American Guild of Variety Artists at So. Fallsburgh, N.Y., are being held in abeyance by the union's national board. The body is investigating a proposal to sell 50 of the 62 acres on the property as a means of financing the institution's costs.

The board was told that a $150,000 offer for the acreage, said to have been made last year, is nonexistent. Should the property sale be insufficient to provide sound financing, it's likely that the home will be closed and its inmates given a living allowance.

Coke Bar, R'n'R Format Highlight Disk Jock's New Ottawa Nitery for Teeners

Ottawa, Oct. 30.

Ottawa's newest nitery, the Teen Club, is strictly for teeners, although parents are welcome if they can tolerate the r 'n' r sounds that rock the spot from 8 p.m. to midnight on weekends.

An old dance spot, Pineland, on the city's outskirts, was transformed into the posh, smoothly-operated Teen Club by John Pozer, CJOH-TV announcer and host of the station's dance show, Club 13. With him in the venture is CJOH-TV designer Eed Ide, who produced a neat decor featuring abstracts on the walls.

Teen Club preemed (Friday (26) with Ronnie Hawkins and The Hawks (7) billtopped. Other names to follow are Johnny Tillotson, Duane Eddy, Bobby Rydell, Bo Diddley and John Johnny Crawford. With names, a $2.50 admission is charged, otherwise $1. House band, The Four Profiles, has teener Gayle Thomson canarying.

Spot runs its own coke bar, features souped-up drink titles such as "Singalong Sling" (Coke plus cherry juice, slice of lemon, cubes) but nothing alcoholic is served. Rules are relaxed, strictest being regulation demanding ties and jackets on male customers.

'CAPADES' THIN 180G, CLEVE.

Cleveland, Oct. 30.

"Ice Capades" closed a 19-performance run Sunday (28) in Cleveland's Arena to a light $180,000 at a $4.40 top.

Snowstorms and heavy rains clobbered the show at the 9,200-capacity arena which was scaled for a potential take of around $360,000.

Scot Pipers' Tall $21,600 In Winnipeg, Grand Forks

Winnipeg, Oct. 30.

Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders grossed $21,600 in Saturday and Sunday performances in Winnipeg and Grand Forks, N.D., 120 miles south of here.

Scotsmen pulled 7,260 patrons and $17,800 to the 10,000-seat Winnipeg Arena Saturday (13).

Opposing the Highlanders' Saturday Winnipeg date at the downtown Auditorium, the Obernkirchen Children's Choir drew SRO 4,160 and grossed a whopping $9,000 for Celebrity Concerts (Canada) Ltd. which booked all three events.

Kim Sisters Breached His Pact, Mgr. Claims In 15G Back Commish Suit

Chicago, Oct. 30.

Robert McMackin, manager of the Kim Sisters since the act left Korea in 1957, is suing the trio for the four-year balance of a five-year contract and for approximately $15,000 in back commissions. His attorney, Sanford (Bud) Wolff, also moved to have the sister act's salary attached during their Palmer House engagement which ended yesterday (Mon.).

Suit states that a new five-year contract, with options, was entered into last year but the girls recently notified McMackin they no longer considered him their manager. McMackin alleges that they were romanced away by someone not in show business.

(It's known that the Kim Sisters have become personally reliant on Miss Mona Matoba, co-owner and manager of Naka-No-Ya Restaurant here, for selection of their wardrobe and for certain business matters.)

According to McMackin's complaint, the Kim Sisters were earning $200 a week in Korea before he took them under management and now are getting as high as $8,000 per week. Plaintiff's original agreement with the sisters was pacted in Seoul in 1957 and was signed by the girls and their mother. Their attorney is George Bieber.

Hoteliers Find Stiffer Competition Hiking Costs in Luring Conventions

The continued importance of conventions as major impetus to show biz operations and the increasing competition for this kind of business are causing problems which hoteliers and showmen will find difficult to handle in the future. Already, it's pointed out, there are a lot of danger signs.

Some hotelmen, for example, are finding that road trips for the sales force in soliciting confabs are becoming more expensive and the returns are becoming smaller. Competition for group business not only has become national, but international with the growth of jet travel. Some organizations or business firms are finding that it pays to hold off commitments because offers are becoming more attractive.

There are, however, some compensating factors for some communities. New York, which will have two major new hotels, the Americana and the soon to be completed New York Hilton, has started writing a lot of 1964 business during World Fair time. The Americana, with the advantage of being a new and highly publicized glamor inn, is obtaining business that might not have gone to New York this year.

Las Vegas also has come in for a share of business that might not have come its way under normal circumstances. Its handling of last week's American Legion convention indicated that it will get some additional off-season trade from less wealthy organizations.

But most American cities are starting to worry increasingly about future convention business. Many have built elaborate auditoriums and halls which have become a drain on the taxpayer. Although not in the mainstream of convention business, these spots are making it difficult for the more active powwow centres. Terms are so low and attractive that they frequently present a problem to their competition.

Eddie Sereno's Deal For Hong Kong Niteries Gives Him a Far East 'Circuit'

Tokyo, Oct. 30.

Having returned to his base here after an area swing, promoter Eddie Sereno says he signed to be exclusive booker for the 700-seat nitery upstairs from Hong Kong's new City Hall, while at the same time geting preferred dates in the downstairs auditorium, allowing him to concurrently book both rooms.

In effect, this gives Sereno the nucleus of a Far East circuit. He's already the booker for this city's Golden Akasaka, which opened several months ago.

As an example of the potential of this operation, Sereno will have the Tito Puente band playing both levels of the H.K. City Hall for two weeks from Oct. 31. The orch will then move to four weeks of theatre and club dates in Manila and will open at the Golden Akasaka here in mid-December for an indefinite run.

The 13-member "Las Vegas on Ice" unit, which Sereno contracted from Buddy Hicks, just finished six weeks at the Golden Akasaka. It follows with two weeks each at the Monte Carlo and Hanabasha, both in this city, then goes into a theatre on Okinawa for 10 days before moving to the Hong Kong location for four weeks.

The promoter also has a six-member Spanish dance act called Ballet Triumph for two months of Japan dates, including two weeks at the Golden Akasaka, Yank singer Nat Wright into the G.A. for two weeks, Philippine singer Bobby Gonzalez opening there Nov. 1 and 16-year-old Filipino singer Baby Pecson also headed this year.

15 Years to 'Discover' Bob Charles

Chicago, Oct. 18.

Of a total of 30 acts who auditioned for the nitery owners last night (Mon.) at the Associated Night Clubs of America conclave here, one hit a jackpot that led to an immediate skein of nine prime bookings. The act was Bob Charles, a 15-year vet of the cabaret boards who, when he appeared before the nitery ops, was admittedly at the nadir of his career. He confessed that he was down to one good suit to work in—and was wearing it.

An eastern comic, Charles had come to Chi only a few days ago because of what he considered a surfeit of comedians in New York.

He said he couldn't even get an audience with Chicago agents until he ran into Harry Breyn, who took him on as a client and book him into the ANCA auditions that very morning. After his sock 20-minute turn before the jaundiced trade audience, he was propositioned not only by the nitery ops but a half dozen agents, most of whom had previously ignored him in their offices.

Among the cafe owners setting dates with Charles were Enrico Banducci hungry I, Frisco), Elizabeth Neustaedter (Exodus, Denver), Jay Landesman (Crystal Palace, St. Louis), Gene Norman (Crescendo, L. A.), Bill Newkirk (Tidelands, Houston), Bill Ball (Embers, Indianapolis), John Volpe (Holiday House, Milwaukee), Harold Van Orman (Northcrest, Fort Wayne), and Oscar Marienthal (Mister Kelly's, Chi.). Auditions ran four hours at the Marienthal—owned Happy Medium, cabaret-Theatre on Rush St.

COLISEUM'S BIG TALENT TEST

Little, Late & Grudged

Show biz's reaction to the grudging and belated signing by President Kennedy of $20,000 compensations to each of the three femme "soldiers in greasepaint" isn't exactly a cheering section. The trade knows best how much singer Jane Froman, accordionist Gypsy Markoff and dancer Jean Rosen suffered in that Tagus River plane crash off Lisbon, Portugal, on Feb. 23, 1943 when they were but three of hundreds of civilian entertainers who risked life, limb and at the very least considerable discomfort and professional and economic sacrifice to entertain our World War II troops on all global fronts.

The 20G to each is in "full and final settlement" of their claims against the Government. The sums were recommended by the U. S. Court of Claims which studied the case at the direction of Congress, which adopted the court's decision.

While Jean Rosen's professional pursuits have been eclipsed, most in show biz know of Miss Markoff's brave efforts to continue working with crippled fingers in her accordion specialty. As for Jane Froman, her mobility has been effected for life, and at the last recallable count she had undergone 24 operations on her legs.

April-in-Paris (in October) Brings East Side West to New Americana

By ABEL GREEN

The 11th annual April-in-Paris Ball, the second year in a row that it was held in October, was the new Americana Hotel's first real socialite-show biz splash. This is natural. Claude C. Philippe, secretary of the French-American Committee sponsoring the ball ("sec" is slang for just about this being his one-man show); he's also g.m. and exec veepee of the Americana. And last Friday (26) saw a peak turnout in the Imperial Ballroom which brought Park Ave. "west" to the new Loew's (Tisch freres) posh hostelry on 7th Ave. and 52d St. Many of that set normally only migrate "west" to "21" or to the theatre.

They came to see and be seen, and there was plenty on both scores, although when it came to seeing the show and the fashion parade—flown over by Guy LaRoche from Paris, not to mention the opening Roberto Iglesias Spanish Ballet and the headlining Eddie Fisher—the audience was at a disadvantage. A runway over the dancefloor and an elevated rostrum on the stage—it doesn't seem possible that that stage, with all its ultra new lighting and other equipment, has no escalating stage — must be the next order of things to come when comes a similar fete, be it the 1963 AIP Ball or some other ultra shindig. It's so obvious a shortcoming that its being overlooked is puzzling. (It was later explained that Paris couturier Roche did not want a runway, but he should have been overruled.)

French Hospital in New York, the American French Foundation Charities and the National Museum of Racing at Saratoga were the beneficiaries. Latter made for a new gimmick—the horsey set and an equestrian decor motif. Mrs. Stephen (Laddie) Sanford was the new general chairman, with Mrs. Winston F. C. Guest, previous chairman, now in the honorary slot. Mrs. Sanford paid particular tribute to Elsa Maxwell for her longtime dedication to the April in Paris galas. Latter was there but left early, obviously still very much below her former physical parity.

The $150-a-head tickets for the dinner-dance, with beaucoup libations pre-dinner, and with $100 raffle tickets and a "casino" (for prizes, not cash) upped this year's gross to a probable new high. Past year hit $200,000 for benefit of the combined charities.

A jackpot this year also was in the form of the take-home gift-boxes, estimated to have a conservative retail value of $100 for the femmes' corbeilles and $50 for the men's. It is truly the best "loot" to date.

Per usual Philippe had an international who's who on the sundry committees coordinating into a good sum total save for the usual status-symbol headaches that go with any and all such undertakings, namely, "ringside table," and the like.

But all present attested (1) to

Paris Heils Krautery

Paris, Oct. 30.

For the first time in many years a German restaurant has opened in the heart of Paris, a few doors from the Opera House. Serves all-German products, beer, sausages, kraut, etc. Menu's printed in German and waiters talk the lingo, nothing but.

An immediate click, turning biz away daily and you can look for a dozen or so of Paree's "Alsatian" eateries to repaint their shingles any day now.

Dems Lose Acts' Votes at Hot Chi Fundraising Fete

Chicago, Oct. 30.

Although variety acts appearing at the $100-a-plate Democratic fundraising dinner here a few weeks ago at which President Kennedy spoke were "requested" not to discuss what took place behind the scenes, it has been learned that the behavior of the Secret Service men and the local hosts had not endeared the acts to the Dems.

First, the performers were unceremoniously herded into dressingrooms when the Chief Executive was ushered through the backstage area to make his way to the rostrum. (One comic philosophized: "Why should they trust us? Wasn't John Wilkes Booth a performer?")

Then, apparently because the oratory ran overtime, two of the acts were cut from the show. (One had canceled a date in St. Louis and flown in especially for the dinner. Both acts were paid.) Finally, panto-comic Yonely engaged in an on-mike shouting match with a top aide of Mayor Richard J. Daley.

The functionary had told Yonely to do 15 minutes, then attempted to yank him off after five. When the comic asked for one minute to bow off, the aide screamed: "Do you know who I am? I'll have your card!" Yonely's reply, which echoed throughout the room, is unprintable.

'PRESIDENTIAL ROWS' (FRONT SEATS) AT $7.50

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

Group, calling itself Prestige Attractions, is bringing in to the 9,000-seat municipal Auditorium on Nov. 9 Johnny Mathis and a supporting show. Front seats have been designated "Presidential Rows" and scaled at $7.50, highest price ever charged here for this sort of show.

Other reserved seats will range from $2 to $4.50, the usual prices.

A CIRCUS CLICK WILL BE BOON

If the Coliseum Christmas Circus Corp.'s venture into the N. Y. Coliseum with a three-ring circus this year-end clicks, it will open up a new show biz outlet, especially for onenighter record names, concerts, and the like. A $120,000 expenditure for portable grandstand seats (4,000 capacity) on the second floor tees off with the circus venture under Jack Tavlin's direction and with Roosevelt Raceway's George Morton Levy's bankrolling. Show itself will be the combined Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus plus supplemental acts, several from abroad making their U. S. debuts.

The three-floor circus will split up the midway, freaks and rides on the street floor; three-ring circus on second floor; and toyland, menagerie and more rides on the third floor. Top will be $4 and marks the first time a Christmas circus has ever played in New York. A Catholic Youth Organizations and highschool bands' competition ($6,000 in prizes) will be another feature. Shows will be twice daily, three on weekends.

Only other theatrical attraction ever essayed at the Coliseum was the abortive watershow.

Concert 1-Niters Lure Kate Smith

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Kate Smith, whose show biz appearances have been confined to radio-tv for years, is going to hit the road. Chirp will do one-nighters along the concert circuit —a departure for her, as she never has gigged in the past.

However, Miss Smith is turning down Las Vegas offers, and, indeed, probably will not play any niteries. She has not appeared in any in her career.

Miss Smith and her longtime associate, Ted Collins, have signed for personal representation with management firm of Bullets Durgom and Ray Katz. Latter acknowledges that before any and all bookings are made, they first must be cleared with Collins.

Miss Smith also has signed with GAC as booking agency—first per center she has had in many years. Thursh's first gig will likely be at N.Y.'s Carnegie Hall this winter. Her last video excursion was last Sunday (21) on CBS-TV Ed Sullivan Show, on which she frequently guests.

Carmen Cavallaro Bows Japanese Trek in Tokyo

Tokyo, Oct. 30.

Swan Promotions has Carmen Cavallaro coming late this month for three weeks. He'll open a concert tour at Sankei Hall and later play the Hanabasha nitery, both in this city.

Swan also expects to bring The Platters back in February and to present the George Shearing Quintet in March.

Eddie Fisher Bowing Suburban Chi Nitery to Record $12 Per-Head Tab

Chicago, Oct. 30.

It will cost $12 to sit down at a table at the Villa Venice in north suburban Northbrook when it reactivates Nov. 9 with Eddie Fisher as the vanguard of the entire Frank Sinatra set. Cover charge at the mansion-cum-canals will be $5 plus a $7 minimum, for the biggest per-head charge in recent history (excluding New Years' parties).

Other details are coming to light despite an earlier hush-hush atmosphere. Although a localite, Leo Olsen, has been the owner of the club for four years, it's apparent that Sinatra is running the renascence through Henry Genet, an aide. Genet is known to have set all of the dates for the acts, and he planed in to hire a press-agent (Larry Leverett).

There has been much primping of the sprawling Villa Venice in the past few weeks, and it's understood that the main room is being expanded to seat 950 persons and the stage is being enlarged. In addition, the parking lot will now accommodate 1,000 cars, and four deluxe apartments are being outfitted for the performers.

Fisher is slated to open Nov. 9 for 10 days, followed by Sammy Davis Jr. Nov. 20 for five days. From Nov. 26 to Dec. 2, Sinatra, Davis and Dean Martin will take over, and it's reported that reservations for the "summit troika" are pretty well filled in. Dinah Shore comes in Dec. 3 for six days, and what happens after that is vague.

Most tradesters assume that, because of its outlying location, the club will return to its dine-dance-and-wedding-party format for the winter and go back to name talent in the spring. If so, this will mean a further showdown for top marquee lures between Manny Skar's Sahara Inn and the Villa Venice.

The Sahara previously announced tentative bookings of Fisher and Miss Shore for this fall, but the VV dates have apparently taken precedence. The increased competition for stellar names will also give a headache to the downtown Empire Room of the Palmer House, which already has seen some of its best attractions slip away to the Sahara Inn.

Whitney's Japanese Tour

Toronto, Oct. 30.

Six-week tour of top Japanese niteries has been set by Moxie Whitney, bandleader of the Royal York Hotel orch (12), who will fly his sidemen there early next June. Heading his unit will be songstress Haunani Kahalewia and the Royal Hawaiian Revue.

Whitney, who has batoned his orch at the Royal York for 15 years, has been retained by the hotel for another five years.

AGVA L.A. Unit Hits Suspension As 'Tyrannical'

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

With only two of its seven members (plus seven alternates) present at regularly weekly meeting Wednesday (24) of the exec committee of L. A. branch of American Guild of Variety Artists, the two — Bruce Yarnell and Doug Spears — declared themselves a committee-of-the-whole (membership) and sharply rebuked and rejected an order from national AGVA headquarters in N. Y. "suspending" the local exec committee.

Suspension ruling was made at national board sesh of AGVA Oct. 19, and officially delivered here last Wednesday. Yarnell and Spears nevertheless conducted a meeting, largely devoted to drafting the following resolution to be shot back to national AGVA.

"The L. A. branch executive committee deplores the act of the national board and thinks it not only illegal, but a mark of tyranny. The L. A. executive board does not intend to be intimidated by acts of the national board or by national executive secretary Bobby Faye. We intend to stand up and fight for our rights, not only as good union members, but as good Americans."

The national board's action obviously stems from recent resolution of L. A. exec committee asking "autonomy" for local branch members, seeking election of local officers (there are none presently) and for own constitution of L. A. branch. Local exec committee cites a recent U. S. Labor Dept. ruling that branches are to be construed as true labor union locals and can make decisions and take actions independent of the national office.

When the "autonomy" resolution was passed Faye was present at the meeting, and stormed out.

44 IN DRAG NAILED AT NVA'S 'EXOTIC BALL'

New York police pinched 44 males in femme attire Friday (26) at National Variety Artists shindig billed as Exotic Ball & Carnival. NVA was the yesteryear counterpart of AGVA.

All in custody were charged with disorderly conduct, and one was additionally slapped with an indecent exposure rap. Ball was at Manhattan Center, midtown aud. Coincidental affair in same building was a policemen's dansant.

Scots' Gambling Fever

Glasgow, Oct. 30.

Scotland's newest entertainment outlet, a gambling casino, teed off here with thousands clamoring to become members. The gambling fever has hit the Scots.

Casino Club, headed by former bandleader Bert Ambrose, is in the Carntyne Greyhound Stadium in city's East End. It has plush carpeting, soft music and traditional croupiers. Stakes can be as low as 30c.

San Juan Hotel Snares Lucrative Fedders Meet; 3,000 Visitors in 10 Wks.

One of the more important industrial conventions has started at El San Juan Hotel, San Juan, P.R. The Fedders airconditioning meet is set for a 10-week run there, with 3,000 dealers from the U. S. and Canada due to visit the inn for a week's stay at the expense of the manufacturer. This is one of the most sought-after confabs on the hotel industry calendar.

In the San Juan's show for the entire run are The Great Scalzo, Herbie Sells, Rita DePetris, Tommy Wonder & Don Dellair and Soler & Lorca. James Grady has booked this event for the past five years.

The Fedders firm will also hold a winter convention starting March 1 at the new Hilton Hotel, Trinidad. This will last only five weeks. Fedders customarily holds its fall confabs in Caribbean countries. It has taken its winter conventions to sundry lands which included various places in Europe. However, it has found the Caribe countries to be more convenient.

Hotels in all Caribe countries have been bidding for this dealer powwow. One of the inducements to the inns is 10 solid weeks of bookings at a time when business is normally quiet.

However, since Fedders needs minimal accommodations for 300 persons per week, not all hotels have been eligible. The dealers get the trip with all expenses paid as a premium for selling a set quota of Fedder airconditioners.

"ABSOLUTE DELIGHT"

VARIETY Oct 24, 1962

LONNIE DONEGAN (4)
Songs, Comedy
30 Mins.
Village Gate, N.Y.

Britisher Lonnie Donegan is recently familiar to U.S. ears via a couple of international disclicks ("Rock Island Line" and "Don't Stick the Chewing Gum on the Bedpost Overnight"). He deserves to be widely seen as well as heard here, as attested by his current U.S. nitery bow at Art D'Lugoff's Village Gate.

Noted as a skiffle-band jazzman and folksinger in England, Donegan besides the impressive pipes for a slight fellow has a stacatto comedy patter that's an absolute delight out of the fine, old music hall tradition. Small matter that the jokes often also are traditional, or telegraphed, or disguised for American auds by Anglo slant or cockney accenting. A great sense of timing and gusto projection carry it all off. The rubbery-faced leer and roll of the Donegan well-oiled eyeballs back any punchline that's less than fracturing.

Add to the above benefits an incredible ear which allows this versatile vaude performer to mimic U.S. hill and country talk with an accent that could fool a Mississippi deputy. And the talent carries over to his vocal phrasing on American folk songs.

Besides the self-accomp on guitar and banjo, Donegan is backed by countryman Denny Wright, who plays straight man in the chatter segs and fine slambang guitar in backing. Filling out the group excellently are two Americans, Bill Smith on drums, and Hal Gaylor, bass.

Interesting to note that Donegan's hip-cornball antics succeeds easily in really warming up the cool audience. Act could go anywhere.

Bill.

Orient Tour an Acid Test For Sleight-of-Hand Act; 'Face' a Prime Problem

Tokyo, Oct. 30.

Bob Arno, a young Swedish sleight-of-hand artist, says that playing the Orient has been the acid test of his tricky talents. "If you can play the Orient, you can play any place," declared Arno, who is in Japan for three months as part of a global tour.

His act largely involves removing watches, ties, shorts, bracelets, belts and other items from non-suspecting and suspecting members of his audiences.

The reason for having to prove himself in the Orient, Arno explained, is based on the Asian's terror of losing face. "Once I was past Beirut, I ran into difficulties," he said. "It became more of a problem to get people on stage. I had to be more persuasive."

And once the people had been cajoled into stepping forward, they were on the defensive, Arno related. "They would not even agree that I had taken their watches," he said. "But when the lights went up, they asked immediately for the return of their timepieces.

Arno found the Chinese to be his toughest audiences. "Without a doubt, they are the most difficult to distract," he offered. "They are quite clever, but so clannish and protective. They give everything a hard look. You cannot talk them into anything they don't want to be talked into."

Having worked Tokyo's Copa, Arno rates Japanese audiences tops in the Orient. "When they are not afraid of losing face, their reaction can be very good," he said.

On his tour, Arno found that each key city in the Orient has a leading hotel with an entertainment room where an act can earn between $200 and $250 plus living quarters. In Singapore he played the Goodwood Park Hotel, in Bangkok the Erawan, in Kuala Lumpur the Merlin, in Calcutta the Grand Hotel and in Hong Kong the Ambassador, from which he was able to fatten his income by doubling at Maxim's and the Golden Phoenix niteries.

In Taipei he worked only U.S. military clubs, where the take is still higher, if you take on a heavy schedule. In Japan, where hotels are not permitted to have shows on a regular basis, Arno is working primarily in clubs and on tv. From here he goes to Okinawa for military club dates and then to Hawaii.

There are also fringe benefits. One of Arno's offstage experiences in Hong Kong proved educational. When he was being assisted into a sampan operated by a woman and her daughter of eight or nine, Arno discovered that the girl was trying to remove his ring as she gripped his hand.

"I had professional admiration," he recalled. "This gave me the method—not to pull on the ring, but to apply pressure from behind so that it will slide off. I had been wondering for a long time how to remove rings."

N.Y. Hotel's New 5-Yr. Pacts With Its Staffs

Coincident with a claim last week that New York restaurant workers with families to support cannot subsist at current wage levels, hotel employees in Gotham achieved a new five-year contract with pay benefits ranging from $2-$3.50 per week. Bargaining maneuvers in recent months produced a series of "sitdowns" by cooks, chambermaids, bellhops, etc., in lobbies of several plush midtown hostels by way of dramatizing their case.

Old pact with some 200 hotels expired last May 31. New one, which is retroactive to June 1, provides a 35-hour week for employees who previously worked a 40-hour week, and various fringe benefits. Under previous contract, weekly wages ranged from $52.25 for maids to $81.25 for maintenance workers.

Contention that restaurant wages are below subsistence levels was aired by a union official at a Manhattan hearing of the House Labor & Education committee headed by Harlem Congressman Adam Clayton Powell. The hearings could result in a proposal to extend present Federal minimum wage guarantees.

other snag, particularly in the case of ballet or other large groups. European attractions often have the advantage that their Governments are prepared to subsidize travel costs on cultural interchange grounds.

On a different level, the foregoing applies also to more popular attractions. TV channels abandoned grandiose plans for importing such members as Eddie Fisher, which they can no longer afford to pay.

The year's only moneymaker appears to have been "Coccinelle" France's ex-Alpine soldier, who arrived here in July—after some passport trouble—for burlesque and nitery appearances (Maipo Theatre and "Ta-Ba-Ris") champagne at the latter cost 1,500 pesos per bottle. "Miss" Coccinelle then accepted a 1,300,000 peso fee for three days shooting in "Los Viviosos" (a film with a dope smuggling background), directed by Enrique Carreras for Vicente Marco. The picture is to be released in Mar del Plata on Oct. 23, and B. Aires on the 25th. Quick cash-in on the curiosity of those who missed her on stage. Coccinelle, Jacqueline Dufresnoy, is reported to have netted around $53,846 on this Argentine trek, on which she may have had to pay 30% income tax at most.

Larry Adler-Paul Draper Reunite for GV Cafe Date

Larry Adler and Paul Draper, the former supperclub-concert tandem separately active the past decade, are being reunited for a New York nitery stand. Pair has been booked for Art D'Lugoff's downtown spot, Village Gate, Nov. 8 through New Year's Eve. Singer Nina Simone will complete the bill.

Engagement will fetch a $2.80 weekday admission per head (vice the usual $2.50) and $3 on weekends. There's no cover-minimum once inside the room.

Adler, who's been a London resident for several years, is now on the Coast in connection with a motion picture assignment. He was long absent from American niteries (as result of a politico allegation and lawsuit) until about three years ago, since then having played clubs in N.Y., Chicago, Boston and other keys. Draper has alternated between dance instruction and the concert circuit, latter under the Columbia Concerts banner.

Apollo, N. Y.

Hank Ballard & the Midnighters (3), Bobby Lewis, Little Eva, Screaming Jay Hawkins & Pat Newborn, Lou Elliot, the Duprees (5), Gigi, Cooper & Kinfolks (5), the Parkettes (6); "The Cossacks" (6)

Hank Ballard, who is credited in some circles with having originated the Twist a year or so before it became an adult vogue, is headlining a large card at the Apollo.

Although Ballard overplays the "cool" bit somewhat and mumbles most of the lyrics of the tunes he does, he has a strong rhythmic approach that gets the audience with him. He also has the advantage of the Midnighters, a trio of sharp male terpers who provide some harmony phrasing behind his soloing. They're a slickly styled trio that helps keep Ballard's act strong.

Another asset for the singer-terper is an instrumental unit billed as Cooper & Kinfolks. They keep the beat driving and, with some rubberlegged hoofing by one of the group, inject a comedy note that scores strongly. Ballard mixes his tunes between wailing blues and growing uptempo stuff to register with the crowd.

Bobby Lewis, who emcees, also does a singing turn in which he tosses some terping. His hosting, although somewhat in the novice category, keeps the show moving. He shows a flair for showmanship in a "My Baby Just Cares For Me" routine with strawhat and kid gloves, accompanied by a bikini-clad femme billed as Mabel Lee. He also does a straight rock number in solid style.

Littlse Eva is a pert lass who sells her songs with plenty of restrained personality and sure vocal control. Essaying her clicko "Loco Motion" and another medium rocker, "Keep Your Hands Off My Baby," she scores effectively. Screaming Jay Hawkins & Pat Newborn hit a slick groove with Peppermint Lounge, N. Y.

"Plenty of activity at the Peppermint Lounge, New York, the nitery which helped put the Twist into adult orbit. Tom Roba was hired as show packager and he has instituted several changes in the club's operation that now make it more of a nitery than a hangout operation. Roba's choreography and stage direction is quickly paced and effective. He has whipped this fresh talent into a lively and imaginative Twist show called 'Twisting 'Round the World.' The Peppermint Lounge appears to be picking up momentum again with this slick show." Kali.

Rusty Draper Kicks Off 5-Wk. Orient Tour Nov. 1

Tokyo, Oct. 30.

Rusty Draper is slated to launch a Far East tour from Nov. 1 for at least five weeks. Booked by Russ Gary, who settled here after helming an area tour by the Ink Spots early this year, Draper will open with three days in Taipei at U.S. military clubs and follow with a week of similar dates on Okinawa. In Japan, he'll work the New Latin Quarter, Copacabana and NTV in addition to military clubs.

Gary, who batoned a band in the southwest U.S. for 13 years recently formed a 19-piece all-Nipponese orch dubbed Band of Japan, which will play three months of one-nighters at American service clubs.

Coast Agencies In Merger Deal

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Deal is being finalized for the merger of Ziegler, Hellman & Ross with Artists Agency Corp., the office headed by George Rosenberg and Bob Coryell. Also involved is Broadcast Management Inc., since it merged with AAC some time ago. BMI topper Marvin Josephson is here from N. Y. for the finalizing of the deal.

Jerry Hellman, of ZH&R, will leave the agency biz to produce theatrical films and legiters. For some time he has been partnered with George Roy Hill in Hellman-Hill Productions, which have a deal with UA, and when he exits ZH&R will go into production full-time.

Thus Evarts Ziegler and Hal Ross, who with Hellman formed ZH&R, will join with Rosenberg, Coryell and Josephson. Ziegler and Ross will move to the AAC hq on Sunset Boulevard once the final papers are signed. Mike Levee, who joined Rosenberg and Coryell when MCA's talent agency was dissolved, is the other partner in the venture.

Client list of the combined agency includes Bing Crosby, James Garner, Fred Astaire, Franklin Schaffner, James Poe, Panama-Frank, "Ben Casey" series, Nunnally Johnson. The merged agency will also be Coast reps of Curtis-Brown and Harold Ober agencies.

Vallee's Frank Autobiog Doesn't Spare Burrows, Loesser, Feuer & Martin

By ROBERT DOWNING

"My Time Is Your Time" by Rudy Vallee and Gil McKean (Obolensky; $4.95), is the purported autobiography of the former radio-crooner-turned-actor. (Vallee currently costars on Broadway with Robert Morse in "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying". McKean is a jazz record columnist, novelist, and recording company exec.

Since style of Vallee's book is turgid, prolix, almost unrelieved in its stiffness; and inasmuch as it is preoccupied with "first person singular," it is difficult to assess McKean's contribution. Research seems to have been limited to opening almost every chapter with a "back-to-yesterday" recap that might have been lifted almost bodily from Mark Sullivan's wonderful "Our Times" series; and to dipping into Vallee's own recollections of the many songs he made popular during his headline career as singer and leader of the celebrated Connecticut Yankees.

Tome follows Hubert Prior Vallee (his professional name came from his youthful idol, star saxophonist Rudy Wiedoeft) from his native Maine to the Main Stem, with bitter reminiscences of his unhappy marriage to Fay Webb, topped off with a text-lashing for Feuer & Martin, Abe Burrows and Frank Loesser, the brass behind Vallee's present hit. Book is crammed with gratuitous information; it seeks to instruct the "gentle reader"; and what humor it contains is heavy-handed and bromidic.

In reflecting the '20s and early '30s, golden days of broadcasting, night clubs and films, there is value to these memoirs; for Vallee played a top role in show biz of the era. The man who was famous as the bandleader who conducted for radio wearing dark glasses (no one could tell where next his irate glance might fall), defends his familiar outbursts of temper and petulance by quoting a Reader's Digest article of 1954: "It may be more dangerous to be underemotional than to be overemotional." Not in latter category, Valle admits, "I only hold a grudge a decade or so," and in these pages he elects to prove his point.

With present degree of success in the sunset years, it may seem to some a pity that The Vagabond Lover chooses to be so ungallant in his repayment of acrimony. Because his book fluctuates between the extremes of self-satisfaction and self-pity, where it might have been the warm self-portrait of an entertainment idol, one is tempted to supply the old megaphone artist with a subtitle in paraphrase of his signatory showtime greeting: "Ho-hum, everybody."

the good groceries, (2) vintages, and (3) in itself a large plus, the service. If Philippe lacked on the runway—and to this should be added an inadequate p.a. system—he certainly outdid himself on making sure that the service was impeccable. To intimates it is no secret that he has "raided" what he regards the cream of the crop of waitering manpower and, with it, he seems to have done a little "Central Casting" because they are a surprisingly personable, youngish and, in many instances, bilingual (French) corps.

This also figures as a good offset to the 1960 near-fiasco at the Hotel Astor (Philippe had just shifted over to the Zeckendorfs) which was not equipped for such a turnout, and to last year's utilization of the 7th Regiment Armory. This was good in theory but the customers couldn't go out whistling the decor—which was good. The catering was also-ran, frankly via an outside banquet catering service (Philippe's non-wellwishers opined it was more kosher than Gallic, not that there's anything wrong with the former groceries, if good). But the Americana scored on all counts—culinary, atmospheric, and authenticity in Franco-American motif. Better vantage and auditory perspectives would have made it all well nigh perfect.

CLUB DIPLOMAT, CINCY, DROPS NAME POLICY

Cincinnati, Oct. 30.

Attempting to amend an unsuccessful start with names, the Club Diplomat, swank theatre-restaurant which opened Sept. 20 in Kemper Lane Hotel, switches to a pop revue policy Thursday (1) following the week's engagement of Paul Gilbert.

Initial low-scale lineup includes the Southern Belles (5) dance line, Leroy Reeves & Judy Monroe, dance team; singer Ann Howe, dancer Gloria Weiss and comics Marjorie Thomas and Beverly Geers. The $2-$3 cover charge will be dropped and a "small minimum" retained.

Attendance sagged after opening week's show headlined by Marty Allen & Steve Rossi. Backing was by Wally Johnson's six-piece orchestra. The backers, two businessmen new to show biz, seek to cancel scheduled contracts with stars.

New Acts

ETHEL MERMAN
Song
50 Mins.
Flamingo, Las Vegas

Ethel Merman's new act, concocted by Roger Edens and designed especially for bistros, presents the vet chirp in a light quite unlike her Broadway and film appearances, and if she wants to, she can easily coast along the rest of her life being a powerful nitery attraction. This marks her Vegas debut.

The star sings 23 songs, and the arrangements, by Billy May, are geared to showcasing her as the belting, lyric-conscious musical legend known as Ethel Merman. Even showgoers who were not too enthusiastic about her stylized, straight-to-the-audience-and-to-hell-with-the-leading-man technique on Broadway, will have to admit she is a blockbuster as a single. She still tosses the tunes straight to the patrons, uses a technically perfect hidden mike, and the nostalgic romp was rewarded by firstnighters with a standing ovation.

Miss Merman is being paid (though the figure is unofficial) $40,000 per week, which equals the top salary for any other single star to play the Strip, and if her opening night momentum keeps up, she will be worth it.

She sings just about every big song she has done in her colorful career (plus some new ones) including "I Got Rhythm," "Bowl Of Cherries," "You're The Top," "Anything Goes," "Small World," "Everything's Coming Up Roses," "They Say It's Wonderful," "Blow Gabriel," (with fine accompaniment on the trumpet by Buddy Childers), and of course, "No Biz Like Show Biz."

An effective gimmick is used during her medley, when a montage backdrop repping marquees from her famous shows light individually while she is singing a number from that particular musical comedy. Hugo Granata does a splendid job with the lighting.

Special credit should go to Russ Black's orch (20) for the superb backing, and to the pilots of the twin pianos—Morty Jacobs and Marty Harris—who are onstage at all times with the star.

A handsome dance team, new to Vegas, Inga & Rolf, open the bill, and are graceful as they present "dance souvenirs" from various nations. This show in until Juliet Prowse and Myron Cohen open Nov. 22. Duke.

JOCELYNE JOCYA
Songs
20 Mins.
ABC, Paris

Jocelyne Jocya is a statuesque blonde who knows how to step up to a mike. She has a big voice that can do well by her torch or dramatic songs as well as leavening light ditties. Only drawback is a metallic quality which sometimes jars. But when she has the right song she sings true with a good insight into the material. She looks to be on the way to emerging a fine song staple here.

The personal projection and individuality still does not demote true star quality, but she may even reach this stage after some more roadwork and a more personalized songalog. As is, she is more than promising in the lacklustre new songstress crop here of late. Yank intimers seem indicated. She is on Vogue disks. Mosk.

ENRICO MACIAS
Songs
25 Mins.
ABC, Paris

Enrico Macias is from Algeria and has caught on with the big expatriated population from there. This dark, personable young singer-cleffer displays a dash, voice and delivery that may have him fitting easily into the singing picture here with locals as well as nostalgic Algerians.

Accompanying himself on a guitar, he has some bright sugary numbers on love, with more heavyweight laments for his old land. But fine phrasing, musical know-how, and an ingratiating personality, voice and projection, combine to make him a promising newcomer.

He still appears too sentimental for big foreign chances but could be material for posh rooms on his good musical qualities. Mosk.

ROBERT GOULET
Songs
40 Mins.
Shoreham Hotel, Washington

Robert Goulet, seemingly as nervous as the Joint Chiefs of Staff, made his initial supper club appearance in Washington at the height of the Cuban crisis. If the timing was unfortunate and if his fright from stepping into a new facet of show biz added rigidly to manner and movements, what does it really matter, except as an historical note?

Goulet has class. He also has good looks, style, masculinity, charm and a fine voice. Even more, he has an act which is superbly constructed and produced. He is going to have 'em cheering wherever he goes. Next on his list is the Plaza's Persian Room in N. Y. for a month, followed by several dates before his Vegas bow at the Flamingo.

Goulet's solid click before a full house in the vast Blue Room of the Shoreham Hotel here is a payoff for the strategy of Norman Rosemont, his personal manager, who brought him into "Camelot," selected his television exposure and required 18 months of work on a nitery act before deciding it was right for the Canadian vocalist. Such mother-hen like care pays off big.

Lyn Duddy and Jerry Bresler fashioned his repertoire, including two specialty written songs and new lyrics for others. It has a pleasing change of pace between romantics and rousers, old, new and original. It's perfect for a LP album as is.

Best received was the selection he would obviously pick for his last song, "If Ever" from "Camelot." But a close runnerup was a catchy and clever original, "Concentrate on One Thing at a Time," concerning a playboy attempting to get down to business.

A "West Side Story" medley was richly orchestrated and played excellently by the Bob Cross Orch. under Jerry Bresler's baton. The full orchestra is used throughout the act, except for "Autumn Leaves," which Goulet sings in French with only a piano. He has special lyrics which are witty for both "Hooray for Love" and "You Can't Love 'Em All."

Among older songs worked into the act as "Night and Day," "Bowl of Cherries," "I'll Get By" and "World on a String."

His opener is an original, "Wake Up." He kept the big crowd awake, quiet and fascinated. Carp.

THREE Songs, Comedy
46 Minutes
Le Hibou, Ottawa

Bring together three capable performers with solidly scripted material and you can't easily miss. That's what has happened with the trio logically and simply titled "Three." It's one of the slickest acts to play Le Hibou and would be clicko in any room.

Donn Francks, one of Canada's ablest performers, chants, thesps and does comedy with equal expertese; guitarist Lenny Breau works magic with his instrument both in solo and with the trio; bassist Eon Henstridge is par with the others in ability.

They race comfortably through a string of satirical items, splice in socko solo and serious bits to big mitting. There's a spoof on CBC recital shows, music hall turns get a going over, cowboy & western groups are kidded. On the serious side, Breau gives an impressive handling of a flamenco solo and the three provide a weird but exciting arrangement of "Blackbird." Throughout, the stint is structurally solid and designed for the utmost impact. While the stanza moves more freely in a coffeeroom such as Le Hibou, with minor refinements it could be nice for niteries and television.

SUE ROBERTS
Songs
25 Mins.
White House, Minneapolis

Pretty Sue Roberts could wow male tablesitters just standing in a spotlight and snapping her fingers. Doll-faced platinum blond is plenty easy on the orbs and exudes s.a. in a formfitting gown, strap of which tended to slip teasingly off her shoulder at preem here. Chick's visual appearance is more impressive than her vocal talent. She sings in a husky, unexceptional voice. But her looks may make many a patron less conscious of what he hears than usual.

A niece of comic Danny Thomas, 21-year-old Miss Roberts has been warbling for four years, mainly with vocal groups. She got a break two years ago when Ray Anthony hired her as one of his Book-Ends. This year she has appeared at such niteries as the Dunes in Las Vegas and Harrah's at Lake Tahoe and spent two months this spring performing at Club 21 at the Seattle World's Fair.

Thrush alternates between jazz offerings and ballads, doing a much more acceptable job on the former. Cute bit of specialty material is a number titled "I Said 'Yes.'"

She is only the second headliner White House boniface Irv Schectman has booked strictly on others' say-so in 18 months. Miss Roberts will be blending into lush trappings of this key clu-stage bar arrangement until Nov. 5. Rees.

TOWN PIPERS
Vocal-Instrumental
45 Mins.
The Losers, L. A.

Town Pipers have a versatile act that should hold them in good stead, particularly for recordings and steady lounge bookings. Group is primarily vocal, but fits in number of swingin' instrumentals that keep their sets lively, bright and generally richly entertaining.

Smoothest of the Pipers' work is in soft, sweet and mellow vocal blend, particularly delivered on mixed ballad and jazz arrangement of "I Wish You Love." Solo's go mostly to Joan and Tony Costa, latter also fingering nice piano and responsible for group's generally solid arrangements. Most of their stuff is straight and easy sounding, although musicianship shows in unique combinations, like "Limerick Waltz" which they do in mixture of 4/4 and 3/4 time as an instrumental. Joan comes on nicely with "Heart in S. F.," "Bill Bailey," while Tony does handsome presentation of the soliloquy "Joey," with own guitar backing, and "Georgia" with fine instrumental arrangements.

Group hits big closer with showtune medley, but one caught (from Oklahoma") was too highly arranged and pushed for comedy. Pipers are not comics and come off with class when they stick to straight musicianship.

Group includes Tom Rudeski, sax; Tom Ratzin, bass, who complete singers, with Joe Fazzi backing on drums throughout. Dale.

Vocal Units Specializing In B'way Legituner Hits Hypoing Mpls. Cafe Biz

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

Supper club entertainment provided by mixed singing groups presenting portions of Broadway musical hits has become so popular and profitable here that a third spot is adopting it. The Edgewater Inn has supplemented guest dancing to Don McGrane's orchestra music with a singing and terpsichorean octet offering excerpts from Broadway shows.

In this area such entertainment pulls class patronage. It's in its 13th consecutive year at Bennie Berger's tony Schiek's restaurant-supper club here and in its fourth at the nearby Shakopee, Minn., St. Paul House. Both draw big patronage and are rated as exceedingly prosperous. Each has sextets—three gals and an equal number of men—instead of an octet, and their performances are confined almost entirely to singing.

Vocal groups' casts are largely locally recruited and the producers-directors are hometowners. Small orchestras playing the shows keep down the nut although the one at Edgewater Inn is larger and also furnishes music for dancing. Another modest expense item for these shows is costuming—it's rented.

While income soars, the total nut for the singing shows is, of course, considerably less than that of most other local niteries with floor shows, especially the Hotel Radisson Minnesota Terrace and Freddie's which regularly have name acts.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

Carmen Torres, with Morty Joy (5), Vaughn Meader, Carolyn Hester; $3-3.50 cover, $5 minimum.

Man, forget those East-West jitters. If the Angel's fullhouse of Tuesday night (23) last week was typical, those nocturnal cats knew something the rest of the populace didn't.

In this case, they even streamed in for a show that's low-voltage on names, albeit topliner Carmen Torres, recalled for her click exposure at the old downtown Versailles, could be expected to pull in some faithful, and did. Otherwise, Vaughn Meader's comic monology, and folksinging Carolyn Hester couldn't be figured of much consequence to business.

The lineup, however, seems to reflect boniface Max Gordon's stated desire to fall back on the Angel's earlier formula as a sometime showcase for down-the-ladder talents in developmental phase.

Whether belting or subdued, Miss Torres is a consistently winning personality, a chanteuse of vigor and warmth. Her reception was ditto and merited. Her penchant is for the multi-national catalog, including a single sampling in the up-from-Brazil bossa nova beat, and a pair from the B'way tuner, "Mr. President."

Her authoritative best, however, is in the Latino and Gallic idioms (including linguistics), and her identification could stand more such seasoning. She's backed ably by a foursome topped by her 88er, Morty Joy.

Meader, who's playing a repeat here, is one of the young breed with contemporary orientation, but still in search of an image. His preoccupations, of course, are politics, films, new cars, etc., treated with a profusion of one- and two-liners that lack sharpness. He most engages with his voice carbons of President Kennedy and brother Bobby, the substance of his kidding being less resourceful.

Miss Hester, a Columbia disk pactee, is equipped with poise and fine voice that she invests with a countrified inflection, perhaps to emphasize that these are folksongs, among them, oddly, Gershwin's "Summertime." She is attractive and a smooth performer in the commercial groove, if not differentiated as a vendor of folk tunes. She packs her own guitar, and is backed by bass and guitar.

Pit.

Blackstone Hotel, Chi

Chicago, Oct. 30.

Betty Johnson, Franz Benteler Orch; $2.50 cover weekend, $1.50 weeknights.

Blackstone Hotel g.m. Doug Boone has made a practice of booking an occasional American thrush into the swank Bonaparte Room, and they have almost always provided a welcome change of fare from the spicier offerings of the Continental chirps. His choice of Betty Johnson's silken-smooth songery proves that sweet are the uses of diversity, and opening night auditors awarded her warm palm praise.

Miss Johnson, who has been singing professionally since she was six years old, is an effortless purveyor of song. Her "Thanks To You" is a zippy opener and makes for nice contrast to a nostalgic rendition of "Baubles & Bangles" which follows.

She also scores with a well-arranged medley of Bart Howard tunes, capped by a haunting version of "In Other Words." Her other offerings include a torchy offering of "I'm Through with Love," her disclick "I Dreamed I Was The Queen of Spain," and a powerful a capella rendering of "I Gave My Love A Cherry" to close her turn.

Franz Benteler's house band backs the show with care, provides an eminently danceable beat, and soothes diners between shows.

Mor.

New China Club, Reno

Reno, Oct. 25.

Robbie Robinson Revue (6), Eagle Eye Shields Trio; no cover, no minimum.

Since initiating entertainment in the new International Room at his China Club, owner Bill Fong has experimented with various types of acts to determine which best fits this intimery. For the current session he apparently has a winner, if audience reaction is any indication. Robbie Robinson (ex with the Billy Ward troupe) and his revue are packing them in during these early days of his four-week stint, and tabler response is highly rewarding.

Cast is only six strong, but offers much in the way of variety and showcases capable individual talents. With Robinson at the helm setting the pace via vocals and sax work, group mixes up the titles to fit all tastes, and to further rapport, a bit of ingalong is thrown in. Group is frenetic at times with such as "What I Say" and "Night Train." However, it subdues the decibels, for good listening on the likes of "Bye Bye Blackbird" and "San Francisco."

Lorraine Grant, the act's lone femme, has an interesting style and offers some tricky vocalistics. With much regard to lyrics, she enhances mood with an expressive—and beautiful—face. Smartly gowned and coiffed, she shows much control and authority despite her youthful appearance. Dimpled cheeks and a pouting lower lip add to the visual appeal.

Miss Grant's songalog includes "Give Myself a Party," "Fever" and "Masquerade Is Over." She knows her way around equally well on the slow pretty things or the beltier stuff.

Eddie London, who handles the male vocal chores, makes his intro from the back of the room with "Don't Worry 'Bout Me," then essays a medley including "Bye Bye Blackbird" and "All Right With Me." He displays emphatic style with rich full tones for top approval.

Frolic, Revere

Revere, Mass., Oct. 21.

Ford & Reynolds, Leslie Post, Bob Warren, Buddy Thomas Dancers (16), Cliff Natale Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

In for four weeks, Ford & Reynolds, the zany comics who always wrap it up big for the Della Russo brothers, come on strong to break it up for a packed house opening night in this 400-seater on the Atlantic. Using a wealth of new material with updated world situation one-liners, they swing into a battle of music with Frank Ford on the drums and Gary Reynolds on sax.

Some knockabout comedy develops into a wild Twist session and a request for selections ends with their cockeyed rendition of "Misty," which they profess not to know.

Pair are excellent visual comics with expert mugging. They're also able musicians and show an aptitude for much original humor situations including a wild "Tarzan and Jane" number in three languages, which leaves the audience limp.

Buddy Thomas dancers open the show with fine production number in silver lame costumes and headdresses that rank with best Broadway style. Leslie Post, svelte blond ballerina, spins and twirls through the line to start her stint which develops into some expert ballerinaistics.

Bob Warren, tall, blond piper, takes over a spot for "It's Big Back Yard" and upbeat "I Get a Kick Out of You." Winds up with a rousing "Bill Bailey," strut and all.

In second production number, Thomas steppers are off on a white and gold ballet with music from "Seventh Heaven" while Miss Post pirouettes for boffo visual signoff. Cliff Natale cuts the show in fine style.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, Oct. 23.

Stan Fisher, Lynn Christie, Russ Thomas Orch (5); $2 admission.

Stan Fisher uses only one harmonica to stage a socko 36-minute stint on the floor of the Gatineau Club, and this is what amazes most harmonica buffs who resort to a number of the instruments to produce similar results. Fisher not only has socko ability as a musician but his showmanship and staging add up to a fine stint.

Leading off with selections from "Carmen," he follows with a handling of "Malaguena," sans band backing, that makes it sound like a full orchestra. Stanza also includes medley of fast-beat standards plus clicko use of title suggested by tablesitters.

Russ Thomas house band backs the show and plays for dancing. Between shows, Cedric Phillips chants and 88s in the Blue Lounge.

Gorm.

Unicorn, L. A.

Los Angeles, Oct. 22.

"The Day After Tomorrow," folk music revue starring Ernie Sheldon and Joyce James; $1 admission plus one-drink minimum.

Ernie Sheldon's collection of folk songs, presented under the title "The Day After Tomorrow," is billed as the first theatrically staged folk music revue. Actually, while songs are selected to weave through areas of life—the past, present and an insight into the future—the offering remains essentially a solid folk act.

There is continuity in the revue's choice of material and what it has to say. But its structure remains that of some dozen songs, broken only by individual solos between Sheldon and Joyce James, show's only performers, and several reprises of Dave Arkin and George Smith's title song.

Both performers deliver with assurance and polish and indicate a secure knowledge of their work. Selections include foreign entries, among them the rousing "Wake Up Dunya" and "Lo Issa Goy," latter with text from the Bible.

For the folk music minded, it is a good presentation of stirring material. Comedy interpolation is subtle, as in "When You Smoke Tobacco." Most charming is Sheldon's own "It's Hard to be Two," delivered nicely by both despite a mike deficiency on Sunday night (21).

Dale.

Inquisition, Vancouver

Vancouver, B. C., Oct. 24.

Ernestine Anderson, Al MacMillan Trio; $2.25 admission.

The boffo business of the "Cannonball" Adderley sextet at Howie Bateman's bistro makes any follow-up a tough assignment, but Seattle singer Ernestine Anderson is a jazz stylist in her own right and shapes as a solid successor.

While Miss Anderson's songbook is almost exclusively made up of standards, it is the special interpretations she brings to the lively Quincy Jones and Ernie Wilkins arrangements that excite and enthuse her devotees in the Inquisition audiences. With the natural attribute of a husky, expressive voice, she is equally at home with delicately shaded ballads and belting blues. Her style, though it makes you remember the late Bessie Smith and Billie Holiday, is unmistakably her own.

With fine backing by the Al MacMillan trio of Stan Perry on drums, Tony Clitheroe on bass, and leader MacMillan at the 88, Miss Anderson's catalog ranges from uptempo versions of such standards as "Just In Time," "Lover," "It Could Happen To You" and "You Make Me Feel So Young," to the slower, expressive, but still swinging arrangements of "I Fall In Love Too Easily," "Time After Time," "It's All Right With Me" and "Little Al MacMillan trio, augmented by Dale Hillary's alto sax and Clyde Griffith on bongos, blows effectively between song sets.

Black Knight, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 24.

Lily Cavel, Palm De Luca Quintet; no cover, no minimum.

With four 13th Century stained-glass windows imported from England and a crimson throne-room effect housing its orch, Black Knight is latest room to be opened at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto. Although there's no minimum or cover charge, customers in 120-capacity room are expected to order a meal and drinks.

Formerly the men's bar, room has had a $175,000 facelift. Models and actresses — "at liberty" — abound in conical headdresses or pageboy uniforms, with plenty of legs suitably garbed, plus lotsa armor about. Decorative motif is a Black Knight on gayly-caparisoned charger, shield and sword upraised.

Teeoff act is Lily Cavel. Continental chanteuse, who sings in six languages, and Palm De Luca with his quintet. De Luca, associated with the late Luigi Romanelli for the past 27 years at the King Edward Sheraton Hotel, Toronto, gives strong support to Miss Cavel's sophisticated warbling, plus the dance sessions. Incidentally, the orch was too loud opening night but this obviously will be corrected.

Miss Cavel, former stooge for Henny Youngman and the now-defunct Martin & Lewis, is making her first visit to Canada after a nine-year hiatus, with new arrangements by Bobby Crowe and Zoltan Zorado. She starts her 35-minute stint with a bouncy "It's a Lovely Way to Spend an Evening. Thrush follows with an Italian medley, a dramatic "Autumn Leaves," a saucy "Never on Sunday" (in Greek and English lyrics) and an Edith Piaf medley (in French), among other tunes. She was received with warmth and is an asset to any room.

McStay.

Silver Tap, Omaha

Omaha, Oct. 27.

Diana Durette, Sam Salzman, Patrick & El Barracho's (3); no cover or minimum.

One of the consistent money-making niteries in Omaha despite (or because of) its location in the more-rugged area, Sam Salzman's Silver Tap may have a gold mine in its new strip feature, Diana Durette, Blond looker, who opened this week, is booked through Nov. 23 and Salzman will undoubtedly stretch this if possible.

Miss Durette, who entered the biz at 14 in a carnie, does two routine strips, but jams the large (about 200 seats) spot for her middle show when she does a take-off on a country-bumpkin peeler.

She is a natural at acting the shy, embarrassed gal who comes on in a long dress (covering long undies), hat styled in the 1900 era, scraggly old furpiece and even boots. When she finishes her racy patter, she begins to disrobe and most of her garments, i. e. bra and girdle, are on backwards and sidewards. She calls her stint the "Dance of the Virgins."

In addition to Miss Durette, owner Salzman takes a turn at the mike with vocals and Patrick & El Barracho's trio satifies the dancers with rock 'n'roll and Twist numbers. It's a lot of entertainment packed into 45 minutes—if you dig that sort of thing. With no cover or minimum, beer at 45c a bottle and mixed drinks at 65c, it's quite a buy. Biz is SRO, natch.

Hotel Roosevelt, N.O.

New Orleans, Oct. 26.

Monique Van Vooren, Leon Kelner Orch.

When Monique Van Vooren last played Seymour Weiss' plush Blue Room a season ago, the spot was packed. Her current preem Thursday (25) proved another triumphant one with the house again filled and audience response enthusiastic and solid.

The Belgian blonde, making her fifth appearance here, offers a diversified songbag ranging from "The Lady Is a Tramp" to "What Kind of a Fool Am I." She scores in all areas.

Miss Van Vooren is as captivating as ever as she serves up generous portions of l'amour. She makes an intimate act with her stunning gowns of lame, sables and sequin, but playing always to the males with socko results.

Leon Kelner and his musical crew background the show expertly and keep the dance floor crowded during the terp sessions. Kelner, who wins applause for his fingering of the 88's, also handles emcee chores capably.

Show runs two weeks, closing Nov. 7.

Dallas, Oct. 25.

Simmy Bow, Wayne Morrill Trio; private club, no cover or minimum.

Simmy Bow is a refreshing comedian with plenty of topical one-liners and throwaways that score. But it's the polished routines that demonstrate his offbeat "class." He had opening night auditors chuckling with a Billie Sol Estes impression and quickies—"With so many doctors on tv, how come Chester still limps?"

Bow's best projection and response comes with his sharply honed monologs on Robinson Crusoe and Friday, Romeo and Juliet, and a fine routine on Greek mythology utilizing tongue-twisting names for big laughs. Between the lengthy segments he inserts surprisingly good vocal efforts, a "Bill Bailey" parody titled "Bill Friday," and a rousing closer, "April Showers." He exits after a solid 30 minutes.

Framingham, Mass., Oct. 25.

Abbe Lane & Xavier Cugat, Bob DeVoye Trio (3), Jack DelRio, Johnny Archer Orch (16); $6 minimum, $1 cover weekdays; $7 minimum, $3 cover Saturday.

The Lane-Cugat package, in for 10 days at Caesar Tamagno's posh 1,400-seat Monticello on the Boston-Worcester pike, shapes fast paced and zingy with Abbe Lane's torrid terp in opening Thursday (25) to a fine three-quarter house. Cugat kicks off the show with some amusing patter re his former billing and the present setup with Miss Lane getting top billing before bringing her on. She runs through a swinging song-dance gesh with two gown changes, piping Italian songs and a sock "Hava Nagila."

Miss Lane is charged with bounce, zing and enthusiasm. Along the way, she sings in French and does "Mack the Knife," among others, with boff showmanship. Tall redhead goes into a Twist session, which brings hefty audience response. She also brings up members of the aud to Twist with her for big returns. Cugat clowns around while leading the orch.

Bob DeVoye Trio is on between Miss Lane's gown changes with fine adagio and modern rhythm terping replete with lifts and spins for big hand. Jack DelRio is slick in a bongo spot.

Freddie's, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Oct. 23.

Jack E. Leonard, Frank Oliveri Trio; $2-$2.50 cover.

Waspish-wit Jack E. Leonard was such a success when he played the Hotel Radisson Flame Room here 14 months ago that he brought along a lot of his old lines for his current engagement at Freddie's. Since the rotund comic is hardly given to nostalgia, the repetition of tried and true gags must mean that he's satisfied with his material. Leonard probably has good reason to stay with winning stuff. He fractured tablesitters at his preem.

Leonard is better suited to the noisier atmosphere of Freddie's than he was to the Flame Room. Although he succeeded in packing the plush hotel nitery, some of that spot's carriage trade was taken aback by the comic's sniping and blasting. Here there's less likelihood of offending delicate tastes.

Aside from serving as sitting targets for the topper's barbs, Frank Oliveri Trio has little to do during the proceedings. One of the musicians appeared irked at being made the butt of Leonard's jokes at the opener, a weakness the headliner is sure to exploit at subsequent shows.

Leonard closed Saturday night (28). Instead of playing out his fortnight engagement, he departed at end of first week on his own volition because the war scare had been denting Freddie's business as well as cutting trade at other local niteries.

Leonard, who pulled capacity biz last year at the Hotel Radisson's Flame Room, said he didn't want to be a financial burden to Freddie's. Ted Willson replaced the comic as of Monday (29). Boniface Pete Karalis is bringing in the Four Saints next.

Royal York, Toronto

Toronto, Oct. 24.

Norton & Patricia, Moxie Whitney Royal York Orch (12); $2 cover.

Jamming the customers into the 450-capacity Imperial Room of the Royal York—when caught, Norton & Patricia are doing their ballroom terping to heavy applause. Blond and diminutive Patricia, in a gossamer Grecian gown, and the stalwart Norton in black tie and dinner clothes, excel in body swirls which feature neat adagio effects.

Terp team has class, as evidenced in their 26-minute stint here. Doing story theme, the duo manipulates a music-box routine which is very stylized. They also do a "wedding scene" to accompaniment of "The Boy Next Door" and a fancy "If I Loved You."

Climaxing their act, Norton asks the customers for requests and runs through a rhapsody of rhythm that includes swing, fox trot, cha-cha, Latin-American and the Twist.

Tchin-Tchin

David Merrick presentation of Warner LeRoy production of comedy-drama in two acts (11 scenes), by Sidney Michaels, based on a play by Francois Billetdoux. Staged by Peter Glenville; settings and lighting, Will Steven Armstrong; costumes, Theoni V. Aldredge. Stars Anthony Quinn, Margaret Leighton. Opened Oct. 25, '62, at the Plymouth Theatre, N.Y.; 6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Pamela Pew-Pickett ..... Margaret Leighton
Cesario Grimaldi ..... Anthony Quinn
Robert Pickett ..... Charles Grodin
Various Others ..... Jean Barker, Sandy Baron

A baffling combination of funny and sad, coarse and delicate, harsh and tender, and eloquent and obscure, "Tchin-Tchin," which opened last Thursday night (25) at the Plymouth Theatre, is a prestige item that's likely to have a limited public. It is beautiful production, superbly acted by Anthony Quinn and Margaret Leighton, and expertly staged by Peter Glenville.

"Tchin-Tchin," to begin with first things, is a Chinese expression meaning hello and goodbye. The original French play by Francois Billetdoux, adapted by Sidney Michaels, was a critical and moderate commercial success in London. Warner LeRoy acquired the American rights and had the locale changed from Paris to New York, although the sorrowful characters are still a prim English lady and an uninhibited Italian man.

The play is essentially a tragic drama about how the unhappy pair, brought together by the fact that their respective mates are having a love affair, seek mutual solace in drunkenness and finally, having reached utter degradation, find escape in fantasy. Even the sad moments have an element of laughter, and several scenes are uproariously funny.

A rather special audience is likely to find "Tchin-Tchin" a fascinating dramatic comedy, while practical-minded playgoers may shrug it off as hifalutin spinach. Even those who admire it intensely may have difficulty explaining exactly what it says, and beyond that, what it means. In general terms, it's about how loneliness and despair shatter the lives of two vulnerable people.

There is obviously significance in the fact that the woman's somewhat babied grown son, an ingrate and a conniver, has an affair with his mother's successor, his father's second wife and therefore his own stepmother. And there must be potent meaning in the final incident, in which the derelict pair rob her son, whom they find drunk and beaten unconscious on the street. The ending, incidentally, seems vague and unsatisfying.

Whatever it means, "Tchin-Tchin" has a wistful, brooding and touching quality, seasoned with occasional riotous comedy. Under Glenville's sensitive, firm direction, Quinn gives an artfully vigorous performance that somehow suggests a blend of exhuberance and heartbreak. It is probably the best thing he has yet done on Broadway, certainly superior to his portrayal two seasons ago of the king, opposite Laurence Olivier in "Becket." His clarity of speech has markedly improved in the last dozen years or so.

Miss Leighton, who bowled over Broadway last season as the pathetically courageous spinster in "The Night of the Iguana," gives a transcendently luminous performance in this much more varied and colorful part of the apparently secure lady who turns out to have always been lost and is finally overwhelmed by misfortune. Charles Grodin is excellent as the nasty son.

Will Steven Armstrong has designed a brilliantly expressive and flexible physical production, combining set pieces, panels and drops to represent various New York locales of high and low social status, and Theoni V. Aldredge has provided vividly appropriate costumes.

The show, presented by David Merrick, is billed as Warner LeRoy's production. The latter was initially the director, but stepped out in favor of Glenville, after differences with Quinn. Disregarding what may be involved personally in that switch, "Tchin-Tchin" stacks up financially as a modest success at best. It offers little for the road or stock and is dubious film material. Hobe.

Beyond the Fringe

Alexander H. Cohen, by arrangement with William Donaldson & Donald Albery, presentation of revue in two acts (23 sketches and numbers) and featuring Alan Bennett, Peter Cook, Jonathan Miller, Dudley Moore. Staged by Alexander H. Cohen; original London staging, Eleanor Fazan; setting, John Wyckham; lighting, Ralph Alswang; production associates, Andre Goulston, Gabriel Katzka. Opened Oct. 27, '62, at the John Golden Theatre, N.Y.; $7.50 top.

One of the funniest sketches to convulse a Broadway audience in many years is the Shakespeare travesty just before the finale of "Beyond the Fringe," which opened last Saturday night (27) at the John Golden Theatre. The rest of the show isn't that good, of course, but it's generally stimulating and extraordinarily entertaining.

Since this Alexander H. Cohen presentation, in partnership with London producers William Donaldson and Donald Albery, had not only recouped but repaid its investment before reaching Broadway, it's already a financial hit. It's also a cinch for critical and popular success, and should earn a substantial profit for everyone concerned. It could turn out to be an even bigger click here than originally in London.

Not everyone may be entranced by this very British revue with its cast of only four serious, cerebral young men in casual street clothes, not even a suggestion of chorus girls, regular songs or dances, or even any smutty or sexy jokes. "Beyond the Fringe," as the title suggests, may be a bit special in its appeal. But for the sizable public that relishes sharp, subtle wit, special also means rare and provocative and frequently hilarious.

The advance dope on the show was that it had not been changed more than very slightly for American audiences, and that was confirmed by first-nighters who had seen it in London. The British references and accents are retained, and are brilliant in the parodies of types and even recognizable public personages.

The Shakespeare sketch, titled "So That's the Way You Like It," can't fail to overcome audiences who've suppressed snickers at all those wide-flung capes, brandished broadswords, ranting rhetoric and enthusiastically athletic death throes in performances of the Squire of Avon's indestructable verse. Moreover, practically nothing else escapes the scathing, if good-humored, ridicule of these innocent-looking but irrevelent Englishmen.

It would be easy to assume that they're primarily ribbing the English, except that it's so evident that the real target is not any particular nation or group, but the whole fallible, foolish human race. Perhaps the most penetrating barbs are for English people and institutions and manners. But if what Americans may like to think of as British pomposity is amiably pilloried, American pretentions are also deftly harpooned.

The caricature of Prime Minister Macmillan, though unmistakably specific, could apply to any office-holding politician who may secretly think of himself as a statesman. The rigidly-erect, trance-like posture of the four featured writer-performers at the recorded playing of "God Save the Queen" is surefire for audiences who have suffered mutely through the unsingable "Star Spangled Banner."

Equally recognizable and general in appeal are the satirical potshots at sacrosanct royalty, folk songs, corrupt newspaper by-liners, sentimental war documentaries, antiquated social and economic isms, fatuous preachers, doubletalk television panels, civilian defense officialdom, academic mumbo-jumbo and an immensely funny concert parody of that insistent musical theme from "The Bridge on the River Quai."

No particular effort is made to identify the four actors, although there are a couple of passing mentions of the names of at least two. That evidently reflects the fact that this is a group project and in most if not all cases, the four are not primarily performers intent on establishing themselves as personalities for career purposes.

That may limit the success of "Beyond the Fringe" a trifle, since the public is familiar with and apparently prefers the idea of recognizable and even familiar personalities as stars. For whatever it's worth, however, Alan Bennett is the blonde, crewcut, medium-height one with the horn-rimmed glasses; Peter Cook is tall, with not closely-trimmed, straight, brown hair and a special gift for vocal and facial mimicry; Jonathan Miller is also tall, with blondish, curly hair and a talent for odd-character impersonation, and Dudley Moore is short, with a dry style of comedy, and he plays the piano.

The only music, aside from Moore's spoof of that "River Quai" song and a couple of brief accompaniments, is recorded, mostly anthems, etc. The only gesture toward costuming is the goofy prop hats used in the Shakespeare bit. The only scenery is a simple arrangement of platforms. The only asset of the show is that it's amusing and enjoyable.

Specifically, "Beyond the Fringe" should run indefinitely on Broadway and then, depending on how long these four performers care to stay with it, should be a strong bet for the road, at least for the major cities. It's a questionable bet for pictures, but is a natural for television spots, cabaret appearances and, of course, for record album sales. Hobe.

The good guys and the bad guys get a strenuous workout in "Night Life," which opened last Tuesday night (23) at the Brooks Atkinson Theatre. This new play is vintage Sidney Kinksley—not the best Sidney Kingsley, but a somewhat overripe development of his hit melodrama style of the 1930s and 40s.

As the author has been at pains to point out in several recent interviews, "Night Life" is intended as a sort of parable of our times, the product of 10 years of discussing and pondering the eternal and the new problems of the world. As such, is seems pretentious and overblown. As mere theatrical entertainment it is windy and tiresome.

This time, the author of "Men in White," "Dead End" and "Detective Story" is writing in his familiar style about a key club, a theoretically private cabaret operating after hours to a clientele of chi-chi riffraff with too much money and too little to do. There's a piano player who pounds out oldie requests and a morbid comedian with a patter of humorless jokes, and the flow of action is interrupted frequently for capsule incidents involving isolated groups or individuals, with occasional stream-of-consciousness asides.

The principals include a bigshot labor racketeer, a disillusioned lawyer, the nightclub singer with whom he's in love but who happens to be engaged to the labor boss, a bi-sexual film actress, a loquacious furniture tycoon and ex-poet, his discontented wife and a baker's dozen or so other male and female tramps. Without detailing the disjointed plot, suffice it that there's ample lurid incident and fancy-pantsy palaver.

As his own producer and director, Kingsley has apparently retained every one of his own precious words, and he has the actors acting for all they're worth. As it happens, actors traditionally love juicy dialog and in "Night Life" they give it the works.

Neville Brand is properly beefy and bellicose as the labor hoodlum, Carol Lawrence is plausible and appealing as the singer with a 14-karat heart. Walter Abel is ac-

Bamboche

Stephen Papich (with Dorothy Gray and Ludwig Gerber) presentation. Stars Katherine Dunham. Features Vanoye Aikens, Robert Guillaume, Lucille Ellis, Ural Wilson, Dorothy Speights, Ricardo Avalos, Bessie Griffin. Staged by star; settings, costumes by John Pratt; conductor, Leslie Harnley. Opening Oct. 22, '62, at 54th St. Theatre, N. Y.; $7.50 top.

Returning to Broadway after a seven year hiatus, Katherine Dunham, the girl antropologist from Joliet, Illinois, has brought a big, frequently exciting dance and song show. Title means in Haitian Creole "a get-together to have a good time." "Bamboche" actually roams from Morocco down through West Africa, across to Haiti, Brazil, then up from Florida to the riverboat era, the cakewalk period and Kansas City of the '20s. This is an olla podrida not only of places and periods, but also of the ethnic authentico, the balletistic and the cafe floor show, with a touch of the gospel tent.

Miss Dunham and her troupe were welcomed with open arms, beaten palms and indiscriminate enthusiasm. Taken for what it claims to be: a dancing, singing revue, it has plenty of fire, stirring peaks and much pleasure for eye and ear. But in a day when audiences have been fed genuine folk entertainment from the world over and in view of Miss Dunham's build up as anthropological researcher, there are startling segues from the real into the pop, as in the admixture of the opening number, "Marrakech!" This exciting half-hour raises the hackles with frenetic drumming and guitera tootling, virtuoso Berber belly-oscillating and an amazing Guedra, danced mainly with hands and head by a large Goulimine lady on her knees, but dilutes this with obivous routined cross-overs by the American company and a Dunham song and dance which marks the star's entrance and ovation without raising the temperature.

Brazilian quadrille which followed was pale and stylistic by comparison; Miss Dunham returned for a bland flirtation and Maria Costoso and Joan Seabrook, as two Andean Indians performed an amusing number with Carlton Johnson. Good miming by the deadpan of the two girls.

Closing the first of the three acts was a Haitian Suite in which Miss Dunham sang and danced the show's title number, which she also wrote. The net result seemed to point that Miss Dunham should leave composition and lyric writing to others.

The middle act was devoted to "The Diamond Thief," diverting one-acter in seven scenes with music by Richard Markowitz and lyrics (not in English) by Le Clerc. Ricardo Avalos danced and mimed the title role. Some fine frenzy-free hoofing here but the star's "Lady in Bold" performance was anti-climactic. The Thief's dress-up costume was straight out of Al Capp and there was a brief breast-baring as one of the girls showered.

Last stanza was devoted to American Negro entertainment, opening with a strong Bessie Griffin synco-spiritual, "By and By;" then Miss Dunham's strongest number, a Florida swamp shimmy with the handsome, capable Vanoye Aikens, plus a funny panto bit by Joan Seabrook. Following came another rousing, genuinely boff scene, "Flaming Youth," with Charleston, Black Bottom, Mooch, Fishtale (or was it 'tail'?) and Snakehips (by Clifford Fears) mixed with enough story and hair-pulling to hold it together as a standout.

An almost "minstrel" songalog in "one" seemed weak programming and led into the cakewalk finale which had little of the verve and electricity of the preceding "20's" smash. In the interests of better scene-building the two might be reversed.

Production throughout was first-class. The costumes were colorful and outstanding; settings were always unstinting and eye-pleasing. Company is at the 54th Street for as much of a run as show can draw, after a six week break-in tour opening on the Pacific Coast. As straight entertainment, "Bambouche!" rates high, with only flaw, strangely and unfortunately, Miss Dunham's performance in cakewalk, "Diamond Thief," and first act finale. Conversely, her "Barrelhouse" shimmy was great dancing and miming. Leve.

American Dance Co.

(SHELBOURNE, DUBLIN)

Dublin, Oct. 8.

This young New York dance company made its European debut here before moving to Cambridge, England, and a six-week Continental tour. Its imaginative work, except for "Diamond Backs" which suggested some of the dance idioms of "West Side Story," is unfamiliar to Irish audiences and that, with unusual venue, probably accounted for poor attendance.

Dances range from "Portrait of a Summer Sunday," an amusing impression of romance in a town in the South on the Fourth of July, to the fantasy of "Haunted Moments" with dancers interpreting familiar sounds into dance forms. "Always Pierrot" is a play within a play about a ballet company, a rather difficult choice with which to open a program to a foreign audience.

"Diamond Backs" has a robustness and spirited style as a dance drama of New York's East Side. The company of eight has plenty of talent as dancers and makes an attractive group which should appeal more in proper setting. Mac.

Never Too Late

New Haven, Oct. 25.

Elliot Martin-Daniel Hollywood presentation of comedy in three acts (five scenes) by Sumner Arthur Long. Staged by George Abbott; setting and lighting, William and Jean Eckart; costumes, Florence Klotz; special music, Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick. John Kandor. Stars Paul Ford, Maureen O'Sullivan, Orson Bean; features John Alexander, Leona Maricle, Fran Sharon, House Jameson. Opened Oct. 24, '62, at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven; $4.80 top.

Grace Kimbrough ..... Leona Maricle
Edith Lambert ..... Maureen O'Sullivan
Dr. James Kimbrough ..... House Jameson
Harry Lambert ..... Paul Ford
Charlie ..... Orson Bean
Kate ..... Fran Sharon
Mr. Foley ..... Wallace Engelhardt
Mayor Crane ..... John Alexander
Policeman ..... Fred Burrell

"Never Too Late" has the earmarks of living up to its strawhat promise. As competently staged by Gene Lasko at Westport, Conn., last summer, it was highly amusing. As embellished by George Abbott, this Broadway-bound version is a howl. It should provide jobs for a first-rate cast for months, can make hilarious filmfare, and will probably be dished up eventually in stock.

The yarn involves a crusty, thrift-conscious, middleaged lumberdealer who is about to become a father—again. Complications involving a junior couple living with the parents add to the merriment.

The performance by Paul Ford as the bedazzled father-to-be rates among the season's standouts. His gestures, timing, and general mien are noteworthy. Maureen O'Sullivan is due for a friendly reception in this Broadway debut. She projects considerable warmth in the role of the family drudge who encounters emancipation with the news of her impending maternity.

Orson Bean completes the starring trio with a good version of a harried son-in-law who finally breaks the shackles. Leona Maricle as a family friend, Fran Sharon as an over-indulged daughter, and John Alexander as the local mayor add good support.

William and Jean Eckart have created a handsome living room. Costuming by Florence Klotz runs a drab-to-dandy scale. A title song by Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick, plus incidental music by John Kandor, lend a melodic tone to the preceedings. Abbott's staging is smart and achieves all possible fun.

"Never Too Late" has its inconsistencies, but audiences will be too busy laughing to pay much to them. Bone.

Author's Agent Is Producing 'Never'; Other Managements Wouldn't Do It

By JESSE GROSS

For the second time in a period of four seasons, literary agent Daniel Hollywood is coproducing a client's play after unsuccessful attempts to interest established producers in doing so. In first offering the work to other managements he figures he has acted in the best interests of both his client and himself.

Whether this situation is in his best interests as a producer may be another matter. He made a respectable start in the managerial field three seasons ago as coproducer of "The Andersonville Trial" and it remains to be seen how he'll fare with his second producing venture, the Broadway-bound "Never Too Late." But unless the established producers are given first crack at a client's script, Hollywood figures that he risks placing himself in the position, when pitching other plays at them, of getting a what's-wrong-with-it reaction on the theory that he'd produce the works himself if they were sufficiently promising.

"Andersonville," written by his client, Saul Levitt, was coproduced by Hollywood, William Darrid and Eleanore Saidenberg during the 1959-60 season. The play was originally presented on television in 1957 under the title, "The Trial of Captain Wirz." After failing to stir Broadway producer interest in the drama's legit potential, Hollywood personally advanced Levitt $1,000 to develop the play.

The Levitt drama, which got favorable reviews from five of the seven daily newspaper critics in New York, had a 23-week Broadway run. The film rights were sold to Lubin-Kaufmann for $45,000 and the backers of the Broadway production have thus far been repaid $65,000 of their $90,000 investment. Hollywood is optimistic that income from amateur and stock rights will eventually put the venture in the black.

In his current managerial endeavor, Hollywood is partnered with Elliot Martin. Their production of "Late," written by Sumner Arthur Long, is currently trying out in Boston prior to a scheduled Nov. 27 bow at the Playhouse, N.Y. The agent-producer

Schedule Chinese Group For B'way in November; Italian Co. Next Year

Broadway, which sampled Swedish-language legit last season, is scheduled to get a Chinese presentation in November and an Italian company next fall. The Oriental import, National China's Foo Hsing Theatre, is scheduled for a week's stand Nov. 12-17 at the Longacre Theatre, N. Y. The Italian group is the Companie Morelli-Stoppa of Rome which Jay K. Hoffman plans bringing to Broadway next October for a three-week run.

The Foo Hsing (Chinese for "revival") unit comprises 40 youngers who'll appear in a musical drama, "The Beautiful Bait." The Chinese troupe, formed in 1957 in Taipei by Wang Chen-Tsu, began a U. S. tour under the auspices of the Republic of China earlier this month at the Seattle World's Fair. The Companie Morelli-Stoppa, which has been in existence since 1946, is under the artistic direction of film-legit stager Luchino Visconti.

The Italian company, which has 30 plays in its repertoire, will perform two comedies by Carlo Goldoni, "La Locandiera" and "L'impresario delle Smirne," on Broadway and in Philadelphia and Boston. The troupe of 25 includes Rina Morelli, Paolo Stoppa, Marcello Mastroianni, Rossella Falk, Romolo Valli, Giorgio de Lullo and Anna Maria Guarnieri. Mastroianni, one of Italy's top film stars, has had considerable film exposure in the U. S. His wife, Flora Carabella, will also appear in the Companie Morelli-Stoppa productions.

Last season's Swedish offering on the Main Stem was a one-week presentation at the Cort Theatre, N. Y., of a repertory program by the Royal Dramatic Theatre of Sweden.

Award 12 Fellowships To Minn. Drama Studes

Minneapolis, Oct. 30.

A dozen Univ. of Minnesota graduate students have been awarded the first foundation fellowships in theatre at the institution. The fellowships were established under the will of the late William L. McKnight, of St. Paul, with the intention of aiding the legitimate stage by raising the standards of talent. They will be continued annually, at least through 1964.

During the ensuing year the initial 12 winners will carry on graduate studies at the university, with time out to work at the forthcoming new Tyrone Guthrie repertory theatre here as apprentices, understudies and observers. Each will receive from the McKnight Foundation amounts up to $3,000. The fellowships are in acting, directing, playwriting, business management, costuming and scenic designing.

Britain Now 10th Among Countries Supporting Arts

London, Oct. 30.

Apart from a separate grant of $1,400,000 for Covent Garden, to cover provincial tours for opera and ballet, just over $1,000,000 of the Arts Council's $5,000,000 income was devoted to London. Around $2,500,000 was spent in the provinces, Scotland and Wales.

During the 1962-63 season, Arts Council-supported projects received about five-eighths of their income from the boxoffice, about a quarter from the Council and the balance from foundations and local authorities. Of the London budget, about three-eighths was devoted to drama and one-fifth to music. One-third of the administrative overhead was spent in London.

The income of the Arts Council for the current year, 1962-63, is to go up by about $1,300,000 to an all-time record of almost $6,000,000. In its annual report, issued last week, the Council comments on the "paltry" support from local authorities. A survey of national and civic expenditure on theatres and opera houses, conducted in 14 European countries, placed Britain 10th on the list.

HUROK SADLY REMARKS FRISCO HALL FAMINE

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Longhair importer-manager Sol Hurok joined the city's fight to save the Fox Theatre—verbally. Here ahead of the Bolshoi Ballet he moaned that the town needs another big-stage hall.

Opera House is booked with Civic Light Opera's "Camelot" next June, smack in the middle of Hurok's tour of London's Royal Ballet (ex-Sadler's Wells). Latter may have to pass up Frisco in consequence. Huge Civic Auditorium will still be shut down for extensive overhaul.

With the Alcazar's foldo at end of 1961, only two major legit houses —Curran and Geary—remain.

With 4,651 seats, Fox, built in the 1920 era of film palaces, is scheduled to come down any day. It has been used, besides a film house, as an opera house and a convention center.

Vassar, Princeton, Yale Parties at 'The Affair'

Bus parties for students from outlying colleges and universities are being organized for weeknight performances of the Broadway production of "The Affair." The set-up involves free transportation and refreshments are provided with the purchase of an orchestra seat at the regular $6.90 top.

Morton Gottlieb, general manager for the presentation, has thus far arranged parties from Princeton, Yale and Vassar.

'Black & White Minstrel' A Click in Melbourne

Melbourne, Oct. 30.

"Black and White Minstrel Show," which opened Oct. 6 at the Tivoli Theatre here, looms as a hot Aussie entry. The revue which originated in England as a BBC-TV series, was put together for its local outing by many of the individuals connected with the five-month-old production at the Victoria Palace, London.

George Inns, who devised and staged the British offering, repeated the stints for the Aussie version, which Tivoli Circuit and Aztec Services is presenting by arrangement with London producer Robert Luff. The cast here includes Penny Nichols, Bob Andrews, The D'Angolys, The Balcombes, The Pirates, Eddie Mendoza, Harry Curie, Jeff Hudson and Eric Whitley.

Rodgers-Lerner's 'Picked a Daisy'

The musical which Richard Rodgers and Alan Jay Lerner are writing for Broadway is titled "I Picked a Daisy," and deals with the subject of extrasensory perception. Rodgers and Lerner, who are collaborating for the first time on the tuner, which theyre also producing, revealed the title and theme of the show after keeping mum on the matter for months.

Rodgers, who took on the dual assignment of composer-lyricist for "No Strings" following the death of his longtime partner, Oscar Hammerstein 2d, is writing music only for the new show. Lerner, whose prior collaborator was Frederick Loewe, is authoring the book and lyrics. The musical, in which Robert Horton and Barbara Harris will have the lead roles, is scheduled to go into rehearsal in January under the overall direction of Gower Champion.

The presentation, which will be modern in setting, will begin a pre-Broadway tryout Feb. 4 at the Fisher Theatre, Detroit. It moves Feb. 26 to the O'Keefe Centre, Toronto, and March 12 to the Shubert Theatre, Boston. A Broadway theatre hasn't been set, but the preem is listed for April 4.

OSCAR BROWN JR. HAS LEGITER 'SLAVE STORY'

Oscar Brown Jr. has come up with a new legit musical. It's called "Slave Story," for which the singer-composer-lyricist has written the lyrics and script outline.

Unlike his first Broadway attempt, "Kicks & Co.," Brown hasn't done the music for this show. Lonnie Levister has written the score and the book writer has yet to be set. E. B. Marks Music, which published the "Kicks" score, is also handling "Slave Story," which has a romantic plot dealing with Negro life in the 1830's.

Producer auditions of the score and outline are presently under way and the show is being prepped with an eye toward presentation next fall.

Brown is also busy on other fronts. He's currently working with Steve Allen on a series of jazz shows for tv. Brown, who'll emcee many of the segs, has been taping some of the sessions. On Nov. 3 he'll do a concert at the Kauffman Auditorium, N. Y., and he has recently had his third Columbia LP issued.

'Hostage' and 'Playboy' Road Flops Reversed Their Clicks Off-B'way

To Publish Dialogs By Isherwood and Lawrence

Los Angeles, Oct. 30.

Arrangements have been made to publish the tandem novelist-playwright discussion between Christopher Isherwood and Jerome Lawrence at UCLA's Schoenberg Hall last Sunday (28).

Sponsored by the University of California, the Isherwood-Lawrence presentation is one of three in the series, "Images and Image Makers." The duo will compare the different approach of novelist and dramatist, speaking on "The Artist's Image of Our Society."

Isherwood's latest novel (Simon & Schuster) is "Down There on a Visit." Lawrence (of Lawrence & Lee) has a forthcoming drama, "The Diamond Orchid," under the Alfred de Liagre Jr.-Gilbert Miller banner. Sunday's dialogue is already a sellout at UCLA.

N.Y. Legit Plans TV, Radio Spots In Press Strike

The League of N. Y. Theatres has made preparations for member producers to use television and radio facilities for advertising current and incoming Broadway productions in the event of a newspaper strike in New York. Contracts between the N. Y. Newspaper Guild and the city's seven major dailies expire at midnight (Wed.) and the Guild has threatened to strike at that time if a new agreement has not been reached.

The League has notified members of the N. Y. Pressagents Chapter of the Assn. of Theatrical Pressagents & Managers that it intends having a radio and television program to advertise the shows on the boards and those coming in. The organization of Broadway producers and theatre owners also plans securing television and radio spots for the discussion of shows in a step similar to that taken during the 1958 newspaper strike.

Willard Keefe, pressagent for the League, has requested that the legit publicists provide him with items for the proposed tv-radio program.

K.C. STARLIGHT SEASON MADE $57,245 PROFIT

Kansas City, Oct. 30.

R. Carter Tucker, lawyer and civic leader, has been elected president of the Starlight Theatre Assn., succeeding Maurice S. Breyer, who served for two terms. Tucker was a member of the Kansas City Park Board when the Starlight Theatre opened in the city's big Swope Park.

Figures given by William M. Symon, business manager, show the theatre had 57,245 profit for the 1962 season. Income was $824,628 from eight productions of the 11-week season, and expenses were $767,383. It was the fourth straight year in the black, and there is now a balance of 186,000. That is best position for the venture since its opening in 1950. Over its 12 years of operation, the outdoor musical theatre has had eight successful seasons and four that lost money.

Tucker is the tenth president of the organization. He serced as vice-president last year.

Slate Peerce and Gorin For M'waukee 'Rigolletto'

Milwaukee, Oct. 30.

"Rigoletto" will be locally mounted at Milwaukee Auditorium Nov. 7, with John Anello directing for the Florentine Opera Co. Robert Simpson is stage director.

Cast is headed by Jan Peerce, tenor of Metropolitan Opera Igor Gorin, baritone of Chicago Lyric and Soprano Raquel Montalvo.

Supporting are Charles Koehn, John Balestrieri, Mary Ellen Regan, Arthur McManus, Lois Gentile, Sam Kashou, Joseph Budziszewski, Judith Serr and Bonnie Fugarino.

What's good for off-Broadway isn't necessarily good for the country. That's been demonstrated again this season by the quick collapse of two touring versions of successful off-Broadway productions. The casualties were "The Hostage," which folded Oct. 13 in Cleveland, and "Playboy of the Western World," which called it quits last Saturday (2) in Toronto.

Last season, a touring production of "Threepenny Opera," which had a record run of more than six years off-Broadway, closed after the first two weeks of a contemplated 35-week cross-country trek. Several months earlier another edition of the Marc Blitzstein adaptation of the Bertolt Brech-Kurt Weill musical flopped on the Coast.

"Hostage," an off-Boadway hit now in its 11th month at the One Sheridan Square Theatre, N. Y., was duplicated for the road by Perry Bruskin and Joseph H. Schaeffer. The touring venture was financed at $35,000, almost double the $18,000 capitalization for the off-Broadway production, which is sponsored by Norma Francis, Robert Margulies and Bell Productions, in which Bruskin is presumably involved, since he's a general partner with Miss Francis and Margulies.

Bruskin, who staged both the off-Broadway and touring productions of the Brendan Behan play, was responsible for investments of $1,260 in the off-Broadway offering and $11,750 in the road presentation, according to the published terms of the partnership. It's not specified whether he put up the money independently or as nominal head of a syndicate of backers.

The $23,250 balance of capitalization for "The Hostage" touring venture was brought in by attorney Bruce Becker, producer at the Tappan Zee Playhouse, Nyack, N.Y. Becker has also produced on Broadway and is operator of the off-Broadway Bouwerie Lane Theatre. The road production had been out for only three weeks when it

Rossellini's Feud With Frankfurt City Stage Akin to a 'Comic Opera'

Frankfurt, Oct. 30.

The row with Italian film director, Roberto Rossellini, has reached such proportion here that folks are dubbing his should-be would-be production "the NATO Opera."

Rossellini, earlier this year, was all over the front pages signing a contract with the Frankfurt City Stage to stage the first German presentation of his brother Renzo Rossellini's opera, "View From the Bridge."

The opera, based on the Arthur Miller drama, is due to open Nov. 7 at the City Stage's Grosses Haus, with great demand for tickets to this stand-out event. Rossellini, under the terms of the contract, was due to show up Oct. 15 to start rehearsals. But it was one week and many angry phone calls and telegrams later when he arrived. Then, he explained, he had been delayed by illness and his stay was also shortened because he has meanwhile been pacted to direct a film in Thailand. He explained that he would try to stick around for a week of rehearsals and that he would then turn the direction over to his nephew Franco, the son of composer Renzo Rossellini, who had also assisted at the opera's initial performances in Rome.

Roberto Rossellini explained to a startled cast, and to the outraged City Stage general manager Harry Buckwitz, that he could set up the opera in a hurry because he had done it before. But, countered city officials, he had never done it before in Germany, and never with an international cast. The lingo problem has complicated matters. Rossellini speaks no German, and two of the cast members, Caesare Curzi and Leonardo Wolovsky (who are both American but under contract to Frankfurt Opera) are Americans who can understand some Italian. One of the leading female singers is American Sylvia Stahlman, who has to answer the director's Italian comments in English. Several of the other cast members converse with him in Rock-a-Bye, Sailor!

London, Oct. 17.

Toby Rowland (in association with Pertpic Ltd.) presentation of a farcical comedy in three acts (four scenes) by Philip King and Falkland Cary. Staged by Dennis Main Wilson; decor, Ken Calder. Stars Renee Houston, Cyril Smith. Opened Oct. 16, '62, at the Phoenix Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

Edie Hornett ..... Patricia Hayes
Emma Hornett ..... Renee Houston
Henry Hornett ..... Cyril Smith
Mrs. Lack ..... Margaret St. Barbe West
Albert Tufnell ..... Ian Curry
Shirley Tufnell ..... Janet Butlin
Daphne Bligh ..... Wanda Ventham
Carnoustie ..... Ian Macnaughton
Robin Stebbington ..... John Warner

As its predecessors, "Sailor Beware" and "Watch It Sailor," were substantial commercial hits, Philip King and Falkland Cary presumably figure they are working a successful boxoffice formula in this new farce, "Rock-a-Bye, Sailor!" They have dished up the mixture as before, with just a few minor alterations in the ingredients. There's an element of doubt, however, whether their latest effort will also hit the jackpot.

As with the others, the comedy depends for much of its humor on its central character, the loud-mouthed and domineering wife and mother, Emma Hornett, this time played by Renee Houston. The novelty is wearing off, however, and the gimmick is becoming wearisome. The entertainment, such as it is, derives from personality, and hardly at all from the negligible plot values.

Apart from the central femme, all the stock characters from the previous shows have been retained. There is the meek and mild husband, again portrayed by Cyril Smith, the dithering sister-in-law (Patricia Hayes), the next door neighbor (Margaret St. Barbe West), daughter and sailor son-in-law (Janet Butlin and Ian Curry), and their two friends (Wanda Ventham and Ian Macnaughton). The one new character is a private secretary to the personal secretary to a princess (John Warner).

The story has been carried on in the style of a radio serial. By now the Hornetts have become grandparents, and the daughter and son-in-law arrive, with the infant child, for the christening. Ma Hornett stars her usual tantrums, and threatens to leave home, the sister-in-law is still bemoaning her great sorrow (she was left standing at the altar some 20 years previously), and Henry Hornett is still more actively concerned about the welfare of his ferrets, which he keeps in his back yard.

The infant apparently was the first child to be born in a hospital opened by a princess, and that explains the one new character in the story. He has come to present the lucky couple with a silver christening mug, with the compliments of the royal personage.

It was the role of Emma Hornett that made Peggy Mount a local star, and Renee Houston plays it in just the same earsplitting key. Cyril Smith has no difficulty in sustaining the part of the henpecked husband, and Patricia Hayes dithers effectively throughout the show. The others seem to enjoy the romp.

Dennis Main Wilson's staging is satisfactory, and Ken Calder has designed a set which suitably depicts the Hornett's modest living room. Myro.

End of Day

London, Oct. 18.

Oscar Lewenstein & Michael Cordon presentation of a program from the works of Samuel Beckett. Staged by Donald McWhinnie. Stars Jack MacGowran. Opened Oct. 16, '62, at the New Arts Theatre Club, London; $1.75 top.

The policy of the new management at the New Arts club theatre is to provide late-night dramatic entertainment, starting at 10:30 p.m., after the main evening show. The initial offering is a one-man performance of excerpts from Samuel Beckett's plays and novels, by Irish actor Jack MacGowran. The program runs about 90 minutes, with one interval, and during that time MacGowran fascinates, giving the full flavor to Beckett's precise, but enigmatic prose.

Clad as a tattered clown, with bowler hat, he is aided solely by a tree as setting and conveys through his own variety of mood and pace the comedy and despair that make up the Beckett mixture. The author suits this kind of presentation, and the works ransacked include "Waiting for Godot," as well as the less familiar "End Game" and "Krapp's Last Tape."

MacGowran includes the verbal bits within the framework of Beckett's mime play, "Act Without Words," which shows a tramp-like figure aspiring for a drink beyond his reach, or trying to hang himself on a tree, the branch of which is whisked away as soon as he gets the rope around it. This sets the atmosphere of poetic futility, and the extracts illustrate it. Least effective is the "Godot" nonsense monolog, delivered by Lucky in the play. It is lost without its context.

But the pathetic reminiscence from "An Abandoned Work" and the comic anecdote from "Molloy" are memorable achievements for MacGowran, and for director Donald McWhinnie, long familiar with Beckett as a radio producer. The main trouble is perhaps the timing of the show. Night-hawks are hardly the right audience for this type of thing. They would probably prefer a sophisticated revue, without any soul-probing. Otta.

An Evening with Anna Russell

London, Oct. 17.

Jack Waller Ltd. presentation of a comedy recital. Stars Anna Russell; features Robert Sutherland. Opened Oct. 16, '62, at the St. Martin's Theatre, London; $2.95 top.

After announcing the abandonment of her one-woman act in favor of a legit career, Anna Russell has returned for an engagement of 13 performances. The reason is that "Spoof," in which she toured recently, was a flop.

Typically, the comedienne uses this piece of misfortune to provide material for her current offering. With no holds barred, she recounts the tribulations of the tour in a parody of a Wagnerian opera. It is amusing but, like much of the material of this expert, polished witty musical parodist, it needs a fairly hefty knowledge of classical music for full appreciation.

When she is joshing German lieder singers, pop singers, Gilbert and Sullivan and so on, she is on closer terms with her audience. Her tag, "the funniest woman in the world," is a heavy buildup to justify, but there is no doubt that Miss Russell is unique in her own line. The act is drilled to the final grimace and verbal expression, but over a period of two hours the evening becomes an occasional strain.

Backing the skill of this cultured comedienne is her self-effacing deadpan accompanist, Robert Sutherland, who makes accompanying her look easy. Rich.

Troilus and Cressida

London, Oct. 16.

Royal Shakespeare Co. presentation of a two-act drama by William Shakespeare. Staged by Peter Hall, assisted by John Barton and Jerome Brehony; designer, Leslie Hurry; music, Humphrey Searle; fights arranged by John Barton; music recorded by the Royal Shakespeare Theatre Wind Band, leader Alec Whittaker; music director, Brian Priestman; deputy music director, Guy Woolfenden. Features Dorothy Tutin, Max Adrian, Derek Godfrey, Ian Holm, Michael Hordern, Roy Dotrice, Patrick Allen, Gordon Gostelow, Maxine Audleey. Opened Oct. 15, '62, at the Aldwych Theatre, London; $3.50 top.

Prolog ..... Trevor Martin

Thersites ..... Gordon Gostelow
Helen ..... Maxine Audley

Soldiers and attendants: Marian Diamond, Caroline Maud, Margareta Bourdin, Imogen Hassall, Caroline Hunt, Robert Jennings, Darryl Kavann, Roy Marsden, Ian Ricketts, Leslie Southwick, Henry Knowles, Stuart Richman, Terence Greenidge, Kenneth Ratcliffe.

Already seen at Stratford-on-Avon and the Edinburgh Festival, the Royal Shakespeare Co. presentation of "Troilus and Cressida" is a notable addition to the Aldwych Theatre repertory. It's a superbly mounted production performed by a front ranking cast, and deserves a longer run than its limited booking permits.

The one obvious note of criticism of Peter Hall's version is in the use of octagonal sandpit as his primary setting. Possibly there is some symbolic justification, but that is by no means apparent.

That apart, however, it's difficult to fault the production, and particularly the boldness in some of the casting. Max Adrian, for example, may not be everyone's idea of a great Shakespearean actor, but his performance as Pandarus, the scheming uncle of Cressida, is excellent. There is an essence of revue in his playing, but that is neatly controlled by subtle direction, and never gets out of hand.

There's also Dorothy Tutin's voluptuous performance as the wanton Cressida, the daughter of a traitor priest, who had left the Trojans and joined the Greeks. Not a nuance is missed in her portrayal. She's lively, vivacious and incorrigible. When she's sacrificed to the enemy she leaves her lover with great reluctance, but soon relaxes contentedly in the arms of a handsome Greek.

Derek Godfrey's powerful Hector and Patrick Allen's virile Achilles are well matched opponents, but for sheer intensity it would be hard to top Michael Hordern's brilliant and consistently moving interpretation of Ulysses. It's another highspot in the production.

Ian Holm's Troilus is also authoritative, but the role lacks some of the magic of the other parts. Other notable contributions are made by Roy Dotrice, Maxine Audley, Gordon Gostelow and John Ronane.

Although running for a full three hours, the production maintains a vigorous pace, and Hall's staging gives full play to the Bard's eloquent writing, as well as taking the best possible advantage of the action sequences provided by the Trojan war background. The duels, arranged by John Barton, merit special commendation. Myro.

La Brigitta
(The Motorbike)

Paris, Oct. 2.

Theatre Vivant presentation of two-act comedy by Jacques Audiberti. Staged by Francois Maistre; sets and costumes, Andre Acquart; music, Georges Delerue. Stars Francoise Spira; features Anne-Marie Coffinet, Francois Maistre, Pierre Tabard, Yvette Etievant. Opened Sept. 24, '62, at Theatre Athenee, Paris; $3 top.

Pilar ..... Francoise Spira
Boisbois ..... Francois Maistre
Raoul ..... Pierre Tabard
Concourt ..... Tailla Chelton
Gisele ..... Anne-Marie Coffinet
Fanny ..... Yvette Etievant

Offbeat playwright Jacques Audiberti has one hit to his name already this season, "Pomme, Pomme, Pomme" ("Apple, Apple, Apple") at the Theatre La Bruyere, but his second misses. Even avant garde buffs will have trouble understanding, or caring about this verbose symbolic opus.

The author's usual command of language, puns, metaphor and wit desert him in this one. It seems to be about a crippled urchin, who has only a motorbike to her name, but through surgery, drugs and high fashion becomes a film star and a South American heiress.

There is film projection and singing while this goes on. The acting is in different styles, which also confuses. The sets are stylistic.

Eastward Ho!

London, Oct. 18.

Mermaid Theatre Trust presentation of a comedy in two acts by Ben Jonson, George Chapman and John Marston. Staged by Josephine Wilson and Denys Palmer; decor and costumes, David Myerscough Jones; music arranged by Bridget Fry and Fritz Spiegl. Features Sydney Bromley, Brian Wright, Sheila Reid, Cardew Robinson, Aubrey Morris, Mary Denison. Opened Oct. 17, '62, at the Mermaid Theatre, London; $1.75 top.

Master Touchstone ..... Sydney Bromley
Quicksilver ..... Stephen Moore
Golding ..... Brian Wright

Officers, Prisoners and Musicians: Richard Dennis, Ronald Herdman, Juan Moreno, Keen Robson, Marvlin Wailes, Venetia Maxwell, Guy Oldham, Jeremy Montagu.

Ben Jonson, George Chapman and John Marston, the three authors of "Eastward Ho!," were hauled off to jail when this farcical romp was first presented in England at the beginning of the 17th century. A snide remark about "bought knighthoods" offended James the First, but by present

Molly Picon: Yiddish-Flavor Biog

Molly Picon, the elfin Yiddish comedienne who finally "made" Broadway after 50 years and clicked big in "Milk and Honey"—so big, in fact, that Frank Sinatra paged her for a film—has put into book form some affectionate reminiscenses about her grandparents. Titled "So Laugh a Little" (Messner; $3), it is of the genre of Harry Golden's "You're Entitle'," and also bears resemblances to Dore Schary's memoirs of the kosher-catering Schary Manor in Newark, N.J., into which he was reared before he became stage-struck.

Eth Clifford Rosenberg is the "as told to" collaborator but it is obvious from Miss Picon's homespun humor that it is authentic Picon albeit pungently put down and edited.

Against the panorama of life with grandmother, who seems to dominate, is the saga of Miss Picon's global appeal, for her Yiddish following ranged considerably overseas from her home-base on New York's Second Ave., the Broadway of Yiddish legit. Withal an affectionate and most readable book. Abel.

Business was still good for most Broadway shows last week despite a general decline. The Cuban crisis is figured to have contributed to the boxoffice sag, but it had little affect on several shows, of which five hit capacity. The sellouts were "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "Mr. President," "No Strings" and "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off."

The "Mr. President" take represented a house record for the St. James Theatre. Of the five shows that debuted last week, two closed Saturday (27). They were "Fun Couple" and "Perfect Setup."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta), Rep. (Repertory), DR (Dramatic Reading).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% repealed City tax (diverted to an industry-wide pension and welfare fund), but grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Grosses have been reduced by commissions where theatre parties are mentioned.

A Program for Two Players

(FISHER THEATRE, DETROIT)

Detroit, Oct. 16.

The meaningful words of Shakespeare, given fresh significance by the artful intonations of Helen Hayes and Maurice Evans, launched what should be a popular and prosperous tour of "A Program for Two Players" before a capacity audience last night (Mon.) at the Fisher Theatre.

The Shakespearean excerpts range from comedies to tragedies and back again, with no attempt at continuity of theme. There is a rhythm to the order of the selected excerpts, however, which pulses from the words themselves and from the care and the rich life Miss Hayes and Evans give to them.

The program begins with the curtain up on a stage terraced in the center but bare of scenery in the wings. On the center platform are a bench and two stools, with a vertical board behind the bench serving as a backdrop. Miss Hayes changes from a green to a black gown between the two acts. She uses scarfs skillfully to accentuate her costumes or to cover her hair. Evans appears in a tux throughout.

Miss Hayes is superb as the French-speaking Katherine in the proposal scene from "Henry V," while Evans reaches a highpoint as Hamlet. Together they are best in scenes from "Macbeth" and "The Taming of the Shrew."

There is not time, of course, to include all of the memorable scenes and speeches Shakespeare created in this first program for two players. It is evident from the audience enthusiasm that these same two players would be welcome to return again and again with more of these programs in the coming seasons. Tow.

OPERA BIG AT O'KEEFE

Canadian Repertory Gathers Substantial Grosses

Toronto, Oct. 30.

Canadian Opera Co. grossed a huge $96,489 last week in its second stanza at the 3,211-seat O'Keefe Centre here. The potential capacity gross at a $6 top was $106,956.

The program for the week was split between "Die Walkure," "Rigoletto" and "Hansel and Gretal."

Foo Hsing's $17,500

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

The Foo Hsing Theatre touring the U. S. under the auspices of The Republic of China, grossed a modest $17,500 last week in six performances at the Masonic Temple Auditorium here.

The house, which seats around 3,500, was scaled to a $4.50 top for a potential gross capacity of $45,000.

Troupe will play one week in Manhattan.

The staff for the Broadway production of "The Beauty Part," for which William Pitkin is designing the sets and Alvin Colt the costumes, includes Elias Goldin, general manager; Leonard A. Mulhern, company manager, and Bruce Laffey, stage manager.

Road: 'Me' Record $70,229 in Philly; 'Late' $23,260, N.H.; 'Pengo' 40G, Det.; 'Horn, $24,676, S.F.; 'Shot' $14,265, Pitt.

The Broadway-bound "Little Me" topped itself in Philadelphia last week by beating the house record it set the previous stanza at the Erlanger Theatre there. The sellout take tralied the frame's top-grosser, the Civic Light Opera production of "Kismet" in Los Angeles.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also prices on touring shows include 10% Federal tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Where subscription is mentioned the gross is the net after the deduction of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

standards it's a non-political, slightly bawdy comedy, without much pretension. It makes an interesting revival for the Mermaid, but that's all.

For all the intrigue, debauchery and faithlessness by husbands and wives, this is really a very moral piece. The rambling plot goes off at several tangents, but it's all neatly and cosily wrapped up at the end.

Cardew Robinson, best known for his vaude characterization of "Cardew the Cad," is cast as the worthless knight, Sir Petronel Flash, who cheats his bride out of part of her dowry, runs off with the wife of a usurer, gets shipwrecked in the Thames, and ends in jail. There are a host of side issues, all in the same genre, all involving the knight's improper adventures.

The comedy is broad and obvious, and Josephine Wilson and Denys Palmer have staged the two-acter with considerable energy, though the device of having the cast double as scene shifters becomes irritating. The acting matches the mood and spirit of the production, with pleasant contributions by Robinson, Sydney Bromley, Sheila Reid, Mary Denison and others. Apart from the shipwreck scene, the decor is unexceptional, although the costumes are mainly attractive. Myro.

Gelaschrankballade

(Strong-Box Ballad)

Berlin, Oct. 18.

Berlin Festival presentation of musical in two acts and prolog, with book by Heinz Wunderlich, music by Lotar Olias, lyrics by Max Colpet. Staged by Ilo von Janko; settings and costumes, Werner Viktor Toeffling; musical direction, Wolfgang Schmidt; choreography, Erwin Bredow. Opened Oct. 6, '62, at the Hebbel-Theatre, West Berlin, $3.50 top.

Papa	Walter Gross
Mama	Edith Schollwer
Schorschi	Harald Dietl
Kalle	Rainer Bertram
Martha	Regina Lutz
Loevgren	Alexander Ponto
Ingrid Berg	Eva Schuch
Policeman	Gerry Bretscher
Boehna	Nina Westen
Bank Client	Otto Hecht

About a year ago, Heinz Wunderlich and Lotar Olias arrived in Berlin with their musical, "Prairie Saloon," a remarkable success and one of the surprise hits of W-Berlin's 1961-'62 legit season.

Wunderlich, the author, and Olias, the composer, got together again for a second musical, "Strong-Box Ballad." They had Ilo von Janko as stager again, but the new piece is a disappointment if not an embarrassment.

"Strong-Box Ballad" is tough to review. It has such lovable comics as Werner Gross and Edith Schollwer, and they really try to be funny. But although von Janko is a capable director, not even a genius would be able to make a fairly amusing offering of the material. It lacks such requisites as wit, charm, pace and imagination, with merely corny if not silly gags and situations instead.

The plot concerns a prominent Swedish family. Daddy dreams of a career of a professional safe cracker. The family sets out to crack a bank safe. Naturally, they don't succeed in what they're aiming at. It all ends with the "ill got ill spent" phrase.

The songs are mere routine. One, sung over and over again, is "Slowly Falls the Snow," an old German Christmas lied. But it doesn't make the whole thing funnier.

"Strong-Bax Ballad" is probably the dullest and most dilettantish and also most disappointing offering within the 1962 Berlin Cultural Festival. Hans.

So War Herr Brummell

(So Was Mr. Brummell)

Berlin, Oct. 16.

Berlin Festival presentation of drama by Ernst Penzoldt. Staged by Walter Henn; settings and costumes, H. W. Leneweit; music, Herbert Baumann. Stars Rolf Henninger; features Eduard Wandrey, Else Ehser, Peter Kuiper, Klaus Miedel, Edith Schneider. At Schlosspark Theatre, Berlin; $3.50 top.

King George III	Eduard Wandrey
Queen Charlotte	Else Ehser
Prince of Wales	Peter Kuiper
George Bryan Brummell	Rolf Henninger
His Butler	Klaus Miedel
Duchess of York	Edith Schneider
Princess Auguste	Monika Peitsch
Prince William	Wolfgang Condrus
Little Edward	Herbert Gruenmann
Lady Fitzherbert	Karin Remsing

"Brummell," which the late German poet Ernst Penzoldt wrote nearly three decades ago (first performance at Viennese Burgtheater in 1934), can be divided into two parts—an amusing first and a rather dull second part. Penzoldt, who would have observed his 70th birthday this year, was regarded as one of the most amiable German poets, a lovable teller of humorous tales and the possessor of what they called "a wonderful heart."

This play, which is more like a biographical picture — books supplied with scenic gags and witty remarks, is actually just a nice portrait of a nice but tiresome character.

George Bryan Brummell, or "Beau Brummell," who lived in England 1778-1840, was the legendary first English dandy, the alleged inventor of the tails and many other fashionable things. Penzoldt had a predilection for scurrilous types and "Beau Brummell," the likeable snob, was certainly one.

The remarkable thing about this Berlin Festival production is its generous setup, including 33 parts, of which most are played by locally prominent names. Rolf Henniger, a firstclass actor, tries to make the most of his title role. And Walter Henn, a firstclass stage director, has done his best as stager. But the play is too thin. Hans.

Babilonia

(Babylon)

Rome, Oct. 15.

Carlo Dapporto presentation of revue in two acts, by Ruggero Maccari, with music by Mario Bertolazzi. Staged by Daniele D'Anza; dances, Ralph Beaumont; settings, Giorgio Veccia; costumes, Maurizio Monteverde. Stars Carlo Dapporto; features Marisa Merlini, Paolo Carlini, Dana Ghia, Vera Nikitish, Alfredo Rizzo, Genny Folchi, Heidi Stroh, Doll Twins, Bluebell Line (12), Jacqueline Mille, Mario Lal, Gianni Bui. Opened Oct. 12, '62, at the Teatro Sistina, Rome; $6 top.

"Babylon" represents a disappointing return by vet comedian Carlo Dapporto to the recently abandoned straight revue. Though carried by his immense knowhow and personal appeal, Rugerro Maccari's new show is weak in all departments, and it is difficult to see how even extensive doctoring can raise it to success.

"Babylon" attempts to spoof various current foibles of the Italian and international scene, but only occasionally hits its mark. One such is its take-off of Sophia Loren's "Boccaccio '70" episode, with Dapporto the object of the girls' raffle. This bit also contains choreographer Ralph Beaumont's most vivid and effective dances.

Other spoofs are aimed against other films, film stars, and video shows, but the humor mostly overreaches for blue touches and there are several unnecessary lapses in taste. Also out of key, though effectively rendered, is a song-and-dance number inspired by the Berlin wall, hardly the subject for fun.

Dapporto does his best to keep show afloat, validly aided by actors Paolo Carlini and Marisa Merlini, both wasted here and the latter appearing only briefly in second half. Other assists are provided by Jacqueline Mille, an able acro terper little used otherwise; Dana Ghia, a sophisticated looker with little to do, and several newcomers to the Italian stage, notably including Genny Folchi.

Mario Bertolazzi's songs are unmemorable though functional, while sets, costumes, and remaining credits, even allowing for opening night confusion, are routine. Hawk.

Methusalem

(Methuselah)

Berlin, Oct. 3.

Berlin Festival presentation of Frankfurt Staedtische Buehnen (Municipal Theatre) production of satirical drama by Yvan Goll. Staged by Heinrich Koch and Guenter Ballhausen; settings and costumes, Klaus Arnemann. At Hebbel Theatre, Berlin, $3.50 top.

Methuselah	Albert Hoerrmann
Amalie	Else Knott
Felix	Hans Korte
Ida	Marianne Lochert
Mirror-Methuselah	Christian Schmieder
Student	Hans Stetter

The well noted Staedtische Buehnen of Frankfurt came to Berlin with an interesting revival, "Methuselah," which brought back memories of the glorified 1920s. Written by the late Yvan Goll, a German-French avant garde playwright, this 75-minute (no intermission) satirical piece was first performed in Berlin in 1924 and has, within the years, seemingly lost nothing of its wit and sharpness.

The presentation emerges as an intellectual treat. Its satirical expressionism, especially its ironical poster-like texts and the cabaret-type characters show that the late Goll was a forerunner of today's avant garde playwrights notably Eugene Ionesco.

Goll pokes fun at the German bourgeoisie. His leading character here, Methusaleh, is a wealthy shoe manufacturer and the sketchy episodes reveal his criminal background, his money-madness, the banality of his relatives, etc. The satirical piece teems with provocative jokes and gags.

Heinrich Koch and Guenter Ballhausen have obviously enjoyed staging "Methusaleh" and found the right grotesque style for their presentation. The cast is headed by Albert Hoerrmann who turned in memorable performance in the title role. As his talkative arrogant wife and silly daughter, Else Knott and Marianne Lochert, rate mention. Hans.

N. Y. Times' Earnings Up

The N. Y. Times Co.'s consolidated net income was $1,552,000 for the nine months ended Sept. 30, 1962, against $978,000 for the first nine months of 1961. This is equivalent to $14.07 per share of common stock in 1962 as compared with $6.95 per share in 1961. The 1961 result included a net gain on the sale of Times Tower of $377,000, or $4.63 per share.

Net income from operations in the first nine months of 1962 was $618,000 compared with a loss of $271,000 in the same period of 1961.

Principal factors for the favorable comparison with the 1961 volume continue to be increased advertising volume, higher advertising rates and circulation prices, and improvements in operating efficiency.

Schickel's 'The Stars'

Films may have lost much of their glamor and loyal legions of fans but their memories linger on in song and story, and kingsize books such as "The Stars" (Dial; $10 pre-Xmas, and $12.50 thereafter). It's a handsome gift book by Richard Schickel, who has been a Show and Look senior editor, and designed by Allen Hurlburt, art director and a member of the Look editorial board. Schickel authored "The World of Carnegie Hall" but "The Stars," with its broader panorama, gives him a more sweeping canvas.

Book is well organized into decades from the '20s through the '50s, and with other subdivisions such as Comedians (Chaplin, Lloyd, Keaton, Marxes, Fields, Langdon and Mickey Mouse), 5 Heroes (Cooper, Bogart, Gable, Tracy and Stewart).

"The Stars" is both a good reference book and an attractive nostalgic harkback to when Hollywood truly was king. Abel.

Prolific Quondam P.A.

Victor Alexandrov, quondam film flack, has placed his two latest books, written in French, with British and American publishers. "A Thousand Years of the Kremlin's History," done originally by Fayard of Paris, will be brought out in London by Allen & Unwin and in the States by St. Martin's Press.

"The Tuckachevsky Case," Alexandrov's 17th published book, will receive simultaneous publication by MacDonald of London and Prentice-Hall in this country. Book appeared in Paris under imprimature of Lafond.

'Rescue In Denmark'

Simon & Schuster will bring out Harold Flender's "Rescue In Denmark" next spring an elaboration of the CBS-TV series he did on the Danish heroes who saved the entire Jewish population of Denmark from the Nazis.

On Nov. 4 NBC-TV's "The Eternal Light" will present a half-hour dramatization from another chapter in the book, called "The Bookseller."

M'w'kee 'Reporter's' Liabilities

Midwest Publishing Corp., publisher of the Milwaukee Reporter, a weekly (with daily aspirations), filed a bankruptcy schedule listed $73,038 in liabilities, with assets of $42,563.

Some 110 creditors were listed in this involuntary bankruptcy. Jerome F. Borkoski was indicated as president & sole owner of Midwest Pub., as well as the sole stockholder of the firm. Borkoski stated business was terminated Oct. 1. As of Oct. 1, the firm admitted insolvency and was then declared bankrupt by Federal Judge Robert E. Tehan.

Kingsize Ref. Book

"The Quest of the Golden Boy," by Richard Whittington-Egan and Geoffrey Smerdon (Barre; $9), is a biography, with letters, of Richard Le Gallienne (1866-1947), author of "The Quest of the Golden Girl," among other books, and father of actress Eva Le Gallienne.

Book is monumental in its totality, though the inclusion of vast correspondence often makes for heavy reading. Victorian background merges with Edwardian days, Paris years, and the time when brownstones were New York's best homes. Dozens of theatrical names abound here: Shaw, Wilde, Bernhardt and Langtry, from Le Gallienne's "golden" years, 1891-1900. Authors express special thanks to Eva and Gwen Le Gallienne, to the massive London theatre collection of Mander & Mitchenson, and to the Enthoven Theatre Collection in the Victoria & Albert Museum, London. A valuable, beautifully-published reference work. Rodo.

Kandel's 3d Gag Tome

Howard Kandel has written a third humor book, "BEDlam," to be published in mid-November by Kanrom. Again it's a compilation of drawings under which he's supplied risible captions. In 1960 Kandel, a Dallas Times Herald adman, teamed with Don Safran, Dallas Times Herald show biz columnist, on "Nudeniks, or Art Appreciation for the Layman."

Last fall the pair authored "Stoned Like a Statue," also published by Kanrom.

Morris L. Ernst's Doubleheader

Attorney-author Morris L. Ernst has two books due within the month.

One is titled "Untitled," published by Robert Luce Inc., and is a sequel to "Touch Wood," his last year's book of personal memoirs; and the other is via Macmillan. This is in collaboration with Alan U. Schwartz, a partner in the Greenbaum, Wolff & Ernst lawfirm, and tees off a series of books on law for nonlawyers. The first volume of the series is titled "Privacy or the Right to Be Let Alone."

Judith Anderson in Reading Tour To Replace Cancelled 'Menagerie'

Judith Anderson in a program of scenes from "Macbeth" and a condensation of "Medea" will be part of the Broadway Theatre League subscription series in a number of cities this season. The presentation, titled "Dame Judith Anderson and Company," is being booked for BTL dates by National Performing Arts Inc., in lieu of a previously - announced production of "The Glass Menagerie."

The vehicle starring Miss Anderson completes the regular series of four productions NPA is routing on the BTL circuit. The other three are the bus-and-truck productions of "Carnival," "Mary, Mary" and "Shot in the Dark." NPA is also handling the tour of the motorized edition of "The Sound of Music," but it is too heavy a production for short local bookings.

Thomas Brock and Robert Carson are the producers of the Anderson presentation, in which William Roerick, Lilyan Chauvin and Fred Forsman are also appearing. The production began a college-university tour early in October with Miss Anderson's agent, Bob Gaus, booking the dates. The move into BTL time, which NPA is handling, begins in November. Scenes from "Macbeth," with Miss Anderson as Lady Macbeth, make up the first act of the presentation and another two acts are devoted to the abbreviated version of "Medea."

The cancelled production of "Menagerie" was to have been produced by the National Repertory Theatre, of which Michael Dewell and Frances Ann Hersey are coproducers. Although NPA had signed contracts for the presentation of "Menagerie," it notified BTL, "It is our understanding that the author, Tennessee Williams, for personal reasons which are not entirely clear to us or to the producer, decided at the last minute to withdraw all production rights to 'The Glass Menagerie' throughout the world for an indefinite period of time."

The National Repertory outfit had intended replacing "Menagerie" with Eva LeGallienne's adaptation of Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler," starring Signe Hasso, but that venture has apparently been scrapped. An upcoming television presentation of the Ibsen play with Ingrid Bergman in the title role is believed to have been a principal negating factor.

Miss Hasso, incidentally, gave a tip-off that the project might not come off when she succeeded Leueen MacGrath in "The Cherry Orchard" during rehearsals for its scheduled Nov. 14 opening at the new Theatre Four, N. Y. She has since withdrawn from "Orchard" and the role has been taken over by Marian Winters.

Dewell and Mrs. Hersey, who toured a repertory of "Mary Stuart" and "Elizabeth the Queen" last season under the National Repertory Theatre Banner, were the producers the previous semester of two "Once Upon a Mattress" road companies which represented a loss of about double the combined investment, including 10% overcall, of $132,000 for the double enterprise.

Van Lennep Memorial

A memorial has been established at Harvard Univ. for Dr. William Bird Van Lennep, who was curator of the collection there from 1949 until his retirement in 1960. Dr. Van Lennep died last Aug. 20 in Bay Head, N.J., at the age of 56.

He taught drama at Harvard, Northeastern Univ., the New England Conservatory of Music and Emerson College, and wrote numerous articles on the theatre.

Sheree North on Coast In Child Custody Case; Not Back to 'Wholesale'

Hollywood, Oct. 30.

Sheree North, who came here to the Coast recently on a two-day leave from "I Can Get it for You Wholesale" on Broadway, has no immediate intention of returning east. The dancer explained she is here in connection with a child custody action, preceding her divorce suit against Dr. Gerhart Sommer.

"I was granted custody of the girl, three-year-old Erica, but I cannot go back to New York because the court won't allow me to leave California with her, and I am not willing to give her up. I am in violation of my contract with David Merrick producer of "Wholesale," and my attorney, Donald Leon, is now discussing a settlement with him," Miss North added.

The dancer said she was booked to appear on Red Skelton's CBS-TV show, but Merrick prevented it on grounds she was under contract to him. She did an "The Untouchables" spot, but it was just one day's work, and the producer did not intercede. Her role in the Broadway musical is being played by her understudy, Wilma Curly.

The court has not set a date on the divorce action.

MOREHOUSE BREAKS HIP, MISSES 'FRINGE' NOTICE

Ward Morehouse, drama critic for the Newhouse newspaper chain and the North American Newspaper Alliance, underwent surgery yesterday (Tues.) in Lenox Hill Hospital, N.Y., for a fractured hip. The veteran reviewer-columnist incurred the injury in a fall in his New York home last Saturday night (27) following his attendance at the Broadway opening of "Beyond the Fringe."

Because of the accident, Morehouse was unable to write a notice on "Fringe" and the Newhouse papers substituted Jack Gaver's United Press syndicate review.

Kramer, partnered in the new setup with James Parmer and George Ballas, will be in charge of the kitchen and service, as well as the entertainment.

Railroads Also Boost B.O. Asserts Ticket Broker

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your article on theatre tours failed to take into consideration the railroads—which have been pioneers in these promotions. I hesitate to make any total estimate of their ticket sales, because many of them conduct their own operations. However, in my instance, I would revise your figures upwards of at least 12,000 tickets.

In the last two weeks we were responsible for approximately 1,500 tickets, comprising two large tours. The chief beneficiaries were shows like "Milk and Honey" and "Take Her, She's Mine." These figures can very readily be checked with the respective theatres. Beginning this week and next, we have alreday sold at least 900 tickets through out-of-town group promotions, principally with the railroads.

Agent Produces 'Never'

first became associated with the comedy as Long's representative on just the one play. The author's regular agent is the William Morris Agency.

"Late" is a new title for the play which was first tried out in 1959 at the Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., under the label, "Cradle and All." Hollywood subsequently became agent for the work and again, after failing to line up a Broadway producer, decided to undertake sponsorship himself. His original aim was to present it in New York last season, but that didn't pan out.

He then altered his plans and arranged with Martin, a summer theatre packager who's also connected with the Theatre Guild, to send out a strawhat touring company last summer. The presentation, in which Paul Ford and Maureen O'Sullivan costarred, was directed by Gene Lasko and played eight weeks on the stock circuit under its original "Cradle" tag. It was the intention of Hollywood and Martin to solicit about $50,000-$60,000 for the financing of a post-stock stab at Broadway, probably as an interim booking.

However, the project took on a new complexion when veteran director George Abbott offered to stage a Main Stem production after seeing the stock version at the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse. Abbott was one of many connected with the Broadway theatre who were invited by Hollywood and Martin to see the show at Westport.

With Abbott in the picture, difficulties previously connected with getting a Broadway production of the play underway vanished. According to Hollywood, it was a cinch to raise backing for the show, the capitalization of which was set at $125,000, with provision for 20% overcall. Booking a theatre, he indicated was also a snap. Ford and Miss O'Sullivan were retained for the new production, in which Orson Bean also costars in the role played in 1959 by Dick Van Dyke. Loring Smith and Una Merkel costarred with Van Dyke in that production, which Henry Denker staged.

In addition to the Long play, Hollywood is also the agent for several authors involved in legit and film projects. They include Nina Farewell, a nom de plume for Mae Cooper and her sister, Grace Klein; Jerome Coopersmith and Ted Berkman. The Nina Farewell book, "Every Girl Is Entitled to a Husband," is being converted into a musical for Carol Burnett; Coopersmith has written the book for "Baker Street," a musical based on Sherlock Holmes stories, and Berkman's book, "Cast a Giant Shadow," has been sold to an undisclosed film company.

The musical version of "Every Girl," tagged "The Unfair Sex," is being authored by Ketti Frings with lyrics by Bob Merrill and music by Jule Styne, who also intends coproducing it with Lester Osterman under their firm banner, On Stage Productions. The Nina Farewell team, on the other hand, will do a film adaptation of "Mother Wore a Beard," an original story by Styne.

"Baker Street," which Alexander H. Cohen intends producing, will have music by Alan Freedman and lyrics by Dennis Marks.

Plan Paris English-Language Legit; Sponsors Here to Dig for Dough

The growth of an English-speaking population in Europe is cueing the spread of English-language legit on the continent. The latest of these English-spoken-here theatrical operations—already in existence in such places as Rome, Amsterdam and Frankfurt — is earmarked for Paris.

The Parisian project is being undertaken by the English-Speaking Cultural Theatre Assn., a nonprofit French organization formed in Paris last April as the Assn. Pour Le Theatre de Langue Anglaise. The association intends establishing a permanent professional English-speaking theatre in the French capital, the first since the English Players operated a repertory company in Paris from 1922 until the outbreak of World War II in 1939.

Backing for the Paris enterprise, which will derive its support from voluntary contributions, subscription plans and boxoffice sales, is being solicited both in Europe and in this country. Frawley Becker, an American who's been directing English-speaking plays in Paris for the U.S. government the last five years, will be managing director of the operation. He's also a member of the association's board of directors, as is Paola de Rohan-Chabot, treasurer of the venture.

Becker and Mme Rohan-Chabot were in New York last week to negotiate for plays and to seek backing for the project, capitalized at $200,000. The claim more than half has already been pledged. The initial season, scheduled to begin next January or February with "Golden Boy," is to encompass six presentations, each running six weeks.

Other productions slated for the getaway semester include "The Children's Hour," "The Millionairess," a double-bill of "The Zoo Story" and "The Death of Bessie Smith" and "Look Homeward, Angel." A company of around 30 is to be recruited for the first season, of which about 15 will constitute a permanent core of actors. Plans also call for the employment of stars and name directors from both Europe and the U.S.

The association, currently negotiating for a theatre, also plans touring productions throughout Europe, Africa and the Middle East. It likewise contemplates serving as a counsel for American and British theatrical groups making European tours. The association figures its productions will draw from the English-speaking resident colony of over 100,000 persons in Paris and the large body of international students in the French capital, as well as tourists.

Besides Frawley and Mme. Rohan-Chabot, the association's board of directors, includes American set designer Donald Cardwell, French legit stager Maurice Guillaud, French set designer Roger Harth (secretary of the association), French writers Colette de Jouvenel (president of the association) and Jean Paris, French actress Francoise Spira and Jean Ruadd, former secretary-general of the Comedie Francaise, and now secretary-general of the Jean-Louis Barrault Co.

Bolshoi, Frisco, $250,000

San Francisco, Oct. 30.

Bolshoi Ballet from Moscow playing eight performances here in the Fox, doomed-to-be-razed film house of 4,651 seats, grossed $250,000, per the Hurok management. Local scale was $8.75 to $12.50, contrasting with $15 top at the Metropolitan Opera House in N. Y.

Critical and public comment on the Russians was mixed.

Atlanta Season Offers 3 Subscription Series Of Legit and Concerts

Atlanta, Oct. 30.

The touring company of "The Sound of Music," starring Jeannie Carson and Hollander John van Dreelin, opened the local stage season last week with a four-performance stand at the 5,500-seat Municipal Auditorium.

The Atlanta Music Club's All Star Concert Series, now in its 30th season, has thus far presented the Rodgers and Hammerstein musical and the Orfeon Chorus, Coimbra, Portugal, and its schedule includes Leonie Rysanek, accompanied by Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, with Edwin McArthur as guest conductor, Nov. 20; the National Ballet of Canada, Jan. 9; Arthur Rubinstein, Jan. 14; the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Werner Torkanowsky, guest conductor, Augustin Anievas, piano soloist, Feb. 9; Erica Morini, April 2, and the Hague Philharmonic, William van Otterloo conducting, April 26.

Showtime Series will offer the Royal Scots Greys and Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Thursday night (1); the touring company of musical "Carnival," Nov. 28. "A Leonard Bernstein Gala," starring singer Robert Rounseville and Claire Alexander, with soloists and full orchestra and the American Ballet Theatre production of Jerome Robbins' "Fancy Free," March 30.

All these shows will be presented at the Auditorium, the only remaining place in Atlanta where flesh shows can be presented since the Tower, the city's sole legit showcase, has been converted into a Cinerama theatre operated by Martin circuit.

Ralph Bridges, president of Famous Artist Series, is presenting a series including "Festival '62," with Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and featuring Jim Backus as narrator "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," plus Peter Nero and the American Folk Trio, last Sunday (28); Liberace, Dec. 6; duo-pianists Ferrante and Teicher, Feb. 17, and Fred Waring and the Pennsylcanians, March 19.

'Blondes' of London To Replace 'The Men'

London, Oct. 30.

With the scheduled fold next Saturday (3) of "The New Men" at the Strand, the theatre will be taken over Nov. 7 by "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," moving over from the Princes. The management and cast of the musical are understood sharing the estimated $8,400 cost of the transfer.

The Princes is to be reconstructed before reopening early in 1963 with the London production of "How to Succeed in Business without Really Trying." The house will be renamed the Shaftesbury.

Set 'Horn,' Evans-Hayes' '2 Players' for Denver

Denver, Oct. 30.

Andrews-Garner Attractions Inc., which recently opened its 1962-63 season with the Victor Borge show, "Comedy in Music," at the Auditorium Theatre have booked four more events.

Skedded for December is Hal March in "Come Blow Your Horn" to be followed in January with Maurice Evans and Helen Hayes in "A Program for Two Players." Set for February are Leonard Bernstein's "Gala" and guitarist Andres Segovia. Negotiations are under way for several other shows and concerts.

'Eight' for USO Tour

"Eight . . . on the Go," a revue produced by M. J. Boyer, will embark Nov. 12 on a three-month USO tour of U. S. military installations in the Mediterranean area. The revue, using musical numbers from Broadway productions, was a USO entry last year in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Berlin.

The title reflects the number of people involved in the presentation. There are six performers on stage, four femmes and two males, and musical accompaniment by a pianist and drummer. The troupe, including Miss Boyer, was organized in Chicago. Spain, Saudi Arabia, Crete, Italy, Greece, Iran, Turkey and Ethiopia will be covered on the approaching tour, which marks the seventh time Miss Boyer has been involved in a USO overseas presentation as producer-director.

Also appearing in the revue will be David Evans, Mary Ann Rose, Anita Gordon and Henry and Al Valor. Working the piano and drums, respectively, will be Andy Anderson and Bill Schwartz.

'Hostage' and 'Playboy'

closed in Cleveland, following dates in Montreal and then Toronto.

A Broadway production of the comedy had a 16-week run during the 1960-61 season and subsequently toured, playing both Montreal and Toronto last year. Geoff Garland, Paddy Croft and James Cahill, who had left the off-Broadway production to appear in the touring version of the play, are now back with the New York company.

"Playboy," which had scored off-Broadway in 1958 when revived by the Irish Players, put in a week in Baltimore, a week in Montreal, plus two one-niters prior to closing in Toronto after playing five performances there. The Irish Players also appeared in the touring production capitalized at $25,000.

The John Millington Synge play was presented on the road by National Tours Ltd., a subsidiary of Continental Concerts Corp., the booker for the "Playboy" and "Hostage" tours. However, the Independent Booking Office, which sets dates for most touring productions, worked with Continental on lining up the prime time engagements played by the two productions.

It's figured that most or all of the coin invested in the two productions has been lost. Last season's touring presentation of "Threepenny" was capitalized at $35,000 with provision for 20% overcall, and the loss on the venture is believed to have exceeded the investment. The production of "Threepenny," which folded on the Coast, represented an estimated loss of around $135,000.

ceptable as the garrulous former poet, Carmen Mathews is excellent in the unreal part of the silly wife, Jack Kelly is passable as the mixed-up lawyer and Salome Jens is believably colorful in the exaggerated role of the decadent actress.

Albert Johnson has designed a properly gaudy cabaret interior on several levels, and Alice Gibson has provided the striking costumes. It's hard to imagine Broadway taking to this period piece, but it might be picture material if skillfully adapted, and it would be a natural for one of those hokus television dreams like "The Roaring Twenties."

Of course, that's hardly what Kingsley presumably had in mind.

The Fun Couple

Jay Julien presentation of comedy in two acts (six scenes), by Neil Jansen and John Haase, adapted from the latter's novel. Staged by Andreas Voutsinas; settings and lighting, Eldon Elder; costumes, Ray Diffen; music, Albert Hague; associate producers, Andre Goulston, Eldon Elder. Stars Jane Fonda, Bradford Dillman; features Daivd Hurst, Dyan Cannon, Ivor Francis, Ben Piazza. Opened Oct. 26, '62, at the Lyceum Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Gill Stanford ..... Bradford Dillman

Richard Dexter Wade Sr. ..Ivor Francis
Truck Driver ..... Delos V. Smith Jr.
Meter Maid ..... Mary Mercier

Is "The Fun Couple," which opened last Friday night (26) at the Lyceum Theatre, the worst play of all time? Perhaps not. Now let's see. There was—but never mind. Just say this one is terrible.

For the record, then, "The Fun Couple" is an adaptation by Neil Jansen and John Haase of a novel by the latter. Jansen, it should be noted, is the pseudonym of Jay Julien, a lawyer by profession, a producer by vocation and, unfortunately, a playwright by insistence. In this instance he's a double culprit, being not only co-adaptor but producer.

The concoction is about a newlywed pair who try to preserve that initial romantic rapture by making a playful, make-believe routine of marriage. After less than one act the effort palls on hubby, and before the second and final act is over, even wacky wifey is fed up. Judging only by the number of walkouts, the first-nighters were ahead of both of them.

Jane Fonda and Bradford Dillman are costarred, with David Hurst, Dyan Cannon, Ivor Francis and Ben Piazza featured. Andreas Voutsinas directed (and there oughta be a law). Eldon Elder designed the turntable setting and Ray Diffen did the castumes, what there was of them. A final note—not even the decorative physiques of the Misses Fonda and Cannon, extensively revealed in the skimpiest of outfits, weren't enough to overcome the opening night lethargy out front.

The Perfect Setup

Martin Melcher presentation of comedy in three acts (six scenes), by Jack Sher. Staged by Lamont Johnson; settings, Jack McCullagh; costumes, Frank Thompson; lighting, Charles Elson; associate producer, Selma Tamber. Stars Gene Barry, Angie Dickinson, Jan Sterling. Opened Oct. 24, '62, at the Cort Theatre, N.Y.; $6.90 top weeknights, $7.50 Friday and Saturday nights.

Janet ..... Angie Dickinson
Paul ..... Gene Barry
Ann ..... Jan Sterling

There are two captivating actresses but not much play in "The Perfect Setup," which opened last Wednesday night (24) at the Cort Theatre. The combination is skimpy for Broadway, but perhaps could have been a popular item for the road if it had been given an extensive preliminary tour. It should be a natural for stock (particularly if the two-set presentation can be simplified), but seems slight for pictures.

The fetching actresses in this three-character comedy by Jack Sher are Angie Dickinson and Jan Sterling, and they're also winning players. Also notably on hand as the Lothario both ladies are supposed to be mad for is Gene Barry, whose rep as the television personification of Bat Masterson may help at the boxoffice. He appears to be a competent actor, if no virtuoso as a light comedian.

As the author of this minor triangle whimsy, Sher has presumably been influenced by the spectacular success of such small-cast romantic comedies as "Mary, Mary" and "Two for the Seesaw" in particular, and several dozen lesser money-makers in general. In this wife-in-every port variation of the old triangle situation the scene alternates, once in each of the three acts, between the cozy Manhattan apartment where the publicity executive hero spends two evenings a week with his career girl mistress and the handsome Scarsdale home where he's a husband and father at other times.

Somehow, Sher has failed to make "The Perfect Setup" funny enough to register as farce or sufficiently meaningful to hold audience interest as romantic comedy. It's not difficult to see how Paul would be attracted and held by two such beguiling women as Janet and Ann. But Paul is not so much a heel as an incurable bungler, and he forfeits concern not as a two-timer but as a goof. Maybe he'd be better and the play stronger if Barry were an expert farceur. But that's just speculation.

Lamont Johnson has staged the piece with routine skill, Jack McCullagh has designed believable and becoming sets for the New York apartment living room and the Scarsdale mansion bedroom, Frank Thompson has supplied good looking costumes, including a couple of scanty outfits for the ladies to wear at bedtime, and Charles Elson has devised lighting that varies in intensity with the mood of the action.

In short, Martin Melcher has provided a professional and tasteful production for an inadequate play.

French. But when the topic turns to German, and the terms of the contract, Rossellini does not understand the language.

After a week's rehearsal, the opera is being put together at the moment by the conductor Alexander Paulmueller. Rossellini explained that he had taken a very low salary to assist his brother, and it is at the moment uncertain as to whether he will fulfill the terms of the contract which call for him to remain until the Nov. 7 premiere.

Meanwhile, the incident has become a comic opera in the eyes of the German public as the papers are full of the gossip about the production.

Showmen's Big Think

traditional approaches are increasingly obsolescent. The need in wide sectors of theatre operation is for attunement to the "new frontier" of film enterprise.

Curtain-raiser on the powwows tees off with the Theatre Owners of America convention next week at the Loew's (Tisch) Americana Hotel in Bal Harbour, Fla. The Allied States Assn., lesser of the two groups, stages its rival powwow at the Cleveland-Sheraton Dec. 3-5.

Old lamentations will echo predictably at both conclaves. But crepe-hanging may be less gruesome than in bygone years. For amid the plentiful uncertainties of 1962, the heartening signs for theatres include the rising attendance curve (2% ahead or last year, per latest Sindlinger figures—see box), and the now-hopeful outlook for 20th-Fox.

Dependable data is hard to come by as to the building of new theatres during 1962, but there has been a significant number of hardtops and drive-ins, betokening business confidence in the medium. Expansion of some circuits is a story of optimism not to be downbeated, whatever the boxoffice disappointments of the recent summer.

None of which obscures perennial vexations. TOA is themed to the "challenge of progress," while National Allied will concentrate on "patron motivation." It remains to be seen how close the formal scripts of both conventions touch the emotional nerve ends of those in attendance.

First, as ever, are product and distributor relations. After that, pay tv competition, a lengthening shadow now that the courts have affirmed the going Hartford (RKO General) test, plus the imminent and heavily-financed Home Theatres (Telemeter) project for the U.S. southwest, as well as the FCC-cleared Teleglobe test for Denver. Exhibs will be mindful, too, of recent pronouncements from some key influentials of the industry's production sector, all hitting the note that "change" is inevitable.

Fight Against Toll

Hardnosed opposition to tollvision is not, to be sure, uniform in the exhibition community. Witness the Durwood circuit's commitment to Home Theatres, and Alliance Amusement's (midwest) avidity for a community antenna network parallel to its 70 theatres. Others remain aloof, but in some instances outward opposition is simply mask for q.t. interest.

As to product, the scanty numbers still make for brooding. Ambitious "announcements" emanating from the independents have rallied some spirits but failed to impress others. What of the hesistant major studios?

The cinemas can still hope for some amelioration from their own production entity, Ace Films, but though officially constituted with Sid Markley at the helm, it is still a long way from working up any appreciable steam. At the moment, in fact, it remains much preoccupied with financing.

Levine and Brandt

Interesting, in view of product woes, is the attention fastening on the "specialized" film, evidenced chiefly by the TOA agenda which has scheduled appearances by Joseph E. Levine (Embassy) and Richard Brandt (Trans-Lux). Both can be counted on for vigorous remarks in support of new frontiers for the marquee. They can, of course, buttress their siren calls with some impressive playoff and boxoffice data.

Another expectation—this one from the TOA deliberations—is for a fresh appeal for modification of the Paramount, et seq., Consent Decrees, an effort in which the exhib body is aligned with the craft unions under the International Alliance umbrella. Hoped for from modification is production's reentry into the exhibition field, theory being that such a move would spur the manufacture of features. On the opposite side, the majority voice within National Allied is expected to continue unremittingly hostile to any tampering of the decrees. Contrarily, in fact, the dominant mood in this organization is for enforcement to the letter.

As for the aforesaid attendance recovery, this bit of happiness is a mixed blessing. A general redistribution of business, correlated with shifts in populace and new attendance habits, has made for a boom in new cinemas at the expense of established palace, with neighborhood subsequents likewise feeling pinched. Unmistakably, those who have harkened to the new opportunity are in the minority.

Max Mixing In

Of those listed for speechmaking by TOA, Max Youngstein is doped for top impact, on the assumption he will use the confab to spell out the program of his new show business enterprise (associating Jerry Pickman and Charles Simonelli), but with stress on theatrical film plans. All that's known now is that the new setup is for diversified entertainment participation.

Another figure (among many) skedded to address the TOA pow is that new "Spaniard," Paul Lazaraus Jr., Samuel Bronston's exec v.p. His appearance is especially pertinent because of exhibition's financial assist (via the Congress of Exhibitors) to the now-in-production Bronston epic, "55 Days at Peking."

proved to be our biggest fair moneywise."

Both Negroes and whites toured the midway and enjoyed the unusual run of attractions. It was a peaceful, happy crowd that strolled about sans any incidents. Midway operators praised the history-making integrated fair. "The Negroes spent their money, had a terrific time and were just tops," one operator said.

Wynne, who said the 1963 fair will be staged Sept. 20-28, asserted that "all Mid-South Fair officials were just tickled pink to open our doors to all—especially in view of the Oxford situation."

In addition to the hefty attendance, several shows also clicked at the b.o. The Chuck Connors & Rodeo Show lured 39,641 payees in six days at the Fairgrounds Arena at a $2.50 top with beaucoup Negroes at all performances. The Andy Griffith vaude show drew 8,642 customers for a one-day, two-show stint at $2.50 top.

favorable to what in plain language was just dirt. He said the public, reading reports of eminent critics in the press, were frankly bewildered by such talk. They floundered helplessly, waiting "for that sensible and wholesome assessment which this Council modestly provides," he added.

Tomlinson asked for a return of plays that are neither sordid nor murky, which could be seen with pleasure and without contamination. He also suggested that broadcasting authorities should realize that the word bloody is being used far too frequently. But bearing in mind the volume of entertainment, either broadcast or televised, "the wonder is that so few complaints need to be made," he concluded.

MCA's Legiters

MCA is of a mind to assess legit originations for homescreen transmission.

Not overlooked in all this by the MCA braintrusting is the potential advent of tollvision as the country's major entertainment force. There isn't the slightest doubt that MCA anticipates an impressive plunge if, as and when, paysee becomes the established medium of mass attention.

As disclosed on the Coast over the weekend, MCA is to back musical and drama alike, with financing to come variously from Revue, Universal or Decca, or all three. As a major label, Decca has been notably reticent in making B'way alliances. It has, in fact, been generally a stand-pat "catalog" operation, which policy is certain for envigoration as an MCA component.

That Decca has, on the strength of its catalog, been a moneymaker is less the point now than whether it has neglected to realize its full potential in the market.

after the Cuban quarantine speech?"

Cabled account stated that Khrushchev made no allusion to Cuba but complimented the singer's wife on the beauty of American women. To which Hines replied, "May God bless you."

Blessings are not characteristic in the openly atheistic Soviet Union. But (not mentioned in any of the stories) they are characteristic of Hines, an active religious figure in private life, composer of a biblical opera, and often connected with Salvation Army projects. Hines is probably the only singer at the Met capable of openly remarking in a private conversation, "I've dedicated myself to Christ."

something to do with this, I think is a fair statement but it is even more to the credit of those major producers of tv fare, that they are more carefully following the spirit and intent as well as the language of the Code. Doubtless the attack (on tv) will errupt next year once again as it always does. But our critics are going to have to choose another avenue down which to march, for to borrow an old slogan from the movies, "television is better than ever.'"

Bronson stated that the Code's Washington office is "much closer to the station operators today than at any time in its 10-year history." There are, he said, more inquiries and more contacts. "Our record," he added, "in Television Code adherence continues to improve, and we find evidence of this daily."

He emphasized that "rarely" are wild charges of overcommercialization, heard as often as a year ago, voiced today.

Bronson also disclosed that a "major review" will be made of commercial time standards contained in the Code will be made when the TV Code Review Board meets in December.

Aim of the review is obviously to satisfy Chairman Newton Minow. Bronson described the object as an effort to find an answer to the "almost never ending riddle" of shaping a uniform set of commercial time standards which will be equitable for all stations. He added that the solution "must not unwittingly prejudice the rights of the public and the majority of subscribers."

some rock parody fireworks. Accompanied by two gents costumed in outdated suits, they mugg and dance up a storm. Miss Newborn does a solo number in okay fashion.

Lou Elliot, a femme chirper who performs in a gown more suitable to the Persian Room than the Apollo, overdoes her delivery and pays lettle attention to her lyrics. She needs further experience. The Duprees are a smooth ofay quintet of singers who keep their material in harmonic focus. They specialize in the ballad vein and do it well.

Gigi lends a big belting style to her singing that, although a bit too raucous at times, shows some promise. She could do with some toning down and less facial contortions. The Parkettes, a terping unit of four gals and two fellas, is up to its usual acrobatic form. They mix some comedy and wild effects to keep their turn lively.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, Oct. 30.

Winifred Atwell (accompanied by Cy Bevan Group (3), Dickie Valentine (musical director, Hal Chambers), Stan Stennett, Alex Donn & Nick Nicols, The De Vere Girls (6), Gordon L. Rolfe House Orch; twice-nightly.

Winifred Atwell, dusky West Indies pianist, is the undoubted star of this ultra-lightweight layout, and clicks solidly with her classical and jazz pianistics. Distaffer, much slimmed-down since her last appearance here some years ago, brings her piano magic to the headline slot and garners strong mitting.

Opening with a Spanish folk song, Miss Atwell moves into theme music from "Exodus," which is received by a hushed audience, and winds her longhair tunes with excerpts from "Rhapsody in Blue." While she changes costume and grand piano, Dickie Valentine romps on for a singing introduction to the honky-tonk piano section of act.

In this, Miss Atwell lets herself go with her own arrangement of the Charleston, a medley of waltzes, and a selection of fave ditties. Backing by the Cy Bevan trio is immaculate, though group could be seated in more artistic setting.

Valentine, former singing idol of U. K.'s teenagers, and now a somewhat chubby, well-built entertainer, is a lively personality. Opens with "Things We Used to Do," then warbles "What Kind of Fool Am I?" His between-songs patter is n.s.g., and he should give up joke telling if he can't find better fun fodder.

Valentine also includes impressions of Johnnie Ray and British singer David Whitfield. He winds with a medley that brought him face, such as "Finger of Suspicion," "Venus," etc. He has strong musical aid from Hal Chambers, who takes over orch baton from resident conductor Gordon Rolfe for this act.

Stan Stennett offers his w.k. madcap comedy in patter, song and with guitar, though he's asked to make too many appearances on bill. The comedy of Alex Donn & Nick Nicols is too similar to that of Stennett, and, considering they're the only two support acts on layout, it's understandable the customers should resent the clash. The six De Vere Girls, conventional dance lineup, complete the show.

Despite Miss Atwell's artistry, the layout is much too lightweight and lacks sufficient value. Addition of at least two other acts is needed. This is another instance of why British vaudegoers are so quickly bored of the fare provided in provincial centres. Gord.

ABC, Paris

Paris, Oct. 20.

Dario Moreno, Menestrals (3), Jocelyne Joyca, Enrico Macias, Trio Ghezzi, Jean Davis, Colombianos (3), Renaldo Sanchez; $2.50 top.

Dario Moreno, a rotund singer with condescending but connecting humor, has become a vocal star in spite of critics. He has a big voice and gives out the usual saccharine Latino numbers as well as more dramatic ballads. His musicianship is okay.

However, he lacks a personal, projective quality for good foreign chances. Yet Moreno, in his self-deprecating patter and obvious ballads, clicks with locals and is doing fine biz in this two-week stay.

Jocelyne Jocya is a svelte tall blond who is developing into a fine dramatic singer. Enrico Macias is an Algerian singer with a bounce and lilt that show him as a promising newcomer. Both he and Miss Jocya are reviewed under New Acts.

Menestrals are a classy trio with fine songs underlined by expert production aspects and solid choral work to make this a fine act. Trio Ghezzi mix snappy acrobatics with knowing pratfalls and knock-about comedics to emerge top filler.

Jean Davis patters amiably while performing familiar but well done magico turns. Colombianos do acceptable Latino songs but without flair to lift these folk ditties into more demanding house needs. Renaldo Sanchez does a folk dance of vague Latin origin that does not have the stature for vaude needs. Mosk.

Eilath, on the Red Sea, where the yearly average of clear, sunny days is 350-360.

Scheduled investment is $4,000,000, of which Engel will invest $1,000,000, the Rothschild family, which owns most of the choice land in Caesarea, will invest another $1,000,000, the Government promised a long-term development loan for a third million while balance would be raised from other unidentified sources.

During his stay here, Engel discussed the project with Pinchas Sapir, Minister of Commerce and Industry, Asher Hirschberg, Head of the Film Department in the Ministry and representatives of the Ministry of Finance.

There are presently two studios in Israel: Geva and Israel Motion Picture Studios in Herzlia. However, Engell's venture is on a much larger scale and would revolutionize the Israeli film industry.

Engel has returned to the States. If all goes as planned, the new operation will open in about year-and-a-half to two years.

were briefed earlier by an AT&T executive who told of the three methods of achieving around-the-clock use of Telstar throughout the world:

(1) "low altitude satellites," like Telstar, of which about 140 would be needed at once to facilitate steady transmission; (2) "non synchronous high altitude" (23,000 miles up) satellites of which about 40 would be necessary; (3) "synchronous" (i.e., moving always at the same speed as the earth) satellites, in a belt around the equator, in which case only three satellites would be needed.

Naturally, someone else suggested, if the transmissions were to be only between the U.S. and Europe fewer satellites would be needed.

OBITUARIES

STANLEY RESOR

Stanley Burnet Resor, 83, chairman of the board of J. Walter Thompson until his retirement last year, died Monday (29) in LeRoy Hospital after a long illness. For nearly half a century he was one of the vital sparks in U. S. advertising.

Resor was a founder of American Assn. of Advertising Agencies in 1917 and its president in 1923-24. He joined the J. Walter Thompson Co. in his native Cincinnati in 1908 and came to the agency's main N.Y. office in 1912. Two years later he became vice president and general manager. He was president of the company from 1916 to 1955 and thereafter board chairman.

Resor, throughout his career, sought to persuade the advertising industry to present a good public image of itself. He was active in philanthropy, holding the post of director of the Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat Hospital and of the Boys Club of America.

He leaves a wife and three children.

LOUISE BEAVERS

Louise Beavers, 60, veteran Negro actress, died of a heart attack Oct. 26 in Hollywood.

Starting her film career in 1924, she freelanced for years and in 1954 toured with Mae West. Her first major film role was in the 1934 production of "Imitation of Life." Other films in which she appeared were, "Belle Starr," "The Gold Diggers," "Glad Rag Doll," "Barnum Was Right," "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House," "Coquette," "Made For Each Other," "Ladies of the Big House," "What Price Innocence" and "Bombshell." Her most recent film was "All the Fine Young Cannibals" in 1960 and in the "Swamp Fox" tele series. She also succeeded the late Hattie McDaniel as "Beulah" in the tele series.

Her husband survives.

DANA BURNET

Dana Burnet, 74, playwright and author of numerous short stories, died Oct. 22 in Stonington, Conn.

Several of his plays were produced on Broadway. Among them were "Four Walls," which he wrote with George Abbott; "The Habitual Husband," "The Boundary Line" and "Bad Manners." His magazine stories appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal, Harper's, Redbook and other mags. He also published seven books, among them "The Lark," "The Pool" and "The Question."

His wife, son, stepson and brother survive.

CATHERINE GALLIMORE

Mrs. Catherine Gallimore Anderson, 57, former Broadway dancing star, died Sept. 3 at her home in Lake Carey, Penna.

In the early 1920s, she joined Gertrude Hoffmann's First All-American Ballet. In 1922, she joined the cast of the Ziegfeld Follies, and appeared with the Follies for three years. Later she was the featured dancer at the opening of the famed New Moulin Rouge in Paris, where she was held over for nine months. Mrs. Gallimore returned to the U. S. in 1926, and appeared in the Shubert musical, "Night in Paris," at the Casino de Paris.

In 1928, she moved into another Shubert production which proved to be her greatest personal triumph. It was "Artists and Models" in which she co-starred with Jack Pearl, Belle Baker and Ted Lewis. She retired from the stage in 1935.

Her husband survives.

GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS

George Matthew Adams, 84, founder of the George Matthew Adams Newspaper Service and an art and book collector, died Oct. 28 in Riverdale, New York, after a long illness.

He was the author of a column which started in 1910 as "Pepper Talks." The title was changed to "Today's Talk," and material from it has been compiled into six books. Adams joined the Martin Advertising Co. in Chicago as a department manager in 1902. He remained there until 1907 also working as an advertising writer for Swift and Co. for three years.

He left these two jobs to form his own syndicate, then called Adams Newspaper Service. He added his first and middle names to the title in 1916. His books include, "You Can," "Up," "Just Among Friends," "Take It" and "Better Than Gold." His latest book, published in 1959 was "The Great Little Things." Among the writers that Adams syndicated were Abe Martin, Philip Wylie, Jack London, Rex Beach and Edna Ferber.

His wife and two sons survive.

BLAYNEY F. MATTHEWS

Blayney F. Matthews, 68, longtime Warner Bros. police chief and in charge of security for Academy ceremonies for years, died Oct. 23 in Hollywood. Prior to joining WB in 1935, he was an FBI agent and chief of Bureau of Investigation of Los Angeles' District Attorney's office.

His wife, daughter, two brothers and four sisters survive.

HUGH FULTON

Hugh Fulton, 54, prominent New York lawyer and a director of Technicolor Corp., died Oct. 24 of a stroke in his Rockefeller Plaza office. He lived in Flemington, N.J.

As an assistant U.S. Attorney General in the early '40s, he led an investigation of the late motion picture magnate William Fox, which led to Fox's trial and conviction on a fradulent bankruptcy charge.

In 1941, Fulton joined then-Senator Harry S. Truman's special committee probing the U.S. national defense program. In the '44 presidential campaign, he served Truman as an adviser-speech writer.

Wife and a brother survive.

BENN HALL

Benn Hall, 51, a public relations man with numerous clients in publishing, died Oct. 23 in New York. He formed Benn Hall Associates in 1946 and recently incorporated it. Its clients include publishers, authors and lecturers.

Born in N. Y., he worked from 1929-36 in the Sunday department of the New York Times. He later was on the editorial staff of Billboard, and from 1938 to 1941 was with Radio-Tv Daily. Then he became director of advertising and publicity for Duell, Sloan and Pearce,, book publishers. In 1943-45, he also worked on the editorial staff of the New York Mirror. For the next two years, Hall was publis relations director and assistant to the vicepresident of Doubleday & Co., Inc.

His wife, son, two daughters and mother survive. Incidentally, Mrs. Hall will continue the p.r. business.

MARION TELVA

Marion Telva, 64, a leading mezzo-soprano with the Metropolitan Opera in the 1920s, died Oct. 23 in Norwalk, Conn. Miss Telva, whose real name was Marion Toucke, was born in St. Louis, where she received her vocal training.

After singing in various churches and synogogues, she was engaged by the Met. She made her Met debut in "Manon Lescaut" in 1920. The highlight of her career was the 1927 Met revival of "Norma" in which she sang Adalgisa. Miss Telva left the Met in 1931 but returned during the 1932-33 season to sing in a concert that was her final appearance there.

Her last major N. Y. appearance was in "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven, with Toscanini and the N.Y. Philharmonic, in 1935. She was married in 1930 to Elmer Ray Jones, president of the Wells Fargo Company. He died last year.

STANLEY A. WIDNEY

Stanley A. Widney, 64, former radio personality with WHO and KRNT, Des Moines, died Oct. 23 in that city. He was with WHO from 1933 until 1947 as emcee for the Iowa Barn Dance Frolic and other shows. Later he was associated with KRNT as conductor of a religious music program. His radio work ended in 1958 when he suffered a stroke.

Surviving are his wife, two daughters and a son.

FLORENCE WICKHAM

Florence Wickham, 82, a contralto who sang at the Metropolitan Opera for three seasons and later composed light operas, ballets and concert songs, died Oct. 22 in New York.

She sang with opera companies in Germany and at London's Covent Garden before making her Met debut in 1909 as Emilia in "Otello." Her last Met performance was in 1912 as Gertrude in "Hansel and Gretel." Miss Wickham's operas included "Rosalind," based on Shakespeare's "As You Like It," "Legend of Hex Mountain" and her last, "The Ancestor Maker." She also composed a score of ballets with choreography by Vincenzo Colli.

conference, Mrs. Sara Levi-Tanai explained that she has the fullest assurances from Mr. Stevens and from Jewish leaders in the U.S. that the picture carries no religious-missionary tendencies and will explore only the historical aspects of Christ's life. Furthermore, there is a special paragraph in the contract permitting Mrs. Levi-Tanai to refuse participation in any sequence objectionable to Jewish beliefs.

"I had many restless nights before I decided to accept the offer," Mrs. Levi-Tanai said. I understood fully the reasoning of deeply religious people who may object to such a venture. But as a Jew, I couldn't reject a Gentile's generous invitation to participate in a work which aims to perpetuate human understanding. And as an artist I couldn't reject the invitation of a great director like Mr. Stevens. We have suffered too much from prejudices. We shouldn't be prejudiced against others."

Inbal has a three month contract, at $3,000 a week. United Artists will release the Stevens production.

This local show biz rhubarb follows closely on the heels of the Ramat-Gan Chamber Orchestra acceding to local pressure not to play German concert dates in light of the not easily forgotten Nazi oppression despite the fact that Israel and West Germany otherwise maintain diplomatic and economic relations.

On Monday, October 8, 1962, between 7:30 and 8 pm 8,868,000 television sets in England were tuned in to Granada's Coronation Street.*

By American standards the total may not be spectacular, but the rating was 85.4

How about that, Hazel, Bonanza, Virginian, Gunsmoke, Dr. Kildare, Defenders, Lucy, Desi, Perry Mason, Ben Casey?

*The series, in case you didn't know, is available to stations the world over. For information call Granada's Kay Campbell MU 8-1126 (509 Madison Avenue) or write Paddy Crookshank,
